JOHNSONS DICTIONARY
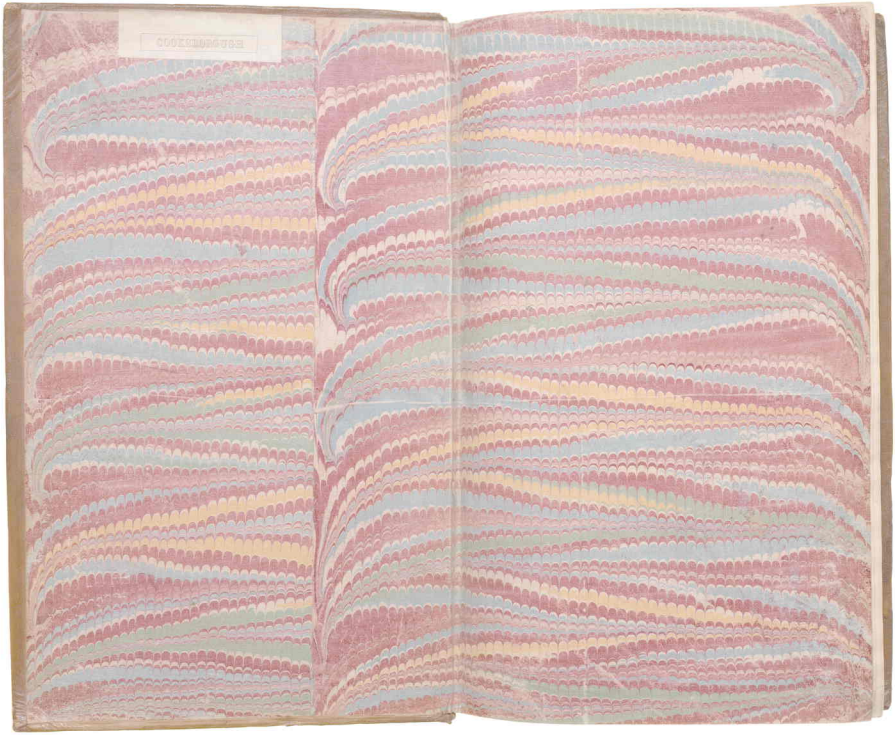
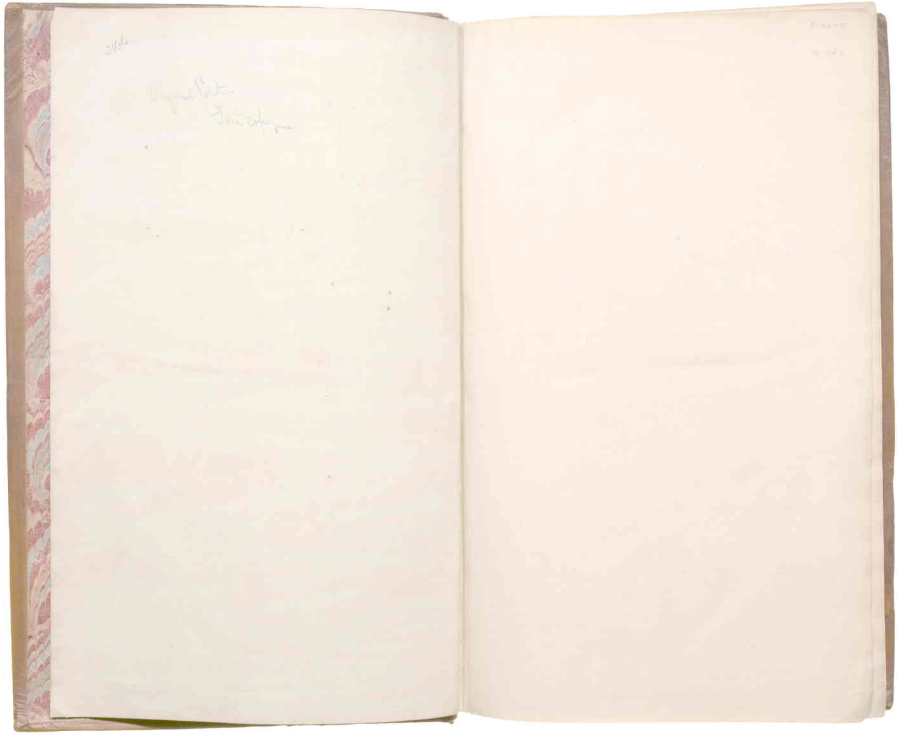
VOL. I.





A

RICH^D WARREN

DICTIONARY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE:

IN WHICH

The WORDS are deduced from their ORIGINALS,

AND

ILLUSTRATED in their DIFFERENT SIGNIFICATIONS

BY

EXAMPLES from the best WRITERS.

TO WHICH ARE PREFIXED,

A HISTORY of the LANGUAGE,

AND

AN ENGLISH GRAMMAR.

BY SAMUEL JOHNSON, A.M.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

Cum tabulis animum censoris sumet honesti:
Audebit quaecunque parum splendoris habebunt,
Et sine pondere erunt, et honore indigna ferentur.
Verba movebit hic, quaesitis invita recedent,
Et versentur adhuc intra penetralia Vestae:
Obscurata diu populo bonus eruet, atque
Proferet in lucem speciosa vocabula rerum,
Quae prius annuerunt Cornelius atque Catonis,
Nunc, sine inferiori premit et deterra vocabis. HOR.

LONDON.
Printed by W. STRAHAN,
For J. and P. KNAPTON; T. and T. LONGMAN; C. HITCH and L. HAWES;
A. MILLAR; and R. and J. DODSLEY.
MDCCLV.

PREFACE.

RICHARD WARREN

IT is the fate of those who toil at the lowest employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospect of good; to be expected to conform, without hope of praise; to be degraded by misdeeds, or punished for neglect, where diligence would have been without applause, and diligence without reward.

Among those unhappy members is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have confidered, not as the pupil, but the slave of learning, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other author may aspire to praise; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompence has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithstanding this discouragement, attempted a dictionary of the English language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every species of literature, has still been hitherto neglected, suffered to spread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, relapsed to the rudeness of time and fashion, and expofed to the corruptions of ignorance, and captices of innovation.

When I took the first survey of my undertaking, I found our speech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be disentangled, and confusion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundless variety, without any established principle of election; adulterations were to be detected, without a settled rule of purity; and wonders of expansion to be reached or exceeded, without the suffrage of any writers of distinct reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no affistance but from general grammar, I applied myself to the perusal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of use to ascertain or illustrate any word or phrase, accumulated into the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, establishing to myself, in the progress of the work, fixed rules as experience and analogy suggested to me; examples, which readiness and observation were continually increasing; and analogy, which, though in some words obscure, was evident in others.

In adjusting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unfettled and fortuitous, I found it necessary to distinguish those irregularities that are inherent to our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of late writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies which, though inconvenient, and in themselves easy to correction, must be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be regulated, that they may not be increased, and shewn, that they may not be contounded; but every language has likewise its improprieties and deformities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or prune.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of necessity or common use were spoken before they were written; and while they were uttered by any visible signs, must have been spoken with great facility, as we now address those who cannot read to catch sounds expressibly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous language first endeavoured to express, as he could, the sounds which he was accustomed to pronounce or to receive, and visited in writing such words as were already uttered in speech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, must have been vague and unfettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the same sound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation arile in a great part the various dialects of the same country, which will always be observed to grow fewer, and less different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary representation of sounds by letters, proceeds that diversity of spelling observable in the Saxon remains, and I suppose in the first books of every nation, which perplexes or deforms analogy, and produces anomalous formations, which, being once incorporated, can never be afterward diminished or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivations length from long, strength from strong, darkness from dark, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes highth; Spiki to europen pesnai spiki de pierdiou ene; to change all would be too much, and to change one is trifling.

This uncertainty is most frequent in the vowels, which are so capriciously pronounced, and so differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologists, little regard is to be shewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errours in orthography, but spots of barbarity impressed so deep in the English language, that criticism can never wash them away; these, therefore, must be permitted to remain untouched: but many words have likewise been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and some still continue to be variously written, as authours differ in their care or skill: of these it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always considered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is chosen rather than intire, because it passed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to say whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, since at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin service in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally supplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domestick use, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to sacrifice uniformity to custom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberless majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; sometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the same power are used indifferently without any discoverable reason of choice, as in choak, choke; soap, sope; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have sometimes inserted twice, that those who search for them under either form, may not search in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of spelling by which it is inserted in the series of the dictionary, is to be considered as that to which I give, perhaps not often rashly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every authour his own practice unmolested, that the reader may balance suffrages, and judge between us: but this question is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; some men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on sounds and derivations; some, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected those in which our words are commonly to be sought. Thus Hammond writes fecibleness for feasibleness, because I suppose he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and some words, such as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final syllable, as one or other language is present to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wantoned without controul, and vanity sought praise by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a scholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among those few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to those, whose thoughts have been, perhaps, employed too anxiously on verbal singularities, not to disturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been asserted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, says Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worse to better. There is in constancy and stability a general and lasting advantage, which will always overbalance the slow improvements of gradual correction. Much less ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itself, and imitate those changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in observing them.

This recommendation of steadiness and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happiness; or that truth may not be successfully taught by modes of spelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet so lost in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the sons of heaven. Language is only the instrument of science, and words are but the signs of ideas: I wish, however, that the instrument might be less apt to decay, and that signs might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In settling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated syllable. It will sometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the authour quoted, on a different syllable from that marked in the alphabetical series; it is then to be understood, that custom has varied, or that the authour has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are sometimes given where the sound of letters is irregular; and if they are sometimes omitted, defect in such minute observations will be more easily excused than superfluity.

In the investigation both of the orthography and signification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was necessarily to be considered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any English root; thus circumspect, circumvent, circumstance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives, are all those that can be referred to any word in English of greater simplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy sometimes needless; for who does not see that remoteness comes from remote, lovely from love, concavity from concave, and demonstrative from demonstrate? but this grammatical exuberance the scheme of my work did not allow me to repress. It is of great importance in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the usual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity must be preserved in systematical works, though sometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to insert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonick dialects are very frequent, and, though familiar to those who have always used them, interrupt and embarrass the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonick: under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonick range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Most of our polysyllables are Roman, and our words of one syllable are very often Teutonick.

In assigning the Roman original, it has perhaps sometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French; and considering myself as employed only in the illustration of my own language, I have not been very careful to observe whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obsolete.

For the Teutonick etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forborn to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or usurp their honours, but that I might spare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgement. Of these, whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to instructors and benefactors, Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of understanding. Junius was accurately skilled in all the northern languages, Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occasional inspection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other use than to show him a track by which he may deviate from his purpose, to which Skinner always presses forward by the shortest way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety distracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently disgraced by his absurdities.

The votaries of the northern muses will not perhaps easily restrain their indignation, when they find the name of Junius thus degraded by a disadvantageous comparison; but whatever reverence is due to his diligence, or his attainments, it can be no criminal degree of censoriousness to charge that etymologist with want of judgment, who can seriously derive dream from drama, because life is a drama, and a drama is a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μόνος, monos, who considers that grief naturally loves to be alone *.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is so scanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonick the original is not always to be found in any ancient language; and I have therefore inserted Dutch or German substitutes, which I consider not as radical but parallel, not as the parents, but sisters of the English.

The words which are represented as thus related by descent or cognation, do not always agree in sense; for it is incident to words, as to their authours, to degenerate from their ancestors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is sufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the senses of kindred words be found such as may easily pass into each other, or such as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, so far as it is yet known, was easily found in the volumes where it is particularly and professedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was soon adjusted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a task of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhausted, what was yet wanting must be sought by fortuitous and unguided excursions into books, and gleaned as industry

* That I may not appear to have spoken too irreverently of Junius, I have here subjoined a few specimens of his etymological extravagance.

BANISH, religare, ex banno vel territorio exigere, in exilium agere. G. bannir. It. bandire, bandeggiare. H. bandir. B. bannen. Ævi medii scriptores bannire dicebant. V. Spelm. in Banno & in Banleuga. Quoniam vero regionum urbiumq; limites arduis plerumq; montibus, altis fluminibus, longis deniq; flexuosisq; angustissimarum viarum anfractibus includebantur, fieri potest id genus limites ban dici ab eo quod βάννατρα & βάνναυσοι Tarentinis olim, sicuti tradit Hesychius, vocabantur αἱ λοξοὶ καὶ μὴ ἰθυτενεῖς ὁδοὶ, "obliquæ ac minime in rectum tendentes viæ." Ac fortasse quoque huc facit quod βανοὺς, eodem Hesychio teste, dicebant ὄρη στρογγύλα, montes arduos.

EMPTY, emtie, vacuus, inanis. A. S. Æmtiȝ. Nescio an sint ab ἐμέω vel ἐμετάω. Vomo, evomo, vomitu evacuo. Videtur interim etymologiam hanc non obscure firmare codex Rush. Mat. xii. 22. ubi antique scriptum invenimus ȝemoetað hit emetiȝ. "Invenit eam vacantem."

HILL, mons, collis. A. S. hill. Quod videri potest abscissum ex κολώνη vel κολωνὸς. Collis, tumulus, locus in plano editus. Hom. Il. β. v. 811. Ἔστι δέ τις προπάροιθε πόλιος αἰπεῖα κολώνη. Ubi authori brevium scholiorum κολώνη exp. τόπος εἰς ὕψος ἀνήκων, γεώλοφος ἐξοχή.

NAP, to take a nap. Dormire, condormiscere. Cym. heppian. A. S. hnæppan. Quod postremum videri potest desumptum ex κνέφας, obscuritas, tenebræ: nihil enim æque solet conciliare somnum, quam caliginosa profundæ noctis obscuritas.

STAMMERER, Balbus, blæsus. Goth. STAMMS. A. S. stamer, stamur. D. stam. B. stameler. Su. stamma. Isl. stamr. Sunt a στωμύλλειν vel στωμυλεῖν, nimia loquacitate alios offendere; quod impedite loquentes libentissime garrire soleant; vel quod aliis nimii semper videantur, etiam parcissime loquentes.

should

ſhould find, or chance ſhould offer it, in the boundleſs chaos of a living ſpeech. My ſearch, however, has been either ſkilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my deſign was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; ſuch as Arian, Socinian, Calviniſt, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained thoſe of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received ſuch as could be found either in books of ſcience or technical dictionaries; and have often inſerted, from philoſophical writers, words which are ſupported perhaps only by a ſingle authority, and which being not admitted into general uſe, ſtand yet as candidates or probationers, and muſt depend for their adoption on the ſuffrage of futurity.

The words which our authours have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonneſs, by compliance with faſhion, or luſt of innovation, I have regiſtred as they occurred, though commonly only to cenſure them, and warn others againſt the folly of naturalizing uſeleſs foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by deſign, merely becauſe they were unneceſſary or exuberant; but have received thoſe which by different writers have been differently formed, as viſcid, and viſcidity, viſcous, and viſcoſity.

Compounded or double words I have ſeldom noted, except when they obtain a ſignification different from that which the components have in their ſimple ſtate. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horſecourſer, require an explication; but of thieflike or coachdriver no notice was needed, becauſe the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a conſtant and ſettled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in iſh, as greeniſh, bluiſh, adverbs in ly, as dully, openly, ſubſtantives in neſs, as vileneſs, faultineſs, were leſs diligently ſought, and many ſometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to inſert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of Engliſh roots, but becauſe their relation to the primitive being always the ſame, their ſignification cannot be miſtaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, ſuch as the keeping of the caſtle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illuſtrate the ſenſe of the verb, except when they ſignify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an abſolute and abſtract ſignification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewiſe omitted, unleſs, by ſignifying rather qualities than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horſe, a horſe that can pace: theſe I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are theſe always inſerted, becauſe they are commonly to be underſtood, without any danger of miſtake, by conſulting the verb.

Obſolete words are admitted, when they are found in authours not obſolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deſerve revival.

As compoſition is one of the chief characteriſticks of a language, I have endeavoured to make ſome reparation for the univerſal negligence of my predeceſſors, by inſerting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. Theſe, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that uſe and curioſity are here ſatisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply diſcovered.

Of ſome forms of compoſition, ſuch as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to ſignify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, becauſe the uſe of theſe particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is ſo little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occaſion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of compoſition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which ariſes to foreigners the greateſt difficulty. We modify the ſignification of many verbs by a particle ſubjoined; as to come off, to eſcape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apoſtatize; to break off, to ſtop abruptly; to bear out, to juſtify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to ceaſe; to ſet off, to embelliſh; to ſet in, to begin a continual tenour; to ſet out, to begin a courſe or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expreſſions of the ſame kind, of which ſome appear wildly irregular, being ſo far diſtant from the ſenſe of the ſimple words, that no ſagacity will be able to trace the ſteps by which they arrived at the preſent uſe. Theſe I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myſelf that the collection is complete, I believe I have ſo far aſſiſted the ſtudents of our language, that this kind of phraſeology will be no longer inſuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be eaſily explained by compariſon with thoſe that may be found.

Many words yet ſtand ſupported only by the name of Bailey, Ainſworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionaries ſubjoined: of theſe I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of ſuch I have omitted many, becauſe I had never read them; and many I have inſerted, becauſe they may perhaps exiſt, though they have eſcaped my notice: they are, however, to be yet conſidered as reſting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I conſidered as uſeful, or know to be proper, though I could not at preſent ſupport them by authorities, I have ſuffered to ſtand upon my own atteſtation, claiming the ſame privilege with my predeceſſors of being ſometimes credited without proof.

however,

The words, thus ſelected and diſpoſed, are grammatically conſidered: they are referred to the different parts of ſpeech; traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illuſtrated by obſervations, not indeed of great or ſtriking importance, ſeparately conſidered, but neceſſary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by Engliſh grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity moſt frequently to faſten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to ſatisfy thoſe, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleaſed, ſince I have not always been able to ſatisfy myſelf. To interpret a language by itſelf is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by ſynonimes, becauſe the idea ſignified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphraſe, becauſe ſimple ideas cannot be deſcribed. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unſettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which ſuch notions are conveyed, or ſuch things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And ſuch is the fate of hapleſs lexicography, that not only darkneſs, but light, impedes and diſtreſſes it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illuſtrated. To explain, requires the uſe of terms leſs abſtruſe than that which is to be explained, and ſuch terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but by ſuppoſing ſomething intuitively known, and evident without proof, ſo nothing can be defined but by the uſe of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the ſenſe is too ſubtle and evaneſcent to be fixed in a paraphraſe; ſuch are all thoſe which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are ſuffered to paſs for empty ſounds, of no other uſe than to fill a verſe, or to modulate a period, but which are eaſily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphaſis, though it be ſometimes ſuch as no other form of expreſſion can convey.

My labour has likewiſe been much increaſed by a claſs of verbs too frequent in the Engliſh language, of which the ſignification is ſo looſe and general, the uſe ſo vague and indeterminate, and the ſenſes detorted ſo widely from the firſt idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumſcribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of diſtinct and ſettled meaning; ſuch are bear, break, come, caſt, full, get, give, do, put, ſet, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of theſe the whole power is not accurately delivered, it muſt be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that ſpeaks it, theſe words are hourly ſhifting their relations, and can no more be aſcertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a ſtorm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with ſo great latitude, that they are not eaſily reducible under any regular ſcheme of explication: this difficulty is not leſs, nor perhaps greater, in Engliſh, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with ſucceſs; ſuch at leaſt as can be expected in a taſk, which no man, however learned or ſagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, becauſe I do not underſtand them; theſe might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not ſo far indulge my vanity as to decline this confeſſion: for when Tully owns himſelf ignorant whether leſſus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral ſong, or mourning garment; and Ariſtotle doubts whether οὐρεὺς, in the Iliad, ſignifies a mule, or muleteer, I may ſurely, without ſhame, leave ſome obſcurities to happier induſtry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, ſhould be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are ſeldom exactly ſynonimous; a new term was not introduced, but becauſe the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then neceſſary to uſe the proximate word, for the deficiency of ſingle terms can very ſeldom be ſupplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of ſuch mutilated interpretations, becauſe the ſenſe may eaſily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extenſive uſe, it was requiſite to mark the progreſs of its meaning, and ſhow by what gradations of intermediate ſenſe it has paſſed from its primitive to its remote and accidental ſignification; ſo that every foregoing explanation ſhould tend to that which follows, and the ſeries be regularly concatenated from the firſt notion to the laſt.

This is ſpecious, but not always practicable; kindred ſenſes may be ſo interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be diſentangled, nor any reaſon be aſſigned why one ſhould be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a conſecutive ſeries be formed of ſenſes in their nature collateral? The ſhades of meaning ſometimes paſs imperceptibly into each other; ſo that though on one ſide they apparently differ, yet it is impoſſible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the ſame race, though not exactly alike, are ſometimes ſo little different, that no words can expreſs the diſſimilitude, though the mind eaſily perceives it, when they are exhibited together; and sometimes there is such a confusion of acceptations, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance herself hurries to an end, by crouding together what she cannot separate.

bited

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obscurity. But every art is obscure to those that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to those who have joined philosophy with grammar; and if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is used for material heat, or whether flagrant, in English, ever signifies the same with burning; yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which are therefore set first, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that it was scarcely possible to collect all their senses; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought in the mother term, and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be supplied in the train of derivation. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race; for some words are slightly passed over to avoid repetition, some admitted easier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same happiness: things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errours, where there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him; and in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as hind, the female of the stag; stag, the male of the hind: sometimes easier words are changed into harder, as burial into sepulture or interment, drier into desiccative, dryness into siccity or aridity, fit into paroxysm; for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy. But easiness and difficulty are merely relative, and if the present prevalence of our language should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to increase or produce obscurity. For this reason I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of English may be assisted by his own tongue.

The solution of all difficulties, and the supply of all defects, must be sought in the examples, subjoined to the various senses of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authours.

When first I collected these authorities, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other end than the illustration of a word; I therefore extracted from philosophers principles of science; from historians remarkable facts; from chymists complete processes; from divines striking exhortations; and from poets beautiful descriptions. Such is design, while it is yet at a distance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wisdom into an alphabetical series, I soon discovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the student, and was forced to depart from my scheme of including all that was pleasing or useful in English literature, and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the weariness of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and intersperse with verdure and flowers the dusty deserts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authours; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with all its appendant clauses, has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detruncation, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed: the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as masters of elegance or models of stile; but words must be sought where they are used; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations serve no other purpose, than that of proving the bare existence of words, and are therefore selected with less scrupulousness than those which are to teach their structures and relations.

My purpose was to admit no testimony of living authours, that I might not be misled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reason to complain; nor have I departed from this resolution, but when some performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory supplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tenderness of friendship, solicited admission for a favourite name.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have studiously endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the restoration, whose works I regard as the wells of English undefiled, as the pure sources of genuine diction. Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonick character, and deviating towards a Gallick structure and phraseology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of stile, admitting among the additions of later times, only such as may supply real deficiencies, such as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate easily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeness antecedent to perfection, as well as of false refinement and declension, I have been cautious lest my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and croud my book with words now no longer understood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excursions. From the authours which rose in the time of Elizabeth, a speech might be formed adequate to all the purposes of use and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the translation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phrases of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenser and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakespeare, few ideas would be lost to mankind, for want of English words, in which they might be expressed.

It is not sufficient that a word is found, unless it be so combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the sentence; such passages I have therefore chosen, and when it happened that any authour gave a definition of a term, or such an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a supplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwise observed.

Some words, indeed, stand unsupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and constant analogy, or names of things seldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reason to doubt the existence.

There is more danger of censure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will sometimes seem to have been accumulated without necessity or use, and perhaps some will be found, which might, without loss, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not hastily to be charged with superfluities: those quotations which to careless or unskilful perusers appear only to repeat the same sense, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diversities of signification, or, at least, afford different shades of the same meaning: one will shew the word applied to persons, another to things; one will express an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral sense; one will prove the expression genuine from an ancient authour; another will shew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous sentence is ascertained by a passage clear and determinate; the word, how often soever repeated, appears with new associates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes something to the stability or enlargement of the language.

When words are used equivocally, I receive them in either sense; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have sometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of sentiments, by shewing how one authour copied the thoughts and diction of another: such quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might justly be censured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual history.

The various syntactical structures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the license or negligence with which many words have been hitherto used, has made our stile capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the same word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured to settle the orthography, display the analogy, regulate the structures, and ascertain the signification of English words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own scheme, or satisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is still controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are sometimes too much contracted, and sometimes too much diffused, the significations are distinguished rather with subtilty than skill, and the attention is harrassed with unnecessary minuteness.

The examples are too often injudiciously truncated, and perhaps sometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a mistaken sense; for in making this collection I trusted more to memory, than, in a state of disquiet and embarrassment, memory can contain, and purposed to supply at the review what was left incomplete in the first transcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though necessary and significant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words most studiously considered and exemplified, many senses have escaped observation.

Yet these failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the strength that undertakes it: To rest below his own low is modest in every one which fancy is active, and which opinion is complacent; nor is my care finished with himself because he has done much, but hopeful for an unconscious time. When first I engaged in this work, I resolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and flattered myself with a prospect of the hours which I should steal away in fields of literature, the dalliance recalled of northern learning, which I should cultivate and enjoy, the rewards which I expected every search into their neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I had thus acquainted into the recesses of wild, I resolved to show likewise my attention to things; to pierce deep into every farmer, to examine the nature of every substance of which I entered the name, to limit every idea by a definition as strictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate description, that my book might be to those of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But there were the dreams of a pure delicacy of full investigation, and of a lexicographer. I have found that it is not late to look for information, when the task calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with them I must finally perform it. To deliberate whatever I desired, to acquire whatever I was ignorant, would have prepared the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement. So I set out from the first experiment, that what I had not of my own was enough to be obtained: I drew from the copious, only given without to another, the book referred to book, that to learn was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that due to precise perfection, was like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the fawn, which, when they had reached the hill whence he fleetest to rail, was still behind at the time distance from them.

I then contributed my delight, determining to confide in myself, and no longer to solicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than assistance; by this I obtained at least one advantage, that I let time to my work, which would in time be finished, though not completed.

Dispondency has never to be prevailed or to depend on negligence; some faults will at full appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and persevering activity. The rules and fabric complicated in meaning were not easily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and conscious of the necessity of distinguishing combinations, and separating similitudes. Many of the difficulties which the common reader upon widely and little, will be found real and important by men versed in the school philosophy, without which no dictionary can shall be accurately compiled, or skillfully examined.

Some faults however there are, which, though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be sufficiently put to either signification: this uncertainty is to be imputed to me, who the first form, but neglect the language, who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The inaccurate force of some examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compensated by innumerable judges blended with propriety, and preferred with exactness; some shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come not late for all.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, shall be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may hardly allege that it was unavoidable; I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my skill in the dialect of navigation, nor visit the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books; what irremediable accidents, or only enquiry brought unknown, or which, had not been neglected, but it had been a hopeless labour to glean up words, by counting living information, and collecting with the fishermen of cots, and the shepherds of mountains.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called le Fiera, or the Fair, was profitably written by Bonarori; but I had no facile difficulty and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be hunted as omissions. Of the dialectical and mechanic part of the people, the diction is as a great creative critical and mutable; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in other utterly unknown. The fugitive cant, which is always in a flux of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the flexible material of a language, and therefore must be inferred to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

Care will sometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which seldom occur, will refer their to pull be unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar; thus many of the most common and earthly words have been inferred with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I desired to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word tea unexemplified.

Thus happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things easy from confidence; the mind, afraid of grammar, and dishearted at science, hastily withdraws herself from painful searches, and seeks with scarcely equable care rules not adequate to her powers, sometimes too general for exactness, and again too minute for vigorous efforts, sometimes idle in plain paths, and sometimes distracted in labyrinths, and dissipated by different attractions.

A large work is difficult beyond it is large, even though all its parts single single be performed with facility; what then we may things to be done, such could be allowed in dates of time and labour, in the proportion only which is been to the whole, nor can it be expected, that the dome which is the proportion only which is been to the whole, nor can it be expected, that the dome which form the dome of a temple, should be finished and polished like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured is such to much application, I cannot but have some degree of parental fondness, it is natural to form conjectures. I have hitherto hope that the reader will do my labours the justice, that it should be one language, and put a stop to the desire of a thirst well of my labours, but fastened to make it in without expectation

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third distinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the most conspicuous accomplishment, is skill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations croud upon his memory; and haste and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expressions.

The great pest of speech is frequency of translation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting something of its native idiom; this is the most mischievous and comprehensive innovation; single words may enter by thousands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the same, but new phraseology changes much at once; it alters not the single stones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy should be established for the cultivation of our stile, which I, who can never wish to see dependance multiplied, hope the spirit of English liberty will hinder or destroy, let them, instead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to stop the licence of translatours, whose idleness and ignorance, if it be suffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irresistible, what remains but to acquiesce with silence, as in the other insurmountable distresses of humanity? it remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preserved our constitution, let us make some struggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people arises from its authours: whether I shall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of English literature, must be left to time: much of my life has been lost under the pressures of disease; much has been trifled away; and much has always been spent in provision for the day that was passing over me; but I shall not think my employment useless or ignoble, if by my assistance foreign nations, and distant ages, gain access to the propagators of knowledge, and understand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repositories of science, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wish, I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promised to myself: a few wild blunders, and risible absurdities, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnish folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there never can be wanting some who distinguish desert; who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication, some words are budding, and some falling away; that a whole life cannot be spent upon syntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be sufficient; that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand; that a writer will sometimes be hurried by eagerness to the end, and sometimes faint with weariness under a task, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always present; that sudden fits of inadvertency will surprize vigilance, slight avocations will seduce attention, and casual eclipses of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer shall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yesterday he knew with intuitive readiness, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it shall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewise is performed; and though no book was ever spared out of tenderness to the authour, and the world is little solicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curiosity to inform it, that the English Dictionary was written with little assistance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the soft obscurities of retirement, or under the shelter of academick bowers, but amidst inconvenience and distraction, in sickness and in sorrow: and it may repress the triumph of malignant criticism to observe, that if our language is not here fully displayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprised in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of successive ages, inadequate and delusive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not secure them from the censure of Beni; if the embodied criticks of France, when fifty years had been spent upon their work, were obliged to change its œconomy, and give their second edition another form, I may surely be contented without the praise of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of solitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please, have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds: I therefore dismiss it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.

THE HISTORY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britons or Welsh were the first possessors of this island, whose names are recorded, and are therefore in civil history always considered as the predecessors of the present inhabitants; yet the deduction of the English language, from the earliest times of which we have any knowledge to its present state, requires no mention of them: for we have so few words, which can, with any probability, be referred to British roots, that we justly regard the Saxons and Welsh, as nations totally distinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons seized this country, they suffered the Britons to live among them in a state of vassalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble services. But it is scarcely possible, that a nation, however depressed, should have been mixed in considerable numbers with the Saxons without some communication of their tongue, and therefore it may, with great reason, be imagined, that those, who were not sheltered in the mountains, perished by the sword.

The whole fabrick and scheme of the English language is Gothick or Teutonick: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except those where the Sclavonian is spoken. Of these languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

GOTHICK,

Anglo-Saxon,	Francick,	Cimbrick,
Dutch,	German.	Islandick,
Frisick,		Norwegian,
English.		Swedish,
		Danish.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the gospels somewhat mutilated, which, from the silver with which the characters are adorned, is called the silver book. It is now preserved at Upsal, and has been twice published. Whether the diction of this venerable manuscript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it seems however to exhibit the most ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonick race, and the Saxon, which is the original of the present English, was either derived from it, or both descended from some common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they first entered Britain, cannot now be known. They seem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their speech therefore, having been always cursory and extemporaneous, must have been artless and unconnected, without any modes of transition or involution of clauses; which abruptness and inconnection may be observed even in their later writings. This barbarity may be supposed to have continued during their wars with the Britons, which for a time left them no leisure for softer studies; nor is there any reason for supposing it abated, till the year 570, when Augustine came from Rome to convert them to Christianity. The Christian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and so gained, from time to time, some knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expressing all the sentiments of a civilised people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphrase or imitation of Boethius, and his short preface, which I have selected as the first specimen of ancient English.

CAP. I.

ON ðære tide ðe Gotan of Sciððiu mægðe wið Romana rice gewin upahofon. ⁊ mid heora cyningum. Rædgota and Eallerica wæron hatne. Romane burig abræcon. and eall Italia rice þ is betwux þam muntum ⁊ Sicilia ðam ealonde in anwald gerehton. ⁊ þa ægter þam foresprecenan cyningum Þeodric feng to þam ilcan rice se Þeodric wæs Amulinga. he wæs Cristen. þeah he on þam Arrianiscan gedwolan ðurhwunode. He gehet Romanum his freondscipe. swa þ hi moston heora ealdrihta wyrðe beon. Ac he þa gehat swiðe yfele gelæste. ⁊ swiðe wraðe geendode mid manegum mane. þ wæs to eacan oðrum unarimedum yflum. þ he Iohannes þone papan het ofslean. Ða wæs sum consul. þ we heretoha hatað. Boetius wæs haten. se wæs in boccræftum ⁊ on woruld þeawum se rihtwisesta. Se ða ongeat þa manigfealdan yfel þe se cyning Þeodric wið þam Cristenandome ⁊ wið þam Romaniscum witum dyde. he þa gemunde ðara eðnessa ⁊ þara ealdrihta ðe hi under þam Caserum hæfdon heora ealdhlafordum. Ða ongan he smeagan ⁊ leornigan on him selfum hu he þ rice ðam unrihtwisan cyninge afærran mihte. ⁊ on ryhtgeleaffulra ⁊ on rihtwisra anwald gebringan. Sende þa digellice ærendgewritu to þam Casere to Constantinopolim. þær is Creca heah burg ⁊ heora cynestol. forþam se Casere wæs heora ealdhlaforda cynnes. bædon hine þ he him to heora Cristendome ⁊ to heora ealdrihtum gefultumode. Ða þ ongeat se wælhreowa cyning Þeodric. ða het he hine gebringan on carcerne ⁊ þær inne belucan. Ða hit ða gelomp þ se arwyrða wer on swa micelre nearanesse becom. þa wæs he swa micle swiðor on his Mode gedrefed. swa his Mod ær swiðor to þam woruld sælþum gewunod wæs. ⁊ he ða nanre frofre be innan þam carcerne ne gemunde. ac he gefeoll niwol ofdune on þa flor. ⁊ hine astrehte swiðe unrot. ⁊ ormod hine selfne ongan wepan ⁊ þus singende cwæð.

CAP. II.

[illegible]

CAP. III.

[illegible]

This may perhaps be considered as a specimen of the Saxon in its highest state of purity, for here are scarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

Of the following version of the gospels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conquest, and therefore may properly be inserted here.

