AMERICAN GENEALOGY OF THE ALLIED FAMILIES

McKee, McClintock, Mills, Stipp and Stewart.

HISTORICAL.

McKEE.

The authentic, connected history of this family begins with the arrival in America of its founder, John McKee, from County Monaghan, Ireland, about 1775. He landed at Charleston and remained in the Carolinas. Being of Scotch ancestry he early discerned the relation of the colonies to England, espoused their cause and gave them his services. He served as a private, at least two terms, and later, though unrecorded, gave his life to secure and establish a free and independent government for the land of his adoption. In an interval of service he married Polly McCoy, of Virginia, and settled in North Carolina early in 1780. The King's Mountain campaign began in August, 1780, and early in its inception John McKee left his home and bride and joined the ranks of the mixed American forces. On September 12th, in a skirmish at Cane's Run, he was shot at his post of duty and expired soon after. He was buried where he fell. His death was due to the treachery of a Tory whom he had befriended. Before he expired he delivered to his comrade and friend, Thomas Shaw, tender messages to his wife, and charged him to provide for her welfare. Shaw accepted the trust, took the widow to her people in Virginia and returning, served through the war. When peace was secured, Shaw married Polly McKee, and removed to Bourbon County, Ky., where they lived to old age. The early sacrifice of his life in the cause of liberty and of his adopted country renders brief the history of John McKee (I). Little else is known, save that his compatriot, Thomas Shaw, ever spoke of him with deep feeling and in terms of profound regard. His character was doubtless reproduced in his son, who more than the father actually founded the family in America.

John McKee (II) spent his life in Bourbon County, Ky. He was the builder and owner of "The Mills" at Ruddell's Mills, once an important point, now deserted. He was unassuming, intelligent, capable and industrious; of marked uprightness of character and life and was greatly loved and respected. He owned slaves, but never sold them, permitting them to work out, or gave them their freedom. He is buried in the old church-yard at Ruddell's Mills, now long in ruins. The earlier generations of McKees in physique were very tall, with large frames, but spare in flesh, florid complexion, blue eyes and sandy hair.

J. Alex McKee, of Kingsville, Ky., after many years of research has traced the name McKee for eleven centuries to one of the earlier clans of Scotland, and from his Compilation the following is here embodied:

"The name McKee comes from and is a branch of the Clan McKay, a name that appears on the pages of history at a very early date. They were a powerful clan as early as the eighth century and were numerous for centuries thereafter. McKay was one of the Highland Clans that fought under Robert Bruce at Bannockburn, late in the 12th century. In 1427 Angus Donald McKay commanded 4000 men. In 1626 Donald McKay led 3000 men in the armies of Gustavus Adolphus, fighting for liberty and freedom of thought. Hugh McKay was the favorite general of William of Orange, fought at the battle of the Bourne and gave up his life at Steen-kerke, 1692, when England's king led the combined forces of Protestantism against those of Rome in Holland.

"The house of McKay was in Sutherland and Cathness in the Northeast part of Scotland. They were energetic and untiring; a fighting race but seldom aggressive. Romanism never held dominion over them and when Presbyterianism arose in 1550 they espoused that belief and have ever been its staunch defenders.

"In 1437 the Clan McKay received its first royal grant of land. Though inter-marrying with other clans, McKays maintained their clan identity through all those troublous generations. In 1628 Sir Donald McKay was made a Peer of Scotland by Charles I. In the later centuries the members of the clan scattered into all parts of the civilized world, and, though modest and retiring, became leaders among men. They did not seek preferment, but readily responded to any cause appealing to their sympathies. The records do not disclose one criminal or mendicant among them to this day.

"About 1660, the clan suffering defeat in a war with the McIntosh and other clans, the chiefs and many followers went to France, but religious persecution drove them to Holland, whence they emigrated to the north of Ireland. There for loyalty to Cromwell they were given estates that had been confiscated by Cromwell for treason. Since the time of Cromwell the name of McKay rarely appears of record, but is superceded by McKee, a process caused by new environment."

McCLINTOCK.

