On the left, a shattered German front line trench after an attacking wave of French infantry has swept across it. A scene that is duplicated nearly every time the poilus go over the top.
E. H. McCrahon.

It is deeds like the one pictured above that win military honors for the ambulance men. Under heavy machine gun fire a brave French ambulance attendant carries a wounded comrade through heavy entanglements back to the rear and safety. Underwood & Underwood.

This Boche outpost on the Verdun front has done his last sentry go.
E. H. McCrahon.

One of the French barbed wire "bull" pens filled with recently captured German prisoners.
E. H. McCrahon.

French front line trenches shortly before the attack in the recent Verdun offensive.
Underwood & Underwood.