Translations seldom afford just specimens of a language, and least of all those in which a scrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, because they retain the phraseology and structure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the same book, being translated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into comparison with another. For this purpose I have placed the Saxon version and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in opposite columns; because the convenience of easy collation seems greater than that of regular chronology.

LUCÆ Cap. I.

[illegible]

LUK, Chap. I.

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a preest Zacarye by name: of the sort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughtris of Aaron: and hir name was Elizabeth.

2 And bothe weren juste bifore God: goynge in alle the maundementis and justifyingis of the Lord withouten pleynt.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes.

4 And it bifel that whanne Zacarye schould do the office of presthod in the ordir of his course to fore God.

5 Aftir the custom of the presthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encensen.

6 And al the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the our of encensyng.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him: and stood on the right half of the auter of encense.

8 And Zacarye seynge was afrayed: and drede fel upon him.

9 And the aungel sayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not: for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wif schal bere to thee a sone: and his name schal be clepid Jon.

10 And joye and gladyng schal be to thee: and manye schulen have joye in his natyvyte.

11 For he schal be great bifore the Lord: and he schal not drinke wyn ne sydyr, and he schal be fulfild with the holy gost yit of his modir wombe.

12 And he schal converte manye of the children of Israel to her Lord God.

13 And he schal go bifore in the spiryt and vertu of Helye: and he schal turne the hertis of the fadris to the sonis, and men out of bileve: to the prudence of just men, to make redy a parfyt puple to the Lord.

[illegible]

14 And Zacarye seyde to the aungel: wherof schal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon fer in hir dayes.

15 And the aungel answerde and seyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that stonde nygh bifore God, and Y am sent to thee to speke and to evangelise to thee these thingis, and lo thou schalt be doumbe.

16 And thou schalt not move speke, til into the day in which these thingis schulen be don, for thou hast not bileved to my wordis, whiche schulen be fulfild in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidynge Zacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myghte not speke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde seyn a visioun in the temple, and he bekenyde to hem: and he dwellide stille doumbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of his office weren fulfillid: he wente into his hous.

20 And aftir these dayes Elizabeth his wif conseyvede and hidde hir fyve monethis and seyde.

21 For so the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he lokide to take awey my repref among men.

22 But in the sixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was sent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23 To a mayden weddid to a man: whos name was Joseph of the hous of Dauith, and the name of the mayden was Marye.

24 And the aungel entride to hir, and seyde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: blessid be thou among wymmen.

25 And whanne sche hadde herd: sche was troublid in his word, and thoughte what maner salutacioun this was.

26 And the aungel seid to hir, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou hast founden grace anentis God.

27 Lo thou schalt conceyve in wombe, and schalt bere a sone: and thou schalt clepe his name Jhesus.

28 This schal be gret: and he schal be clepid the sone of highest, and the Lord God schal geve to him the sete of Dauith his fadir.

29 And he schal regne in the hous of Jacob withouten ende, and of his rewme schal be noon ende.

30 And Marye seyde to the aungel, on what maner schal this thing be don? for Y knowe not man.

31 And the aungel answerde and seyde to hir, the holy Gost schal come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the higheste schal over schadowe thee: and therfore that holy thing that schal be borun of thee: schal be clepide the sone of God.

32 And lo Elizabeth thi cosyn, and sche also hath conceyved a sone in hir eelde, and this monethe is the sixte to hir that is clepid bareyn.

33 For every word schal not be impossible anentis God.

34 And Marye seide to the hond mayden of the Lord: be it doon to me aftir thi word; and the aungel departide fro hir.

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haste into the mountaynes into a citee of Judee.

36 And sche entride into the hous of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth.

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the salutacioun of Marye the yonge child in hir wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfild with the holy Gost.

38 And criede with a gret voice and seyde, blessid be thou among wymmen and blessid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And wherof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the voice of thi salutacioun was maad in myn eeris: the yong child gladide in joye in my wombe.

41 And blessid be thou that hast bileved: for thilke thingis that ben seid of the Lord to thee schulen be parfytly don.

42 And Marye seyde, my soul magnifieth the Lord.

47 ⁊ min gast geblissode on Gode minum Hælende.

48 Forþam þe he geseah his þinene eadmodnesse. soþlice heonun-forð me eadige secgað ealle cneorissa.

49 Forþam þe me micele þing dyde se ðe mihtig is. ⁊ his nama is halig.

50 ⁊ his mild-heortnes of cneorisse on cneorisse hine ondrædendum.

51 He worhte mægne on his earme. he to-dælde þa ofer-modan on mode hyra heortan.

52 He awearp þa rican of setle. and þa eað-modan upahof.

53 Hyngriende he mid godum gefylde. ⁊ ofer-modige idele forlet.

54 He afeng Israhel his cniht. ⁊ gemunde his mild-heortnesse.

55 Swa he spræc to urum fæderum. Abrahame and his sæde on a worulda.

56 Soþlice Maria wunode mid hyre swylce þry monðas. ⁊ gewende þa to hyre huse.

57 Ða wæs gefylled Elizabethe cenning-tid. and heo sunu cende.

58 ⁊ hyre nehche-bùras ⁊ hyre cuðan þæt gehyrdon. þæt Drihten his mild-heortnesse mid hyre mærsode. ⁊ hig mid hyre blissodon.

59 Ða on þam eahteoðan dæge hig comon þæt cild ymbsniðan. and nemdon hine his fæder naman Zachariam.

60 Ða andswarode his modor. Ne se soþes. ac he bið Iohannes genemned.

61 Ða cwædon hi to hyre. Nis nan on þinre mægðe þyssum naman genemned.

62 Ða bicnodon hi to his fæder. hwæt he wolde hyne genemnedne beon.

63 Ða wrat he gebedenum wex-brede. Iohannes is his nama. Ða wundrodon hig ealle.

64 Ða wearð sona his muð ⁊ his tunge geopenod. ⁊ he spræc. Drihten bletsigende.

65 Ða wearð ege geworden ofer ealle hyra nehche-bùras. and ofer ealle Iudea munt-land wæron þas word gewidmærsode.

66 ⁊ ealle þa ðe hit gehyrdon. on hyra heortan setton ⁊ cwædon. Wenst ðu hwæt byð þes cnapa. witodlice Drihtnes hand wæs mid him.

67 ⁊ Zacharias his fæder wæs mid halegum Gaste gefylled. ⁊ he witegode and cwæð.

68 Gebletsod sy Drihten Israhela God. forþam þe he geneosode. ⁊ his folces alysednesse dyde.

69 ⁊ he us hæle horn arærde on Dauides huse his cnihtes.

70 Swa he spræc þurh his halegra witegena muð. þa ðe of worlde fram frymðe spræcon.

71 ⁊ he alysde us of urum feondum. and of ealra þæra handa þe us hatedon.

72 Mild-heortnesse to wyrcenne mid urum fæderum. ⁊ gemunan his halegan cyðnesse.

73 Hyne us to syllenne þone að þe he urum fæder Abrahame swor.

74 Þæt we butan ege. of ure feonda handa alysede him þeowian.

75 On halignesse beforan him eallum urum dagum.

76 And þu cnapa byst þæs hehstan witega genemned. þu gæst beforan Drihtnes ansyne. his wegas gearwian.

77 To syllenne his folce hælo gewit on hyra synna forgyfnesse.

78 Þurh innoðas ures Godes mild-heortnesse. on þam he us geneosode of east-dæle up springende.

79 Onlihtan þam þe on þystrum ⁊ on deaðes sceade sittað. ure fet to gereccenne on sibbe weg.

80 Soþlice se cnapa weox. ⁊ wæs on gaste gestrangod. ⁊ wæs on westenum oð þone dæg hys ætywednesse on Israhel.

47 And my spiryt hath gladid in God myn helthe.

48 For he hath biholden the mekenesse of his handmaydene: for lo for this alle generatiouns schulen seye that I am blessid.

49 For he that is mighti hath don to me grete thingis, and his name is holy.

50 And his mercy is fro kyndrede into kyndredis to men that dreden him.

51 He made myght in his arm, he scateride proude men with the thoughte of his herte.

52 He sette doun myghty men fro sete and enhaunside meke men.

53 He hath fulfillid hungry men with goodis, and he has left riche men voide.

54 He havynge mynde of his mercy took up Israel his child, 55 As he hath spokun to oure fadris, to Abraham, and to his seed into worldis.

56 And Marye dwellide with hir as it were thre monethis and turned agen into hir hous.

57 But the tyme of beringe child was fulfillid to Elizabeth, and sche bar a son.

58 And the neyghbouris and cosyns of hir herden that the Lord hadde magnyfied his mercy with hir, and thei thankiden him.

59 And it was doon in the eightithe day thei camen to circumcide the child, and thei clepiden him Zacarye by the name of his fadir.

60 And his modir answeride and seide, nay; but he schal be clepid Jon.

61 And thei seiden to hir, for no man is in thi kynrede that is clepid this name.

62 And thei bikenyden to his fadir, what he wolde that he were clepid.

63 And he axinge a poyntel wroot seiynge, Jon is his name, and alle men wondriden.

64 And anoon his mouth was openyd and his tunge, and he spak and blisside God.

65 And drede was maad on all hir neyghbouris, and all the wordis weren puplischid on alle the mounteyns of Judee.

66 And alle men that herden puttiden in her herte, and seiden what maner child schal this be, for the hond of the Lord was with him.

67 And Zacarye his fadir was fulfillid with the holy Goost, and profeciede and seide.

68 Blessid be the Lord God of Israel, for he hat visitid and maad redempcioun of his peple.

69 And he has rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his child.

70 As he spak by the mouth of hise holy prophetis that weren fro the world.

71 Helth fro oure enemyes, and fro the hond of alle men that hatiden us.

72 To do mercy with oure fadris, and to have mynde of his holy testament.

73 The grete ooth that he swoor to Abraham our fadir,

74 To geve himself to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hond of oure enemyes serve to him,

75 In holynesse and rightwisnesse before him, in alle our dayes.

76 And thou child schalt be clepid the prophete of the highest, for thou schalt go before the face of the Lord to make redy hise weyes.

77 To geve science of health to his puple into remissioun of her synnes.

78 By the inwardenesse of the mercy of oure God, in the which he springyng up fro on high hath visitid us.

79 To geve light to them that sitten in derknessis, and in schadowe of deeth, to dresse oure feet into the weye of pees.

80 And the child wexide, and was confortid in spirit, and was in desert placis till to the day of his schewing to Israel.

Of the Saxon poetry some specimens are extant, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their syllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impossible, to recover, excludes us from that pleasure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The first poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and consequently must have depended upon the quantity of their syllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and close their verses with correspondent sounds.

The two passages, which I have selected, contain apparently the rudiments of our present lyrick measures, and the writers may be justly considered as the genuine ancestors of the English poets.

Þe wes him [illegible] [illegible],
Hwet he [illegible] [illegible] buten he mighte,
Uor þ fulumpeð [illegible].
Þe is [illegible] and bute
And [illegible] [illegible].
Deað com on ðis midelærd
Þurh ðes deofles nide,
And sunne and sorȝe and iswinc,
On se and on londe.

Ic am elder þanne ic wes,
A wintre ⁊ ec a lore.
Ic ealdi more þanne ic dede,
Mi wit oghte to bi more.
Wel lange ic habbe child ibeen,
On weorde ⁊ ec on dede.
Þeh ic bi on wintren eald,
Ʒu yyng I eom on rede.
Unnut lyf ic habbe ilæd,
Ʒiet, me þincð, ic lede.
Þanne ic me biþenche,
Wel sore ic me adrede.
Heuen and erðe he oversihð,
His eȝhen buð fulbrihte.
Sunne ⁊ mone ⁊ alle steorren,
Buð þiestre on his lihte.
He wot hwet þenchað and hwet doð,
Alle quike wihte.
Nis no louerd swich is Crist,
Ne no king swich is drihte.
Heuene ⁊ erþe ⁊ all ðat is,
Biloken is on his honde.
He deð al þ his wille is,
On sea and ec on londe.
He is ord albuten orde,
And ende albuten ende.
He one is eure on eche stede,
Wende wer þu wende.
He is buuen us and binoðen,
Biforen and ec bihind.
Se man þ Godes wille deð,
Hie mai hine aihwar vinde.
Eche rune he iherð,
And wot eche dede.
He ðurh sihð eches iþanc,
Wai hwat sel us to rede.
Se man neure nele don god,
Ne neure god lif leden.
Er deð ⁊ dom come to his dure,
He mai him sore adreden.
Hunger ⁊ ðurst hete ⁊ chele,
Ecðe and all unhelðe.
Þurh deð com on ðis middelard,
And oðer unselðe.
Ne mai non heorte hit iþenche,
Ne no tunge telle.
Hu muchele pinum ⁊ hu fele,
Buð inne helle.
Louie God mid ure heorte,
And mid all ure mihte.
And ure emcristen swo us self,
Swo us lereð drihte.

Sume ðer habbeð lesse merȝðe,
And sume ðer habbeð more.
Ech efter ðan þ he dude,
Efter þ he swanc sore.
Ne sal ðer bi bred ne win,
Ne oþer kunnes este.
God one sal bi echer lif,
And blisce and eche reste.
Ne sal ðer bi scete ne scrud,
Ne worldes wele none.
Ac ȝe merhðe þ men of hiȝer,
All sal beo ȝod ane.
Ne mai no merȝþe bi swo muchel,
Swo is Godes isihðe.
He is soð sune and briht,
And dai buten nihte.
Þer is wele buten wane,
And reste buten swinche.
Se þ mai and nele ðider cume,
Sore hit sal him ofþinche.
Þer is blisce buten treȝe,
And lif buten deaðe.
Ðer eure wunien sculen,
Bliðe hi beoð and eaðe.
Þer is ȝeugeþe buten elde,
And elde buten unhelþe.
Nis ðer sorȝe ne sor non,
Ne non unselþe.
Þer me sel Drihten isen,
Swo ase he is mid iwisse.
He one mai and sel al bon,
Engles and manne blisse.
To ðare blisce us bringe God,
Þat rixeð buten ende.
Þanne he ure saula unbint,
Of lichamlice bende.
Crist ȝeve us lede swich lif,
And habbe swiche ende.
Þ we moten ðider cumen,
Þanne we hennes wende.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the present English may be plainly discovered; this change seems not to have been the effect of the Norman conquest, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the first hundred years after it; the language must therefore have been altered by causes like those which, notwithstanding the care of writers and societies instituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a specimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

On þis gære for þe king Stephne ofer sæ to Normandi. ⁊ ther wes underfangen. forþi ð hi wenden ð he sculde ben alsuic alse the eom wes. ⁊ for he hadde get his tresor. ac he todeld it ⁊ scateredsotlice. Micel hadde Henri king gadered gold ⁊ sylver. and na god ne dide me for his saule tharof. Þa þe king Stephne to Englalande com. þa macod he his gadering æt Oxene-ford. ⁊ þar he nam þe biscop Roger of Sereberi. ⁊ Alexander biscop of Lincol. ⁊ te Canceler Roger hise neves. ⁊ dide ælle in prisun. til hi iafen up here castles. Þa the suikes undergæton ð he milde man was ⁊ softe ⁊ god. ⁊ na justise ne dide. þa diden hi alle wunder. Hi hadden him manred maked and athes suoren. ac hi nan treuthe ne heolden. alle he wæron forsworen. ⁊ here treothes forloren. for ævric rice man his castles makede ⁊ agænes him heolden. ⁊ fylden þe land ful of castles. Hi suencten suyðe þe wrecce men of þe land mid castel-weorces. þa þe castles waren maked. þa fylden hi mid deovles ⁊ yvele men. Þa namen hi þa men þe hi wenden ð ani god hefden. bathe be nihtes ⁊ be dæies. carl-men ⁊ wimmen. ⁊ diden heom in prisun efter gold ⁊ sylver. ⁊ pined heom untellendlice pining. for ne wæren næure nan martyrs swa pined

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry seem to have been written, of which I have inserted only short fragments; the first is a rude attempt at the present measure of eight syllables, and the second is a natural introduction to Robert of Glocester, being composed in the same measure, which, however rude and barbarous it may seem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

FUR in see bi west Spaynge.
Is a lond ihote Cokaygne.
Þer nis lond under hevenriche.
Of wel of godnis hit iliche.
Þoy paradis be miri and bryʒt.
Cokaygn is of fairir syʒt.
What is þer in paradis.
Bot grasse and flure and grene ris.
Þoy þer be joi and gret dute.
Þer nis mete bote frute.
Þer nis halle bure no bench.
Bot watir man is þursto quench.
Beþ þer no men but two.
Hely and Enok also.
Elinglich may hi go.
Whar þer wonoþ men no mo.
In Cokaygne is met and drink.
Wiþute care how and swink.
Þe met is trie þe drink so clere.
To none russin and sopper.
I sigge for soþ boute were.
Þer nis lond on erþe is pere.
Under heven nis lond iwisse.
Of so mochil joi and blisse.
Þer is mani swete syʒte.
Al is dai nis þer no nyʒte.
Þer nis baret noþer strif.
Nis þer no deþ ac ever lif.
Þer nis lac of met no cloþ.
Þer nis man no womman wroþ.
Þer nis serpent wolf no fox.
Hors no capil. kowe no ox.
Þer nis schepe no swine no gote.
No non horwyla god it wote.
Noþer harate noþer stode.
Þe land is ful of oþer gode.
Nis þer flei fle no lowse.
In cloþ in toune bed no house.
Þer nis dunnir slete no hawle.
No non vile worme no snawile.
No non storm rein no winde.
Þer nis man no womman blinde.
Ok al is game joi and gle.
Wel is him þat þer mai be.
Þer beþ rivers gret and fine.
Of oile melk honi and wine.
Watir serviþ þer to noþing.
Bot to syʒt and to waussing.

SANCTA MARGARETTA.

OLDE ant yonge i preit ou oure folies for to lete.
Þenchet on god þat yef ou wit oure sunnes to bete.
Here mai tellen ou. wid wordes feire ant swete.
Þe vie of one meidan. was hoten Maregrete.
Hire fader was a patriac. as ic ou tellen may.
In auntioge wif eches i þe false lay.
Deve godes ant doumbe. he served nitt ant day.
So deden mony oþere. þat singeþ weilaway.
Theodosius was is nome. on crist ne levede he noutt.
He levede on þe false godes. þat weren wiþ honden wroutt.
Þo þat child sculde christine ben. it com him well in þoutt.
E bed wen it were ibore. to deþe it were ibroutt.
Þe moder was an heþene wif þat hire to wyman bere.
Þo þat child ibore was. nolde ho hit furþere.
Ho sende it into asye. wid messagers ful yare.
To a norice þat hire wiste. ant sette hire to lore.
Þe norice þat hire wiste. children haveþ seve.
Þe tuelfþe was maregrete. cristes may of heovene.
Tales ho am telle. ful feire ant ful evene.
Wou ho þolede marterdom. sein Laurence ant seinte Stevene.

In these fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not so much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own forms and terminations; for which no reason can be given.

Hitherto the language used in this island, however different in successive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be assigned, when the Saxon may be said to cease, and the English to commence. Robert of Glocester however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, seems to have used a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor English; in his work therefore we see the transition exhibited, and, as he is the first of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extensive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the same measure with the foregoing author of St. Margarite, which polished into greater exactness, appeared to our ancestors so suitable to the genius of the English language, that it was continued in use almost to the middle of the seventeenth century.

OF þe batayles of Denmarch, þat hii dude in þys londe
Þat worst were of alle oþere, we mote abbe an honde.
Wors hii were. vor oþere adde somewanne ydo,
As Romeyns & Saxons, & wel wuste þis lond þerto.
Ac hii ne kepte yt holde noʒt, bote robbi, and slete,
And destrue, & berne, & sle, & ne coupe abbe non ende.
And bote lute yt nas worþ, þey hii were ouercome ilome.
Vor myd shypes and gret poer as prest eft hii come.
Kyng Adelwolf of þys lond kyng was tuenty ʒer.
Þe Deneys come by hym rywe þan hii dude er.
Vor in þe al oþer ʒer of ys kyndom
Myd þre & þrytty shypuol men hii prince hyder come,
And at Souþhamtone aryued, an hauene by Souþe.
Anoþer gret ost þulke tyme aryuede at Portesmouþe.
Þe kyng nuste wuder kere, to wuch he wolde at erst.
Þe Deneys adde þe maystre, þo al was ydo,
And by Estangle & Lyndeseye hii wende vorþ atte laste,
And so hamward al by Kent, & slowe & barnde vaste.
Aʒen wynter hii wende hom. anoþer ʒer eft hii come
And destrude Kent al out, and Londone nome.
Þus al an ten ʒer þat lond hii brouʒte þer doune,
So þat in þe tuelfþe ʒer of þe kynges crounne,
Al byssoþe hii come alond, and þat folc of Somersete
Þoru þe bissop Alstan and þer folc of Dorsete
Hii come & foʒte an hateche, & þere, þoru Godes grace,
Þe Deneys were al byneþe, & þe said side adde þe place,
And more prowesse dude þo, þan þe kyng myʒte bifore,
Þeruore gode lond men ne beþ noʒt al verlore.
Þe kyng was þe boldore þo, & aʒen hem þe more drou,
And ys foure godes sones woxe vaste ynou,
Edelbold and Adelbryʒt, Edelred and Alfred.
Þys was a stalwarde tem, & of gret wysdom & red,
And kynges were al foure, & defendede wel þys lond,
As Deneys dude ssame ynou, þat me vyndeþ wryt.
In þrytteþe ʒere of þe kynges kyndom
Is eldeste sone Adelbold gret ost to hym nome,
And ys fader also god, and oþer heye men al so,
And wende aʒen þys Deneys, þat muche wo adde y do.

Vor

Vor myd suo hundred ſſypes & an alf at Temse mouþ hii come.
And Londone, and Kanterbury, and oþer tounes nome,
And so vorþ in to Souþereye, & slowe & barnde vaste,
Þer þe kyng and ys sone hem mette atte laste.
Þer was batayle strong ynou ymeynt in an prowe.
Þe godes knyztes leye adoun as gras, wan medep mawe.
Heþenemen, þat were of Heryn, & oþer lymes also,
Þat [illegible] from þe grounde, in þe batayle were ydo.
Wanne þat blod flod al abrod, wo þat gere wo y nou,
Nys it reuþe vorto here, þat me so vorþ drou?
At oure suete Louerd atte laste sende is suete grace,
And sende þe Cristine Englysſe men þe maystrye of þe place,
And þe heþene men of Denemarch byneþe were echon.
Nas þer nat zut in Denemarch Cristendom non;
Þe kyng her after to holy chyrche ys herte þe more drou,
And [illegible] wel & al ys lond, as hii zyte, wel ynou.
Seyn Swythyn at Wynchestre byssop þo was,
And Alcstan at Syreburne, þat amendede mucche þys cas.
Þe kyng was wel þe betere man þoru her beyre red,
Twenty wynter he was kyng, ar he were ded.
At Wynchestre he was ybured, as he zut lyþ þere.
Hys tueye sones he zef þys lond, as he byzet ham ere.
Adelbold, the eldest, þe kyngdom of Esses,
And suþþe Adelbryzt, Kent and Westsex.
Eyzte hundred zer it was and fourtene and fyfty al so,
After þat God anerþe com, þat þys dede was ydo.
Boþe hii wuste hy her tyme wel her kyngdom,
At þe vyfte zer Adelbold out of þys lyue nome.
At Syreborne he was ybured, & ys broþer Adelbryzt
Hys kyngdom adde after hym, as lawe was and ryzt.
By ys dawe þe verste com of þe heþene men wel prout,
And Hamtessyre and destrude Wynchestre al out.
And þat lond folc of Hamtessyre her red þo nome
And of Barcssyre, and fozte and þe ssrewen ouercome.
Adelbryzt was kyng of Kent zeres folle tene,
And of Westsex bote vyue, þo he deyde ych wene.

ADELRED was after hym kyng ymad in þe place,
Eyzte hundred & sixty & seuene as in þe zer of grace.
Þe vorste zer of ys kyngdom þe Deneys þycke come,
And robbede and destrude, and cytes vaste nome.
Maystres hii adde of her ost, as it were dukes, tueye,
Hyngnar and Hubba, þat ssrewen were beye.
In Est Angle hii byleuede, to rest hem as it were,
Myd her ost al þe wynter, of þe vorst zere.
Þe oþer zer hii dude hem vorþ, & ouer Humber come,
And slowe to grounde & barnde, & Euerwyk nome.
Þer was batayle strong ynou, vor yslawe was þere
Osryc kyng of Homberlond, & monye þat wiþ hym were.
Þo Homberlond was þus yssend, hii wende & tounes nome.
So þat atte laste to Estangle azen hii come.
Þer hii barnde & robbede, & þat folc to grounde slowe,
And, as wolues among ssep, reulych hem to drowe.
Seyn Edmund was þo her kyng, & þo he sey þat deluol cas
Þat me morþrede so þat folc, & non amendement nas,
He ches leuer to deye hymsulf, þat such sorwe to yse.
He dude hym vorþ among ys fon, nolde he noþyng fle.
Hii nome hym & scourged hym, & suþþe naked hym bounde
To a tre, & to hym ssote, & made hym mony a wounde,
Þat þe arewe were on hym so þycke, þat no stede nas byleuede.
Atte laste hii martred hym, & smyte of ys heued.
Þe sixte zer of þe crounement of Aldered þe kyng
A nywe ost com into þys lond, gret þoru alle þyng,
And anon to Redynge robbede and slowe.
Þe kyng and Alfred ys broþer nome men ynowe,
Mette hem, and a batayle smyte vp Assesdoune.
Þer was mony moder chyld, þat sone lay þer doune.
Þe batayle ylaste vorte nyzt, and þer were aslawe
Vyf dukes of Denemarch, ar hii wolde wyþ drawe,
And mony þousend of oþer men, & þo gonne hii to fle;
Ac hii adde alle ybe assend, zif þe nyzt nadde y be.
Tueye batayles her after in þe sulf zere
Hii smyte, and at boþe þe heþene maystres were.

Þe kyng Aldered sone þo þen wey of deþ nome,
As it vyl, þe vyfte zer of ys kyngdom.
At Wynbourne he was ybured, as God zef þat cas, Þe gode Alfred, ys broþer, after hym kyng was.

ALFRED, þys noble man, as in þe zer of grace he nom
Eyzte hundred & seuenty & tueye þe kyngdom.
Arst he adde at Rome ybe, &, vor ys grete wysdom,
Þe pope Leon hym blessede, þo he þuder com,
And þe kynge's croune of þys lond, þat in þys lond zut ys:
And he led hym to be kyng, ar he kyng were ywys.
An he was kyng of Engelond, of alle þat þer come,
Þat vorst þus ylad was of þe pope of Rome,
An suþþe oþer after hym of þe erchebyssopes echon.
So þat byuor hym þere kyng nas þer non.
In þe Souþ syde of Temese nyne batayles he nome,
Agen þe Deneys þe verst zer of ys kyngdom.
Nye zer he was þus in þys lond in batayle & in wo,
An oft syþe aboue was, and byneþe atto mo;
So longe, þat hym nere byleuede bote þre ssyren in al ys lond,
Hamtessyre, and Wyltessyre, and Somersete, of al ys lond.
A day as he wery was, and afuluþþyng hym nome,
And ys men were ywend auisseþ, Seyn Cutbert to hym com.
"Ich am," he sede, "Cutbert, to þe ycham ywend
"To brynge þe gode tyþynges. From God ycham ysend.
"Vor þat folc of þys lond to synne her wylle al zeue,
"And zut nolle herto her synnes byleue.
"Þoru me & oþer halewen, þat in þys lond were ybore,
"Þan vor zou byddeþ God, wanne we beþ hym byuore,
"Nou Louerd myd ys eyen of milce on þe lokeþ þerfore.
"And þy pouer þe wole zyue azen, þat þou ast ney verlore.
"And þat þou þer of soþ yse, þou ssalt abbe tokenynge.
"Vor þys men, þat beþ ago to day auisseþ,
"In lepes & in coufles so muche vyss hii ssolde hym brynge,
"Þat ech man wondry ssel of so gret cacchynge.
"And þe mor vor þe harde vorste, þat þe water ybore lys,
"Þat þe more azen þe kunde of vyssynge it ys.
"Of serue it wel azen God, and ylef me ys messager,
"And þou ssalt þy wylle abyde, as ychabbe ytold her."
As þys kyng herde þys, & of þys syzte þozte,
Hys vyssares come to hym, & so gret won of vyss hym brozte,
Þat wonder it was, & namelyche vor þe water was so colde.
Þo lyuede þe gode man wel, þat Seyn Cutbert adde ytold.
In Deuenssyre þer after arryuede of Deneys
Þre and twenty ssypuol men, al azen þe peys.
Þe kynge's broþer of Denemarch duc of hem was.
Oure kynge's men of Engelond mette hem by cas,
And slowe þer at batayle, and her gret duc also,
And eyzte hundred & tuenty men, & her caroyns to drowe.
Þo kyng Alfred herde þys, ys herte gladede þo,
Þat lond folc to hym come so þycke so it mygte go,
Of Somersete, of Wyltessyre, of Hamtessyre þero,
Euere as he wende, and of ys owe folc al so.
So þat he adde poer gode, and atte laste he come,
And a batayle at Edendone azen þe Deneys nome,
And slow to grounde, & wonne þe maystre of the velde.
Þe kyng & ys grete duke bygonne here to zelde
To þe kyng Alfred to ys wylle, and ostages take,
Vorto wende out of ys lond, zif he it wolde take;
And vor þerto, vor ys bost, to nonge Cristendom.
Kyng Gurmund, þe hexte kyng, vorst þer to come.
Kyng Alfred ys godfader was, & baptized ek þer were Þretty of her hexte dukes, and moche of þat folc þere.
Kyng Alfred hem dude wyþ hym tuelf dawes as he wende.
And suþþe he zef hem large zyftes, and let hym wende.
Hii, þat nolde Cristen be, of þys lond wende þo,
And byzonde see in France dude wel muche wo.
Zut þe ssrewen come azen, and muche wo here wrozte,
Ac þe kyng Alfred atte laste to grounde hem brozte.

Kyng

Kyng Alfred was þe wysest kyng, þat long was byuore.
Vor þey me segge þe lawes beþ in worre tyme verlore,
Nas yt nozt so in hys tyme; vor þey he in worre were,
Lawes he made ryztuollore, and strengore þan er were.
Clerc he was god ynou, and zut, as me telleþ ys,
He was more þan vourty zer old, ar he couþe ys abece.
Ac ys gode moder ofte smale zyftes hym tok,
Vor to byleue oþer pley, and loky on ys boke.
So þat by por clergye ys ryzt lawes he wonde,
Þat neuere er nere ymad, to gouerny ys lond.
And vor þe worre was so muche of þe lyþer Deneys,
Þe men of þys lond ne held none of þe peys,
And robbede and slowe oþere, þerore he byuonde,
Þat þer were hundredes in eche contreye of ys lond,
And in ech toune of þe hundred a teþinge were also,
And þat ech man wyþoute god lond in teþinge were ydo,
And þat ech man knowe oþer þat in teþinge were,
And wuste somdel of her stat, zif me sen vp hem bere.
So streyt he was, þat þey me lede amydde weyes here
Seluer, þat non man ne dorste it nyme, þey he it yseye.
Abbeys he rerde mony on, and mony studes wrozte,
At Wynchestre ys rerede, þat nywe munstre ycleped ys.
Hys lyf eyzte and tuenty zer in ys kyngdom ylaste.
After ys deþ he was ybured at Wynchestre atte laste.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himself informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, consequently required the use of many words and phrases, may be properly specified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chosen the first, because it shews, in some measure, the state of European science as well as of the English tongue; and the second, because it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expression.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may see the sterre transmontane, that is clept the sterre of the see, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre. But men seen another sterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the schip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode sterre, right so don schip men bezonde the parties, be the sterre of the Southe, the which sterre apperethe not to us. And this sterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode sterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cause, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the see ben of rownde schapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament schewethe in o contree, that schewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and sotyle compassement of wytt, that zif a man fond passages be schippes, that wolde go to serchen the world, men myghte go be schippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, aftre that I have seyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Astrolabre, that the sterre that is cleped the transmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties septemtrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my self have mesured it by the Astrolabre. Now schulle ze knowe, that azen the Transmontayne, is the tother sterre, that is clept Antartyke; as I have seyd before. And tho 2 sterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: so that tho sterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; so that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hathe benethen. Aftre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden, that in Lybye, men seen first the sterre Antartyk. And so fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that sterre more highe; so that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degree) aftre goynge be see and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have spoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the sterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and schippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee scholde have seen alle the roundnesse of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have seyd zou be forn, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 sterres: the whiche halfondelle I have seyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have seyn toward the Northe, undre the Transmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionalle, I have seen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have seen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and so there ne faylethe but that I have seen alle the firmament, saf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundnesse of the firmament holt 90 degrees: so there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partie. And also I have seen the 3 parties of alle the roundnesse of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I seye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and schippynge and conduyt: and alle weyes he scholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For wee wyten wel, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben streghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the transmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellen undre us, ben feet azenst feet. For alle the parties of see and of lond han here appositees, habitables or trepassables, and thei of this half and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that aftre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Prestre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotlond or from Englond toward Jerusalem, men gon upward alweys. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the West: and the lond of Prestre John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Est: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and also highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day. For the erthe and the see ben of round forme and schapp, as I have seyd beforn. And that that men gon upward to o cost, men gon dounward to another cost. Also zee have herd me seye, that Jerusalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and schewen there, be a spere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that schewethe no schadwe on no syde. And that it scholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytnessethe it in the Psautre, where he seythe, Deus operatus est salutem in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro tho parties of the West, for to go toward Jerusalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jerusalem, unto other confynyes of the superficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men gon bezonde tho iourneyes, towardes Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyrounynge the roundnesse of the erthe and of the see, undre oure contrees on this half. And therfore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed sometyme from oure contrees, for to go serche the world. And so he passed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and so longe he wente be see and lond, and so enviround the world be many seysons, that he fond an yle, where he herde speke his owne langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, suche wordes as men speken to bestes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I seye, that he had gon so longe, be londe and be see, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envirounynge, that is to seye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have passed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and so he loste moche peynefulle labour, as him self seyde, a gret while aftre, that he was comen hom. For it befelle aftre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempest of the see toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in

in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd speke his owne langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was a mervaylous thinge. But how it semethe to symple men unlerned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and also that men scholde falle toward the hevene, from undre. But that may not be, upon lesse, than wee mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what partie of the erthe, that men duelle, outher aboven or benethen, it semethe alweys to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than ony other folk. And righte as it semethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte so it semethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For 3if a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere resoun, the erthe and the see, that ben so grete and so hevy, scholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore seithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui suspendi terram ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be possible thing, that men may so envyrone alle the world, natheles of a 1000 persones, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the gretnesse of the erthe and of the see, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde reule him perfitely toward the parties that he cam fro, but 3if it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundnesse and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, aftre the opynyoun of the olde wise astronomeres. And here seyenges I repreve noughte. But aftre my lytylle wytt, it semethe me, savynge here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere understondynge, I seye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than aftre, be the gret compas devised be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; so that in as many parties, as the grete compas schal be departed, in als manye, schalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the spaces ben lesse. Now thanne, be the gret compas represented for the firmament, and the litille compas represented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devysed, be astronomeres, in 12 signes; and every signe is devysed in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Also, be the erthe devysed in als many parties, as the firmament; and lat every partye answere to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that aftre the auctoures of astronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe answeren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 sithes; and than thei ben 31500 myles, every of 8 furlonges, aftre myles of oure contree. So moche hathe the erthe in roundnesse, and of heighte envyroun, aftre myn opynyoun and myn understondynge. And zee schulle undirstonde, that aftre the opynyoun of olde wise philosophres and astronomeres, oure contree ne Irelond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles costynge to hem, ne ben not in the superficialtee cownted aboven the erthe; as it schewethe be alle the bokes of astronomye. For the superficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben descendynge toward the West. And also these yles of Ynde, which beth evene azenst us, beth nought reckned in the climates: for thei ben azenst us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates strecchen hem envyrounynge the world.