This family sprung from Tyrone County, Ireland, whence at least six young men, brothers, emigrated to America about 1740, settled in Cumberland (now Perry) County, Pa., and there lived all their days. The records of Cumberland County now exhibit the wills of the following: Joseph McClintock, filed for record August 6th, 1799; James, May 28th, 1801; Robert, July 25th, 1793; William, March 25th, 1808; John, May 7th, 1788, and Alexander, September 10th, 1760, all from a community known as "Sherman's Valley," in what is now Perry County. All these were prosperous and their descendants, moving with the westward trend of population, have made the name widely known. They were men of medium height and of light complexion; an energetic and sturdy race, of positive convictions; religious liberty being the chief object of their coming to America.

Several of their sons fought for the colonies, and later moved to Kentucky. Of the original six, only the family record of Joseph is now known with any completeness. Joseph was born in Tyrone County, Ireland, 1701, married in Pennsylvania, 1740, Elizabeth Torrence. His wife died in 1758, and he taught his motherless children by firelight at night, after working in the woods all day. Elizabeth (10) daughter of Joseph, and William (3) only son of William, became the parent stock whence arose the branch of the McClintock family in America, the subject of this work. William (3) visited Kentucky in 1777 and selected land for a home, the present site of the city of Paris, but on his return to Pennsylvania went into the war. On moving to Kentucky later he found his chosen acres passed to other hands. The name, McClintock, has been conspicuous and influential in Bourbon County, Ky., and vicinity for a century.

The name McClintock is prominent and frequently mentioned in histories of the Scotch people. Alexander McClintock of Lexington, Ky., has made extended researches with the purpose of discovering a pre-American family from which his own directly descended, but at this date without conclusive results. There is no doubt that the American family sprung from one of the Scottish clans of that name flourishing several centuries ago.

An effort is being made to restore the ancient form, "MacClintock," but it is not yet general enough for use in this work.

MILLS.

Captain John Mills, of Scotch-Irish stock, was born in Ireland about 1750 and emigrated to Virginia in his early manhood. Little is known of his parentage, except that his mother was a Gilchrist. He was a prominent man in his community, a man of great integrity and high sense of honor. He married Miss Martha Ewing of Virginia in 1771. Entering the service of his colony in the Revolution, he served at least two commands as Ensign and Lieutenant and was promoted Captain later and had command of a company. Being tendered further promotion he declined it preferring to remain in command of the company to which he was greatly attached. That he had close personal relations with General Washington is evidenced by the tradition well authenticated, that at a meeting between the two men after the war they embraced and kissed each other. He was a man and patriot of exalted bearing and character.

Capt. Mills settled in Botetourt County, Va., after the war and lived there till the close of his life, at an advanced age. He reared a large family of children, nearly all of whom at maturity removed to the south and west, but chiefly to Kentucky and Texas. Diligent investigation has been made, but it has failed to discover and positively identify many of them for this work.

Note:—John Scrogin, an Irishman, opposed William of Orange in his war with the Catholic allies, 1691, and being defeated, went to France to live. His son Joseph, (I), born 1691, became a sea-captain, like his father, and was active in retaining Phillip V. on the throne of Spain. Joseph was a favorite at court, but fell in love with La Infanta Fantilina, aged 14. Phillip was wroth and confined his daughter to the castle. She reciprocated Scrogin's feelings, escaped to him in a boat at night, fled with him to America and was disowned by the king. They landed at Baltimore, 1714. A son, Joseph (II.), was born, 1715, married, 1740, Sarah A. Caldwell, of Huguenot stock, and whose sister became the mother of John C. Calhoun. Joseph (II) had 13 children. Two of them married into the Polk family, and Mary married a brother of Daniel Boone. Samuel married Elizabeth Collins, lived in Kentucky and had three sons, two of whom, Robert and George, married Narcissa and Polly Mills.

STIPP.

John Stipp, a native of Holland, was born about 1726 and came to Cumberland County, Pa., in early manhood. He married Mary ————, about 1757, and lived in Sherman's Valley, Pa. They moved to Bourbon County, Ky., about 1790, and lived there to a very old age, the term of their married life extending to sixty-three years. Both died about 1820.

They were a devotedly religious and affectionate couple, simple and quiet in their manner of life. But two children were born to them, a son and a daughter. Both of them grew to middle life and had children. George (81), the only son, had an only son, John (211), who, dying in young manhood, left no issue and was the last one of the name. The compiler has not, in his researches for this work nor at any time elsewhere, encountered the name of Stipp.

STEWART.

The first of this name was Robert Stewart, knowledge of whose parents is wanting. Of Scotch-Irish lineage, he was born in Pennsylvania, August 21, 1768, married Margery Beaty of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1796, and settled in Harrison County, Ky., where they lived and reared a large family. Robert Stewart died in Kentucky in 1829. His sons and daughters moved away, mainly to Ohio and Indiana. The elder Stewarts were men of quick energy, determination and immovable convictions. They were prominent in affairs and in the church. The second given generation numerously intermarried with the other titular families of the chart, and their genealogy is, therefore, included in this work.

EXPLANATORY.

An asterisk (*) after a record signifies, without issue.

A 3-em dash (———) indicates, further data wanting.

The abbreviation (res.) signifies, resided or resides.

Each name of those of the five generations has and retains a number and is in darker print.

The record of the child follows that of the father if the father has a record-number.

Matter in parenthesis refers to the person whose name it immediately follows.

Space and numbers are reserved for inserting additional records if desired.

IN GENERAL.

The men and women, founders of our several families in America, were of a superior class. The motives and courage that impelled them to embark for the new world, the physical strength to endure the privations incident thereto and the purposes to which their lives were devoted mark them as such. Their love of liberty, their tireless fealty to right, their patriotism for their adopted country, so early and conspicuously enlisted, will challenge the admiration of the generations. A patriotism so devoted that it led them to destroy their military papers that their families might not become pensioners of their government. A patriotism the achievements of which are our priceless legacy.

They were men and women of pure and simple lives, capable, industrious, resolute. Of strong religious convictions and of the Presbyterian form of belief, to which their posterity very largely adheres. Their tastes were domestic; celibacy was exceedingly rare. How much our present generations owe to them for inherited physical and moral traits cannot be calculated.

Generally, it may be said, the several families followed farming and fine stock raising. None sought nor achieved political preferment; none accumulated great wealth, but all were well to do and there were no idlers among them.

Soon after the Revolution the clans settled mainly in Bourbon County, Ky., and vicinity. In the first half of the nineteenth century many of the third generation removed from Kentucky to other western localities, chief among which were Butler County, Ohio, and Rush County, Indiana, and since the civil war a very general and widespread dispersion over the whole country has taken place.

THE CHART.

The despotic and burdensome conditions in the Mother Country in the first half of the eighteenth century that impelled our ancestors to flee for relief to the wilderness of the new world and its certain privations, were such as would naturally quench much of their affection for the land of their birth. The years of war with England and the hardships of pioneering that followed served to further alienate them. The succeeding generations were not taught to cherish ancestral history and virtues, or were too much dominated by the prevailing spirit of commercialism to value them. These years of inquiry have not disclosed among us a single family history chronicled with any degree of completeness. The compiler long regretted that systematic effort to preserve to us our ancestral history and earlier genealogy had not been made before the destructive work of delay became complete. Ten years ago, while searching for proof of ancestral services in the war of the Revolution, he accumulated considerable data and was persuaded to attempt such a result.

The scope of the work, first outlined to include the four first American families of the compiler's own ancestry, was extended to include Stewart, also, that family being closely allied and intermarried with the others. The purpose was to compile and preserve an authentic history of our founders, together with the genealogy of their descendants to date, as complete as possible consistent with positive accuracy, and upon which others of like sentiments in the coming years might confidently build. This purpose has been adhered to, and after ten years of exhaustive research, persistent and painstaking effort, through many disappointments and delays, the result is here presented. The compiler's motive has been to preserve to posterity our American history and genealogy. His compensation lies in the fervent hope that he may thus stimulate in coming generations a just pride in a noble ancestry and a desire to perpetuate their simple virtues, their positive character and their lofty patriotism.

Throughout the preparation of this work invaluable aid and sympathy were generously extended by J. Alex McKee, of Kingsville, Ky., Margaret Shannon of Millersburg, Ky., Alexander McClintock of Lexington, Ky., and Margaret A. McKee of Sevenmile, Ohio, and without which the work could not have been completed in its present scope.

To my venerable aunt, Margaret A. McKee, of Ohio, the last of the generation with which she was most closely allied, whose fine intellect and remarkable memory are undimned by the years and whose strong and complacent Christian character has endeared her to four generations of her people, this work is affectionately inscribed.