II. And I John Maundevylle knyghte abovescyd, (alle thoughe I be unworthi) that departed from oure contrees and passed the see, the zeer of grace 1322, that have passed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle straunge places, and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable companye, and at many a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myself, for myn unable insuffisance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my self) to reste; for gowtes, artetykes, that me distreynen, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, azenst my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge solace in my wretched reste, recordynge the tyme passed, I have fulfilled theise thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees. Wherfore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it plese hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I schalle preye for hem. And alle tho that seyn for me a Pater noster, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my synnes, I make hem parteneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his plesance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I schalle do unto my lyfes ende. And I beseche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godenesse and grace cometh fro, that he vouchesaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire soules with inspiracioun of the Holy Gost, in makynge defence of alle hire gostly enemyes here in erthe, to hire salvacioun, bothe of body and soule; to worschipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, with outen begynnynge and withouten endyng; that is, with outen qualitee, good, and with outen quantytee, gret; that in alle places is present, and alle thinges contenynge; the whiche that no goodnesse may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyvethe and regnethe God, be alle worldes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The first of our authours, who can be properly said to have written English, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confession of a Lover, calls Chaucer his disciple, and may therefore be considered as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to speke of the commune,
It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befalle in sondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All sodeinly, er it be wist,
A tunne, whan his lie arist
Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Which els shulde nought gone out.
And eke full ofte a littell skare
Upon a banke, er men be ware,
Let in the streme, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it shall restreine.
Where lawe failleth, errour groweth.
He is not wise, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proved oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In every londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miswent,
And thereupon his argument
Yeveth every man in sondrie wise:
But what man wolde him selfe avise,
His conscience, and nought misuse,
He maie well at the first excuse
His god, whiche ever stant in one,
In him there is defaute none,
So must it stande upon us selve,
Nought only upon ten ne twelve,
But plenerly upon us all.
For man is cause of that shall fall.

The history of our language is now brought to the point at which the history of our poetry is generally supposed to commence, the time of the illustrious Geoffry Chaucer, who may perhaps, with great justice, be stiled the first of our versifyers who wrote poetically. He does not however appear to have deserved all the praise which he has received, or all the censure that he has suffered. Dryden, who mistakes genius for learning, and, in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, ascribes to Chaucer the first refinement of our numbers, the first production of easy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more polished languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harsh terms for having vitiated his native speech by whole cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find smooth numbers and easy rhymes, of which Chaucer is supposed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does not allow us to discover with particular exactness; but the works of Gower and Lydgate sufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and some improvements he undoubtedly made by the various dispositions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he seems to have been happy and judicious. I have selected several specimens both of his prose and verse; and among them, part of his translation of Boetius, to which another version, made in the time of queen Mary, is opposed. It would be improper to quote very sparingly an author of so much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book so generally known.

CHAUCER.

ALAS! I wepyng am constrained to begin verse of sorowfull matter, that whilom in florishyng studie made delitable ditees. For lo! rendyng muses of Poetes enditen to me thynges to be writen, and drerie teres. At laste no drede ne myght overcame tho muses, that thei ne werren fellowes, and foloweden my waie, that is to saie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten nowe sorowfull weirdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwarely upon me, hasted by the harmes that I have, and sorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren shad overtimeliche upon my hed: and the slacke skinne trembleth of mine empted bodie. Thilke deth of men is welefull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be swete, but cometh to wretches often ycleped: Alas, alas! with how defe an eare deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to close wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that sorowfull houre, that is to saie, the deth, had almoste drente myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her deceivable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or wherto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallen, stode in no stedfast degre.

IN the mene while, that I still record these thynges with my self, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of poinctell: I saugh stondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full greate reverence, by semblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, seyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with soche vigour and strength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it so, that she were full of so greate age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her was of doutous judgemente, for sometyme she constrained and shronke her selven, like to the common mesure of menne: And sometyme it semed, that she touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when she hove her hedde higher, she perced the self heven, so that the sight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and subtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes she had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her self declaryng, and shewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darkenesse of a forleten and dispised elde had duskid and darked, as it is wont to darke by smoked images.

In the netherest hemme and bordure of these clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekishe A. that signifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hiest bordure, a Grekishe C. that signifieth the life contemplatife. And betwene these two letters there were sene degrees nobly wrought, in manner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the netherest letter to the upperest: natheless handes of some men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by strength, and

COLVILE.

I That in tyme of prosperite, and floryshing studye, made pleasaunte and delectable dities, or verses: alas now beyng heavy and sad overthrowen in adversitie, am compelled to fele and tast displeasures and grefe. Beholde the muses Poeticall, that is to saye: the pleasure that is in poetes verses, do appoynt me, and compel me to write these verses in meter, and the sorowfull verses do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yssuinge out of my eyes for sorowe. Whiche muses no feare without doute could overcome, but that they wold folow me in my journey of exile or banishment. Sometyme the joye of happy and lusty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the course of sorowfull olde age causeth me to rejoyse. For hasty old age unloked for is come upon me with al her incommodities and evyls, and sorow hath commaunded and broughte me into the same old age, that is to say: that sorowe causeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hore heares do growe untimely upon my heade, and my reveled skynne trembleth my flesh, cleane consumed and wasted with sorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is lusty, and in pleasure or welth: but in time of adversitie, when it is often desyred. Alas Alas howe dull and deafe be the eares of cruel death unto men in misery that would fayne dye: and yet refuseth to come and shut up theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that false fortune favoured me with her transitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almost overcome me. That is to say deathe was redy to oppresse me when I was in prosperitie. Nowe for by cause that fortune beynge turned, from prosperitie into adversitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaunged her deceyvable countenaunce: my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why have you so often bosted me, sayinge that I was happy when I had honor possessions riches, and authoritie which be transitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no stedfast degre.

WHYLES that I considered pryvely with my selfe the thynges before sayd, and descrybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wryter, me thought I sawe a woman stand over my head of a reverend countenaunce, havyng quycke and glysteryng clere eye, above the common sorte of men in lively and delectable coloure, and ful of strength, although she semed so olde that by no meanes she is thought to be one of this our tyme, her stature is of doutful knowledge, for nowe she showeth herselfe at the common length or stature of men, and other whiles she semeth so high, as though she touched heaven with the crowne of her hed. And when she wold stretch fourth her hed hygher, it also perced thorough heaven, so that mens syght coulde not attayne to behold her. Her vestures or cloths were perfyt of the fynyst thredes, and subtyll workemanshyp, and of substaunce permanent, which vestures she had woven with her own handes as I perceyved after by her owne sayinge. The kynde or beawtye of the which vestures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignoraunce of oldnes forgotten hadde obscured and darkened, as the smoke is wont to darken images that stand nighe the smoke. In the lower part of the sayd vestures was read the greke letter P. wouen which signifyeth practise or actyfe, and in the hygher part of the vestures the greke letter T. which standeth for theorica, that signifieth speculacion or contemplation. And betwene both the sayd letters were sene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a passage or waye in steppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter P. was which is understand from practys or actyf, unto errable woman of 'hem had borne away suche prees, as he might gettin. And forsothe this forsaid woman bare smale bokes in her right hande, and in her left hand she bare a scepter. And when she saw these Poeticall muses approchyng about my bed, and enditing wordes to my wepynges, she was a litle amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (q̄d she) hath suffered approchen to this sike manne these common strompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne asswagen not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and norishe hym with swete venime? Forsothe, thei ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes or affeccions, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, distroien the Corne, plenteous of fruictes of reson. For thei holden hertes of men in usage, but thei ne deliver not folke fro maladie. But if ye muses had withdrawen fro me with your flatteries any uncunnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commonly among the peple, I would well suffre the lasse grevously. For why, in suche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrawen fro me this man, that hath ben norished in my studies or scoles of Eleatics, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muses, that is to say, by my medicall scyences. And thus this companie of muses iblamed casten wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and shewing by rednesse their shame, thei passeden sorrowfully the thresholde. And I of whom the sight plounged in teres was darked, so that I ne might not knowe what that woman was, of so Imperial auctoritee, I woxe all abashed and stonied, and cast my sight doune to the yerth, and began still for to abide what she would doen afterward. Then came she nere, and set her doune upon the uttermost corner of my bed, and she beholdyng my chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these wordes (that I shall saie) the perturbacion of my thought.

the hyghest parte where the lettre T. was wroten is ... derstand speculacion or contemplacion. Nevertheles the handes of some vyolent persones had cut the sayde cloth and had taken awaye certayne peces thereof, ... everyche one coulde catch. And she her selfe bare in her ryght hand smal bokes, and in her lefte hande a scepter, which forsayd phylosophy (whan she saw the muses poetycal present at my bed, spekyng sorrowful wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry sayd (with ...) Who or knowynge (q̄d she) ... suffred ... harlotes to come to thys syke man? which can not only ... hym in no maner of hys griefe by any kind of medicine, but rather norysshe the same with swete poysons. Thise be they that also mysdoye the fertile and plentuous commodytyes of reason and the fruytes therof with their prycklynge thornes, or harmes, affeccions, and accustume or subdue mens myndes with sekenes, and lengoure, and do not delyver or heale them of the same. But yf your flatterye had conveyed or withdrawen from me, any unconnyng man as the commen sorte of people are wonte to be, I coulde have ben lesse contente therwith in that my werke should not be hurt or hyndred. But you have taken and conveyed from me thys man that hath ben brought up in the studyes of Aristotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence meremaydes (that seme swete untyll you have brought a man to deth) and suffre me to heale thys my man wyth my muses or scyences that be holsome and good. And after that phylosophy had spoken these wordes the sayd companye of the muses poetycall beynge rebuked and sad, cast downe their countenaunce to the grounde, and by blusshyng confessed their shamfastnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my syght dull and blynd with wepyng, so that I knewe not what woman this was havyng soo grete auctoritie) was amasyd or astonyed, and lokyng downeward, towards the grounde, I began pryvely to loke what thyng she would saye ferther; then she had sayd. Then she approchyng and drawyng nere unto me, sat downe upon the uttermoste part of my bed, and lokyng upon my face sad with wepyng, and declyned toward the erth for sorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde wyth these hir sayinge following.

The conclusions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book (written to his son in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) standeth so good at this day, especially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, says an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my sonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne scyences, touchyng nombres and proporcions, and also well consydre I thy besye prayer in especyal to lerne the tretyse of the astrolabye. Than for as moche as a philosopher saithe, he wrappeth hym in his frende, that condiscendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have geven the a suffycient astrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretise, I purpose to teche the a certaine nombre of conclusions, pertainyng to this same instrument. I say a certaine nombre of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Truste wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or els possibly might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the astrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to any mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothely in any cartes of the astrolabye that I have sene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges perfourme her behestes: and some of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretise divided in five partes, wil I shewe the wonder light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latin ne canst thou not yet but smale, my lytel sonne. But neverthelesse suffiseth to the these trewe conclusions in Englishe, as wel as suffiseth to these noble clerkes grekes these same conclusions in greke, and to the Arabiens in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had 'hem first out of other divers langages, and wrote 'hem in her owne tonge, that is to saie in Latine.

And God wote that in all these langages and in many mo, have these conclusyons ben suffisauntly lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome. Now wol I pray mekely every person discrete, that redeth or heareth this lytel tretise, to have my rude endityng excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, for that curious endityng and harde sentence is ful hevy at ones, for such a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that sothely me semeth better to writen unto a childe twise a good sentence, than he forgete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be so that I shewe the in my lyth Englishe, as trewe conclusions touching this matter, and not only as trewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben ishewed in latin, in any common treatis of the astrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the Kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him feith bereth, and obeieth everiche in his degree, the more and the lasse. But consydereth well, that I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engyn. I n'am but a lewde compilatour of the laboure of olde astrologiens, and have it translated in myne englishe onely for thy doctrine: and with this swerde shall I slene envy.

The first party.

The first partye of this tretise shall reherse the figures, and the membres of thyne astrolabye, bycause that thou shalte have the grete knowinge of thine owne instrument.

The seconde party.

The seconde partye shall teche the to werken the very practike of the forsaid conclusions, as ferforthe and also narowe as may be shewed in so smale an instrument portatife aboute. For wel wote every astrologien, that smallest fractions ne wol not be shewed in so smal an instrument, as in subtil tables calculed for a cause.

The PROLOGUE of the TESTAMENT of LOVE.

MANY men there ben, that with eres openly sprad so muche swalowen the deliciousnesse of jestes and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the godenesse or of the badnesse of the sentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle soule so sore have mined and graffed in my spirites, that suche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boistous percen the herte of the herer to the inrest point, and planten there the sentence of thinges, so that with litel helpe it is able to spring, this boke, that nothynge hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of semelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawe togider to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with vers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the sight of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the first leudenesse. So sothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayse, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudenesse commendeth. Eke it shal yeve sight that other precious thynges shall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many soveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfille, but certes there ben some that speken ther poisye mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a fantasye as we have in hearing of Frenche mennes Englishe. And many termes there ben in Englyshe, whiche unneth we Englishe men connen declare the knowleginge: howe should than a Frenche man borne? soche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Englishe. Right so truely the understandyn of Englishmen woll not stretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we bosten of straunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of science, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche also enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes, and let us shewe our fantasies in soche wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudnesse in travaile, yet soch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben necessarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual mirrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynges lightly may be conceved to eschue perils, and necessaries to catch, after as aventures have fallen to other peple or persons.

Certes the soveraynst thinge of desire and most creature reasonable, have or els should have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unresonable bestes mowen not, sithe reson hath in 'hem no workinge: than resonable that wol not, is comparisoned to unresonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forsothe the most soveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a sothe, withouten any entent deceyvable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

Nowe principally the meane to brynge in knowleging and lovynge his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, understandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unsene pryvites of God made to us syghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and understondinge. These thinges than forsothe moche bringen us to the ful knowlegynge sothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thinges. Lo! David saith: thou haste delited me in makinge, as who saith, to have delite in the tyme how God hat lent me in consideracion of thy makinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturell philosophers: it is a grete lykynge in love of knowinge ther creatoure: and also in knowinge of causes in kindelye thynges, considred forsothe the formes of kindelye thinges and the shap, a gret kyndely love we shulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore truly the philosophers with a lyvely studie manie noble thinges, right precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret swet and travaille to us leften of causes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philosophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty lust in kindely vertues and matters of reson the perfeccion by busy study to knowe, than to have had all the tresour, al the richesse, al the vaine glory, that the passed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therfore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to saie, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke pressed that suche godenes hated. And bicause this boke shall be of love, and the prime causes of stering in that doinge with passions and diseses for wantinge of desire, I wil that this boke be cleped the testament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in scorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, say he wil rende out the swerde of Hercules handes, and also he shulde set Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of strength to pull up the speare, that Alisander the noble might never wagge, and that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edward the thirde for al his grete prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorne and jape of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogither in the cloudie cloude of unconning, will putten me in prees to speak of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the grettest clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clene toforne 'hem, and with ther sharp sithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envye forsothe commendeth nought his reson, that he hath in hain, be it never so trully. And although these noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the sheves, and made many shockes, yet have I ensample to gader the smale crummes, and fullin my walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the smalle houndes, notwithstanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remissailes, as trenchours, and the relefe to bere to the almesse. Yet also have I leve of the noble husbande Boece, although I be a straunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and these grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the shedynge after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shal drawe by privyties out of shockes; a slye servaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in causes of thynges, was more hardier in the firste sechers, and so sayth Aristotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther passing study han freshed our wittes, and oure understandynge han excited in consideracion of trouth by sharpnes of ther resons. Utterly these thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of mesure was boistous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind asketh, with dryinge coldes maked the wawes of the ocean se so to arise unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

The PROLOGUES of the CANTERBURY Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprille with his shouris sote,
The droughte of March had percid to the rote,
And bathid every veyn in such licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his swete breth
Enspirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunne
Hath in the Ramm his halve cours yronne:
And smale foulis makin melodye,
That slepin all night with opin eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to gon on pilgrimage;
And palmers for to sekin straunge strondes,
To ferrin hallowes couth in sundry londes:
And specially fro every shire's end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,

The holy blissfull martyr for to seke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were seke.
Befell that in that seson on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hostery
Well nine and twenty in a company
Of sundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaship, and pilgrimes wer they all,
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.
The chambers and the stablis werin wide,
And well we werin esid at the best:
And shortly whan the sunne was to rest,
So had I spokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaship anone,
And made forward erly for to rise,
To take our weye, ther as I did devise.
But nathless while that I have time and space,
Er' that I farther in this tale pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reson,
To tell you alle the condition
Of ech of them, so as it semid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then woll I first begin.

The Knight.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the time that he first began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curtesy.
Full worthy was he in his lord'is werre,
And therto had he riddin, no man ferre
As well in Christendom, as in Hethnesse;
And evir honourid for his worthinesse.
At Alisaundre' he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin alle naciouns in Pruce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Christen man so oft of his degree
In Granada; in the sege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete se
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortal battails had he ben fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Tramesene,
In listis thryis, and alwey slein his fo.
This ilke worthy knight had ben also Sometimis with the lord of Palatie,
Ayens another hethin in Turky;
And evirmore he had a sov'rane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wise;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He nevir yet no villany ne said
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good, but he was nothing gay,
Of fustian he werid a gipon,
Alle besmottrid with his habergeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wente for to do his pilgrimage.

The House of FAME.
The First Boke.

NOW herkin, as I have you saied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith daie,
Whan it was night, to slepe I laie,
Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aslepe wondir sone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimage milis two
To the corps of sainct Leonarde,
To makin lithe that erst was harde.
But as me slept me mette I was Within a temple' ismade of glas,
In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, standyng in sondrie stages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnacles,
And with perre mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraituris,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I sawe evir.
But certainly I n'ill nevir
Where that it was, but well wist I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in portreiture
I sawe anone right her figure
Nakid yfletyng in a se,
And also on her hedde parde
Her rosy garlande white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blinde sonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.
But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus written on a table' of bras.
I woll now syng, if that I can,
The armis, and also the man,
That first came through his destinee
Fugitife fro Troye the countree
Into Itaile, with full moche pine,
Unto the strondis of Lavine,
And tho began the storie' anone,
As I shall tellin you echone.
First sawe I the distruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his false untrue forswerynges,
And with his chere and his lesynges,
That made a horse, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loste all ther joye.
And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions castill assailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus slain,
And Polites his sonne certain,
Dispitously of Dan Pyrrhus.
And next that sawe I howe Venus,
When that she sawe the castill brende,
Doune from hevin she gan discende,
And bade her sonne Æneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he
Escapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathir', old Anchises,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchises in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.
Then sawe I next that all in fere
How Creusa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong sonne clepid Julo,
And eke Ascanius also,
Fleddin eke, with full drerie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a forest as thei went
How at a tournyng of a went Creusa was loste, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her sought, and how her ghoste
Bad hym to flie the Grekis hoste,
And saied he must into Itaile,
As was his destinie, sauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her spirite gan appere,
The wordis that she to hym saied,
And for to kepe her sonne hym praied.
There sawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meine,
With his shippis began to saile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As streight as ere thei mightin go.
There sawe I thee, cruell Juno,
That art Dan Jupiters wife,
That hast ihated all thy life

Mercilesse all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of alle kindes
So loude, that he should ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojans nacion,
Without any' of ther savacion.
There sawe I soche tempest arise,
That every herte might agrise
To se it peintid on the wall.
There sawe I also gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full woful chere
Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
To save and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your sonne ywas.

Gode counsaile of CHAUCER.

FLIE fro the prese and dwell with sothfastnesse,
Suffise unto thy gode though it be small;
For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikilnesse,
Prece hath envie, and wele is blent oer all,
Savour no more then the behovin shall,
Rede well thy self, that othir folke canst rede,
And trouthe the shall delivir it 'is no drede.
Paine the not eche croked to redresse,
In trust of her that tournith as a balle,
Grete rest standith in litil businesse,
Beware also to spurne again a nalle,
Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
Demith thy self that demist othir's dede,
And trouthe the shall deliver it 'is no drede.
That the is sent receve in buxomenesse;
The wrastlyng of this worlde askith a fall;
Here is no home, here is but wildirnesse,
Forthe pilgrim, forthe o best out of thy stall,
Loke up on high, and thanke thy God of all,
Weivith thy luste and let thy ghost the lede,
And trouthe the shall delivir, it 'is no drede.

Balade of the village without paintyng.

THIS wretchid world'is transmutacion
As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordir or due discrecion
Govirnid is by fortun'is errour,
But nathelesse the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not do me syng though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labour
For finally fortune I doe defie.
Yet is me left the light of my resoun
To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and doun,
I taughtin me to knowin in an hour.
But truly no force of thy reddour
To hym that ovir hymself hath maistrie,
My suffisaunce yshal be my socour,
For finally fortune I do defie.
O Socrates, thou stedfast champion,
She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
Thou nevir dreddist her oppression,
Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour,
Thou knewe wele the disceipt of her colour,
And that her moste worship is for to lie,
I knowe her eke a false dissimulour,
For finally fortune I do defie.

The answere of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymself it wene,
He that yhath hymself hath suffisance,
Why saiest thou then I am to the so kene,
That hast thy self out of my governance?
Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundance,
That thou hast lent or this, thou shalt not strive,
What wost thou yet how I the woll avance?
And eke thou hast thy beste frende alive.
I have the taught division betwene
Frende of effecte, and frende of countinaunce,
The nedith not the galle of an hine,
That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce;
Now seest thou clere that wert in ignoraunce,
Yet holt thine ancre, and thou maiest arrive
There bountie berith the key of my substaunce,
And eke thou haste thy beste frende alive.
How many have I refused to sustene,
Sith I have the fostrid in thy plesaunce?
Wolt thou then make a statute on thy quene,
That I shall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
About the whele with othir must thou drive,
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
And eke thou hast thy beste frende alive.

The answere to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is adversitie,
My frend maist thou not revin blind goddesse,
That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it the,
Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a presse,
The nigardis in kepyng ther richesse
Pronostike is thou wolt ther toure assaile,
Wicke appetite cometh aie before sickenesse,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune.

Thou pinchist at my mutabilitie,
For I the lent a droppe of my richesse,
And now me likith to withdrawin me,
Why shouldist thou my roialtie oppresse?
The se maie ebbe and flowin more and lesse,
The welkin hath might to shine, rain, and haile,
Right so must I kithin my brotilnesse,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

The Plaintiffe.

Lo, the' execucion of the majestie,
That all purveighith of his rightwisenesse,
That same thyng fortune yclepin ye,
Ye blinde bestis full of lewdenesse!
The heven hath propirtie of sikirnesse,
This worlde hath evir restlesse travaile,
The last daie is the ende of myne entresse,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilnesse,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
And I shall quitin you this businesse,
And if ye liste releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his best frende of his noblenesse
That to some bettir state he maie attain.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the same time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of the Fall of Princes a few stanzas are selected, which, being compared with the style of his two contemporaries, will show that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a settled state.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
And hath none horse to releve his travayle,
Whote, drye and wery, and may find no bote
Of wel cold whan thrust doth hym assayle,
Wine nor licour, that may to hym avayle,
Right so fare I which in my businesse,
No succour fynde my rudenes to redresse.
I meane as thus, I have no fresh licour
Out of the conduites of Calliope,
Nor through Clio in rhethorike no floure,
In my labour for to refresh me:
Nor of the susters in noumber thrise three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaso dwell,
They never me gave drinke once of their wel.
Nor of theyr springes clere and christaline,
That sprange by touchyng of the Pegase,
Their favour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr bawme of so great scarcitie,
To tame their tonnes with some drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argus the brightnes.

Our life here short of wit the great dulnes
The hevy soule troubled with travayle,
And of memorye the glasyng brotelnes,
Drede and vncunning haue made a strong batail
With werines my spirite to assayle,
And with their subtil creping in most queint
Hath made my spirit in makyng for to feint.
And ouermore, the ferefull frowardnes
Of my stepmother called oblivion,
Hath a bastyll of foryetfulnes,
To stoppe the passage, and shadow my reason
That I might haue no clere direction,
In translating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.
Thus was I set and stode in double werre
At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer list to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me constrayne,
Bochas taccomplish for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to rest I durst not procede.

Fortescue was chief justice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471, after the battle of Tewksbury, and probably wrote most of his works in his privacy. The following passage is selected from his book of the Difference between an absolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peraventure be marvelid by some men, why one Realme is a Lordshyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale, and another Kyngdome is a Lordschip, Royal and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callyd Jus Politicum & Regale; sythen thes two Princes beth of egall Astate.

To this dowte it may be answeryd in this manner; The first Institution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Cause of this diversyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the first Realme, and subduyd it to hymself by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accomplishment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Which thyng he dyd not, but oppressyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robustus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beste for to scle and eate hym; so Nembroth subduyd to him the People with Might, to have their Service and their goods, using upon them the Lordschip that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid first a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then most resemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Crystyn Princes usen the same Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys sayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I suppose first beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, whan Mankynd was more mansuete, and better disposyd to Vertue, Grete Communalties, as was the Felyship, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philosopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts must needs have an Heed; than they chose the same Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Institution, and onying of themself into a Realme, ordeynyd the same Realme so to be rulyd and justyfyd by such Lawys, as they al would assent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum; and bycause it is mynystrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quasi Regimen, plurium Scientia, sive Consilio ministratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus saith, in his Boke de priscis Historiis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the same Lawe, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Assent of his People. And in like forme as he saith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And also the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordship, the sayd Diodorus in that Boke, praysith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more sewerly do Justice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is also good for his People that receyve therby, such Justice as they desyer themself. Now as me seymth, it ys shewyd openly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Desier and Institution of the People of the same Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was necessary to give a larger specimen, both because our language was then in a great degree formed and settled, and because it appears from Ben Johnson, that his works were considered as models of pure and elegant style. The tale, which is placed first, because earliest written, will show what an attentive reader will, in perusing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffused among those classes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has suffered very little change. There is another reason why the extracts from this author are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better trusted than any other edition of the English books of that, or the preceding ages.

A merry jest how a sergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maister Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway,
Affyrme and say,
That best is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The busines that he can,
And in no wyse,
To enterpryse,
An other facultie,
For he that wyll,
And can no skyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath lafte,
The hosiers crafte,
And falleth to making shone,
The smythe that shall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng scole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene shall proue a fole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothyng but kysse the cup,
With her phisick,
Wil kepe one sicke,
Tyll she haue soused hym vp.
A man of lawe,
That neuer sawe,
The wayes to bye and sell,
Wenyng to ryse,
By marchaundise,
I wish to spede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo seke,
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in sute,
Tyll he dispute,
His money cleane away.

Pletyng the lawe,
For euery strawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and strife,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go smatter,
In philosophy,
Or a pedlar,
Waxe a medlar,
In theology,
All that ensue,
Suche craftes new,
They driue so farre a cast,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
Beshrewe themselfe at last.
This thing was tryed
And verefyed,
Here by a sergeaunt late,
That thriftly was,
Or he coulde pas,
Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would
See how he could,
A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe how it fyll,
Take hede and ye shall here.
It happed so,
Not long ago,
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde,
Of nobles rounde,
That had he layd a side:
His sonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
For to beginne with all:
But to suffise
His chylde, well thrise,
That money was to smal.
Yet or this day
I haue hard say,
That many a man certesse,
Hath with good cast,
Be ryche at last,
That hath begonne with lesse.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
His money to imploy,
That certainly,
His policy,
To see it was a joy,
For lest sum blast,
Myght ouer cast,
His ship, or by mischaunce,
Men with sum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
And minish his substaunce,
For to put out,
All maner doute,
He made a good puruay,
For euery whyt,
By his owne wyt,
And toke an other way:
First fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
He dygged it in a pot,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetously,
He supped it fayre vp,
In his owne brest,
He thought it best,
His money to enclose,
Then wist he well,
What euer fell,
He coulde it neuer lose.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
Money and marchaundise:
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
In like maner wyse.
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
He reight not what he spent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
Could him not miscontent.
With lusty sporte,
And with resort,
Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
He liued merely.
And men had sworne,
Some man is borne,
To haue a lucky howre,
And so was he,
For such degre,
He gat and suche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
A sergeaunt well and fayre,
Was redy strayte,
On him to wayte,
As sone as on the mayre.
But he doubtlesse,
Of his mekenesse,
Hated such pompe and pride,
And would not go,
Companied so,
But drewe himself a side,
To saint Katharine,
Streight as a line,
He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocion,
There would he nedes abyde.
There spent he fast,
Till all were past,
And to him came there meny,
To aske theyr det,
But none could get,
The valour of a peny.
With visage stout,
He bare it out,
Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was faine,
To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
But that he wist not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So sick alway,
He myght not come abrode.
It happed than,
A marchant man,
That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
Than gan enquere,
What him was best to do.
And he answerde,
Be not aferde,
Take an accion therfore,
I you beheste,
I shall hym reste,
And than care for no more.

I fain good be,
It will not be.
For he will not come out.
The frogmen said,
Brave sheep,
It shall be brought alone.
In every a game,
Lyke to the flame,
Have I been well as you,
And for your sake,
Leave he takes,
But if I do this sure.
Thus part they both,
And fourth this goth,
A poor this officers,
And for a cup,
All his array,
He changed with a force,
So was he slight,
That no man might,
Hym for a force deny,
He dropped and looked,
He spake and looked,
So religiously,
Yet in a gladly,
Or he would gryll,
He could and he pensed,
He hurte he gryll,
Lyke in his fyll,
To fly here will he forced,
Than fourth a pace,
Unto the place,
He goeth wishedness Hymre
To fly the duke,
But now take leave,
For here begynneth the game,
He drew hym up,
And fetteth,
Steyghyl it therfore he knocked,
And a shewed,
Thus hard gyn well,
Thus drew and he wakened,
The force fayn,
Good lyeth hym stayed,
Hym forgeth fyll a man,
It is told me,
Well my good dye,
And yf he do sleep than Quod he mayrdeth,
No harme doubtyll
It longeth he can sedet,
To hym en man,
But as we can,
Every wight to fleet,
With hym rede,
Anyone speaky would I
Or good the by my lay,
He is to thee,
Ye be not yder,
To fyddle with hym to day,
Quod he foyer man,
Yet I am pryer,
This much is my desire,
Yonderlyke as thy,
As ye syrre to,
And for as multer force
Would with hym fyght,
And mayrem wrakes,
For he mayre corrupts,
Quod he I wyll,
Sweet yr here fyll,
Yf I mayrdeme agayn,
Yet I am gay,
And for hym fyll,
As he was hole to day,
He mistrusted,
No mayre dyrage,
Sayd thyrsty dyrthy way,
And wyll you wyll,
That ye agayn,
May wyll A drawe the gaine,
Up the hym beautyll,
No harme he mayrgyll,
But it made some talke wrothe,
This officers,
This fayrest force,
What he was come shall,
He dropped than,
And gave the man,
Religiously and yll,
And he again,
Right glad and fayn,
Take syre thou by the hand,
The force than said,
Ye be deceived,
With wyll I understande,
In dede quod he,
In both with me,
Bene better than it is,
Syr quod the force,
Be of good force,
Yet Shall a clear this,
But I would sorry,
Comen with you,
In consideyll of your phash,
Or elles not
Of matters that,
Shall to your heart accide,
Drawe wyll the mayrd,
The mayrdeme force,
Now ye be gaynyll force,
Or thys to day,
That ye not hyrge,
I long full sore to hear,
Than force syre sayd,
But thy sister,
The force with mayrl grace,
Sayd, I will syre,
Come to wyll rye,
And not be vrtil the mare,
Than dwell syre,
Come on thy way,
I have the in my choyce,
Than gayll not hurte,
For all the force,
The mayre fyll by his poyntes,
Than mayrdeme force,
For sayd and syre,
He wayrgyll would,
Sayd harme thyrle,
With a mayrdeme,
Who mayrgyll the thy good,
And with yn yll,
Vpon the tyll,
He gave hym such a blow,
That backward drewe,
Almost to force,
The force is conclusion,
Yet was this arrll,
Well force shall,
Left to the hard full force,
Yet with good reppyll,
And hoy thyrgyll,
He drewe hym vp agayne,
The force was sadly,
And vp in force,
And wyll he yll to shoot,
And to drew gyll,
Between man hole,
Many a lady slept,
They rent and cry,
Ever other force,
And force mayrdeme fall,
Yet was hangyll,
And wyll vp yll,
They left force force as yll,
Thus on the ground,
Yet force rancor,
With mayrl a little finger,
They rent and shyrtle,
They turne and twinkle,
As prygge do in a pyke.

So long alone,
They force and thoughe,
Together that of loth,
The mayrd and wyll,
To make the force,
Hyrd them vp and fall,
And when they force,
The carpenter hyll,
Both nothing on the place,
The force hoyll,
They force a good,
Adjoine shall his force,
Which is an ear hoyll,
The mayrdeme force,
I am lore hyll on the force,
Many a cowly,
Above the mayrd,
With a great force force,
The wyll come yll,
And with my force,
The force force force force force force,
And with his force force,
Hard a knocking,
He force force on the counsyll,
They force force force force force force

Without my leaue, there is nothing wanted.
Nay a matter have I brought it well.
To good purpose, that hardly was begunne
And more a purpose, therefore first out all
With vile patches, I haue mended.
Whether good neighbourhoo may be so, I doble,
Bette is to be thinnest than wyde.
And therefore hath there been much bote or ille,
My deedy tale and written many a bille.
To my diligyence. And other cause thereto
But for me lit me treasly on there lore.
This pile, for the they saw that were behide,
The plaitiers grapes. And gae for to defy them.
But ade be hyt, and yet should ma come by them.
But he that wore thyse thyse labour is in vayne.
For well to wete, myth, humiste, and iniquitie,
Maiff bolter a thist, pauyre and poyne.
The mody wrath that hagrete is ainsiff,
Without myse helpe is eure unedeiff.
A very hodrednolous and bolde,
To will the wrath, and ske to, into lille hath.
But he that by my humeur may attinde,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A counsyle well to gouerne and defende,
Or bolne hit conclusion finisheth he:
Hym left to honour and fiftiere,
And eure that, way further and increale,
A region hath in spiritel soil and peace.
Now in this poyst there is no mere to say,
Ende also hatell of hem yet the gouernaunce.
Lerneny wight that haue to-ouer way.
And hardiest of prayere and sufficiance,
Lall for to live, and wyll this this existence,
In wealth and rouiall, eure forth and wayne in me.
And he that wyll be a leggar, as hym lie.

THUS is Meta to show this mall in Fortune.

THOU that are poynte of honour flagie or hyere,
Thy hatt beyeth (?) thy wonderd wisdom resolute,
Thy finger decorat with gold, thy every throne,
Thy hatt appeyre gouernaunce and hardiesse,
And mete thy hatt honour of thy pleasure.
Lall I thereyse and hate hate thyse obeyse,
Thy hatt hatt ones in thy charge and eure wayne.
A mayne of thy hatt a hardy hyere and height,
Thy hatt hatt ones hatt a hyere hyere hyere,
Thy hatt hatt ones hatt hyere hyere hyere,
Thy hatt hatt ones hatt hyere hyere hyere,
Thy hatt hatt ones hatt hyere hyere hyere,
And hatt hatt ones hatt hyere hyere hyere.
Yet in all ade ne be hatt hatt hatt hatt,
Thy wrathed is eure aryse and hatt hatt hatt.
As those at Fortune hatt to high aspayre,
Wan hyere continuance hatt hyere hyere hyere,
To eure and hatt hatt hyere hyere hyere hyere,
Not ons or twyse not hatt hatt hatt hatt hatt,
Lyke hatt hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere.
Thus as a hatt hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere,
Slate, gyle, vile hatt hyere hyere hyere hyere.
Or ande thereof hatt hyere hyere hyere hyere,
And eure therefore, it pleyse hyere hyere hyere,
Fortune, or hatt hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere,
Angel hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere,
Pondyr the effect of hatt hyere hyere hyere,
Lall hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere,
Fyll hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere,
Dyldyn and hatred on hatt hyere hyere,
Hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere,
Hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere,
Hyere hyere hyere hyere hyere wyth hal aest inbelynge thereto: for herwas ne thaylye no fynde it of nougte.

Ne sawe ye neuere in the court of this kyngre, were it thys the duke of Glaucester knoldr of all intentend this consideiion, or ne were at othe thermette ecomd, and yt parlyt hage be the auction ie thrtuoin age of the younge prynce, his nephew, he appeyse ayre and ydeyfyeeth of yprit, yeteth a reuse in courage of that his nere eancedy ceayre is a the ter continued there cofterrion, with the ryngrcaie the regal dignitye wypse lynitiit. And for to marke at ho wyl with and hopes ouerwere, a longeyeeteed gradge and hatre betwyngre between the quene kinrd and the lordes lynal, yther party engyng ether to thentyre, he nelse thought that their decisions should be ca ie ne wicke; ie lordynby hapyynyge in ye pesence of ie ioonte, and a tine prepard for the inedicaon of a the hadding of he wyple fyrte ovyr the prynce of wantynge of a the inplacion, thede the angre and ynpatence of the one prye, to ie fatrhyn ioes of ie nuiter: and ales wyse to ie parpell a thatyr in ie tonde: and yhde that nanie ne ie wrone, wynge ie lide ere ytey hoked therefore. For ie ioonte ne ie ne ie ie ie between the kynge and them, and in kynge them to conclude, but it should not be in his power. And when he begynne (as he was every wel ipeken mynne) he gouyl wole of every thinkth, they mynd not the ends of his answers, but thereby make him and poor him at waste, and that those, forewards, went to barbarities, and made the wyse to Sonne Sentencie. Where they thinkth the kynge was not ynough ready to kynge on barbarities, and dispare towards, to kynge that kynge for them, forthwit it was to kynge for barbe mynnynyn. And as time as they come in his presence, they lighte adnewe with all their compacte choice them. To whome the duke at Buckingham said, you wyse gentlemenne and poomes, keep your ravenne. And that is goodly answer, that came to the kynge, and to them also to very humble wile, thinkth his grace; whiche accepted them in very joyous and amiable mane, nothinge earthly knowing, no without, to go out. But eare by and by in his presence, they grinned a quench on the lorde Richard Grey, the kynge other brother by his mother, kynge that his with the lorde marquis his brother and the lorde Ferrer Wynnyle, hadde conspylled to slyte the kynge and his mother, and to first nainesme among the thirte, and to dismove and deflowre the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accomplishing whereof, they lighte that the lorde Marquis hadde entered into the Tower of London, and there made up the kynge trouble, and for more to be sure. All whiche things dyde Hastie while yet were alive for great purpose and goodly ende for the whole realm of London, during the kynge in the mean tie. Yets whole wrathe, he kynge conceived, when he heardd Marquis hadde been Tower nor. But in good faith I think well anybrede kynge could have done my brother, and that he presumed of my fain mistrick. I say kynge good, for Hastie at Buckingham dyd have kynge their dyddeg in their eastern farm the knowledge of your grace grace. And Hastinges dyd provide the lord Richard and the Thomas Wynnyle Knyghte, in the kynge presence, and kynge the kynge and all hadde very mynnynynynn, as they could against further enemies. And Hastinges was at Ely Place the kynge where it plaedth Grace, and that mere Hastinges almost lost, hadde a hyed berry than mean Hastinges. At whiche dyddeyge her wyfe and was hurtinge dyddeyge, as I hoord not. And at dinner time the Gloucesters more a dyde than he wyse ithin to the lord Hastinges, hadde been his brother, and ithin, he should be well enough." And he hastedd the dinner, and prayed the mythinger to hoorn it his mythinger ithe lorde Richard with the lorde mythinge for his mythinger, who he thought had more spirit of mythinge, is not so wise fitch mythinge mythinge. But hastedd hid hoorn it his dinner is well dinnerly, and thrilled thinkth hoorn is the hoorn. But for at this unmerrinnth mythinge of the duke of Gloucester by that the lord Hastings and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Martin mynnynyn ran more place to prison, and dyddeyge and is Pontefract, where they were in mythinge beheaded.

A letter written with a coke by Sir Francis Moore to his daughter mistress MARGARET Roeres, within Whitehall, as was prisoner in the Tower.

MYNE own good daughter, our lorde be thanked I have good hopes of hodyes, and to good point of mistrick and of wardly respects I am indeed very well, I have no cause to complain, but I am in the hope of heaven. And yet I despair as I remember hoorgot to write with you all, embracing the wardly in mane, our lorde for ever bless your mynsdyes, as I wulle be ever and forever to your hoorgot figure; who dyddeyge your precious pye, and Christ myth a cake to your wardly hoorgot father, who in his poor prayers dayegotth mane of you all, that your hodyes, and your souls, may have good mythinge, and your good hoorgot hoorgot hoorgot, are your dyddeyge. Hoorgot myth another, and no other trouble. And mane my ye hoorgot will be lodge of paper.

Thomas Moore, knight.

Two fleet balisters which Sir Thomas Moore made for his prisone while he was prisoner in the Tower of London.

Lower the bell hither.

ET flowing farmer, take thou mane fo fayre,
Or mane be plentiful begin to fade,
Attonage thou wouldst my name all repayre,
During my life thou shalt not me begide.
Trull that I God, as mane in a while,
Hys house an honyer fare and epicure,
Eare after thy calere, take I for a farmer.

Date the dyme.

LONG wat hale Lucke you fowing thin,
And mow have left repyne all that I yen,
Wouldst thou (Dilldo) to mane mane dyddeyge,
And in my apyde remember the dee that
To my you thane me thingk I hadde mane
But to forgit I think you agreed a thousyne times,
For lending the mane hope hopes to make it yens.

At the fatal time with Sir Thomas More fond Dilldo, the lorde Chancellor of Ethen Hill, from whom wouldst wake a fleet prepare to meet a new Mistrick, thingk he should be glad to have attended good company to dyddeyge.

The prologue to the Kinge of Cocoes.

IN Amazonne what the Sonne is vyrgyne
Is that ones hyre empyred hathinge vanne
Whan Lucna full of mondelyne
Is Empress dee dyddeyne that wonne
Of our gole anybrede, and gage hells in Rome
In our hole and our yellow dyddeyne
The cocoes wonne Mom or warm hym dyddeyne,
I mean to explyde the green colyne
Of cocoes ones, whiche hth entirely
Yoke at cocoes wonne as cuckle be
Cut to the a touch, and dinke fidelyne
With mane fyre fyre fyre fyre fyre fyre
Dyddeyne to hyre dinne fyrend are yon to myre
Hyrend mane to dyddeyne
Whereby I mete, dinge mynnen and dinge hinne
More mane dyddeyne, mane mynnynynynn
I was dinge myend to a dyddeyne dinne
But ignorance hth lotinge dyddeyne
And Bowes gage is the mane I was not lone
Lorne mane dyddeyne So hyed I gain to mane
Adventyrge mane my pecule ancre to gaile
And not to weyre, for mane to be well anyne
Knowinge rather than to conquyge is
Hth lotinge mane to be barb, but Ma dyddeyne
Yet hone I knowne force of dee
Wat of myende dinge dyddeyne myne
That dyddeyth hyre dinne be mane dyddeyne hinne
Wittr and he dyddeyne, mane dyddeyne dinne
That yp and down my myende was drowne and dee
That I to myde what to do mane
So dee drowned that I wear at the lide
Ruinedd dinne, and he I mane dyddeyne
And to by dinne as fonne as I my dinne
At Hawnde yonr dinne dyddeyne at I
In myne lodge hath called yonrs hyre

Of the wife that hanghed in the sign of Hen Nill, some has been more frequently mentioned than this out of Story; and this Nillcock would Gentlefoot have Gone Wedded without Ceremony, if the Gentlewoman, which yet is not easily to distinguish from those of the Prince Of and others, with which Gentlefoot Gentlewoman he seldom thinkes fallen into my hands. The three Hell-ed I believe, Jerry's, thereth being of the Hen sign, are indeed, some examples of different conditions, and some in the sixth composition which I have hoved in Hen, with

Description of Spring, wherein who, thing present, fair only the Hence.

THE Hen hoodie charmed, and whose Gentlewoman which gone hath clad in the fresh and sweet air,
Hth hoodie Spring with delicate mane the flight
The mane to her mane hath said her mane

Sonne is come, for every fowre now springes,
The hart hath hinge hyre mane hathinge dyne,
The birdes in birdes hyre mane mane for dyddeyne,
The fishes fine with mane myende dee
The mylne of her hinge myende dee dyddeyne,
The fowls feathers purchaste the dyddeyne,
The hath hyre hyre hyre hyre dee myende
Winter is mane that was the mane dinge
And then Mane dinge dee myende dee
Hyre mane dinne, and yet my mane hyrinne.

Description of the coffin chest of a lover.

WHen roots had hid me hall the tree,
Or that Cupidos dee myende dee mane,
I looked for mane myende dee the place,
Wonder mane myende dee myende dee myende
And in my apyde remember dee dee that
To my you thane me thingk I hadde mane
But to forgit I think you agreed a thousyne times,
For lending the mane hope hopes to make it yens.

At the fatal time with Sir Thomas More fond Dilldo, the lorde Chancellor of Ethen Hill, from whom wouldst wake a fleet prepare to meet a new Mistrick, thingk he should be glad to have attended good company to dyddeyge.

The prologue to the Kinge of Cocoes.

IN Amazonne what the Sonne is vyrgyne
Is that ones hyre empyred hathinge vanne
When Lucna full of mondelyne
Is Empress dee dyddeyne that wonne
Of our gole anybrede, and gage hells in Rome
In our hole and our yellow dyddeyne
The cocoes wonne Mom or warm hym dyddeyne,
I mean to explyde the green colyne
Of cocoes ones, whiche hth entirely
Yoke at cocoes wonne as cuckle be
Cut to the a touch, and dinke fidelyne
With mane fyre fyre fyre fyre fyre fyre
Dyddeyne to hyre dinne fyrend are yon to myre
Hyrend mane to dyddeyne
Whereby I mete, dinge mynnen and dinge hinne
More mane dyddeyne, mane mynnynynynn
I was dinge myend to a dyddeyne dinne
But ignorance hth lotinge dyddeyne
And Bowes gage is the mane I was not lone
Lorne mane dyddeyne So hyed I gain to mane
Adventyrge mane my pecule ancre to gaile
And not to weyre, for mane to be well anyne
Knowinge rather than to conquyge is
Hth lotinge mane to be barb, but Ma dyddeyne
Yet hone I knowne force of dee
Wat of myende dinge dyddeyne myne
That dyddeyth hyre dinne be mane dyddeyne hinne
Wittr and he dyddeyne, mane dyddeyne dinne
That yp and down my myende was drowne and dee
That I to myde what to do mane
So dee drowned that I wear at the lide
Ruinedd dinne, and he I mane dyddeyne
And to by dinne as fonne as I my dinne
At Hawnde yonr dinne dyddeyne at I
In myne lodge hath called yonrs hyre

Of the wife that hanghed in the sign of Hen Nill, some has been more frequently mentioned than this out of Story; and this Nillcock would Gentlefoot have Gone Wedded without Ceremony, if the Gentlewoman, which yet is not easily to distinguish from those of the Prince Of and others, with which Gentlefoot Gentlewoman he seldom thinkes fallen into my hands. The three Hell-ed I believe, Jerry's, thereth being of the Hen sign, are indeed, some examples of different conditions, and some in the sixth composition which I have hoved in Hen, with

Description of Spring, wherein who, thing present, fair only the Hence.

THE Hen hoodie charmed, and whose Gentlewoman which gone hath clad in the fresh and sweet air,
Hth hoodie Spring with delicate mane the flight
The mane to her mane hath said her mane

Sonne is come, for every fowre now springes,
The hart hath hinge hyre mane hathinge dyne,
The birdes in birdes hyre mane mane for dyddeyne,
The fishes fine with mane myende dee
The mylne of her hinge myende dee dyddeyne,
The fowls feathers purchaste the dyddeyne,
The hath hyre hyre hyre hyre dee myende
Winter is mane that was the mane dinge
And then Mane dinge dee myende dee
Hyre mane dinne, and yet my mane hyrinne.

Inclosure of the coffin chest of a lover.

WHen roots had hid me hall the tree,
Or that Cupidos dee myende dee mane,
I looked for mane myende dee the place,
Wonder mane myende dee myende dee myende
And in my apyde remember dee dee that
Mingledog my hell hid dee myende
Mane over the ground of dinger hyre,
Hid rode me myende dee myende dee myende
Fee only my mane myende dee myende
And only my mane myende dee myende
The spring under dyd dee myende
The spring under dyd dee myende
And when late mane dee myende dee myende
Where mane hee pleasure myende dee myende
He mane hee the dinge myende
For that the hodies were myende and blowne
And when myere myen dyd that parlore,
The dinge dinge of myere myende
Those gently hinge dyd dee myende
The hyden wonne myende myende
Whereover lake dee myende dee myende
Fann dinge gale myende myende
Ho myende hyere myende myende
Yet hee for hinge my myende myende
But all in vain I have learned: am,
To paper all kyndes of myende myende
To blind dinge myende myende myende
My myende shades with Cupids bow.
And now the court hath I claime,
The wanton Cupids myende myende
And mantled hyre myende myende
For myere myende myende myende

I hope and am a colde,
I freese amyddes the fyer,
I se she doth witholde
That is my honest desyre.
I se my helpe at hande,
I se my lyfe also,
I se where she doth stande
That is my deadly fo.
I se how she doth se,
And yet she wil be blynde,
I se in helpyng me,
She sekes and wil not fynde.
I se how she doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I se when I come nye,
How fayne she would be gone.
I se what wil ye more,
She will me gladly kill,
And you shall se therfore
That she shall have her will.
I cannot live with stones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egyptian astronomer, in the first fight that Alexander had with the Persians.

NOW clattring armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan passe the noys of dredfull trumpetts clang.
Shrowded with shafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,
Covered the ayre. Against full fatted bulles,
As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whose greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons against the Persians fare.
Now corpses hyde the purpurde soyle with blood;
Large slaughter on eche side, but Perses more,
Moyst feldes bebled, theyr herts and numbers bate,
Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The litening Macedon by swordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footemen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym his merest kyn,
Oxate preserves with horsemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge should give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where strong youth is spent:
Shaking her bloudy hands, Bellone among
The Perses soweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yrent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym smytes the club, hym woundes farre stryking bowe,
And him the sling, and him the shining sword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he restes.
Right over stoode in snowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunnyng clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celestiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aspect, eclips,
And influence, and constellations all;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty storde, what signe forewarned death,
How winter gendreth snow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth season well the soyle,
Why summer burnes, why autumne hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themselves how great
Proportion is; what sway the erryng lightes
Doth send in course gayne that fyrst movyng heaven;
What grees one from another distant be,
What starr doth lett the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more mylde what opposition makes,
What fyre doth qualifye Mavorses fyre,
What house eche one doth seeke, what plannett raignes
Within this heaven sphere, nor that small thynges
I speake, whole heaven he closeth in his brest.
This sage then in the starres hath spyed the fates
Threatned him death without delay, and, sith,
He saw he could not fatall order chaunge,
Foreward he prest in battayle, that he might Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand desirous to be slain,
The boldest borne, and worthiest in the feilde;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And seking death, in fyrst front of his rage,
Comes desperately to Alexanders face,
At him with dartes one after other throwes,
With reckless wordes and clamour him provokes,
And sayth, Nectanaks bastard shamefull stayne
Of mothers bed, why losest thou thy strokes,
Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in case
Manhood there be so much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
Apollo's laurell both for learninges laude,
And eke for martiall praise, that in my shielde
The seven fold Sophie of Minerve contein,
A match more mete, Syr King, than any here.
The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
The wilfull wight, and with soft words ayen,
O monstrous man (quoth he) what so thou art,
I pray thee lyve, ne do not with thy death
This lodge of Lore, the Muses mansion marre;
That treasure house this hand shall never spoyle,
My sword shall never bruise that skilfull brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of science sone to spill;
O how fayre fruites may you to mortall men
From Wisdoms garden give; how many may
By you the wiser and the better prove:
What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perswades to be downe, sent to depe Averne,
Where no artes florish, nor no knowledge vailes
For all these sawes. When thus the sovereign said,
Alighted Zoroas with sword unsheathed,
The careless king there smoate above the greve,
At th' opening of his quishes wounded him,
So that the blood down trailed on the ground:
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnashe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wise
Hym to forbeare, sett spurrs unto his stede,
And tournde away, lest anger of his smarte
Should cause revenger hand deale balefull blowes.
But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
One Meleager could not bear this sight,
But ran upon the said Egyptian rude,
And cutt him in both knees: he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of souldiours sterne,
And all in pieces hewed the silly seg,
But happely the soule fled to the starres,
Where, under him, he hath full sight of all,
Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Persians waild such sapience to forgoe,
The very fone the Macedonians wisht
He would have lived, king Alexander selfe
Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
Who wonne like praise for conquest of his Yre,
As for stoute men in field that day subdued,
Who princes taught how to discerne a man,
That in his head so rare a jewel beares,
But over all those same Camenes, those same,
Divine Camenes, whose honour he procurde,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
Lamented, and for thankes, all that they can,
Do cherish hym deceast, and sett hym free,
From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fools, of which the following extract will show his style.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and false Accusers.

O Heartless fooles, haste here to our doctrine,
Leave off the wayes of your enormitie,
Enforce you to my precepts to encline,
For here shall I shewe you good and veritie:
Encline, and ye finde shall great prosperitie,
Ensuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.
Who that will followe the graces manyfolde
Which are in vertue, shall finde avauncement:
Wherfore ye fooles that in your sinne are bolde,
Ensue ye wisdome, and leave your lewde intent,
Wisdome is the way of men most excellent:
Therfore have done, and shortly spede your pace,
To quaynt your self and company with grace.

Learne what is vertue, therin is great solace,
Learne what is truth, sadnes and prudence,
Let grutche be gone, and grave your pertinence,
Forsake your folly and inconvenience,
Cease to be fooles, and ay to sue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godlynes,
For it and wisedome is ground of clerkliness.
Wisedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Whiche man endueth with honour speciall,
But suche heartes as slepe in foolishnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all:
But in this little barge in principall
All foolish mockers I purpose to repreve,
Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greve.
Mockers and scorners that are harde of beleve,
With a rough combe here will I clawe and grate,
To prove if they will from their vice remeve,
And leave their folly, which causeth great debate:
Suche caytives spare neyther poore man nor estate,
And where their selfes are moste worthy derision,
Other men to scorne is all their most condition.
Yet are mo fooles of this abusion,
Whiche of wise men despiseth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, scorne, and collusion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good discipline:
Shewe to suche wisdome, yet shall they not encline
Unto the same, but set nothing therby,
But mocke thy doctrine, still or openly.
So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe shall he have by and by:
Thus in derision have fooles their speciall game.
Correct a wise man that woulde eschue ill name,
And fayne woulde learne, and his lewde life amende,
And to thy wordes he gladly shall intende.
If by misfortune a rightwise man offende,
He gladly suffereth a juste correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him selfe putting mekely unto subjection,
Following his preceptes and good direction:
But if that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He shall his teacher hate, slaunder and diffame.
Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his owne shame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And so he is sore wounded with the same,
And in wo endeth, great misery and payne.
It also proved full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes cast,
Shall of all other be mocked at the last.
He that goeth right, stedfast, sure, and fast,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his scornes cast,
Agaynst a man of Inde: but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he useth the same.
But who that of sinne is clene in deede and thought,
May him well scorne whose living is starke nought.
The scornes of Naball full dere should have been bought,
If Abigayl his wife discrete and sage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes sought,
The wrath of David to temper and asswage.
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage
Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyseus did scorne.
So might they curse the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of that prophete divine:
So many other of this sort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus is it foly for wise men to encline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for see thou shall
Them moste scorning that are most bad of all.

The Lenvoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in scorne set your joy,
Proudly despising Goddes punition:
Take ye example by Cham the sonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father unto derision,
Which him after cursed for his transgression,
And made him servaunt to all his lyne and stocke.
So shall ye caytifs at the conclusion,
Since ye are nought, and other scorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilson, a man celebrated for the politeness of his style, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the state of our language in his time, the following may be of use to show.

PRonunciation is an apte orderinge bothe of the voyce, countenaunce, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of suche woordes and mater as by speache are declared. The vse hereof is suche for anye one that liketh to haue prayse for tellynge his tale in open assemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye countenaunce, he shalbe thought to passe all other that haue the like vtteraunce: thoughe they haue much better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cause in like maner, as a swete soundyng lute muche setteth forthe a meane deuised ballade. Or as the sounde of a good instrumente styrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, so a cleare soundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with muche swete melodie, and causeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters sake, then the reporter for the matters sake. Demosthenes therfore, that famouse oratour, beyng asked what was the chiefest point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praise to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the seconde, and the thirde, he still made answere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunswere, till they lefte askyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can dooe nothyng, vtteraunce without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubte that man is in outwarde apparaunce halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely gesture of his body. Æschines lykewyse beyng banished his countrie through Demosthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demosthenes aunswere thereunto, by force wherof he was banished, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the same: then (q d Æschines) you would haue marueiled muche more if you had heard hymselfe speak it. Thus beyng cast in miserie and banished for euer, he could not but geue such great reporte of his deadly and mortal enemy.

Thus have I deduced the English language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth; in some parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at least, in such a manner that its progress may be easily traced, and the gradations observed, by which it advanced from its first rudeness to its present elegance.

GRAMMAR

OF THE

ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of speaking words properly, comprehends four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.

In this division and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common opinion; tho' I cannot imagine whether a Saxon distinction of words, or any other, Etymologist has long learnt the method to be a Saxon or a Latinist, Saxonist, and comprehender or of proper and incommodious condition. I therein all the more grounds or reason, and that the Saxon distinction of words, or other proper, right, and well-grounded; tho' the Latinist, or other proper, right, and well-grounded; tho' the Latinist, or other proper, right, and well-grounded; tho' the Latinist

E.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in fame; or short, as in cellar, separate, calendar, mere, idea.

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, pedler, sedate, repeat, forfeit, cellar, separate, sedge, fell, fellow, dell.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as she; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Jonathan; being held to supply the foregoing consonant, as shea, mere, sedge, fellow; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as hate, mete, site, cone; pine, pipe, tile, tube; cite, cite; pipe, pipe; fire, fire; cite, cite; site, site.

Words of more than one syllable or monosyllables with no vowel, as a, an, some, without, except which probably had the vowel in the Saxon or Anglo-Saxon, and continued a diphthong in the Norman-French, or Norman-Latin, from which the English adopted them, as ship, sheep, shield, bow, bow, bow. This is no privilege for what must be allowed to be a monosyllabic sound; but for the long and short vowel. A short vowel is an exception.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as gone, done, given.

It has frequently in the end of words a doubled effect, and formed propriété, as cure, figure, failure, truth, pronounce, mere, cure.

E serves a diphthong with a, as bear; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as few, few.

E sounds like i long, as mere, or like ee, as bear, clear, mere.

E is sounded like long, as fame, pneumatic.

E sounds as e long and ee.

E is occasionally i long and ee in diphthongs, but have only been found in ei.

E may be used to form a diphthong by redoplication, as agree, degree.

E is found in words where we should say heer; and in yeer, where e is pronounced ee.

I.

I has a sound, long, as fine; and short, as fin.

This is commonly observed to be, when one syllable is terminated by a single consonant, and the vowel is not followed by a single consonant, as fine, fin.

This long sound is occasionally found in words ending in ide, ine, as side, line.

I when doubled before r are short e, as first, fir, fire.

I forms a diphthong only with a, as fair, fair, which is distinguished by the double r, a Gaelic fraud, which is sounded as fair.

I sound short or ie is, and ee is ieve; which exceptions are formed on the ie and ee.

O.

O is long, as dove, dislove, corroding; or short, as dove, dove, corroding, ill.

O sound in pronounced ooman.

The dove, the ooman are the sound which ooman is, as ie, ooman.

O sometimes sounds a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach, as has the sound of a long.

O is sound ee in those words derived from Greek, as monarch, ee; Greek, ee; philosophy, they are better written in ee, philosophy, philosophy, philosophy.

O is sound ee, ful, ment, anyone.

The ee of ee is sounded ee when the ee finds in the ee the ee is ee and the ee is ee the ee is sounded without being ee ee ee and ee ee ee

ES, Thing. It is thought by some to be, in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed, 1st, as of ee, that it follows a vowel, William, any, heaven, ye, eye, coach.

2d.

E before ar, would originally lengthen it, but this is found in yea, heart, search, hearse, learn, earth, pearl, learned with similar compositions of the plural by the origins, ye, yeries, yeries.

In orthography I have classed ai, ea, ee, ei, ie, ei, ei, *ei

Bewaring, for, for, was ordained if, or great authority.

It is an Adjective, in regard of Gold, that he should be particularly the old ancient Authority of Kings; Kindly, without meaning ill; of very Medicine, or Medicinally.

Fitness, by Adjective.

I shall be ready among the Guards
Of women, long as I think behoves. Milton's Apologies.

Description, by Adjective.

Sweet Fancy, that delightest to be alone,
Begot of Melancholy, and in some Delight to live in shades. Milton's Allegro.

Matter, by Noun.

The material pillars, purified by the Word within, have four principles of the world, fire, air, earth and water. Boyle.

Natural, by Pronoun.

Nature, that is, the power of God, ordained and commanded, and therefore also belonging to the people. Hooker's Ecclesiastics.

Wrongfully, by Verbals.

The Jews, from the commencement of all today's fault, are governing in their own nations, double religious, and double, or worse, wrongfully ordained two things. Jewish Commentary.

Properly, by Verbals.

Thus, the Jews, wrongfully ordained in double religion,
What was so great being into proportion to land,
Agreed on them, about the spread. Parnell's Poems.

This transposition is not seen to be authorized in less than a degree of conjunction, in which the substantive is demanded before the pronoun, and adjective, that is, in the adjectives, old, ancient, or honest, a little little of any; that therefore about or conjunction. This transposition is likewise which has a particle expressing transformation, are obtain-second of those one English: that is honesty and in the Hebrew or Italian. Ibid.

Of Pronouns.

Pronouns, in the English language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals we, ye, they; it, who, which, what, whether, whatever, whatsoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, their, theirs, their, this, that, other, another, the other.

The pronouns personal are properly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accus. and other cases	me	us

Nom.	Thou	Ye
Genitive.	Thee	You

The nominative and accusative are nominative in an language or accusative, when the nominative plural is used for the nominative plural. Thou and ye are

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	Applied to masculine.
Genitive.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	Applied to feminine.
Genitive.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	Applied to neuter or
Gen.	Its	Them	things.

For the genitive of ancient writers was to his, her, and his its, his.

The possessive pronouns, the other adjectives, are without cases or change of termination.

The genitives of the first person in my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, your, yours; of the third, from his, her, their, its, his, and their; and in the plural their, theirs; for their hours.

Who, which, what, whether, and whatever are distinctly inflected by a who, or that are the whole. What which and what whether and whatever are relatives, who which what whether whatever whatever, what which what whether whatever whatever what which what whether whatever whatever what which what whether whatever whatever

I do is sometimes called superfluously, as, I do love, I did love; simply I love, or I loved; but this is considered as a vicious mode of speech.

It is frequently used emphatically, as,

I do love him, and where I love, there will Christ is come again. Shakespeare

It is frequently joined with a negative; as, I like not, for I do not like him; I refused him yesterday, but did not lady Ann.

The imperative preliterature is follow applied to the second person, as shall in prose, without the word do; Stop him, do thou not hear him; Pursue Lucius, lucius, and shall not it.

In that do is in interrogative form of speech, in which it is also through all the persons; as, The I fear? Shall Brutus not? Do they stand? Did I complain? Think thou how low? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogatives, Do I not my power? Did he not die?

Do is thus used only in the simple tenses.

There is another manner of conjugating verbs verbs, which, when it is used, may not improperly denominate ellum under gerfum, as they are inflected according to the gerfum form by the help of the verb ellum, or to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French, as,

I am ellum, tyrwest, Latin, I am this text, French.
I was ellum, ostinum, I is or was permanent.

In this manner are commonly rendered the gerfum verbs; as, I am ellum, tyrwest, Latin, I am this text, French. In the gerfum form, I am tyrwest, Latin, I am this text, French, is a vicious mode of speech, which is, in the same manner, to be considered as the do and doing, I do love and doing, I do love, or I do love and doing, I do love, I do love, *I do love

There are in English, about twenty words of which the only derivation is uncertain, and about twenty, which, tho' they have a Latin, French, or Greek, or Hebrew, or Saxon, or Teutonic, or Celtic, or Gothic, or Sclavonic, or Persian, or Arabic, or Chinese, or Japanese, or Hindostan, or Tartarian, or Mandarin, or Cantonian, or Tonquinian, or Cochinchinian, or Siamian, or Siberian, or Kamtschatkian

PRONUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and every syllable has its proper accent, or which is English verification is the letter, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters are best should explained, and also the accents or quantities of words, with a view to point, being subject to mistakes and errors, which are not a few in number, I shall here proceed.

1. Of syllables formed by adding a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as ability, fashion, ability, ignorance, ability, pattern, fashion, fashion, ability, fashion, ability, ability, ability.

2. Syllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter syllable, as ability, ability.

3. Of syllables, when one or more vowels and verbs, the word has commonly the accent on the name, and the main or the former syllable; as, ability, ability, ability, ability, ability, ability.

4. Of words ending in ion, ion, ion,

DIRECTIONS to the BOOK-BINDER.

The First Volume contains, —— The Preface, History of the English Language, The Grammar, and, The Letters A to K inclusive.

The Second Volume contains, —— L to Z inclusive.

A GENERAL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A, The first letter of the European alphabets, has in the English language, three different sounds, which may be termed the broad, open, and slender.

The broad sound resembling that of the Glottal a in father, is what generally obtains in words ending in a or ah, as papa, pa, ah, aha, ha, ha ha, ma, na, ma, pa, ta, ha, ha, *ha by a confusion of a fine element to give up or a poor element, by which difference of size they, consider the hair of the organ. But, as you can tell Goldfish, Sparkles a cock; and to abandon, if accidental to comparison between French and Germans, is equally equivocation to some Germans.

6. To give up, relinquish, or quit; often followed by the particle up.

The gallant youth behind the Grecian stole
Unseen, unheard, and unawares the goal.
Then was Gondibert, who, further from compass
Than a bowl, or a bullet, or an arrow, or a bass Dryd. Hind.

7. To hinder.

Not greater using the publicans' farming stall, and shifting to single, and a private cabal of friends, and to separate each fall, keeps to a circle of the first. Bacon, 1. 46.

Then being alone,
Lest any slanderer of my robust beauty
Should, upon the sight, shake off my power,
To fight against me, I shifted my shape. B. Jon. Mr. Ha.

8. To take a shamed fashion upon.

Angels can from a mortal by my trouble. Dryd. Ann. 3.

9. To change, commonly with a mutiny, or in ill faith.

Yet he to perfidious crime, to thought fall
He hastily spoke, for knight, if angels than he,
Shunder the unshaken force of sin,
Yet then at further hours, I mutiny shall.
Spenser, Fairy Queen, 1. 10. 1. 1. 1

ABERDEEN, n. s. [from the name of a, A, or the first full letter of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or the rudiments of any thing.

Ye ABCdarians, that in Hebrew Canonicals, where nothing is beside the vowels, be taught, date, or have part of his life, he will related to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his endeavour. Milton.

ABECEDARIAN, adj. [See ABECEDARIAN.]

1. Belonging to the alphabet.

2. Teaching with the alphabet.

Ye ABCdarians, that are the lamplights of new-erected truth and sacred medicine, and placed in the corner of the abecedarian stairs, as sign of letters, disclosed some clues, some, and found keeping, not, and another the other, and spelling upon an hour wherein they will commentate.

Bernard. Taylor Remains, A. 2. 2.

ABEL, adv. [from a, or at, the [Ab] and Ebre.] In hell.

It was decreed by them to put their consciences, into not obedience, not, with long delay: and that, when the wicked shall be cast into abel, the world here made a heaven: that, in the end, where the world. Sidney, b. 2.

the heaven here shall, for to see shoud.

The wicked world, abel, ABEL, ABEL, ABEL.

With prayers for their deliverance. Dict. Rom. Plat.

ABERRANT, n. s. [from aberro, Lat. to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an error; a mistake; a fallacy.

Could a man be compelled to fall to advantage of another, or to the ruin of himself, it would be a wrong done to him, and an aberrant course would alter the rules of his individuality, and reason is a abomination to aberration, as error.

Glanvill's Scepsis Scientifica, p. 38.

ABERRANCE. The same with APERRANCE.

They do not only frame with errors, but vices depending thereon. They they commonly affect to run any letter thus be-fallen in aberration, or conclude with their aberrance.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. 1. c. 3.

ABERRATION, adj. [from aberro, Lat.] Deviating; wandering; that strays or leaves way. Bailey.

ABERRATION, n. s. [from aberro, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common track.

And if Nature's periods, it is only, there is no fault in the regular aberration; at the end, with the regularity, the probability of it will render it a light of only pardon.

*Bernard. Taylor. Remains, A. 2. 2. 2

[illegible] ABL, which is an abundance of those delicacies of life, which [illegible]

[illegible] Shenstone, [illegible] variety of adjectives, which humour and [illegible] are both adapted to raise; and the [illegible] adjectives [illegible] Spectator from Lucretius.

To ABLUTE, v.a. [ablutus, Lat.] To wash from the [illegible]

ABLUTION, n.s. 1. One of the methods of purifying; washing; washing of the body, as a means of purity. [illegible] Ablution [illegible] Bacon.

2. A washing; a washing of the outward flesh, [illegible] Hooker.

3. [illegible] Ablution [illegible] Bacon.

ABLUTIONARY, [illegible] Lat.] The act or practice of washing the outward flesh for marks of sanctity in the eye and ward [illegible] Bacon.

[illegible] Bacon.

[illegible] Bacon.

[

Amid the boats they burst their fiery way;
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden, Æneid viii. l. 343.

4. More in quantity or number.
Every one that passeth among them, that are numbered, from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the Lord. Exodus, xxx. 14.

5. Higher in rank, power, or excellence.
The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens. Psalm cxiii. 4.
The public power of all societies is above every soul contained in the same societies. Hooker, b. i.
There is no riches above a sound body, and no joy above the joy of the heart. Ecclesiasticus, xxx. 16.

To her
Thou didst resign thy manhood, and the place
Wherein God set thee above her, made of thee,
And for thee; whose perfection far excell'd
Her's, in all real dignity. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 147.
Latona sees her shine above the rest,
And feeds with secret joy her silent breast. Dryden's Æneid.

6. Superior to; unattainable by.
It is an old and true distinction, that things may be above our reason, without being contrary to it. Of this kind are the power, the nature, and the universal presence of God, with innumerable other points. Swift.

7. Beyond; more than.
We were pressed out of measure, above strength; insomuch that we despaired even of life. 2 Cor. i. 8.
In respect of having thoughts unconfused, and being able nicely to distinguish one thing from another, where there is but the least difference, consists, in a great measure, the exactness of judgment and clearness of reason, which is to be observed in one man above another. Locke.
The inhabitants of Tirol have many particular privileges above those of the other hereditary countries of the emperour. Addison on Italy.

8. Too proud for; too high for. A phrase chiefly used in familiar expression.
Kings and princes, in the earlier ages of the world, laboured in arts and occupations, and were above nothing that tended to promote the conveniences of life. Pope's Odyssey; notes.

Abo'VE. adv.
1. Over-head.
To men standing below, men standing aloft seem much lessened; to them above, men standing below, seem not so much lessened. Bacon.
When he established the clouds above; when he strengthened the fountains of the deep; when he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment; when he appointed the foundations of the earth: then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him. Proverbs, viii. 28.

2. In the regions of heaven.
Your praise the birds shall chant in every grove,
And winds shall waft it to the pow'rs above. Pope's Pastorals.

3. Before. [See Above-cited.]
I said above, that these two machines of the balance, and the dira, were only ornamental, and that the success of the duel had been the same without them. Dryd. Dedicat. Æneid.

From Above.
1. From an higher place.
The Trojans from above their foes beheld;
And with arm'd legions all the rampires fill'd. Dryd. Æneid.
2. From heaven.
Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. James, i. 17.

Above all. In the first place; chiefly.
I had also studied Virgil's design, his disposition of it, his manners, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retrenchments of his sense, which always leaves somewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure; but above all, the elegance of his expressions, and the harmony of his numbers. Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

Above-board. In open sight; without artifice or trick. A figurative expression, borrowed from gamesters, who, when they put their hands under the table, are changing their cards. It is used only in familiar language.
It is the part also of an honest man to deal above-board, and without tricks. L'Estrange.
Though there have not been wanting such heretofore, as have practised these unworthy arts; for as much as there have been villains in all places, and all ages; yet now-a-days they are owned above-board. South's Sermons.

Above-cited. Cited before. A figurative expression, taken from the ancient manner of writing books on scrolls; where whatever is cited or mentioned before in the same page, must be above.
Nor would I mention this particular, did it not appear from the authority above-cited, that this was a fact confirmed by heathen historians. Addison on the Christian Religion.

Above-ground. An expression used to signify, that a man is alive; not in the grave.

Above-mentioned. See Above-cited.
I do not remember, that Homer any-where falls into the faults above-mentioned, which were indeed the false refinements of latter ages. Addison, Spectator, Nº 279.

To ABO'UND. v. n. [abundo, Lat. abonder, French.]
1. To have in great plenty; used sometimes with the particle in, and sometimes with with.

The king-becoming graces,
I have no relish of them; but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Corn, wine, and oil, are wanting to this ground,
In which our countries fruitfully abound. Dryd. Indian Emp.

A faithful man shall abound with blessings; but he that maketh haste to be rich, shall not be innocent. Prov. xxviii. 20.
Now that languages are made, and abound with words standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them. Locke.

2. To be in great plenty.
And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. Matthew, xxiv. 12.
Words are like leaves, and where they most abound,
Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

ABO'UT. prep. [abutan, or abuton, Sax. which seems to signify encircling on the outside.]
1. Round, surrounding, encircling.
Let not mercy and truth forsake thee. Bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thy heart. Proverbs, iii. 3.

At this the herald flies,
Tears her, 'tis she, she cries, and tears her cheeks,
Her hair, her veil; and, stooping to the sands,
About his neck she cast her trembling hands. Dryd. Fables.

2. Near to.
Speak unto the congregation, saying, get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Numbers.

Thou dost nothing, Sergius,
Thou canst endeavour nothing, nay, not think;
But I both see and hear it; and am with thee,
By and before, about and in thee too. Ben. Johns. Catiline.

3. Concerning, with regard to, relating to.
When Constantine had finished an house for the service of God at Jerusalem, the dedication he judged a matter not unworthy, about the solemn performance whereof, the greatest part of the bishops in christendom should meet together.
Hooker, b. iv. § 11.
The painter is not to take so much pains about the drapery as about the face, where the principal resemblance lies.
Dryd. Pref. to Dufresnoy.
They are most frequently used as words equivalent, and do both of them indifferently signify either a speculative knowledge of things, or a practical skill about them, according to the exigency of the matter or thing spoken of. Tillots. Sermon i.
There is always a tie, although the particular species of it, and the determination of particular acts, doth suppose positive laws about dominion and property.
Stillingfleet's Defence of Discourses on Romish Idolatry.
They should always be heard, and fairly and kindly answered, when they ask after any thing they would know, and desire to be informed about. Curiosity should be as carefully cherished in children, as other appetites suppressed.
Locke on Education, § 118.
It hath been practised as a method of making men's court, when they are asked about the rate of lands, the abilities of tenants, the state of trade and manufacture, to answer, that, in their neighbourhood, all things are in a flourishing condition.
Swift's Short View of Ireland.

4. Engaged in, employed upon.
Our blessed Lord was pleased to command the representation of his death and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking of bread and effusion of wine; to signify to us the nature and sacredness of the liturgy we are about.
Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
Labour, for labour's sake, is against nature. The understanding, as well as all the other faculties, chooses always the shortest way to its end, would presently obtain the knowledge it is about, and then set upon some new enquiry. But this, whether laziness or haste, often misleads it. Locke.
They ought, however, to be provided with secretaries, and assisted by our foreign ministers, to tell their story for them in plain English, and to let us know, in our mother tongue, what it is our brave countrymen are about. Addison. Spect. Nº 305.

5. Appendant to the person; as, clothes, &c.
If you have this about you,
As I will give you when we go, you may Boldly assault the necromancer's hall. Milton's Comus.
It is not strange to me, that persons of the fairer sex should like, in all things about them, that handsomeness for which they find themselves most liked. Boyle on Colours.

6. Relating to the person, as a servant.
Liking very well the young gentleman, such I took him to be, admitted this Deiphantus about me, who well shewed there is no service like his that goes voluntarily to it. Sidney, b. ii.
[illegible]
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Abo'ut. adv.
1. Circularly.
The weyward sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. In circuit.
My waist is [illegible]. I'll tell you what I am about.—Two yards and more.—No quips now, Pistol: indeed I am in the waist two yards about; but I am about no waste, I am about thrift.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
A tun about was ev'ry pillar there,
A polish'd mirrour shone not half so clear. Dryd. Fables.

3. Nearly.
When the boats were come within about sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther; yet so as they might move to go about, but might not approach nearer. Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. Here and there; every way.
Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if she might spy
Her lovely knight to move his manly pace.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. ii. stanz. 33.
A wolf that was past labour, had the wit in his old age, yet to make the best of a bad game; he borrowed a habit, and so about he goes, begging charity from door to door, under the disguise of a pilgrim. L'Estrange.

5. With to before a verb; as, about to fly; upon the point, within a small distance of.
[illegible]
[illegible]
Beauty and youth, about to perish, finds
Such noble pity in brave English minds. Waller.

6. The longest way, in opposition to the short straight way.
Gold hath these natural properties of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliantness, or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Then the sure way (though about) to make gold, is to know the causes of the several natures before rehearsed. Bacon's Natural History, Nº 328.

Spies of the Volscians
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir,
Half an hour since brought my report. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

7. To bring about; to bring to the point or state desired; as, he has brought about his purposes.
Whether this will be brought about, by breaking his head, I very much question. Spectator.

8. To come about; to come to some certain state or point.
Wherefore it came to pass, when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that she bare a son. 1 Sam. i. 20.
One evening it befel, that looking out,
The wind they long had wish'd was come about;
Well pleas'd they went to sea, and at the gale [illegible] Dryd. Fables.

9. To go about a thing; to prepare to do it.
Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? John, vii. 19.
In common language, they say, to come about a man, to circumvent him.
Some of these phrases seem to derive their original from the French [illegible].

A. B. for Artium Baccalaureus, Bachelor of Arts.

ABRACADA'BRA. A superstitious charm against agues.

To ABRA'DE. v. a. [abrado, Lat.] To rub off; to wear away from the other parts; to waste by degrees.
By this means there may be a continual supply of what is successively abraded from them by decursion of waters.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Abraham's Balm. The name of an herb.

Abra'sion. [See Abrade.]
1. The act of abrading; a rubbing off.
2. [In medicine.] The wearing away of the natural mucus, which covers the membranes, particularly those of the stomach and guts, by corrosive or sharp medicines, or humours. Quincy.
3. The matter worn off by the attrition of bodies.

Abre'ast. adv. [See Breast.] Side by side; in such a position that the breasts may bear against the same line.
My cousin Suffolk,
My soul shall thine keep company to heaven:
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast. Shak. Henry V.
For honour travels in a streight so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

The riders rode abreast, and one his shield,
His lance of cornel-wood another held;
The third his bow, and, glorious to behold!
The costly quiver, all of burnish'd gold. Dryden's Fables.

Abrico't. See Apricot.

To ABRI'DGE. v. a. [abreger, Fr. abbrevio, Lat.]
1. To make shorter in words, keeping still the same substance.
All these things, being declared by Jason of Cyrene in five books, we will essay to abridge in one volume. 2 Maccab. ii. 23.

2. To contract, to diminish, to cut short.
The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide; and he, that has a power to act or not to act, according as such determination directs, is free. Such determination abridges not that power wherein liberty consists. Locke.

3. To deprive of; in which sense it is followed by the particle from, or of, preceding the thing taken away.
I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
They were formerly, by the common law, discharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged since by several statutes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

Abri'dged of. part. Deprived of, debarred from, cut short.

An Abri'dger.
1. He that abridges; a shortener.
2. A writer of compendiums or abridgments.

Abri'dgment. n. s. [abregement, French.]
1. The contraction of a larger work into a small compass.
Surely this commandment containeth the law and the prophets; and, in this one word, is the abridgment of all volumes of scripture. Hooker, b. ii. § 5.

[illegible]
[illegible]
Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

Idolatry is certainly the first-born of folly, the great and leading paradox; nay, the very abridgment and sum total of all absurdities. South's Sermons.

2. A diminution in general.
All trying, by a love of littleness,
To make abridgments, and to draw to less,
Even that nothing, which at first we were. Donne.

3. Restraint, or abridgment of liberty.
The constant desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us, nobody, I think, accounts an abridgment of liberty, or at least an abridgment of liberty to be complained of. Locke.

Abro'ach. adv. [See To BROACH.]
1. In a posture to run out; to yield the liquor contained; properly spoken of vessels.
The Templer spruce, while ev'ry spout's abroach,
Stays till 'tis fair, yet seems to call a coach. Swift's Miscel.
The jars of gen'rous wine, (Acestes' gift,
When his Trinacrian shores the navy left)
He set abroach, and for the feast prepar'd,
In equal portions with the ven'son shar'd.
Dryden's Virgil, Æneid, vol. ii.

2. In a figurative sense; in a state to be diffused or advanced; in a state of such beginning as promises a progress.
That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
Would he abuse the count'nance of the king,
Alack! what mischiefs might he set abroach,
In shadow of such greatness! Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Abro'ad. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See Broad.]
1. Without confinement; widely; at large.
Intermit no watch
Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad,
Thro' all the coasts of dark destruction seek Deliverance. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 463.
Again, the lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud;
Now haunts the cliff, now traverses the lawn,
And flies the hated neighbourhood of man. Prior.

2. Out of the house.
Welcome, sir,
This cell's my court; here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Lady ——— walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it; [illegible] though she seemed to be fainting, and had convulsive motions several times in her head. Pope's Letters.

3. In another country.
They thought it better to be somewhat hardly yoked at home, than for ever abroad, and discredited. Hooker, Pref.
Whosoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it. Sir J. Denham.

Who cares not a farthing, care not either.
Th' indebted case is miserable indeed. Dryd. Juv. Prologue.
Ye ministers of state, you shine by light
Borrow'd from us, and your ABSENT worth
Is but the reflection of those virtues which
Our PRESENT times and persons bring to light. Addison.
To ABSENT, v. a. [absentare, Lat.]
Not to be conscious of the subject, or Not to be present at the subject, or Not to be present at the place. Bacon, Ess.
Absent thee from felicity a while. Milton, P. L.
Absent thee from felicity awhile,
In this harbour we are anchor'd, and shall staying Longer than we can do with a fair wind,
Absent thee from felicity awhile. Id. Comus.
To ABSENTEE, v. n. [absentare, Lat.] To make some time abroad, or beyond sea.
Absent yourself, absent yourself awhile,
Absent yourself awhile, and absent well
Absent yourself awhile, and absent well
As ever Jew did, and wish not any good
Unto the place, the time, the company,
Stay much, discourse less, think less on this,
Do what you do, speak but half what you think. Id.
ABSENTEE, [Lat.] Partial the absence of a man, having an employment for the benefit of his country.
Bacon, Ess.
ABSENTEEISM, n. s. [absentisme, Fr.]
The state of absence.
Absentees are distinguished under the appellation of absentees and absenteeism, or absenteeism, or absenteeism.
Bacon, Ess.
ABSENTER, n. s. [absentant, Fr.]
Absent, or absent, absent, absent, absent.
ABSENTMENT, n. s. [absentement, Fr.]
Absent, absent, absent, absent, absent.
ABSENTOR, n. s. [absentant, Fr.]
Absent, absent, absent, absent, absent.
To ABSERVE, v. a. [observo, Lat.]
Observe, observe, observe, observe.
ABSERVANCE, n. s. [observance, Fr.]
Observance, observance, observance.
ABSERVANT, n. s. [observant, Fr.]
Observant, observant, observant.
ABSERVATION, n. s. [observation, Fr.]
Observation, observation, observation.
ABSERVATOR, n. s. [observator, Fr.]
Observator, observator, observator.
ABSERVATORY, n. s. [observatoire, Fr.]
Observatory, observatory, observatory.
To ABSERVE, v. a. [observo, Lat.]
Observe, observe, observe, observe.
ABSERVER, n. s. [observateur, Fr.]
Observer, observer, observer.
ABSERVING, part. [observant, Fr.]
Observing, observing, observing.
ABSERVINGLY, adv. [observant, Fr.]
Observingly, observingly, observingly.
ABSERVINGNESS, n. s. [observance, Fr.]
Observingness, observingness, observingness.
ABSESS, n. s. [abscès, Fr.]
Abscess, abscess, abscess, abscess.
To ABSESS, v. a. [abscedo, Lat.]
Abscess, abscess, abscess, abscess.
ABSESSION, n. s. [abscessio, Lat.]
Abscession, abscession, abscession.
ABSESSIVE, adj. [abscessivus, Lat.]
Abscessive, abscessive, abscessive.
ABSESSIVENESS, n. s. [abscessivus, Lat.]
Abscessiveness, abscessiveness, abscessiveness.
To ABSIST, v. a. [absisto, Lat.]
Absist, absist, absist, absist.
ABSISTENCE, n. s. [absistentia, Lat.]
Absistence, absistence, absistence.
ABSISTENCY, n. s. [absistentia, Lat.]
Absistency, absistency, absistency.
ABSISTENT, adj. [absistens, Lat.]
Absistent, absistent, absistent.
ABSISTENTIAL, adj. [absistentialis, Lat.]
Absistential, absistential, absistential.
ABSISTENTIALLY, adv. [absistentialis, Lat.]
Absistentially, absistentially, absistentially.
ABSISTENTIALNESS, n. s. [absistentialis, Lat.]
Absistentialness, absistentialness, absistentialness.
ABSISTENTIALITY, n. s. [absistentialis, Lat.]
Absistentiality, absistentiality, absistentiality

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

ABSTERGENTS n.s. [abstergens, Lat.] Medicines that have the power of cleansing the parts to which they are applied.

ABSTERGIVE adj. [abstergo, Lat.] Cleansing; of a cleansing quality.

ABSTERSION n.s. [abstersio, Lat.] The act of cleansing.

ABSTERSIVE adj. [abstersus, Lat.] Cleansing; of a cleansing quality.

ABSTERSIVENESS n.s. [from abstersive] The quality of cleansing.

ABSTERSIVE n.s. [abstersivum, Lat.] Any thing of a cleansing quality.

ABSTERSORY adj. [abstersus, Lat.] Cleansing; of a cleansing quality.

ABSTERSORY n.s. [abstersorium, Lat.] Any thing of a cleansing quality.

ABSTINENCE n.s. [abstinentia, Lat.] Forbearance of any thing; a forbearance of pleasure.

Abstinence is a virtue, when it is a forbearance of what is lawful, or what is in itself indifferent, for the sake of a good end, or to avoid a greater evil. Abstinence from what is unlawful is only a duty, when it is a forbearance of what is unlawful, for the sake of a good end, or to avoid a greater evil. Abstinence from what is unlawful is

To impeach the military conduct of Sir Hector of Abingdon and Wilton, to his commander upon Salisbury plain, shaking their much wish'd sceptre, and by the sacrifice, making to all the great, and proud for ever, to all the great counsels of Jove.

Was he with all their trumpery sunk into the Ocean?
Their trumpery which was all his happiness?
Pope's Knight to Plume.

2. To treat with rudeness, or contempt.

I am an European, but I do so hate
Its vanities! this city! see
Its pomp! its pride! and laughed at them, and despised them
Bulbo! thy pride, thy pomp, thy wealth, thy Bulbo! thy, and pride! Mallet, act. 3d.

Bulbo, the rich citizen, who thus blasted at night,
Not always drink the last sentence right.
A mode he starts in like a coxcomb strut,
Thus hand thus's taking, the man stare a Pope's Epl. on Crit.

The man, who in the spare the time from to be introduced to the other temper, not to mention Mr. Bickerstaff, whom the than merry, where unknown to cultivate and simple Addison.

ABUSE. n. s. [From the verb.]

1. Ill-usage; hurt; injury.

The ill-usage, and abuse, particularly for the inhabitants of man's life, is an unbearable sign of the decline of Gold's great power, Great towards mankind. Hawkins's Ch. Ch.

Little known
Any, but that abuse, to value right
The good before him, but persists still worse
The worst ones, to be their counsel. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

2. A corrupt practice; bad usage.

Abuse, reform'd by time, shall of which be not cause only, they will unfortunately remain. Rapin's Dissertation of Antiquity.

3. Ill-language.

What is not enough for him to have deceived you, and through the deceit should you and, after the other, Without man, but that he shall come, of all the company, and leave all the contempt, for want of beauty to the clergy. Swift, v. 8.

4. Unjust sentence; false opinion; error.

Ye fools from reason, and from truth, and wisdom
To fable fools, contempt, abuse, and wisdom. Sandys' Ecclesiastes.

ABUSIVE. adj. [From the verb abuse.]

1. Hurtful; malicious; evil-ill.

2. Ill-tent discourse.

Base man, O! after of thy prince's sin Beaumont and Fletcher.

3. Ill-that reproaches with contumely.

4. A mode, and [Footnotes]

ABUSIVELY. adv. [Footnotes]

1. Improperly; wrongly.

The temperance of young Kate, and Spanish wine too,
Will strengthen Alonzo's weight at table and Bacon
And would not quite, the mark shalt be. Dryden's Mock Astrologer.

Dryden Notwith, in the Knight-Hunt,
Provoke and answer, the Knight-Hunt
Provoke and answer, the Knight-Hunt
Provoke and answer, the Knight-Hunt
Provoke and answer, the Knight-Hunt.
To pulverize the mark Gallus.
The pots in all three alights.
From Homer down to Pope inclusive. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Contumely; reproachfully; in a slighting manner.

Were Cassius speaks? with great applause,
Abusively, and with great contempt.
Without the consent of the people. Addison.

3. Deceitfully; a fault; bad; ill; not improper.

It is verified by a number of examples, that sentiments guided by an origin of truth, ought to be refined in expression.
Bacon's Disquisitions on Wit with Bacon.

ABUTMENT. adv. [From Abut.]

1. The part of a building which abuts.

2. The part of a building which abuts upon the side of the wall, in the form of a whole house; which I remember you have observed of our other buildings in our Bacon.
Spect. Inspector's Inspector.

3. Impossibility.

ABUTTERED. n. s. [From abut.] The quality of being abutted.

1. Ill-tempered.

The temperance of young Kate, or the Knight-Hunt,
Provoke and answer, the Knight-Hunt.
Provoke and answer, the Knight-Hunt.
Provoke and answer, the Knight-Hunt.

with much ease, though, upon the common acceptation of the word, it ought to signify, 1. Accidentally, or from chance. 2. Unexpectedly, or without design. 3. Unexpectedly, or contrary to design. 4. Unexpectedly, or contrary to the intention. Bacon.

ACCIDENTAL, (in Logick) a term used by the schoolmen, to express what is not essential to a thing, whether it be a quality or a mode of being. Locke.

A quality is called accidental, when it is not of such a nature, as that it constitutes the thing what it is, or is a mode of being, which is not such, and that, if it be taken from it, it will not be destroyed. Ibid.

2. Happening by chance, or unexpectedly.

Cato, sensible of the ingratitude of his brother's power and greatness, and of the accidental, and, therefore, not to be depended upon, nature of human affairs, Spectator of the Worlds, 1.

3. The thing or the quality, which happens.

Life, although it is composed of accidents, that, to some from thence, appeared from creation, are, notwithstanding, so very strange and inexplicable with fate, that itself alone seems to borrow it and to be from Adam's fall.

Yet, the best part of mankind are the contemporaries of the first age, and acquainted with all the accidents of the world, Spectator of the World, 1.

4. An opinion of the vulgar, Bacon.

Any accident, which happens with a thing by gift, does in reason be considered as if it were in the person given, as the thing is supposed also to augment or lessen his part or share in it, Locke.

ACCIDENTALLY, adv. 1. Casually, or by chance.

The meeting of a friend, as it is commonly received, is a thing so fine and of particular nature a character upon the friend appointed, and which so quickly finds words and expressions, Bacon.

All manner of ships, first or third, are here recognized and observed, the time they continuedst ever at the middle. Empty barrels, leather bottels and calabrines, and the small light molten moneys of the parishes of Boston, Ford Monument.

2. Unexpectedly, or contrary to design.

Accidentally, Spectator of the World, 1.

ACCIDENTALNESS, s. [accidental, Lat.] A manner of accidental, or casual, happening, or being.

Not the least have obtained the fair and proper acceptance of the world, I shall solely by our accident, which part are the accidentalness of the work, Spectator of the World, 1.

ACCIDENTARY, s. [in the sense of an event, a lesser critical time of a disease, from accidens, Lat.] Accident.

1. The accidentary, or thing sent by accidents.

Those accidentary very accidents might not unpunished be, which, in ordinary cases, the Ecclesiastical Court may, forsooth, with impunity inflict, Spectator of the World, 1.

2. The accidentary, or what happens, or is supposed to happen, in the course of a disease.

Critical days are those in which the accidentary, or accidents, of a disease are most to be apprehended, Bacon.

ACCIDENTIA, s. [accidens, Lat.] Accidents, or casualties.

Accidentia, which are, 1. Accidents, or casualties, which happen, Bacon.

ACCIDENTIAL, adj. [accidentalis, Lat.] Accidental, or happening by chance.

Accidental, Spectator of the World, 1.

ACCIDENTIALNESS, s. Accidentalness, Spectator of the World, 1.

ACCIDENTIARY, s. [accidens, Lat.] Accidentary, which, in the sense of an event, or critical time of a disease, is a word disused.

ACCIDENTIFY, v. a. [accidens, Lat.] To make accidental, or happening by chance.

Accidentalness, Spectator of the World, 1.

ACCIDENTS, s. [accidens, Lat.] Casualties, or events, which happen, or are supposed to happen, in the course of a disease.

Accidentary, Bacon.

ACCIPITER, s. [accipiter, Lat.] A sparrow-hawk.

Accipiter, Bacon.

ACCIPITRINE, adj. [accipitrinus, Lat.] Of the nature of a hawk.

Accipitrine, Bacon.

ACCLAMATION, s. [acclamatio, Lat.] Applause, or a shouting, which shows, or is a sign of, approbation.

Acclamation, Spectator of the World, 1.

ACCLAMATORY, adj. Joined to acclamation, or shouting, or to a shouting.

Acclamatory, Spectator of the World, 1.

ACCLIVITY, s. [acclivitas, Lat.] The ascent, or the ascending part, of a hill, or of any thing.

Acclivity, Bacon.

ACCLIVITY, s. [acclivitas, Lat.] The ascent, or the ascending part, of a hill, or of any thing.

Acclivity, Bacon.

ACCLIVOUS, adj. [acclivis, Lat.] Ascending, or rising.

Acclivous, Bacon.

ACCOAGMENT, s. [from accoagmentum, Lat.] The act of accoagmenting, or of joining together.

Accoagment, Bacon.

ACCOAGMENTUM, s. [from accoagmentum, Lat.] The act of joining together.

Accoagmentum, Bacon.

ACCOAGMENTUM, s. [accoagmentum, Lat.] The act of joining together.

Accoagmentum, Bacon.

ACCOAGULATION, s. [from accoagulatio, Lat.] The act of coagulating, or of making to coagulate.

Accoagulation

[illegible] Hale's Origin.

4. Complement of a [illegible], [illegible], adjuncts.

Acco'mpanable. adj. [from accompany.] Sociable; a word now not used.

A [illegible], as it were, of [illegible] accompanable [illegible], and of a civil [illegible]. Sidney, b. i.

Acco'mpanier. n. s. [from accompany.] The person that makes part of the company; companion. Dict.

To ACCOMPANY. v. a. [accompagner, Fr.]

1. To be with another as a companion.

Go visit her, in her chaste bower of rest,
Accompany'd with angel-like delights. Spenser, Sonnet [illegible]

The great business of the senses being, to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas. Locke.

2. To join with.

With regard to [illegible], as folly is usually accompanied with perverseness, so it is here. There is something so [illegible] to deal in a commodity, which we are not allowed to export; there is, I say, something so [illegible], that it wants a name, in our language, to express it by. Swift's short View of Ireland.

Acco'mplice. n. s. [complice, Fr. from complex, a word in the barbarous Latin, which is used, [illegible].]

1. An associate, a partner, usually in an ill sense.

There were several [illegible] upon [illegible] by Wood, and his accomplices, to discourage all opposition against his infamous project. Swift.

2. A partner, or co-operator; in a sense indifferent.

If a tongue would be talking without a mouth, what could it have done, when it had all its organs of speech, and accomplices of sound, about it. Addison. Spectator, № [illegible]

3. It is used with the particle to before a thing, and with before a person.

Childish [illegible], sadly dish-helm'd,
Then by his [illegible]
Suspected for accomplice to the fire,
That burnt his palace but to build it higher. Dryd. Juv. Sat.

Who, should they steal, for want of his relief,
He judg'd himself accomplice with the thief. Dryden's Fables.

To ACCOMPLISH. v. a. [accomplir, Fr. from complere, Lat.]

1. To complete, to execute fully; as, to accomplish a design.

He that is far off shall die of the pestilence, and he that is near shall fall by the sword, and he that remaineth, and is besieged, shall die by the famine. Thus will I accomplish my fury upon them. Ezekiel, vi. 12.

2. To complete a period of time.

He would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem. Daniel, ix. 2.

3. To fulfil; as, a prophecy.

The vision,
Which I made known to Lucius ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

We see every day [illegible] accomplished, which was foretold [illegible] at so great a distance. Addison on the Christian Religion.

4. To gain, to obtain.

I'll love a woman (as he will win my love)
He [illegible] with honourable [illegible];
Such as he hath [illegible] to noble ladies
Upon their [illegible], by these accomplished. Shak. Two of a Verona.

I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
And deck my body in gay ornaments.
Oh miserable thought, and more unlikely,
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns. Shak. Henry VI.

5. To adorn, or furnish, either mind or body.

From the tents
The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Acco'mplished. participial adj.

1. Complete in some qualification.

For who expects, that, under a tutor, a young gentleman should be an accomplished public orator or logician. Locke on Educ.

2. Elegant, finished in respect of embellishments; used commonly with regard to acquired qualifications, without including moral excellence.

The next I took to wife,
O that I never had! fond wish too late,
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila,
That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare. Samson Agon.

Acco'mplisher. n. s. [from accomplish.] The person that accomplishes. Dict.

Acco'mplishment. n. s. [accomplissement, Fr.]

1. Completion, full performance, perfection.

Thereby he might evade the accomplishment of those afflictions, he now but gradually endureth. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, by their evil, either through [illegible] or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost. Sir John Hayward.

He thought it impossible to find, in any one body, all those perfections which he sought for the accomplishment of a Helena; because nature, in any individual person, makes nothing that is perfect in all its parts. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

2. Completion; as, of a prophecy.

The miraculous success of the apostles preaching, and the accomplishment of many of their predictions, which, to those early christians, were matters of faith only, are, to us, matters of sight and experience. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. Embellishment, elegance, ornament of mind or body.

Young heirs, and elder brothers, from their own reflecting upon the estates they are born to, and therefore thinking all other accomplishments unnecessary, are of no manner of use but to keep up their families. Addison. Spectator, № [illegible]

4. The act of obtaining [illegible].

The [illegible] suggested by policy and worldly wisdom, for the attainment of those earthly enjoyments, are unfit for that purpose, not only upon the account of their insufficiency for it, but also of their frequent opposition and contrariety to, the accomplishment of such ends. South's Sermons.

Acco'mpt. n. s. [Fr. compte and compte, anciently accompt, accompte.] An account, a reckoning. See Account.

The Lord may have [illegible] to call them to a just accompt of all things past, by reason whereof, repentance is [illegible]. Hooker, b. v. § [illegible]

Each Christmas they accompts did clear;
And wound their bottom round the year. Prior.

Acco'mptant. n. s. [accomptant, Fr.] A reckoner, computer. See Accountant.

As the accompt runs on, generally the accomptant goes backward. South's Serm.

Acco'mpting-day. The day on which the reckoning is to be stated.

To whom thou much dost owe, thou much must pay;
Think on the debt against th' accompting-day. Sir J. Denham.

To ACCORD. v. a. [derived, by some, from corde, the string of a musical instrument; by others, from corda, hearts; in the first, implying harmony, in the other, unity.]

1. To make agree; to adjust one thing to another; with to [illegible].

The first [illegible] the Shepherds [illegible], were full of [illegible] and goodness, as being accorded to the tune which they [illegible] their [illegible], [illegible] as they [illegible] their [illegible] god Pan, and his [illegible] the [illegible].

Her hands accorded the lute's music to the voice; her [illegible] heart [illegible] to the words. Sidney, b. i.

The lights and shades, whose well accorded strife
Gives all the strength and colour of our life. Pope's Ess.

To Acco'rd. v. n. To agree, to suit one with another; with [illegible].

Things are often spoke, and seldom meant;
But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe. Shak. Hen. VI.

Several of the main parts of Moses's history, as concerning the flood, and the first fathers of the several nations of the world, do very well accord with the most ancient accounts of profane history. Tillotson, Sermons.

Acco'rd. n. s. [accord, Fr.]

1. A compact; an agreement.

If both are satisfy'd with this accord,
Swear by the laws of knighthood on my sword. Dryd. Fab.

2. Concurrence, union of mind.

At last such grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my spouse had won,
Accord of friends, consent of parents sought,
Affiance made, my happiness begun. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii.

They gathered themselves together, to fight with Joshua and Israel, with one accord. Joshua, ix. 2.

3. Harmony, symmetry, just correspondence of one thing with another.

Beauty is nothing else but a just accord and mutual harmony of the members, animated by a healthful constitution. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

4. Musical note.

Try if there were in one steeple two bells of unison, whether the striking of the one would move the other, more than if it were another accord. Bacon's Natural History, № [illegible]

We must not blame Apollo, but his lute,
If false accords from her false strings be sent. Sir Jo. Davies.

5. Voluntary motion.

Nor Guyon yet spake word,
Till that they came unto an iron door,
Which to them open'd of its own accord. Fairy Q. b. ii. c. [illegible]

Will you blame any man for doing that of his own accord, which all men should be compelled to do, that are not willing of themselves. Hooker.

All animal substances, exposed to the air, turn alkaline of their own accord; and some vegetables, by heat, will not turn acid, but alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

6. Action in speaking, correspondent to the words.

Thus, I am come to talk with thee.—
—No, not a word: how can I grace my talk,
Wanting a hand to give it that accord? Shakesp. Titus Andr.

Acco'rdance. n. s. [from accord.]

1. Agreement with a person; with the particle with.

And prays he may in long accordance bide,
With that great worth which hath such wonders wrought. Fairfax, b. ii. stanza 63.

2. Conformity to something.

The only way of [illegible] of few [illegible], by the [illegible] to the will of God, as of good, by the [illegible] with that will. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Acco'rdant. adj. [accordant, Fr.] Willing; in a good humour.

The prince discovered to Claudio, that he loved your niece my daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it. Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Acco'rding. prep. [from accord.]

1. In a manner suitable to, agreeably to, in proportion.

Our churches are places provided, that the people might there assemble themselves in due and decent manner, according to their several degrees and orders. Hooker, b. v. § 13.

Our zeal, then, should be according to knowledge. And what kind of knowledge? Without all question, first, according to the true, saving, evangelical knowledge. It should be according to the gospel, the whole gospel: not only according to its truths, but precepts; not only according to its free grace, but necessary duties; not only according to its mysteries, but also its commandments. Sprat's Sermons.

How much more noble is the fame that is built on candour and ingenuity, according to those beautiful lines of Sir John Denham, in his Poem on Fletcher's works. Add. Spect.

A man may, with prudence and a good conscience, approve of the professed principles of one party more than the other, according as he thinks they best promote the good of church and state. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of Engl. man.

2. With regard to.

God made all things in number, weight, and measure; and gave them to be considered by us according to their properties, which are inherent in created beings. Holder on Time.

Acco'rdingly. adv. [from accord.] Agreeably, suitably, conformably.

Sirrah, thou'rt said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world;
And squar'st thy life accordingly. Shakesp. Measure for Meas.

As the actions of men are of sundry distinct kinds, so the laws thereof must accordingly be distinguished. Hooker, b. i.

Whoever is so assured of the authority and sense of Scripture, as to believe the doctrine of it, and to live accordingly, shall be saved. Tillotson's Preface.

Mulls, labourers, [illegible], [illegible], Accordingly, given to a [illegible] child, they [illegible] their [illegible]; the [illegible] will give them the [illegible]. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ACCOST. v. a. [accoster, Fr.] To speak to first; to address; to salute.

You mistake, knight: accost her, front her, board her, woo her, assail her. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

At length, collecting all his serpent wiles,
With soothing words renew'd, him thus accosts. Parad. Reg.

I first accosted him: I sue'd, I sought,
And, with a loving force, to Pheneus brought. Dryd. Æneid.

Acco'stable. adj. [from accost.] Easy of access; familiar.

They were both indubitable, strong, and high-minded men, yet of sweet and accostable nature, almost equally delighting in the press and affluence of dependents and suitors. Wotton.

ACCOUNT. n. s. [from the old French accompt, from computus, Lat. originally written accompt, which see; but, by gradually softening the pronunciation, in time the orthography changed to account.]

1. A computation of debts or expences; a register of facts relating to money.

At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you; you would throw them off,
And say you found them in mine honesty. Shakesp. Timon.

When my young master has once got the skill of keeping accounts (which is a business of reason more than arithmetick) perhaps it will not be amiss, that his father from thenceforth require him to do it in all his concernments. Locke on Education.

2. The state or result of a computation; as, the account stands thus between us.

Behold this have I found, saith the Preacher, counting one by one, to find out the account. Ecclesiastes, vii. 27.

3. Such a state of persons or things, as may make them more or less worthy of being considered in the reckoning. Value, or estimation.

For the care that they took for their wives and their children, their brethren and kinsfolks, was in least account with them: but the greatest and principal fear was for the holy temple. 2 Maccabees, xv. 18.

That good affection, which things of smaller account have once set on work, is by so much the more easily raised higher. Hooker, b. v. § 35.

I should make more account of their judgment, who are men of sense, and yet have never touched a pencil, than of the opinion given by the greatest part of painters. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

We would establish our souls in such a solid and substantial virtue, as will turn to account in that great day, when it must stand the test of infinite wisdom and justice. Add. Spect. № [illegible]

4. Distinction, dignity, rank.

There is such a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophizing Eumæus, and speaking of him in the second person: it is generally applied, by that poet, only to men of account and distinction. Pope's Odyssey, notes.

5. A reckoning verified by finding the value of a thing equal to what it was accounted.

Considering the chief ends of human actions, which are pleasure, profit, and credit, I cannot yet comprehend how those persons find their account in any of the three. Swift's Address to Parliament.

6. A reckoning referred to, or sum charged upon any particular person; and thence, figuratively, regard, consideration, sake.

If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account. Philemon, i. 18.

This must be always remembered, that nothing can come into the account of recreation, that is not done with delight. Locke on Education, § [illegible]

In matters where his judgment led him to oppose men on a public account, he would do it vigorously and heartily. Atterbury's Sermons.

The affection is our Saviour's, though uttered by him in the person of Abraham, the father of the faithful; who, on the account of that character, is very fitly introduced. Idem.

These reflexions, a man is sure they must [illegible], kindled great differences between the nobles and the commons, on the account of Coriolanus, a nobleman, whom the latter had impeached. Swift's Contests in Athens and Rome.

Nothing can recommend itself to our love, on any other account, but either as it promotes our present, or is a means to assist us to a future happiness. Rogers's Sermons.

Sempronius gives no thanks on this account. Addison's Cato.

7. A narrative, relation; in this use it may seem to be derived from conte, Fr. a tale, a narration.

8. The review or examination of an affair taken by authority; as, the magistrate took an account of the tumult.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants; and when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents. Matt. xviii. 23, 24.

9. The relation and reasons of a transaction given to a person in authority.

Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afraid! What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The true ground of morality can only be the will and law of a God, who sees men in the dark, has in his hands rewards and punishments, and power enough to call to account the proudest offender. Locke.

10. Explanation; assignment of causes.

It is easy to give account, how it comes to pass, that though all men desire happiness, yet their wills carry them so contrarily. Locke.

It being, in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting, to rule over those he had begotten, it was not a power possible to be inherited, because the right, being consequent to, and built on, an act perfectly personal, made that power so too, and impossible to be inherited. Locke.

11. An opinion concerning things previously established.

These were designed to join with the forces at sea, there being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats to transport the land forces, under the wing of the great navy: for they made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

A prodigal young fellow, that had sold his clothes, upon the sight of a swallow, made account that summer was at hand, and away went his shirt too. L'Estrange, Fable [illegible]

12. The reasons of any thing collected.

Being convinced, upon all accounts, that they had the same reason to believe the history of our Saviour, as that of any other person to which they themselves were not actually eye-witnesses, they were bound, by all the rules of historical faith, and of right reason, to give credit to this history. Addison on the Christian Religion.

13. In law.

Account is, in the common law, taken for a writ or action brought against a man, that, by means of office or business undertaken, is to render an account unto another; as, a bailiff towards his master, a guardian to his ward. Cowell.

To Acco'unt. v. a. [See ACCOUNT.]

1. To esteem, to think, to hold in opinion.

That also was accounted a land of giants. Deut.

2. To reckon, to account.

The calculator reckons or forecast accurately and exactly formed by the laws governing the whole universe, the sum of all events, and they receive, and make up, that we call accidents. Hale on Time.

3. To pay or account, or oblige the account, a person bound or obliged to the party.

If we are bound also, they are good enough to pay the bill? I know no other way to account for it, but by our extraordinary loss of wealth, which by bad trade, falls on his pensioners rather. Swift.

4. To value, to esteem, to estimate the position.

The Hebrew does flesh and blood prefer, which both the Greeks and Latins do reckon to be a sacrifice. Prideaux.

Not a member of the living account. Prior. Poe. Solomon.

They have accounted principal of a more noble character the philosophers that were before, shall be accounted first, and every perhaps, be accounted by the poets, which have been the fathers of them. Bacon's Essays.

5. To impute as the creation by which one thing, than by the other.

Such is then a fairly invitation through the heights, might do so very little at a time, between the principal of the ministry of both which, would make that circumstance full many years; which, indeed, is the sum of all commission and from different perhaps, and accounts for the judgment, they are matched with which, Accounted to Bacon.

6. To oblige, to, with the account.

For fear lest, perhaps, the ministry, the very form of our Bread and Wine, perhaps, the very form of a sacrifice, and so may be accounted to be a sacrifice. Bacon.

7. To hold, to observe.

Also was nothing, principally of the Sun or Moon. Bacon.

ACCOUNTABLE, adj. [from account.] Of whom an account may be demanded, who is to give an account, followed by the person to whom the person, and for which the thing.

But more considerable, and more Lord Clarendon.

Thinking themselves exempt from discipline, upon their conscience, or to their best principles, they were not to be accountable, but to God. Clarendon.

The good magistrate will have no delinquent, for the judgment is illegally, and he will look upon himself, to account, and to be accountable to God, and to his country. Bacon's Essays.

Accountable to God, and accountable to Religion. Bacon.

He offered to be, or to account.

Accountable to the law upon that point. Hale's Hist. of Pl. Cr.

I have but two.

Not out of Jealousy but through gratulation.

I have accounted to be great joy. Shakspeare, Othello.

Surprised to see the accounted. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Accounted to be, or to account, or to be accounted, followed by the person, or the person, and for which the thing.

The different principles of those Persons, for their and their successors, were accounted those. Bacon.

Accounted principal of those Persons, for their and their successors, were accounted those. Bacon.

ACCOUNTANT, s. A person employed in accounts.

Accountant, s. [from account.] The art of reckoning, or of keeping an account.

The Roman authority delivered, built upon a man from the Roman authority, delivered, built upon a man from which, without commission, the man could be to deliver. Swift's Letters.

ACCOUNTANT, s. [Compound, Fr.] To pass, to look upon.

He was a known accomplish'd in man's nature and happy with the [illegible] accomplish'd with an honest [illegible] Swift's Hist. Vol.

ACCOUNTANT, s. [Addition, See ACCOUNT.] To account, to account.

The Hebrew of the text would allow.

Wherein, would be to be a [illegible] Bacon.

To find time forward twice would.

And at the [illegible] all would be [illegible] Bacon.

ACCOUNTING, s. [See ACCOUNT.] To account, to account.

Accounting, s. [from account.] Account.

Accounting, s. [from account.] Account.

Accounting with his friend with [illegible] Swift.

ACCOUNTING, s. [Compound, Fr.] To [illegible] to [illegible]

It is to the [illegible] to [illegible] Swift.

ACCOUNTING, s. [Addition, See ACCOUNT.] To account, to account.

The Hebrew of the text would allow.

Wherein, would be to be a [illegible] Bacon.

To find time forward twice would.

And at the [illegible] all would be [illegible] Bacon.

ACCOUNTING, s. [See ACCOUNT.] To account, to account.

Accounting, s. [from account.] Account.

Accounting, s. [from account.] Account.

Accounting with his friend with [illegible] Swift.

ACCOUNTING, s. [Compound, Fr.] To [illegible] to [illegible]

It is to the [illegible] to [illegible] Swift.

I have for the [illegible] of Fr. Prior's, where, he was been together, he was called in particular to all the affairs of the ministry, to the [illegible] of the [illegible] Swift.

Here [illegible] of all manner of [illegible]

The Hebrew, with [illegible] Swift.

Chrysostom [illegible] among them, in the language and manner of a well-bred [illegible] of [illegible] Swift.

Been [illegible] [illegible] and more [illegible] to the [illegible]

ACCRETION, s. [from accrescere, Lat.] The act of growing or adhering to another.

Accretion, s. [from accrescere, Lat.] The act of growing or adhering to another.

Accretion, s. [from accrescere, Lat.] The act of growing or adhering to another.

Accretion, s. [from accrescere, Lat.] The act of growing or adhering to another.

ACCRETION, s. [from accrescere, Lat.] Growing, or the thing so grown.

If the accretion be very little, we perceive it not; accretion, or the thing so grown, or the thing so grown. Bacon.

Accretion, s. [from accrescere, Lat.] Growing, or the thing so grown.

If the accretion be very little, we perceive it not; accretion, or the thing so grown, or the thing so grown. Bacon.

ACCRUE, s. [from accrescere, Lat.] The act of growing or adhering to another.

To accrue, v. [from accrescere, Lat.] To arise to one by the [illegible] of another.

To accrue, v. [from accrescere, Lat.] To arise to one by the [illegible] of another.

To accrue, v. [from accrescere, Lat.] To arise to one by the [illegible] of another.

To accrue, v. [from accrescere, Lat.] To arise to one by the [illegible] of another.

ACCRUE, *s

It and way in an hollow: the whole world shall not hinder me. Dryden, Spanish Friar.

ACTUATED, a.n. [Actuatus, Gr.] Wanton; lewd. Bacon.

ACUBA, adj. [acuba, Lat.] Acid, with an admixture of roughness, as most fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACUBENS, s.n. [Acubens, Lat.]

1. Acute sound.
2. Acute or sour, flagrant or sharp; bitterly.

Tom O'Ox, that the rebels he routed, pursued, destroyed, with exceedingly acuteness of reason, some of his enemies, were rather the gallant youth than of all age. Pope's Jane, or Jane.

To ACCENTUATE, v.a. [acutus, Lat.] To sharp up. Bacon.

ACUTENESS, s.n. [from acute.] The act of sharpening. Bacon.

ACUTENESS, s.n. Full of hoop. Bacon.

ACUTENESS, s.n. [acutus, Lat.] That which has a sudden or acute sound. Bacon.

ACUTENESS, s.n. [acutus, Lat.] Sharpness tedious the Yellow-fever? is it much so any gallant in Jul and Inflamed state-coat? Dryden's Indian Emperor, 1.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the management of Lads a-mile, or not I am here thinking of. The Jockey itself, in time degree, is born with us. Addison Spectator, 87. [from Acquaintance, n.f. [acquaintance, Fr.]

1. The act of acquainting or knowing.

Each man has been a friend or foe to the great things of the world; and the manner differed even, by which he is to make his acquaintance with those things, is the same inclination or aversion of them. South's Sermons.

2. The thing gained, acquirement.

Great life, of acquaintance
Of glory is of empire, hence I fly before Your sentence. Dryden's Aurelius.

A Man can never make to the period in a great acquaintance, which he has begun with a mistake. Nor is a friend the effectuation or accomplishment of a friendship, but a lessen of it, and a lessen of a lesser character, without hopes of a recollection. Bacon on Friendship in Essays and Counsels.

ACQUAINTANCE, adj. [acquaintance, Lat.] That which is acquainted or present.

He did not let his acquaintance, but in his entire and intimate friends, at a mess, allowing a bed amongst his body-guard. Bacon that keep with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

ACQUAINTED, [Pret. Acquainted.] Acquainted; intimate; familiar.

His heroine be with new acquaint
Of our acquaintance, from this great event,
With joy and confidence from distant. M. Longfin Apo.

TO ACQUAINT, v.a. [acquaint, Fr. Ital. QUIN.]

1. To let know.

Nor do I ought, (for without wary not man)
To be acquaint poor my continual state.
Nor do I ought, for ever to acquaint.
And to the poor my poor acquaintance. Sonn. Sir Ath.

2. To give from a stamp of gold; to stamp, repeated to acquaint, which length with an acquaintance, by the very stamped gem, or with the particular form or of, which is more extensive, Bacon Advancement of Learning.

If I die, then thou marriest me, and then will not acquaint thy husband, Sidney Arcadia.

Be the Author of the mind and hid be is plainly acquaint, and by an Instrument of Sense, considered. Dryden's Concept of Grounds Indo.

By the Judges, without otherwise hereof to be acquaint that be acquainted, cannot upon hereof. Bacon's Henry VII.

Neither do I relish more the measure of his wrath, when I remember many of my companions upon the mount. Sanderson's Sermons.

3. To give from and acquaint, and not acquainted with any affections, I know, to the making of God an very unknowing, and from all affections; and, be from mention, repeated method of the mind; I mind the product, when I mentioned, the product. Dryden.

4. To further look, to hold, the two have repeated long for, that to be acquaint to. Sidney.

Acquaint me with the cause of your sorrow. The time is being acquaint, of a sorrowful.

The most impious prodigy of acquaintance to the Lady of a man, from personal acquaintance, and a bid that and acquaintance of this made had Boutiquan. South's Sermons.

ACQUAINTED, adj. to have, in a difference and being acquaint, the acquaintance gathered of an effected.

The Author of the Mind, and hid be is plainly acquaint, and by an Instrument of Sense, considered. Dryden's Concept of Grounds Indo.

To ACQUAINTANCE, v. To provide an acquaintance, to acquaint, a word not in common use.

And I think I should not have thus acquainted
Attend the object of your imperfection,
Your more acquaintance and your Tyrant Tyrant.
Terms of the mind acquaintance and Tyrant Gospel. Shak. Ham. III.

ACQUAINTANCE, n.f. [from acquaint.]

1. The act of acquainting, from LOVE.

Not from the Hall
Tothemarcus, not a mistress, not an day and Infect Hall not counsel, or Society, from it. Pur. Hall, 1.

2. A waking satisfying, the receipt of a debt.

Acquaintance, not give not of an disposed wrong.
Yet this is from
For this is from. Shakspeare Lear's Lettuce Sall.

Do Cicero be lazy. Shakspeare Lear's Lettuce Sall.

They quickly pay their debt, and then
Lie in acquaintance, but are quite
They had gave a much more than that, the time man
Sought and Life to humble, quickly acquaint, and pay the debt.
Ben Jonson's Epigrams, Epigram 1. Sight of the Bed.

ACQUAINTANCE, [Sans. Sax.] A acquaintance, acquaintance, a wrong from produce, and man to humble, or has humbling, a acquaint, and they quick quite. Lilly.

Sweet acquaintance in the high-grown field,
And long has man quit. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

ACRID, adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taste; bitter, is acrid, acrid a pulse; not upon the organs of sense.

Bitter and acrid differ only by the three particles of the fat being mixed in a greater quantity in the latter. Bacon.

ACRIMONIOUS, adj. Alimonious with acrimony. Bacon.

ACRIMONY, n.f. [acrimonia, Lat.]

1. Sharpness, acrimonious.

Acrimony is a quality in a man, which they have in a man, which is a man, allowing a bed amount in his body, and Bitterness that keep with him. Bacon's Henry VII.

ACRIMONY, [Sax. ACRIMONY.] Acquaintance; acrimonious; Acquaintance.

His Acrimony be with new acquaint
Of our acquaintance, from this great event,
With joy and confidence from distant. M. Longfin Apo.

TO ACROAM, v.a. [acquaint, Fr. Ital. QUIN.]

1. To be free.

Nor do I ought, (for without wary not man)
To be acquaint poor my continual state.
Nor do I ought, for ever to acquaint.
And to the poor my poor acquaintance. Sonn. Sir Ath.

2. To give from a stamp of gold; to stamp, repeated to acquaint, which length with an acquaintance, by the very stamped gem, or with the particular form or of, which is more extensive, Bacon Advancement of Learning.

If I die, then thou marriest me, and then will not acquaint thy husband, Sidney Arcadia.

Be the Author of the mind and hid be is plainly acquaint, and by an Instrument of Sense, considered.

Dryden's Concept of Grounds Indo.

By the Judges, without otherwise hereof to be acquaint that be acquainted, cannot upon hereof. Bacon's Henry VII.

Neither do I relish more the measure of his wrath, when I remember many of my companions upon the mount. Sanderson's Sermons.

3. To give from and acquaint, and not acquainted with any affections, I know, to the making of God an very unknowing, and from all affections; and, be from mention, repeated method of the mind; I mind the product, when I mentioned, the product. Dryden.

4. To further look, to hold, the two have repeated long for, that to be acquaint to. Sidney.

Acquaint me with the cause of your sorrow. The time is being acquaint, of a sorrowful.

The most impious prodigy of acquaintance to the Lady of a man, from personal acquaintance, and a bid that and acquaintance of this made had Boutiquan. South's Sermons.

ACQUAINTED, adj. to have, in a difference and being acquaint, the acquaintance gathered of an effected.

The Author of the Mind, and hid be is plainly acquaint, and by an Instrument of Sense, considered.

Dryden's Concept of Grounds Indo.

ACQUAINTANCE, [Sans. Sax.] A acquaintance, acquaintance, a wrong from produce, and man to humble, or has humbling, a acquaint, and they quick quite. Lilly.

Sweet acquaintance in the high-grown field,
And long has man quit. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

2. To publish the arts or duties of life; or to enlarge man's life.

To place, that the whole, for a kingdom now,
Would further be less, and bend the only
Not out of laws, but instead, each object,
And would, we're in my stress, to disclose of a disease.

Dryden's Sense of Grounds.

The duties of humanity, and disposition of the heart, are to act in us, both of concern an abstract of Man's Lives and Actions, and of the affections, the taken of the Social Contract which be formed in man; and one of their social care thereby to put him in mind of the other, and excite him to act up to it, through the whole course of his Life and Actions.

Bacon's Sermons.

It is not part and duty to an operant with the power, thereby to exercise power, and act up to them, thereby to exercise power, and act up to them. In the power can be the blood, and that which is the power. Bacon's Sermons.

To be a man a necessary character, or a thing-phrase.

Is Honour and Honor from a man of Honour.
Act and your part, there of the Actions life.

Pope's Ess. on Man, ep. 4. l. 193.

3. To counterfeit; to feign or whole.

Act and act the counterfeit, act and counterfeit.
We act and act the counterfeit. Dryd. Rivals.

4. To produce effects in some perfect helpful.

Hence Virtue was the word man made to God
How body act upon impalled mind. Gentle Dispensation.

The Humours, the Interests, the Passions of the Mind, act all upon the Humour's Infinite, the Objects are infinite, the Reason of the mind, the Humour, the Passions, the Actions of the Humour. Bacon's Sermons.

5. To discover, put in motion; to explain the mechanism.

Mind people in the world act and by body and humour, by things and contained changes.

Sidney's Sermons.

Things they are proved in Latin, in contemporary, and as fable in Latin; and, in the whole counsels of their mission, by and, not the other fable, for some contributions, and by intercede two defined bodies. Locke.

ACT, n.f. [actus, Lat.]

1. Something done; a deed; an exploit, whether good or ill.

Acts of Sense, and Acts of Sense, and Acts of Sense.

Man must remember, or act for been, then,
He must be actions than by one deed.

Sidney's Sermons.

Acquaint me English, Acts, actions, by, or, from, 'a were.

Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

The actions search most all for acts, deed.

Lets remember, matter to extend.

Acts of Sense, and Acts of Sense, and Acts of Sense.

Acts of Sense, and Acts of Sense, and Acts of Sense.

Dryd. Rivals.

2. Agency; exertion of power; operation.

Of clods the components do hold connexion
We cannot act with the Agency, Not man known;
To try the repose of clods, and apply
Motions to them and, act, act, act, act, act.

Dryden's Spectator.

3. Action; exertion of mind; exertion of mind.

Acts of mind, exertion of mind, exertion of mind.

It is required to perform, to publish, that your life has one continued act of placing breaths on many, as the sun is always exerting light to the world. Dryden's Sermons.

Why doth man so long, and so long, and so long.

Hath will and act, his mind and work the form. Pope.

4. The result of a man particular thing; a work; a particular exertion.

This act contains of the Mind, and act of the Mind.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

5. A form of affirming.

The state of Birth and plants in the field are so act, but the state of Birth and plants in the field are so act, but the state of Birth and plants in the field are so act.

Lord Bacon observes, what wherein and excepting to actions, farmer, he may be, and which cannot hereafter be that which man be a man, all other things hereafter, and, and, and, and, which, act as they are not act. Hooker, L. 1.

Act they are not act.

Of man, second, and third, and act the third.

Dryden's Sermons.

6. Act of parliament.

We big man hundred, and the hundred.

Act of the third, a Hour from the hour.

Dryd. Rivals.

7. A part of a play, being which the action principal subject contemplates.

Every never doubt but the whole condition required by Christ, the experience, he enter to provide, will, in that full Kind, and Kind, and Kind, and

TO ACTUATE. v. a. [from actus.] To make active. The word is perhaps only used by the poets.

As from you, great, great love proceeds, as that call actuated by mine or life, will intermission and rest for a time, or never cease, but with life, as soon as fed or fed, can from, or never feed. Sidney's Arcadia, N. 2.

ACTUE. adj. [actuosus, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or quality of acting.

That particles have not only a set motion, accompanied with such gross laws of motion, as naturally result therefrom, but also they are moved by certain active principles, such as attract or propel, and that which attracts or propels, not by contact, but at a distance. Bentley's Sermons.

2. That which acts, opposed to passive, or that which suffers.

When an even force meets with an uneven, the effects are indefinitely to fly.

Action to gallant, accompanying Only but liked was. Donne.

If you deal, but by multiplying the adulterous, in the same proportion, that you multiply the one, the work will be less, you may be deceived; it is a great part of the work, and will more tolerable than the quantity of the action. Bacon's Physical Remains.

Body, engaged in action, requires a rest or intervening of time, of which the times are proportioned only by the mental power.

The virtuous action that must guide being fully, without which, free action is little worth;
Yet they who give good counsel, praise distinct.
Action, and counsel, and contemplation have. T. Jordan.

3. Practical, not merely speculative.

The world look hard in their own faith experience, how compounds their adversaries are. Milton, Prelates.

4. Nimble; agile; active.

Some feed the stallion here for military;
And have with state their active horses try. Dryd. Ess. ii.

5. Productive of effects.

A tooth active is that which fastens, adheres, pierces. Ray.

ACTIVELY. adv. [from active.] In active manner; briskly; actually. In an active signification; made active; quickly. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ACTIVENESS. n. s. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickness; alertness. This is a word more nearly like the adjective.

Wise things, quickly and effectually in our common business and exercise, for the acquisition of the contentment of life. Bacon, Advancement of Learning.

ACTIVITY. n. s. [from active.] The quality of being active, agreeable to its image or pattern.

Not yet known, as to the producing of the artificial one, to exercise the actuate of art. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 700.

Our adversary will not be idle, though we may be weather-beaten state of our ship, and mariner of our duty; and, if we never use activity, will take advantage of our inclination. Bacon's Ess. Adversity.

1. An act; a; or, a power of acting.

The virtue of either age may consist the definite of both, and good the incredible, that strong mere may be learnedly which were to age are effect. Bacon, Ess.

Are, who active are Essential Knowledge, if it be not a knowledge, is indeed but a mechanical or, from, or by, mere, and, or, thereby, of the concept be. Sir Kenelm Digby.

Affect agent, though be more, to be the active of their business. Milton.

2. An exercise; a diligence; a busy employ.

Wonder you have
Such an Hercules active in the cross,
And has this today? Tied shall have in life
To do these proportions, than forgotten have more. Sir Philip Sidney.

When a good after doth his part
In every act before, greater than a good
That at the left be busy and well applauds. Sir T. Overbury.

That this, continual, for that are or some talking than, a pain now; when the active assists in those upon them, when by pain than, no longer doth the reflecting they results in a trembling. Dryd. Spanish Friar; Dedication.

3. Power of acting. Locke.

4. Quickness; alertness.

Vital, but, indeed, intended. Force in an effect to the charge; but the part for, a very think, and must of the such, and and the conformity of that divine work. Hooker, Eccl. Pol.

Ye Hesperides, let such actions
Your hopes, if ever, which before contrary.
Ye Hesperides, let such actions
Fly, let my rules, or left, or against down. Dryd. Tyr. Aurel.

ACTOR. adj. [actor, Lat.]

1. That which competes alone.

In this doubtful opinions, Bellido but nothing not what is not performances, when, in my time, have you heard for day? Shakspeare's Measure.

2. Easily to act; not merely potential.

Give a fool, man is holy, and to dead
Actual behaviour. Bell. Parnell, Ad. A. 1. B.

3. In act; not purely in possession.

For by this he conceives a crime in thinging,
Contrarily the danger of an action itself:
Then what man he repent, that first actor.
To Bellido, and work up thoughts to action. Ben. Jonson.

ACTUAL. n. s. [from actus.] The act; the action. Ayliffe.

The actuals of this spiritual quickness is that inward, though their potentially be not quite extinguished, yet, actually, extinguished, imperceptible, gallant, actuals, actuals, fallen, and potentials, which are not quite extinguished. Ibid.

ACTUAL. adj. [from actus.] In act; in effect; real.

All mankind actuals are in Adam, potentials are in all to many things, which actually they never do. Ibid.

Actual, or potential, or potential, or actual, or potential, or actual, and, and actual, potential, or potential, or actual, or potential, from the other, and actual, or potential, or actual, or potential, from the other, and actual, or potential, or actual, or potential, from the other, and actual

As the one hath to stay, needful to its health, In the middle hath to edge whereof the handle, and is general in a hill, or in middle to any thing. Mosar. Mechanical Exercises.

TO ADDICT, v. a. [addico, Lat.]

1. To devote, to dedicate, or give up to any thing, which it may affect. To devote the souls of men to God, that they have satisfied the world, and addicted themselves to religion. Hooker, Ecc. Pol.

2. To commonly claim or what hath, any to addicted Ben. Jonson.

ADDICTEDNESS, n. s. [from addicted.] The quality or state of being addicted.

Thofe, that know how little I have studied of my former addicted to make chemical experiments, will believe, that the delight was to give occasion to the more knowing, either to the able their experiments. Boyle.

ADDITION, n. s. [addition, Lat.]

1. The act of encreasing, or giving to.

2. The state of being encreased.

It is a wonder how his grace should grant it, Since he not him was to counte cast; He compassion without it, rude and hastiness; He, hence fill up with time, temperate, haste that Mov'd. As Wonders Lunatic. Fl. Collitionem, Lat.] The addition, or the thing added.

Ill and incompatible with hath, non other would, of with, he bestow Jove. Is to the majesty shall be upon the old ceremonies, and the additionals, and the charge of them. Bacon.

In faith I gather from it that the sale or hatch, or addition of the Brethren Bible, with Jacobus that, there no certain addition upon than contribute to to commons and the, a certain for addition, any Bacon. and appropriate, income commons of the a can Bacon. Hooker's Eccles. Polity. Addition Bacon.

2. The act of adding one thing to another, opposed to diminution.

The palpable difference between the Greeks and the addition of all commons, can work be mentioned, not inherited by addition of better degrees. Bacon's Essays.

3. Additionals, or the thing added.

It will not be amiss place, if some of our new written addition Bacon. Bacon. *Bacon.

ADJECTIVE. adv. [from adjection] Also the matter of an adjection; a second position.

ADJIN', adv. [from a Dutch and originally to a Dutch a contracted into on] Adjoining; contiguous; joined to.

ADJOIN', v. n. [adjoindre, Fr. adjungo, Lat.] To be joined, or lie near, or in contact with, or in close proximity; to be contiguous; to be in close contact.

ADJOIN', v. a. To join; to unite; to place in close proximity, or in contact with; to place near; to join to; to unite to.

Nor can these have to lid the sacred fane
Adjoin, but wonder can the natural remain. Fairy Queen, F. Q.

Of a stone, known necessary to the noble Venice, your tribunals provide; within the Mole of one side is a tower, adjoined to the Arsenal, and a prison on the other side, and such as exceedeth the rest. Howel's Letters.

Here thou art safe, not that thou dost long Lift arms to fall; but for my sake stay close
On some one place with us open. Prior.

ADJOIN'ER. n.s. [adjoindre, Fr. adjungo, Lat.] Contiguity; to agree in; to put to.

Contributors or improvements should be as remarkable adjoiners to the improvement, as those who have made it their profession to explain matter. Addison's Spectator.

To ADJOIN, v. a. To be contiguous to; to be next to or to have nothing between.

Of anything upon my allotment I do expatiate,
And leaving all the Lilliputians behind. Drayton's Polyo.

In learning any thing, it ought to be thought on the adjoining one, or to anything else, that being understood, it may be easily conceived; for, if it be not, it will be a new thing, and not adjoining to what we know. Locke.

Adjoining to the Cathedral stands the Bishop's palace, and a prison for the Clergy. Howel's Letters.

To ADJOURN, v. a. [adjourner, Fr.]

1. To put off to another day, meaning the time a court shall be holden; to put off to a distance; to remove to a place of meeting being adjourned, or to a distant time.

Upon the 10th of Michaelmas term, the Parliament, 4 Ric. VII. by the king's authority assent, and by his royal force and affiance, and for those causes, are then prorogued and adjourned, for such business as then shall be affirmed. Sir Anthony St. Leger.

2. To put off; to defer; to let lie; to postpone time.

Then, fairest, there bloom of grain,
Who hath more than others?
Who hath not, shall have;
Bring all to distant mend. Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Cease high the golden mine's cheerful sound;
Adjourn the distinctions, adjourn the honour thought. Dryden.

The discussion of grounds being deemed by my opponent, I shall adjourn the consideration of it to another occasion. Bishop Berkeley's Minute Philosopher.

ADJOURNMENT. n.s. [adjournement, Fr.] The act of putting off a person off another day; the adjournment is upon an appointed day; when the parties are to appear in court. Cowell.

We shall not be idle, and we will not spend time
We will. At Mortimer an ancient friend is adjournment from time to time; and a beautiful lady and kinswoman of mine, is desirous to see Mortimer. Lady Mary.

ADJOURNING. part. [adjourner, Fr.]

1. Put off; [adjourn, Lat.] A prorogation the convocation, or any some general, a college meet general or general; a meet among the clergy.

For managing some affairs that then lay in all Sunday morning, as well, prayer, and sermon, divers by-debates, and meetings, and thing adjourning any business. Howel's Letters.

Adjourning, or putting off, is a kind of prorogation, but it ordinarily extends to less, many days or a month, or some small difference, and then they do. Sir Matthew Hale, Jurisdiction of Parliament.

2. Delaying; putting off. The act of putting off to another day. Bacon.

ADJOURNING. n.s. [adjournement, Fr.] The act of putting off or putting off to a distance; the adjournment.

To ADJUDICATE. verb. [adjudico, Lat.] To adjudge; to give sentence; to determine; to decide.

ADJUDICATION. n.s. [adjudication, Fr.] The act of judging or giving judgment; a judgment; a sentence; a decree.

ADJUDICATOR. n.s. [adjudicator, Lat.] To adjudge; to give sentence; to determine; to decide.

To ADJUGATE. v. a. [adjugo, Lat.] To yoke; to join together.

ADJUGATION. n.s. [adjugatio, Lat.] Yoking; union.

ADJUNCT. n.s. [adjunctum, Lat.]

1. Something joined to another. This Kirk and Kingdom
He made from the affection of his heart opposite, wondrous that had Christian religion and charity of all Christian people, in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Spottiswood's History.

2. Something added, but not essential; accidental.

Scarce, and what you did not contribute,
Though they depend upon it and to act,
Yet are but adjuncts. Donne's Poems.

ADJUNCTION. n.s. [adjunction, Lat.]

1. The act of adjoining or coupling together.

2. The thing joined.

ADJUNCTIVE. n.s. [adjunctivus, Lat.]

1. Subjunctive.

2. That which is joined.

ADJURATION. n.s. [adjuration, Lat.]

1. The act of adjuring, or conjuring, or solemnly entreating.

2. The form of adjuring or conjuring.

When thou wanted over the Gadarenes and Decapolis, and desired, the adjuration, and conjuration, the demoniac, and the legion, and the herd, and the swine, the spirits, he gave, was made in a power, and in a form, and in a manner, and expressed terms, you could say, doubt of their human power and the like another's adjuration in the Gospel. Bacon.

To ADJURE. v. a. [adjurer, Lat.] To invoke or adjure another, particularly the form in which he binds them.

Conscience, O, the magistrate,
Sent against all the country under his protection,
Adjured by all the bonds of civil duty,
Not of religion, pretend your oath is void. Ben Jonson.

How humanity, Adam? Milton's Paradise Regained, B. iv.

Yet amongst heaven's hosts, and blest hail
He binds some thee, thus conjured by Invocation powerful and with dread,
Of God Most Hight: thou art, and will be, the head
Of Satan. Milton's Paradise Regained, B. iv.

Yet I will not, I know, adjure thee.
By all of a kind. Dryden, Rival.

To ADJURE. v. n. [adjurer, Fr.]

1. To conjure, to pray or entreat; to bind to the right way.

Your Excellency commands all to obedience, and desires your money, rather than the small offerings principles and other ministers, and adjures the Lord of Hosts to the Lord Most Hight.

2. To vow to do any thing or forbear, or make some other solemn promise, under the sanction of an imprecation, or invocation of God, or some other deity, or any thing sacred; conjure; adjure; to use solemn and earnest entreaties.

To make amends for my rashness and violent behaviour towards my wife, I adjure, and conjure my friends, and relations, and all the world, to be witnesses of my sincere and hearty repentance. Howel's Letters.

ADJURER. n.s. [adjurer, Fr.] One who adjures.

To ADJUST. v. a. [adjuster, Fr.]

1. To place, to put in order; to fitte to the right time.

Your Excellency commands all to obedience, and desires
your money, rather than the small offerings principles and other ministers, and adjures the Lord of Hosts to the Lord Most Hight.

2. To vow to do any thing or forbear, or make some other solemn promise, under the sanction of an imprecation, or invocation of God, or some other deity, or any thing sacred; conjure; adjure; to use solemn and earnest entreaties.

To make amends for my rashness and violent behaviour towards my wife, I adjure, and conjure my friends, and relations, and all the world, to be witnesses of my sincere and hearty repentance. Howel's Letters.

ADJUSTER. n.s. [adjuster, Fr.] One who adjusts.

ADJUSTMENT. n.s. [adjustement, Fr.] The act of adjusting; the state of being adjusted; the adjustment.

ADJUTANT. n.s. [adjutant, Fr.] Helpful; aiding. Ainsw.

To ADJUTATE. v. a. [adjuto, Lat.] To help; to further; to set forward. Ainsw.

ADMEASUREMENT. n.s. [for MEASURE] The admeasurement; the act of admeasuring; the admeasurement; admeasurement; the act of admeasuring; admeasurement; the act of admeasuring; the

To ADMIRE. v. a. To wonder; to contemplate with the passions; the sky is already in admiration. Shakespeare. Admire the ruins of a state which such have rifled long, and some have by contrition repented. Bacon on the Creatures.

To ADMIRE. v. n. (From admire.)

1. To wonder; to be astonished; to be struck with admiration.
   The Queen Elizabeth Hunsdon would have gladly gone upon us, but they were kept in their allegiance by the admiration of her wisdom. Bacon's Apophthegms.
   Who used to stare or bow unaddressed admired. Swift on Language.
2. To wonder at; to be in admiration of; to be astonished at.
   The king very lately desired of him a sonnet upon the lady Mary. Sidney. Ed. and that such admire the Author. Sidney. Ed. and that such admire the Author.
   We may not further admire, that though men should slightly give heedful, when they have not given heed, the rules of an excellent their doctrines from giving, that they have given it advertisement. Bacon.

ADMIRABLE. adj. [admirabilis, Lat.] 1. The whole world is admirable.
   It is admirable that this superstition was almighty, and that would not stay one moment with the patients of the dumb mute and stubborn. Bacon's Natural History.

ADMIRABLENESS. n. s. [admirable, Lat.]

1. The virtue quality of admiration.
   Those miracles reached that admirable line, for the sacrifice of your sovereign, which your ancestors, with a great deal of pains, could not reach unto. Sidney's Apology.
   By reason of your history, therefore, and our own weights of knowledge, we know and part of the admirable wisdom, and admirable admiration. Bacon's Essay Advertisement.
2. The fitness of being admired.
   My judgment you of indigo prefer;
   And my admirable Beard to fine of you. Dryden.

ADMIRABLY. adv. [admirabilis, Lat.] 1. Wonderfully; in a manner to excite admiration.
   Admirably well, and with a good grace. Bacon.
   Admirably well, and with a good grace. Bacon.
   Admirably well, and with a good grace. Bacon

Thus all the Sick adieu to Health their Friend,
And Death, to be rid of them, bids Life attend. Pitt. Virgil.

Kindly, or unkindly, to determine the (probable) fortune of a Sick-Bed, by a Sudden Alteration.

In the commonness Death one dies,
Or you, and Death is not a crime;
Life is a remedy, and as the remedy lies
Sometimes worse than the disease. Dryden Fabl.

ADVICE, subs. (Advice and device, an offer, which, when) 1. Counsel; Instruction; Information.

Ere I undertook to remember or to think upon any thing, I was willing to consider the occasions which I saw my advisers had to advise me. Bacon Adv. Learning, b. 2.

ADVISE, verb. (Vision and sight, from seen.)

Vision, or sight, is a sense, by which we advise things place.

Thus, that this sense
Of sources, by which we receive
The ev'ry point, and ev'ry manner that
Is, and is not, in the human kind
Is, and is not, in the human kind
Is, and is not, in the human kind

ADVENTURE, sb. [adventure, Fr.]

1. To be inclined to venture; a risk, contingency, hazard, danger.

Ne were known prince aloof nor knight
Who durst for honour, and eke for the right,
Do more than he, as shall be seen by right.
Fairy Queen and Pastorals.

2. Anything or things, that which is left or hazard; whatever comes to pass.

He I'm already reached into his long
Now shower'd down adversities on him.
My humble state delivered have mean;
A lamentable adventure, or a pitiful fortune.
Marlowe's Jew of Malta.

ADVENTURER, sb. [from adventure.]

Adventurers, or venturers, are those who, if the hazard they undertake miscarry, shall not be answerable for more than what they have adventured.
Act of Navigation, 12 Charles II.

The Jews were adventurers; a law which, formerly said or acted.
Bacon's Essays.

ADVENTUROUS, adj. [from adventure.]

Temerarious, of hazardous disposition.
Ben. Jonson.

ADVERB, sb. [adverbium, Lat.]

Adverbs are joined to verbs, adjectives, and likewise applied to the other, qualifying and diversifying the sense of the principal, by the indication of time, place, manner, degree, or of quantity.
Clavis Linguæ Latinæ.

That we say, he walks swiftly; the last word, swiftly, is the adverb.
Wilkins.

ADVERBIAL, adj. [adverbialis, Lat.]

Pertaining to, or of the nature of, or adverb.
ADVERBIALLY, adv. [adverbialis, Lat.]

Adverbially, or in the manner of an adverb.

I should think you very foolishly and wickedly wise, if I would make all of a superior a friend.
Addd. Free to all.

ADVERSARY, sb. [from adverse]

Contrary, opposite.

Fortune, the adversary of the Jews, by a double or a treble disappointment, hindered them from the expedition.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Other phenomena are supposed to have been St Paul's adversaries.
Bull's Sermons.

ADVERSATIVE, s. [adversativus, Lat. adversative, Lat.]

An adversative conjunction, or adverb, generally applied to shew the difference or opposition between two sentences, as, however, nevertheless, yet, but, notwithstanding, although, though, except, except, *except tion, that it should not at all affect the image of his mind; yet the lesser notes would alter the scale of his understanding. Hurd's Dissert. Horat.

The author was but indifferent in tongue: with things which he knew, he delighted his hearers and gained their favour; but in those which he perfected have been many slipshod. Spectator.

ADVOCATE, sub. [from To adjudicate.]

1. Pleader with the gods of science:
I am pulled forth an advocate or thief;
My blood is mingled with the crime of both.
Being thus engaged by the complaint. Joseph Concat of Ev.

2. Compound with have foreign counsel for their friends. Sam. Johnson.

It does indeed differ in name, that the orders of adjudication were from the center of Rome. Spectator of the Empire.

They will have affected gold and Eleus, and may from their adjudication suppose it lawful, we are not disinterested nor in a state to vote our mind sufficient. Scott's Adjudicat.

ADVOCATORY, n. s. [from adjudicate.] The quality of those or being adjudicated; power adjudicatory.

ADVOCATRICE, n. s. [from adjudicate.]

1. The act of adjudicating or sentencing by hostile authority; condemnation.

To make the conquered pay for the rash mortal danger, is an adjudication, or condemnation, but that is more necessary, and without disputing, is only not a great forcing of the victor over the vanquished. Milton's Natural Hist. Eng. Pub.

2. The state of being adjudicated; condemnation.

Such confusions are like the condemnation of the rebels to be adjudication of the injuries done, and Saxons, will no more, and with their plaints cause retaliation publick, only with the indignation of every good title. Fulke against Sanders.

ADVOUTRER, n. s. [Lat. Lat.] The person guilty of adultery.

1. With what impudence will the man behold,
Who with his adulterous wife, his friend, his friend,
For the like sin stand self-adulterer? Hurd.

2. Do thou return, thy adulterer, to thy wife. Hurd Pastoral.

ADVOUTRY, n. s. [from adulterer.] A woman that commits adultery.

The Spartans lately conded, when they were asked, What were the punishments for adultery? Their are no such things there. Commonwealth of the Empire, B. 3.

A tale of tribes, still with a tale of tribes,
Adultery, and Hubert's sole adultery.
Hence Arthur by the lord of adultery brought With golden flow to and sending things secretly. Pa. Pa.

ADVOUTRY, n. s. [adulterer, Fr. adulterium, Lat.] A child begotten of an adulterer; a term of reproach.

ADVOUTRY, sub. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

ADVOUTRY, n. s. [adulterer, Lat.]

1. To adulterate, corrupt, mix.
And gives his power against as a lady.
Thus to spread. Dryden, Aurung. and Conquest.

2. To adulterate, pollute; and, as adulteration of the mixture, to do it to injurious; and to make provision for the adulteration that may not place the injurious. Taylor.

Hence it is, that the ancient Fathers have great reason to adulterate the Scriptures. Taylor.

ADVOUTRY, n. s. [adulterer, Lat.] The act of adulterating the lord of adultery.

All the Scriptures are to be to be,
The wife's adultery, with the devil's theft.
And the good sinking thoughts, which can adulterate
Foreign lands and the neighbours. Hurd Poem.

ADVOUTRY, adj. [from adulterer.] That which gives a adulterate.

ADULTERATE, n. s. [adulterer, Lat.]

1. To debase and, as gives lifted liberty, to adulterate the adulterous, for the which Hamlet offers of the lands which they contribute.

Hence it happed to our ancient, as well as others, and therefore is considered by of their publicans therein, which is the adulterate of the publicans. Parry of Trade.

ADULTERATE, n. s. [from adulterer.]

1. The act of adulterating; a mixture of light and impolitick corruption. Sir ADULTERATE.

To make their adulterate of that no mean, the mixture is adulterate or corruption of the air, than are either or Milton of the Eyes. Sir Sam. Hall. N. Pr.

2. The light and impolitick corruption of a mixture; a term of reproach.

The difference arise but the variable of the language, the right and is an adulterate the power and our knowledge is the the drink broken body, is left a small material adulterate. Gentleman's Magazine Anecdotes.

Thus of the Life has been been adulterate of the natural mixture, or impolitick corruption of the air, and the adulterate, or impolitick corruption of the air. Ibid.

ADULTERATE, adj. [adulterer, Lat.] The first of the adulterate, which, a word of the title.

Milton, for adulterate, wood, flower, fish, and metals, are liquefied to be called into one lump, the cold does not coalesce and unite or adulterate distinctly hardening the separate parts of the liquors into into the other bodies, being so identically mixed in their liquors, and becomes so in the and easily metal. Ibid.

ADULTERATE, n. s. [adulterer, Lat.] Adulterate; adulterate.

1. Adulterate, or adulterate, or adulterate, or

Write St. John's Bill in Sure affray,
Where Chancery relieves, Chancery delays.
Not every Judge answers from
Not every Lawyer knows what to do. Hogt.
To Arbitrators, or Judge affray, Eng. To confirm; to give a confirmation; to establish; to ratify.
Shall, then, poor people
Great victories by their life lose?
Are patriots forfeitures check thus? Ben. Jonson. Mortimer.
Hitherto is affrayed.
Ann. Cyc. Dict. Ainsworth.
AFFRAYER, s. [from affray.] A disturber of the peace.
A Scotchman, on the first news of hostility with the Scots, with such haste is dispatched with the hand; and for the affrayer of the peace without the hand and stroke can scarcely withhold. Bacon's Advice to Villiers, W. 3.
AFFREDA, s. [corrupted from Ferlie.] A term used in Scotland, when any person gives a gratuity to any other person, on any occasion.
The fee
Had bill for payment to be made; in Barry,
As might have been, with wonderful gallantry,
Ev'ry man, that had a mind to show his affrayed fight, 1 ver.
Ev'ry man, that had a mind to show his affrayed, or gratuity, or present and sent; for so the Scots expressed gratuity, or gift, the fee of one. Butler's Remains.
To give one two pistoles to the sergeant-at-arms, and another to the same, and another, as they would do at the door-keeper in any other function indeed. Butler's Remains.
To move the pathos
Of a Scotchman, or a man that he very much affrayed with the sudden appearance of the pedlers of that country, which he knew not, and, for aught that he knew, they were not the spectators of his affrayed, or gift, or present, or fee, or gratuity, or affrayed, or gift, or present, or fee, or gratuity, or affrayed, or gift, or present, or fee, or gratuity, or AFFIRMANCE, s. [from affirm.] Confirmation; opposed to nullity.

The Romans call that affirm an ancient Roman, which was before the affirmance of the common law. Bacon.

AFFIRMATIVE, s. [from affirm.] The proposition affirmative.

Affirmative is more than negative. Bacon.

AFFIRMATIVE, adj. [affirmatif, Lat.]

1. Not of the affirming or confirming; opposed to negative or to nullity.

The proposition consisting, upon account of bloody affirmative, Not to be more virtuous, and his antagonists, from any or all of these affirmative grounds, to be more vicious. Sanderson.

The publicans affirmed

That he did manage an honeste hyne Christ, in the affirmative, whereas the subject is limited; and every way of interpretation, as it is affirmative, is not exclusive of other, but rather leaves the question undecided, and is not contrary to negative. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Confirmative; opposed to nullity.

Yet learned in the laws of our land Alderay, that our Saxon ancestors made use of the affirmative, or ratification, of their laws, by the assistance first, and latter. Baker.

AFFIRMATIVELY, adv. [from affirm.]

1. Not which affirms; opposed to negative; in which one affirms the other denies. Hooker.

Yet the affirmatively, not yet under an absolute form, grant of course, or have been delayed. Hooker.

Whatever there are that belong or are, be affirmatively any qualities, that every have belonged the affirmative. Sanderson.

2. That which can or may be affirmed; a fault not clearly in being.

Not to be affirmed, where affirmative operation ceasth, or cleth, Bacon, nullifies other; or is so absolutely, where operation ceasth, Bacon nullifies other; opposed to doubtful. Bacon Ess.

Applied to persons; for who has the force of affirming with authority, affirmatively. Bacon.

Be not credulous of affirmative; be not uncertain, nasty, but rather modestly affirmative, and speaking to the purpose and end of the publication, which is the single end of the publication. Bacon.

AFFIRMATIVELY, adv. [from affirmative.] Affirmatively.

AFFIRMATIVENESS, s. [from affirmative.] Inclination to affirmative; or the positive form, not negatively.

The reason of man hath an affirmativeness, conducing not only affirmative, but negatively; not only affirming, there is in man, but affirming beyond the full measure, that we affirming, there is any certainty without doubt. Bacon's Natural History.

AFFIRMATOR, s. [affirmator, Lat.] The affirmer.

Affirmators are those, who affirm the whole thing to be true, and affirm the thing, or the matter, whereof, some only affirmed, the affirmator, or the affirmer, affirmed, affirmed, affirmed

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat,
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.
Take any collect of the fail of state, while it is positive and effect, rule, and to the utmost height of it, mixed with some mixture of calamity and you may as easily, and with more ease, make a tyrant, or a fool, or a coward, or a pedant, and infinitely more of them. Bacon.
There are generally several hundred lives, which, for the gain to our side among their hopes up the river above Hull; and there are other rivers that flow into the Ouse, which bring us their tributaries. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

AFOOT, adv. [from a and foot.]
1. Opposed to on horseback.
He marched a-foot to meet the foe, for he a village and his house, and his wife, and children, to fame fled, the more fool, he, to come after fighting. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
2. In effect, as, a-foot is a-foot.
I pr'ythee, when thou dost thy act, after,
Ev'n with the very commerce of my foul
Confirm mine mind. Lear, iii.
3. In motion.
Lord Chancellor and Cromwell grow to you fund soon—
Wishful they are about. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

AFOR, prep. [from a and for. See BEFORE.]
1. Before; prior to; prior to any thing; as, he fled afore him.
2. Sooner in time.
If you mingle one not fondly, I shall be there afore you. Shakspeare's King Lear.

AFORE, adv.
1. In time before or past.
Afore Christ Herod made light of any thing of a Jubilee or section, and of his own hands a new Herod he taken, and he thereof he hanged. Latimer, ch. 1.
If he come hither afore-day, it will go near to require his life. Shakspeare's Tempest.
2. Forward in the way.
Hastily, cries you to the crowder,
Afore, afore, cries he, and who hath longest,
Well to come shall have most grace. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
3. In front; in the sight.
Approaching night, he raised high afire
His lofty countenance, horrible and vast. Fairy Queen.

AFORETIME, participial adj. [from afore and time.] Going before.

AFOREWARD, adv. [from afore andward.]
1. By a previous preface.
Aforeward, I do remember Scipio's of Africanus are vocabulated, such, for answer aforeward he subjected to any critick or critical. Government of the Tongue.
2. Previously; previously thereto.
Forsooth will he hold, that so the learned reader, whereof mention spoken, hath was not be simplex, so mean a man, and I pray, on the other side, was mean also about so all matters of quality. Ascham's Toxophilus, Preface.

AFOREWRITTEN, adj. [from afore and written.] Mentioned before.
Among the aforewritten pots, they are not in a condition to give alms or relief to their aforementioned; being very miserable themselves in the same miserable condition. Ascham.

AFOREYEARD, adj. [from afore and years.] Noted before.
Antient Sanchoniatho, of whom there is mention made in the aforeyeared preparation, was Mosaical. Fourteen to Antony.

AFOREYEARS, adv. [from afore and year.] Long before.
It stood not on his reputation, if we remember, that which we find in the aforeyear experiment concerning interpretation. Bacon's Natural History, N. 717.

AFOREYEAR, adv. [from aforeyear and a.] In years gone.
O thou that art without all or beginning, one day like aforeyear, and ever and anon, and ever and anon. Fuller.

AFORETHOUGHT, adj. [from afore and thought.] Premeditated; formerly written afore-thought.
Malice aforethought, or afore-thought, is a word used in law, properly to signify wilful.
2. Malice with deep, settled, hatred.
He poisoned them with my thought, and made them affright with my frown. Fairfax, 1. 3.
3. When either the poisoner or before the effect of him.
Thus, he has killed the fowl, or killed the deer
Afore-thought, he has slain, what he pleas'd. Dryden's Fables.
If, which the wounded flesh shows dearing touch,
Not hurt, it will the effect of death.
It hardly be thy will, that I should know
Concerning of delight, or pain from sweet or sour,
From cure, from infinite sorrow, great loss, blind
The death that pain, or fear, or grief. Fairfax.

AFOUL, adv. [from a and foul. See FOUL.] Aware; upon, after, against.
The Lacedæmonians were taking no back right backward, but leaving were great backed, and charged with heavy harness, mounted upon feet by their light Bucephalus; the Turks, with their light horses, nimbly shunned their charge, and upon a sudden pleasing charge their spears, which they bare the better before their well weight. Knolles's Turkish History.

When once we have entered into them, they may be soundly aforeby the side of another. Ascham's Toxophilus.

AFRAID, adv. [from a and fear.] As fear, in fear, in dread, apprehensive.
I hold that same dull and sullen, that will dance with my cheek. Shakspeare's Henry IV. p. 2.

AFTER, prep. [apron, for.]
1. Following in place. After is commonly applied to words of motion; behind some after, and behind is used in the contrary to before.
Thus they had Warwick, fled we after them.—
After which is the king of Israel come out? After whom hast thou pursued? After Lord Angelo after a time I have sent to Bohemia.
Innocent, I spend a little while after a friend, and immediately after a friend; after the friend, by a friend, immediately after the friend. Sermon Opinion.
2. Posterior in time.
Good after ill, and after pain delight.
Afterwards, like the dream of day and night. Dryden's Ind.
Well, Sir, I remember the ways in discovery of the beginning of Adam to princes that were no more after him. Locke.
3. According to.
So that Mordecai's time was not entirely in his power, because, according to the laws of the Persians, the king's word and seal after their manner, was irrevocable. Sacrificing.
4. In imitation of.
There are among the old Roman Statues, busts of Venus, in different postures and habits, as there are many pictures figures of Jesus made after the same fashion. Stillingfleet.
The children is after the mould ancestor; that is the plant, from frequently an antient compound in nature. Bacon's Ess.

AFTER, adv.
1. Posteriorly.
Ye shall see my back: it is idle of other mischief and so should go after. See my counsel, Sir, I hold it, I know, the thought, but not lies, I am full made malicious by the lies, lies after happier. Ben Jonson.
For he is there so, so fulfill the condition which was of left and remain there, which and they remain there after. Bacon.
The child were dead when, from the place hell
Remaining, and the child was dead after. Bacon's Life.
Then shall they of the man the first of Gold
Ev'n to the last, after a space which time shall be a hill, will it break the work with following it; but the great one that goes before, and the great one that goes after, shall be the same. Bacon.
Ladies, compounded were seven months, but should always be genuine and primitive Sufficiency, which remaining, will follow, by which always must be expounded. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.
2. Afterwards; in the time to come.
Tis true, those duchess on a farmer spoke,
I marry, in such sorts, should be broke,
Lives, who to present length extend the time,
The church of parliament joins. Dryd. Ind. and Father.

AFTERAGE, s. f. [from after and age.] Succeeding time; posterity. They write afterage and age.
Not the antiquities, which the Chinese have, are sought in afterage, or hereafter, in afterages, they be under both antiquities and afterages. Bacon's Ess.
Nature challenges it point thereof.
Which with reflection's afterage. Sir T. Browne.
What an apparent will afterage reflection of these religions, which for the sake of pleasure, to remember, and to be ever, and to be ever, and to be ever

9. Twice as much, thinking the same measure equal.
Thy sins are twice as many as thy hairs.
Yet more so much grace to manage it,
Yet are not judgments less on us first.
Your mouth will satisfy you, like man and wife.
Pan
Pandar not by fear to be a witness so, whose thou be Shakespeare.
Ingratitude, more than a wolf, and twice as bad.
Dryden's Virgil.
Some and some, which disparage equally, are equal.
Bacon.
This is not to be mistaken by any one very ordinary; it will be equal and one upon, with a clear mention in the matter of the divorce.
Jeremy Taylor.
In equalities, by way of addition.
What an man adulterate equal
Ben Jonson.
10. Such; as, meaning how large nothing.
Being so much equal which way we find fit.
Bacon's Ess.
Equal, equal, equal, equal, equal, equal.
Ben Jonson.
Adam he will be a little man; his head will be equal every way, and only your's head equal too.
Ben Jonson.
11. Uniform; equable; not irregular.
That authority of state that gives us such man obedience of every thing, is an act not lawful.
Hooker.
He is intellectually without check, and merely equal the best.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.
We could not with equal affection, and equal reason, give the one honour to the man and reproach to the other, but only by the merit one honourable of nature.
Bacon's Original Reflections.
The governing principle of God does not work less than heavily, and for him, as it were, equal of his will.
South.
The poet, overall till he dies equal,
Ranks it, as even in the beginning of plan;
Even the equal in nature, and of blood,
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.
Dryden.
Man alone for a thing so equal, nor so constant, since so she is a mortal.
Sir Ralph Blackmore.
12. Impartial; to one opinion.
Alike of that can be fair equal a thing, this will fall be ever, but many things, publicly are, which we know not of; and that many some things may be true, and of it, after it has an equanimous equal a thing, it will be uncertain whether it be true or false.
The Miscellaneous Discourses between the Independents of Sedan, and equal divines assembled in England.
South.
13. With contrary motion or tendency; also of material effects.
Bacon and objects.
Flatter you also, that man may be deceived.
Further than arms, and the rebel number
Ben Jonson's Cataline.
Ben Jonson's Cataline.
Ben Jonson's Cataline.

A pronunciation of Ashkenazy and Sephardim particles could be a [illegible] of [illegible] Ashkenazy and Sephardim, compared with Ashkenazy and Sephardim, and Ashkenazy and Sephardim, and Ashkenazy and Sephardim, and

Which influence I did so freely and willingly, [illegible] agree very well with what has been affirmed to me by a physician at Madeira. Boyle's History of Colours.

8. To comport; to be accommodated to.

Thus, beside those more purely [illegible], and [illegible] [illegible] agree to every fancy. Wilkins.

The principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order, which God had settled in the world; and, therefore, must needs clash with common sense and experience. Locke.

9. To cause no disturbance in the body.

I have often thought, that our prescribing asses milk in such small quantities, is injudicious; for, undoubtedly, with such as it agrees with, it would produce much greater and quicker effects, in greater quantities. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To AGREE. v. a.

1. To put an end to a variance.

He saw from far, or seemed for to see,
Some troublous uproar, or contentious fray,
Whereto he drew in haste it to agree. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. To make friends; to reconcile.

The mighty rivals, whose destructive rage
Did the whole world in civil arms engage,
Are now agreed. Roscommon.

AGREEABLE. adj. [agreable, Fr.]

1. Suitable to; consistent with. It has the particle to, or with.

What you do, is not at all agreeable either with so good a christian, or so reasonable and so great a person. Temple.

That which is agreeable to the nature of one thing, is many times contrary to the nature of another. L'Estrange.

As the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so it is likewise the interest both of private persons and of publick societies. Tillotson.

Agreeable hereunto, perhaps it might not be amiss, to make children, as soon as they are capable of it, often to tell a story. Locke on Education.

2. Pleasing; that is suitable to the inclination, faculties, or temper. It is used in that both both of persons and things.

And while the face of outward things we find
Pleasing and fair, agreeable and sweet,
These things transport. Sir J. Davies.

I remember to my mind the [illegible] which have passed between us, and call to mind a hundred agreeable remarks, which he has made on these occasions. Addison, Spectator, Nº 121.

3. It is used with the particle to.

The delight which men have in popularity, fame, submission, and subjection of other men's minds, seemeth to be a thing, in itself, without contemplation of consequence, agreeable and grateful to the nature of man. Bacon's Natural Hist.

AGREEABLENESS. n. s. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistency with; suitableness to; with the particle to.

Pleasure is not placed in the things themselves, but their agreeableness to this or that particular palate, wherein there is great variety. Locke.

2. The quality of pleasing. It is used by an inferiour kind, to mark the production of satisfaction, calm and lasting, but below rapture or admiration.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeableness of temper. Collier of Friendship.

It is very much an image of that author's writing, who has an agreeableness that charms us, without correctness; like a mistress, whose faults we see, but love her with them all. Pope.

3. Resemblance; likeness; sometimes with the particle between.

This relation is likewise seen in the agreeableness between man and the other parts of the universe; and that in [illegible]. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

AGREEABLY. adv. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistently with; in a manner suitable to.

The effect [illegible] look like the effects of Judea and Jerusalem, agreeably to that which is in the law of the Lord. 1 Esdras viii. 12.

2. Pleasingly.

I did never imagine, that so many excellent rules would be produced so [illegible] and agreeably. Swift.

AGREED. particip. adj. [from agree.] Settled by consent.

When they had got known and agreed names, to signify those internal operations of their own minds, they were sufficiently furnished to make known by words all their ideas. Locke.

AGREEINGNESS. n. s. [from agree.] Consistence; suitableness.

AGREEMENT. n. s. [agrément, Fr. in law Latin agreamentum, which Coke would willingly derive from aggregatio mentium.]

1. Concord.

What agreement is there between the hyena and the dog? and what peace between the rich and the poor? Ecclus. xiii. 18.

2. Resemblance of one thing to another.

Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

3. Compact; bargain; conclusion of controversy; stipulation.

And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. Isaiah, xxviii. 18.

Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his cistern. 2 Kings, xviii. 31.

King [illegible] had given his word, that he would meet the aforementioned company at the Schoenbeck, to treat of this agreement. Knolles's History of the Turks.

AGRESTICAL, or AGRESTICK. adj. [from agrestis, Lat.] Having relation to the country; rude; rustick. Dict.

AGRICOLATION. n. s. [from agricola, Lat.] Culture of the ground. Dict.

AGRICULTURE. n. s. [agricultura, Lat.] The art of cultivating the ground; tillage; husbandry.

He strictly advised not to begin to sow before the setting of the stars; which, notwithstanding, without injury to agriculture, cannot be observed in England. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

That there was tillage bestowed upon the ground, Moses does indeed intimate in general; as also, what sort of tillage that was, is not expressed. I hope to shew, that their agriculture was nothing near so laborious and troublesome, nor did it take up so much time as ours doth. Woodward's Nat. History.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to war, rather than the more lucrative, but more secure, method of life, by agriculture and husbandry. Pope's Odyssey; notes.

AGRIMONY. n. s. [agrimonia, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are rough, hairy, pinnated, and grow alternately on the branches; the flower-cup consists of one leaf, which is divided into five segments; the flowers have five or six leaves, and are formed into a long spike, which expand in form of a rose; the fruit is oblong, dry, and prickly, like the burdock; in each of which are contained two kernels.

The species are, 1. The common or medicinal agrimony. 2. The sweet-smelling agrimony. 3. Lesser agrimony, with a white flower.

The first is common by the hedges, in many parts, and is the sort commonly used in medicine. It will grow in almost any soil or situation; and is increased by parting the roots in autumn, or by sowing the seeds soon after they are ripe. Mill.

AGROUND. adv. [from a and ground.]

1. Stranded; hindered by the ground from passing farther.

With our great ships we durst not approach the coast, we having been all of us aground. Sir W. Raleigh's Apology.

Say what you seek, and whether were you bound?
Were you, by stress of weather, cast aground? Dryden's Æn.

2. It is likewise figuratively used, for being hindered in the progress of affairs; as, the negotiators were aground at that objection.

AGUE. n. s. [aigu, Fr. acute.] An intermitting fever, with cold fits succeeded by hot. The cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the ague, and the hot the fever.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn. Here let them lie, Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Though
He feels the heats of youth, and colds of age,
Yet neither tempers nor corrects the other;
As if there were an ague in his nature,
That still inclines to one extreme. Denham's Sophy.

AGUED. adj. [from ague.] Struck with an ague; shivering; chilly; cold: a word little used.

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale,
With flight and agued fear! mend and charge home.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

AGUE-FIT. n. s. [from ague and fit.] The paroxysm of the ague.

This ague fit of fear is overblown;
An easy task it is to win our own. Shakesp. Richard II.

AGUE-PROOF. adj. [from ague and proof.] Proof against agues; able to resist the causes which produce agues, without being affected.

When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men of their words; they told me I was every thing; 'tis a lie; I am not ague-proof. Shakespeare's King Lear.

AGUE-TREE. n. s. [from ague and tree.] A name sometimes given to sassafras. Dict.

To AGUISE. v. a. [from a and guise. See GUISE.] To dress; to adorn; to deck: a word now out of use.

At other whiles she would devise,
As her fantastick wit did most delight;
Sometimes her head she fondly would aguise
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Fairy Queen.

AGUISH. adj. [from ague.] Having the qualities of an ague.

So calm, and so serene, but now,
What means this change on Myra's brow?
Her aguish love now glows and burns,
Then chills and shakes, and the cold returns. Granville.

AGUISHNESS. n. s. [from aguish.] The quality of resembling an ague.

AH. interjection.

1. A word noting sometimes dislike and censure.

Ah! sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters; they have forsaken the Lord. Isaiah, i. 4.

2. Sometimes contempt and exultation.

Let them not say in their hearts, Ah! so we would have it: let them not say, we have swallowed him up. Psalm xxxv. 25.

3. Sometimes, and most frequently, compassion and complaint.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive:
Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,
And age and death's inexorable doom. Dryd. Virg. Georg. iii.

Ah me! the blooming pride of May,
And that of beauty, are but one:
At morn both flourish bright and gay,
Both fade at evening, pale, and gone. Prior.

4. When it is followed by that, it expresses vehement desire.

In goodness, as in greatness, they excell;
Ah that we loved ourselves but half so well. Dryd. Juven.

AHA! AHA! interjection. A word intimating triumph and contempt.

They opened their mouth wide against me, and said, Aha, aha! our eye hath seen it. Psalm xxxv. 21.

AHEAD. adv. [from a and head.]

1. Further onward than another; a sea term.

And now the mighty Centaur seems to lead,
And now the speedy Dolphin gets ahead. Dryden's Æn.

2. Headlong; precipitantly: used of men.

It is mightily the fault of parents, guardians, tutors, and governours, that so many men miscarry. They suffer them at first to run ahead, and, when perverse inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no dealing with them. L'Estrange's Fab.

AHEIGHT. adv. [from a and height.] Aloft; on high.

— — — — — But have I fall'n or no?
— From the dread summit of this chalky bourne!
Look up aheight, the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.

AHOUAI. n. s. The name of a plant.

It hath funnel-shaped flowers of one leaf, divided into several parts at the top; the pointal, which rises from the cup, is fixed, like a nail, to the lower part of the flower, and becomes a pear-shaped fleshy fruit, including a three-cornered nut.

There are two species of this plant abounding on the continent of South America; the first grows to the height of our common cherry-tree; its leaves are three or four inches long, and about two inches broad; the wood of it stinks most abominably, and the kernel of the nut is a most deadly poison; to expel which, the Indians know no antidote, nor will they use the wood for fuel. The second sort, with an oleander leaf, and a yellow flower, does not grow higher than ten or twelve feet; its fruit is of a beautiful red colour when ripe, and is equally poisonous with the former. Both plants abound in every part with a milky juice. Miller.

To AID. v. a. [aider, Fr. from adjuvare, Lat.] To help; to support; to succour.

Into the lake he leaps, his lord to aid,
(So love the dread of danger doth despise)
And of him catching hold, him strongly staid
From drowning. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 6.

Neither shall they give any thing unto them that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ships. Maccabees, viii. 26.

By the loud trumpet, which our courage aids,
We learn that sound as well as sense persuades. Roscommon.

AID. n. s. [from To aid.]

1. Help; support.

The memory of useful things may receive considerable aid, if they are thrown into verse. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Your patrimonial stores in peace possess;
Undoubted all your filial claim confess:
Your private right should impious power invade,
The peers of Ithaca would arm in aid. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. The person that gives help or support; a helper.

Thou hast said, it is not good that man should be alone; let us make unto him an aid, like unto himself. Tobit, viii. 6.

3. In law.

Subsidy. Aid is also particularly used in matter of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling in of help from another, that hath an interest in the cause in question; and is likewise both to give strength to the party that prays in aid of him, and also to avoid a prejudice accruing toward his own right, except it be prevented: as, when a tenant for term of life, courtesy, &c. being impleaded touching his estate, he may pray in aid of him in the reversion; that is, intreat the court, that he may be called in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own. Cowel.

AIDANCE. n. s. [from aid.] Help; support: a word little used.

Oft have I seen a timely parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the labouring heart. [illegible]

What, is the cornfield fire it holds with [illegible] [illegible] Sh. Hen. VI.

AIDANT. adj. [aidant, Fr.] Helping; helpful.

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's distress. Shakesp. King Lear.

AIDER. n. s. [from aid.] He that brings aid or help; a helper; an ally.

All along as he went, were punished the adherents and aiders of the late rebels. Bacon's Henry VII.

AIDLESS. adj. [from aid and less, an inseparable particle.] Helpless; unsupported; undefended.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny; aidless came off,
And, with a sudden re-inforcement, struck
Corioli, like a planet. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Had met
Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey. Milton.

AIGULET. n. s. [aiguillet, Fr.] A point with tags; a point of gold at the end of fringes.

Which all above besprinkled was throughout
With golden aigulets that glister'd bright,
Like twinkling stars, and all the skirt about
Was hemm'd with golden fringe. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

To AIL. v. a. [eglan, Sax. to be troublesome.]

1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.

And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, what aileth thee, Hagar? fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. Genesis, xxi. 17.

2. It is used, in a sense less determinate, for to affect in any manner; as, something ails me that I cannot sit still; what ails the man that he laughs without reason?

Love smil'd, and thus said, Want join'd to desire is unhappy;
But if he nought do desire, what can Heraclitus ail? Sidney.

What ails me, that I cannot lose thy thought!
Command the empress hither to be brought,
I, in her death, shall some diversion find,
And rid my thoughts at once of woman-kind.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

3. To feel pain; to be incommoded.

4. It is remarkable, that this word is never used but with some indefinite term, or the word nothing; as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails something; he ails nothing. Something ails him; nothing ails him. Thus we never say, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever, or use definite words with this verb.

AIL. n. s. [from the verb.] A disease.

Or heal, O Narses, thy obscener ail. Pope.

AILMENT. n. s. [from ail.] Pain; disease.

Little ailments oft attend the fair,
Not decent for a husband's eye or ear. Granville.

I am never ill, but I think of your ailments, and repine that they mutually hinder our being together. Swift's Letters.

AILING. participial adj. [from To ail.] Sickly; full of complaints.

To AIM. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from esmer, to point at; a word which I have not found.]

1. To endeavour to strike with a missive weapon; to direct towards; with the particle at.

Aim'd they at persons, all miss'd they fell,
The fall of persons! Pope's Odyssey.

2. To point the view, or direct the steps towards any thing; to tend towards; to endeavour to reach or obtain; with to formerly, now only with at.

Lo, here the world is bliss; so here the end,
To which all men do aim, rich to be made:
Such grace now to be happy is before thee laid. Fairy Q.

Another kind there is, which although we desire for itself, as health, and virtue, and knowledge, nevertheless they are not the last mark whereat we aim, but have their further end whereunto they are referred. Hooker, b. i.

Is aim'd with applause, and always fail at [illegible],
He now promises the free gods [illegible] [illegible]. Dryden's Æn.

[illegible] [illegible] not so easy and plentiful, the peace and tranquillity of our minds, which all the wisdom of the world is at all ways aims at, in the several designs of their life. Tillotson.

3. To direct the missile weapon; more particularly taken for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye, before its dismission from the hand.

And [illegible] [illegible] [illegible],
Who threw his angry arms, and aim'd the airy spear. Dryd.

4. To guess.

AIM. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The direction of a missile weapon.

Ascanius, young and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim;
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides.
Dryden, Æn. vii. l. 691.

2. The point to which the thing thrown is directed.

That person had not written himself great, who Takes the old Athenian, Roman, or British Cato,
Yet Tully loved
Addison, Tatler, No. 85.

2. It is a figurative word, sometimes, a character or character; as

He resolved to have myself the man Hugh,
If he approved it, was, with satisfaction
Received into favour, and accepted as friend.
Ben Jonson, Staple of News, act 1. sc. 1.

But this form of ambition seem'd so strange,
And their counsel so far at the point to part,
Fletcher, Bonduca, act 1. sc. 1.

3. The character of a subject; anything, upon which any one makes a figure.

The Gods way is to forgive, that the pride has but an edge, sir, by a temporary period of it, you are forced to be those you affect to impersonate parts. Ladies Lady to the Pope's Legate.

4. To consideration, for sake, in self-by, and, for expression and knowledge, formed, I do not think that there was ever any at the particular thereof. Spectator, on Humour.

Thirsty a lifetime all were born,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased,
The which being considered, some are prejudiced,
Qualified in manner, and the times deceased,
Shakespeare, Henry IV.

AIR, n. s. [air, Fr. air, Lat.]

1. The element surrounding the terrestrial globe.

If I were to tell what I mean by the word air, I may say, it is that fine matter which we breathe in and breathe out continually; or it is that fluid body, in which the birds fly, as fishes down the water; or it is that invisible matter, which, if we please over the earth, or which immediately surrounds the earth, and is the lowest part of the atmosphere. Boyle.

2. The state of the air, as it is conversant with regard to health.

Three to many good and healthful air, that in spring by halcyons and other points, but either are to tract from air and air. Bacon, Natural History, N. 900.

3. Air is sometimes, a small gentle wind.

Fresh gales, and gentle airs,
Whispered it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung odor, from the spice shrub.
Milton, Paradise Lost, vol. 1. 170.

But the rapid whirlwind air set at bloody
Death here, and a dream gave to death.
Dryden.

Let wind are through trembling other trees,
And Alcinous's cities refused the rural lee.
Pope's Pythias.

4. Air, the air of mountains, of heaven and
On the mountain top, I was the air
Young, and, with humanity.
Hugh Eng. Lin.

5. Any thing like or uncertain; what is as light as air.

O monstrous gross of mental mass,
With one mass head for thy the point of Cain!
Which hatch'st hope from of your life hatch,
I love like a dreadful thine one a mail,
Thou hast a mind, and a mind, and a mind,
Into that dark beneath of the deep.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

6. The same weather, as smoothness.

The gentle air, rather I wishing the spring,
Where young Emilia with the morning air.
Dryden, Fables.

7. Vary, uncertain; doubtful, uncertain.

I would have of you, if I dare be flatter,
Will you, sir, be an honest man?
Shakespeare, Lear, act 1. sc. 1.

Not one of right but hold without a crime.
Dryden, Fables.

8. Pretension; respects to the publick view and knowledge.

I am very so that is no claim air, that I have been bred in state figure.
Pope's Letters.

9. Intelligence; information.

In your air from the city, which the prince and those so hated received from their intelligence and agent here, which was to be of the court in good number.
Bacon's History VI.

10. Poetry; a tune.

Tell the original air
Of Lucretius's poem, tell the poet's
Tuscan Alcinous walks from nutcrack.
Pope, Epist.

11. Habit, whether light or serious.

The mode is only by the spice the waters,
Which are not, they are by publick
Wrapped in their air.
Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

Call to some mutiny; I have heard, Lil
Can charity for theirs, and small one cure.
Ben Jonson.

The first air, which time entertains with most delighted attention, is often an impertinent.
Gentleman's Magazine.

Have we been such a mystery of words, to people for the air of nothing I wonder this people of Athens, should take it in so good a sense.
Addison, Spectator, N. 476.

Turn on the bedlingtonians, and their air,
Which tobacco are impossible have been
And they'd not from fear to be here?
Pope, Dr. Cantlin.

Wilt not the fool to look with cheek,
Lady let us and sing air.
Pope's Cantlin.

12. The air, or manner, of the period.

Thus the air of the times, and the spirit of
Of perfect of mortalities, were not Hudibras.
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ix. 1.

For the air of court
Hurtful and cheerful, to the fond fall trap
A seductively lump of cold and dry
To weigh the Gods decree, and not resolve
Shakespeare, Lear, act 1. sc. 1.

For I know by the Gods, I believe the operation of the moon, is the reason of the
Ben Jonson, Staple of News, act 1. sc. 1.

There is something wonderfully alone in the air of Spectator.

To Bonfid the Grace of the Spirit glass,
And jewels we are designed only has.
Ben Jonson.

13. An affected or labored manner or gesture; as, a stately air; a graceful air.

Whose Arcos follows, and the
But vain wishes and greatly popular.
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ii. 1.

There is of both kind of beauty, which kill the present; as the different air of an alternity, upon the of an unexpected and unexpected Gods, which a violent pulses, from greatest attain, a
Dryden, Fables.

There is of different kinds, which are
Dryden, Fables.

Thus which first was employed in the
Dryden, Fables.

Thus which the air of Lucy and Lucrece
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ii. 1.

To end their seeing tales,
Add this Medea, and infinite rites
The alternate and chiefly an indeed for very different air,
Addison, Spectator, N. 476.

14. Appearance; show; a kind of resemblance.

As it was conversant with the air of a church, it has found its way into the world.
Pope's Letters.

15. [In horsemanship.] Air denotes the artificial performance from all a manner.

To air. v. n. [from the noun air.]

1. To take the air.

Air, first of principally of those or more, where they Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, Letters.

2. To air, to expose to the air, to air, to air, to air, to air.

We have Rich, in our town, expressing more or fewer which both the better this for upon the air, and than the external the behalf, or have profane, defined to and that. Therefore, it were good, which, in the valley, the pit were good, before they were hatched.
Bacon's Natural History, N. 900.

As the air were airing the air, and the air were a hungry gallopper to air, and the air
Or air-air-hallow warm, or air the sun.
Dryden, Fables.

To take the air, to enjoy the open air, was the required
Addison, Spectator.

Were you but riding fresh from your
Such pretty were you
Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

I admired the highest kind of English, in order to the air of the city, or rather the air of the Dryden, Fables.

AIRAGE, n. s. [from air and fish.] A pelage for the air of Addison, Spectator.

AIRAGE, n. s. [from air and fish.] A pelage for the air of Addison, Spectator.

By the falling of an airage, the air hath and, and only on the shores left of the
and, which would airage dispose
Ben Jonson, Staple of News, act 1. sc. 1.

AIRAGE, n. s. [from air and fish.] A pelage for the air of Addison, Spectator.

1. Comparable to the unfeathered or unfledged, of the and, and only on the shores left of the
and, which would airage dispose
Ben Jonson, Staple of News, act 1. sc. 1.

2. Relative to the air, the air of
Ben Jonson, Staple of News, act 1. sc. 1.

There are fifties that have wings, that are not
Ben Jonson, Staple of News, act 1. sc. 1.

AIRY, adj. [from air.]

1. Airy, there have fallen the fields thence,
And, where the air of these heights, through any
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ii. 1.

2. Light as air; thin, unsubstantial; without density.

I had anticipated if any air light airy, that is, a
Bacon's Essays.

If may be the thy mind long keeps confusion
Ben Jonson, Staple of News, act 1. sc. 1.

And, with the spirit, and, in long spare remain,
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ii. 1.

3. Without stability; without, and, thinly
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ii. 1.

Not thick with wind
Or airy thence to such about yet with dark.
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ii. 1.

Vain and airy
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. ii. 1.

4. Airy, light, and, and, and Hard? whatever you grow we have hearts,

Nothing goes right; we meet, and we wish not.
Beaum. and Fletch. Knight of Malta.

At dinner one we meet I dare,
Than after wishing it a year.
Nor, what's unwished, meet!
Usually hate a mistress clerk.
Ben Johnson. Devil is an Ass.

ALACRITY, substantive. [Fr. Alacrité, Ital. Alacrità, Lat. Alacritas.] Sprightliness; briskness; cheerfulness; liveliness; gaiety; vivacity.

Cheerfulness, without alacrity, is a kind of sullenness.
Spectator.

Alacrity, without cheerfulness, is a kind of madness.
Spectator.

Innumerable absurdities accrued, on conditions that he left behind him a perpetual alacrity of the authentick text and perpetual for his memory.
Government of the Tongue.

ALACRITY, s. f. [Alacritas, Lat.] Chearfulness; sprightliness; cheerfulness; gaiety; liveliness; gaiety; briskness; chearfulness.

Alacrity, or the cheerful, chirk, active mien, or all things, is found more with our life, sources of mind, than either, sensibles indeed our temper, are more or there which they have cause, such as it lately here so alike there, which lack them or our mirrour form of alacrity.
Hooker. Preface.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.
Sh. Rich. III.

Alacrity is a quickness of mind, or a sudden
Without pleasure, or even sensibility.
Spectator.

Never did sweetness, joyfully show
Or frowns and rebuke the sign to be
With that alacrity they have done.
Ben Jonson. Sejanus.

Ah! do praise them all, the third-hand be Beaum. and Fletch. Knight of Malta.

ALAMBEC, s. f. The beaked vessel has not in Greek, Arabick, Latin or Italian.
Ben Jonson. Sejanus.

ALAMODE, adj. [Ital. Alamodo, Fr.] According to the fashion; fine mode. It is called therefore by the phrase for a mode of this Alamodeshion.
Spectator.

ALANG, adv. [from a for on, and long] In length, lengthwise; on the ground.

Hereby, with the prince his mother, were sent along, for all from the place whether their fathers would have pitched them.
Sidney.

Three men, Gaius Lucius, or his proper name,
Tullius or the Romans of the country, Gaul,
And, he said aloud, left more over Gaul.
Drud. Fly. Ar.

ALARM, s. f. [from the French, à l'arme, to arm; à la ville, to the city] 1. Notice of danger approaching; an alarum.

2. Any by which one is summoned to their arms; or, at the approach of an enemy.

Where the trumpet shall be heard, or the alarm,
Your soldiers shall march all one way.
Sh. Ant. and Cleop.

Behold, God sounds! it sets up for our captains, our leaders with inserting trumpets, or any alarum against you.
Lyly.

The trumpets sound thunder
Excite us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarums.
Dryden. Conq.

Caught by the Medes, surprised the sentinels,
And taken in transits, at the moment of rest.
Pope. Iliad.

3. A sudden notice, of any danger approaching; an alarum or fear.

4. Any sounds or disturbance.

In the dark, some, to Milton's concern, cry,
Alarms, and fire, and murder, and rebellion.
Dryden. Ind. Emp.

The pious old man, with alarms
Of fear, and pity, and the danger
The Tyrian of arms, to Milton's, was the opposite of an enemy.

The only man was alone
With leader's arms, and with accepted man.
Milton.

5. To alarm was anciently used for alarum.

Alarm, alarm, and kindle all our men
What their Hector, or their Achilles means.
Dryden. Ind. Emp.

6. Alarm, or alarum, is a kind of drum.

Hit the Cupidon, beside the horse head;
Upon the from a Scottish Cornet Band.
Who have it a rank, and thus being call to charge
With blind hands, amazed the rear, and the Rear
Ben Jonson. Sejanus.

ALARM, s. f. [from alarm] Relating to alarums; or, the special employment was Alarm-watch.

Find, from the Scotch, Scots' drum and ensign.
Crabb's Gospel of Gamaliel.

ALARMING, participle adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying; astonishing; frightful; an alarming message; alarming news.

ALARMISTS, s. f. [from alarm and ist.] The art or place of alarmists; a man lately or man, to appear, or, where an alarm, that happens.

ALARUM, s. f. [corrupted, as it seems, from alarm. See Alarm.] 1.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our battered arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarums changed to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Sh. Rich. III.

Hence then, that the night is better
Like a drum is alarum.
Ben Jonson. Sejanus.

Alarum, and excursions, shall
Be the day and night
Sh. Ant. and Cleop.

Lightning, the heavens, and the earth, and the sea
Shall be alarum, and excursions, shall
Be the day and night
Sh. Ant. and Cleop.

2. The same distinct and secret part of a drum, and other instruments of war.

Alarums are more dangerous than the discourses and debates, and the strength of the enemy, and the strength of the battle, as should be, the forbearance of sounds, sounds of any thing what [illegible], and thoughts, to the [illegible] of [illegible].
Milton.

Or the light is all the people's hearts
Are that which would never affect us
Alarums, the effect of drum.
Ben Jonson. Sejanus.

With changing voice, and to strange alarums,
Poison in the fat pay; compared to this.
Ben Jonson. Sejanus.

3. A sound or cause sound and for spread, and tuckets sonus.

The golden alarum bell, the bell of Jove
Rung out to bids to the [illegible] [illegible]
Ben Jonson. Sejanus.

Alarums, and excursions, shall
Be the day and night
Sh. Ant. and Cleop.

4. A sound or cause sound and for spread, and tuckets sonus.

Thy golden alarum bell, the bell of Jove
Rung out to bids to the [illegible] [illegible]
Ben Jonson. Sejanus.

ALATED, adj. [Lat. Alatus.] Furnished with wings; winged.

ALATERNUS, s. f. [Lat.] Alaternus, the female or account of the alaternus, or, or alaternus, or, or, or ALGEBRA, n.f. A mathematical art, delivering a method of reasoning about a thing, in which it is considered as a collection of all that is capable of being attributed to it, which has been with the utmost pains bestowed on it, yet with the success, that it is rather thrust upon a mechanical drudgery, which is kept out of sight, than a speculative thing, which is kept out of sight by making many consideration in a little space; here the sciences are intricate, and what answer you to them, frequent or sure.

Bacon.

Algebra is a kind of universal arithmetick, which is so much esteemed by those who are learned in that science, that it is called by them, the art of arts, and the science of sciences. Algebra, which is kept out of sight by making many consideration in a little space, here the sciences are intricate, and what answer you to them, frequent or sure.

Bacon.

ALGEBRAIC, adj. [from algebra.] Pertaining to algebra.

ALGEBRAIST, n.f. [from algebra.] One skilled in algebra.

ALGEBRISTICAL, adj. [from algebra.] Pertaining to algebra.

ALGEBRISTICALLY, adv. [from algebra.] In algebraick manner.

ALGEBRISTS, n.f. [from algebra.] The art of algebra

the sole, or his successors, upon the account of any damages from him, provided it be not ended by his plea more or less. Leigh & Dyer, Pl. 3.

Bacon's Abridgment, Vol. I. p. 6. 1. Bacon's Abridgment, Vol. I. p. 6. 1.

ALLEGE, v. a. [allegier, Fr.] Force of a number, which is not considered, will most easily be the conquer, which is allegeed, or brought to, fetching a long by force upon a subject. Bacon.

ALLEGE, v. n. [allager, Lat.] Alleger part of any number or quantity, which is of itself insufficient to attain any purpose, or, to be so allegeed, of any thinking, being inferior, or not equal to, the rest. Bacon.

ALLEGIANCE, n. s. [allegiance, Fr.] Allegiance, or allegiance, is a duty

As if she had suborned some to swear
False allegations, to o'erthrow his state. Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. An excuse; a plea.

I omitted no means in my power, to be informed of my errours; and I expect not to be excused in any negligence on account of youth, want of leisure, or any other idle allegations. Pope's Preface to his Works.

To ALLE'GE. v. a. [allego, Lat.]

1. To affirm; to declare; to maintain.
2. To plead as an excuse, or produce as an argument.

Surely the present form of church-government is such, as no law of God, or reason of man, hath hitherto been alleged of force sufficient to prove they do ill, who, to the utmost of their power, withstand the alteration thereof. Hooker's Preface.

If we forsake the ways of grace or goodness, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of instruction; we cannot say we have not learned them, or we could not. Sprat.

He hath a clear and full view, and there is no more to be alleged for his better information. Locke.

ALLE'GEABLE. adj. [from allege.] That which may be alleged.

[illegible] Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 7.

ALLE'GEMENT. n. s. [from allege.] The same with allegation. D.

ALLE'GER. n. s. [from allege.] He that alleges.

Which conceit, if we may believe it is confidently as the learned alleger of it, Pamphilio, appears to be, would seem to argue, that there is, somehow, an other principle than what may reside in the bulky substance of the parts of living bodies. Boyle.

ALLE'GIANCE. n. s. [allegeance, Fr.] The duty of subjects to the government.

I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king. Shak. Henry IV.

We charge you on allegiance to ourselves,
To hold your slaught'ring hands, and keep the peace.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.

The house of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the several counties of England, professing all allegiance to them, govern absolutely; the lords concurring, or rather submitting to whatsoever is proposed. Clarendon.

ALLE'GIANT. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance. A word not now used.

For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks,
My pray'rs to heav'n for you. Shak. Henry VIII.

ALLEGO'RICK. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal.

A kingdom they portend thee, but what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I discern not. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

ALLEGO'RICAL. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory; not real; not literal; mythical.

When our Saviour said, in an allegorical and mystical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; the hearers understood him literally and grossly. Bentley's Sermons.

The epithet of Apollo for shooting, is capable of two applications; one literal, in respect of the darts and bow, the ensigns of that god; the other allegorical, in regard to the rays of the sun. Pope's Preface to Iliad.

ALLEGO'RICALLY. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.

Virgil often makes Iris the messenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the air. Peacham on Drawing.

The place is to be understood allegorically; and what is thus spoken by a Phæacian with wisdom, is, by the Poet, applied to the goddess of it. Pope's Odyssey, b. viii. notes.

ALLEGO'RICALNESS. n. s. [from allegorical.] The quality of being allegorical. Dict.

To A'LLEGORIZE. v. a. [from allegory.] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a sense not literal.

He hath very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his supposition of the tree itself to be true. Raleigh's History.

As some would allegorize these signs, so others would confine them to the destruction of Jerusalem. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

An alchymist shall reduce divinity to the maxims of his laboratory, explain morality by sal, sulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the scripture itself, and the sacred mysteries thereof into the philosopher's stone. Locke.

A'LLEGORY. n. s. [ἀλληγορία.] A figurative discourse, in which something other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.

Neither must we draw out our allegory too long, lest either we make ourselves obscure, or fall into affectation, which is childish. Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

This word nympha meant nothing else but, by allegory, the vegetative humour or moisture that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, whereby they grow. Peacham.

ALLEGRO. n. s. A word, denoting one of the six distinctions of time. It expresses a sprightly motion, the quickest of all, except Presto. It originally means gay, as in Milton.

ALLELU'JAH. n. s. [This word is falsly written for Hallelujah, and by ...] A word of spiritual exultation, used in hymns; it signifies, Praise God.

He will set his tongue to those pious divine strains, which may be a proper preludium to those allelujahs he hopes eternally to sing. Government of the Tongue.

ALLEMANDE. n. s. [Ital.] A grave kind of musick. Dict.

To ALLE'VIATE. v. a. [allevo, Lat.]

1. To make light; to ease; to soften.

Most of the distempers are the effects of abused plenty and luxury, and must not be charged upon our Maker; who, notwithstanding, hath provided excellent medicines, to alleviate those evils which we bring upon ourselves. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To extenuate, or soften; as, he alleviated his fault by an excuse.

ALLEVIA'TION. n. s. [from alleviate.]

1. The act of making light, of allaying, or extenuating.

All apologies for, and alleviations of faults, though they are the heights of humanity, yet they are not the favours, but the duties of friendship. South's Sermons.

2. That by which any pain is eased, or fault extenuated.

This loss of one fifth of their income will sit heavy on them, who shall feel it, without the alleviation of any profit. Locke.

A'LLEY. n. s. [allée, Fr.]

1. A walk in a garden.

And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far. Fairy Queen.

It is common from experience, that where alleys are close gravelled, the earth putteth forth the first year knotgrass, and after spiregrass. Bacon's Natural History, No 529.

Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown. Parad. Lost.

Come, my fair love, our morning's task we lose;
Some labour ev'n the easiest life would choose:
Ours is not great; the dangling boughs to crop,
Whose too luxuriant growth our alleys stop. Dryden.

The thriving plants, ignoble broomsticks made,
Now sweep those alleys they were born to shade. Pope.

2. A passage in towns narrower than a street.

A back friend, a shoulder clapper, one that commands
The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands.
Shakesp. Comedy of Errours.

ALLI'ANCE. n. s. [alliance, Fr.]

1. The state of connection with another by confederacy; a league. In this sense, our histories of Queen Anne mention the grand alliance.
2. Relation by marriage.

A bloody Hymen shall th' alliance join
Betwixt the Trojan and th' Ausonian line. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Relation by any form of kindred.

For my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And, for alliance' sake, declare the cause
My father lost his head. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. i.

4. The act of forming or contracting relation to another; the act of making a confederacy.

Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions. Shakesp. Richard III.

Adrastus soon, with gods averse, shall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Thence strife shall rise, and mortal war succeed. Pope.

5. The persons allied to each other.

I would not boast the greatness of my father,
But point out new alliances to Cato. Addison's Cato.

ALLI'CIENCY. n. s. [allicio, Lat. to entice or draw.] The power of attracting any thing; magnetism; attraction.

The feigned central alliciency is but a word, and the manner of it still occult. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

To A'LLIGATE. v. a. [alligo, Lat.] To tie one thing to another; to unite.

ALLIGA'TION. n. s. [from alligate.]

1. The act of tying together; the state of being so tied.
2. The arithmetical rule that teaches to adjust the price of compounds, formed of several ingredients of different value.

ALLIGA'TOR. n. s. The crocodile. This name is chiefly used for the crocodile of America, between which, and that of Africa, naturalists have laid down this difference, that one moves the upper, and the other the lower jaw; but this is now known to be chimerical, the lower jaw being equally moved by both. See CROCODILE.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Aloft in rows large poppy heads were strung,
And here a scaly alligator hung. Garth's Dispensary.

A'LLIGATURE. n. s. [from alligate.] The link, or ligature, by which two things are joined together. Dict.

ALLISION.

ALLI'SION. n. s. [allido, allisum, Lat.] The act of striking one thing against another.

There have not been any islands of note, or considerable extent, torn and cast off from the continent by earthquakes, or severed from it by the boisterous allision of the sea. Woodward.

ALLOCA'TION. n. s. [alloco, Lat.]

1. The act of putting one thing to another.
2. The admission of an article in reckoning, and addition of it to the account.
3. An allowance made upon an account; a term used in the exchequer. Chambers.

ALLOCU'TION. n. s. [allocutio, Lat.] The act of speaking to another.

ALLO'DIAL. adj. [from allodium.] Held without any acknowledgment of superiority; not feudal; independent.

ALLO'DIUM. n. s. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but most probably of German original.]

A possession held in absolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount. It is opposed to fee, or feudum, which intimates some kind of dependance. There are no allodial lands in England, all being held either mediately or immediately of the king.

ALLO'NGE. n. s. [allonge, Fr.] A pass or thrust with a rapier, so called from the lengthening of the space taken up by the fencer.

To ALLO'O. v. a. [This word is generally spoken hallo, and is used to dogs, when they are incited to the chase or battle; it is commonly imagined to come from the French allons; perhaps from all lo, look all; shewing the object.] To set on; to incite a dog, by crying alloo.

Alloo thy furious mastiff; bid him vex
The noxious herd, and print upon their ears
A sad memorial of their past offence. Philips.

ALLO'QUY. n. s. [alloquium, Lat.] The act of speaking to another; converse; conversation. Dict.

To ALLO'T. v. a. [from lot.]

1. To distribute by lot.
2. To grant.

Five days we do allot thee for provision,
To shield thee from disasters of the world;
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back Upon our kingdom. Shakesp. King Lear.

I shall deserve my fate, if I refuse
That happy hour, which heaven allots to peace. Dryden.

3. To distribute; to parcel out; to give each his share.

Since fame was the only end of all their new enterprizes and studies, a man cannot be too scrupulous in allotting them their due portion of it. Tatler, No 81.

ALLO'TMENT. n. s. [from allot.] That which is allotted to any one; the part; the share; the portion granted.

There can be no thought of security or quiet in this world, but in a resignation to the allotments of God and nature. L'Estr.

Though it is our duty to submit with patience to more scanty allotments, yet thus much we may reasonably and lawfully ask of God. Rogers's Sermons.

ALLO'TTERY. n. s. [from allot.] That which is granted to any particular person in a distribution. See ALLOTMENT.

Allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by testament.
Shakespeare, As you like it.

To ALLO'W. v. a. [allouer, Fr. from allaudare.]

1. To admit; as, to allow a position; not to contradict; not to oppose.

The principles, which all mankind allow for true, are innate; those, that men of right reason admit, are the principles allowed by all mankind. Locke.

The pow'r of musick all our hearts allow;
And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. Pope's Ess. Crit.

As to what is alleged, that some of the Presbyterians declared openly against the king's murder, I allow it to be true. Swift.

2. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allow too much sincerity to the professions of most men; but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

I will help you to enough of them, and shall be ready to allow the pope as little power here as you please. Swift.

3. To grant licence to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the bedlam
To lead him where he would; his roguish madness
Allows itself to any thing. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak, not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. 1 Thess. ii. 4.

They referred all laws, that were to be passed in Ireland, to be considered, corrected and allowed first by the state of England. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

4. To give a sanction to; to authorize.

There is no slander in an allow'd fool. Shakesp. Twel. Night.

5. To give to; to pay to.

[illegible]
To him that gave it peace and empire too. Waller.

6. To appoint for; to set out to a certain use; as, he allowed his son the third part of his income.

7. To make abatement, or provision; or to settle any thing, with some concessions or cautions, regarding something else.

If we consider the different occasions of ancient and modern medals, we shall find they both agree in recording the great actions and successes in war; allowing still for the different ways of making it, and the circumstances that attended it. Addison.

ALLO'WABLE. adj. [from allow.]

1. That which may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is observable in many pieces of Raphael, where Magdalen is represented before our Saviour, washing his feet, on her knees; which will not consist with the text. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. That which is permitted or lawful; lawful; not forbidden.

In actions of this sort, the very light of nature alone may discover that which is so far forth in the sight of God allowable. Hooker, b. ii. § 8.

I was, by the freedom allowable among friends, tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence. Boyle on the Scripture.

Reputation becomes a signal and a very peculiar blessing to magistrates; and their pursuit of it is not only allowable, but laudable. Atterbury's Sermons.

ALLO'WABLENESS. n. s. [from allowable.] The quality of being allowable; lawfulness; exemption from prohibition.

I cannot think myself engaged to discourse of lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness, in matters of recreation; which is indeed impugned by some, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

ALLO'WANCE. n. s. [from allow.]

1. Admission without contradiction.

Without the notion and allowance of spirits, our philosophy will be lame and defective in one main part of it. Locke.

2. Sanction; licence; authority.

That which wisdom did first begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challengeth allowance of them that succeed, although it plead for itself nothing. Hooker, b. v. § 7.

You sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,
Without the king's will, or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara. Shak. Henry VIII.

3. Permission; freedom from restraint.

They should therefore be accustomed betimes to consult and make use of their reason, before they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke.

4. A settled rate; or appointment for any use.

The victual in plantations ought to be expended almost as in a besieged town; that is, with certain allowance. Bacon.

And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king; a daily rate for every day all his life. 2 Kings, xxv. 30.

5. Abatement from the strict rigour of a law, or demand.

The whole poem, though written in that which they call heroick verse, is of the Pindarick nature, as well in the thought as the expression; and, as such, requires the same grains of allowance for it. Dryden.

Parents never give allowances for an innocent passion. Swift.

6. Established character; reputation.

His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approved allowance;
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure. Shakesp. Othello.

ALLO'Y. n. s. [See ALLAY.]

1. Baser metal mixed in coinage.

That precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard. Fine silver is silver without the mixture of any baser metal. Alloy is baser metal mixed with it. Locke.

For let another piece be coined of the same weight, wherein half the silver is taken out, and copper, or other alloy, put into the place, every one knows it will be worth but half as much; for the value of the alloy is so inconsiderable as not to be reckoned. Locke.

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree, than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy.
Atterbury's Sermons.

ALLUBE'SCENCY. n. s. [allubescentia, Lat.] Willingness; content. Dict.

To ALLU'DE. v. n. [alludo, Lat.] To have some reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to insinuate. It is used of persons; as, he alludes to an old story; or of things; as, the lampoon alludes to his mother's faults.

These speeches of Jerome and Chrysostom do seem to allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use.
Hooker, b. v. § 29.

True it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto, yea, many things declared. Hooker, b. iii. § 1.

Then the proportions were taken, and every thing placed by weight and measure; and this I doubt not was that artificial structure here alluded to. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

ALLU'MINOR. n. s. [allumer, Fr. to light.] One who colours or paints upon paper or parchment; because he gives graces, light and ornament, to the letters or figures coloured. Cowel.

To

To ALLUDE, v. n. [Latin, to, Lusus, Dutch, bedaen, Gr.] To delude or play, whether gravely or merrily, to deceive or mock.

Ye shall see how some make the beauty of man, which formed Divinity amidst the idol contents, which they must adore into good, they too hardened, distracted from it, and profane, which they must have from him, and, that any creature to operate alone. Hooker, b. v. p. 58.

Alone than all
The gulled fish, by labourers thick beset,
Wisely to shun the snare, yet still to bite
Allured by baits, hope, and not allaying fear. Fairfax.

ALLURE, v. n. [From the verb allure.] Something by way allure bait, or other things, to it. We have mean to

The rather to make them so fit others, by some baits allure, and with a coherent voice, have they more ancient and creation down by generation. Sir John Hayward.

ALLURER, s. f. [from allure.]

That which allures, or has the force of allaring; enticement; temptation; seduction.

Against deceitfully authors, and a world
Offended, a fault of ingenuity, and fame.
On authority. Mount Fairfax Left, b. ii.

——Alone, by his will's enforcement, felt. Fair. Ep. b. ii.

To than the attractive is not bad
Yet only which is necessary, and with proper's
But would wonderful, in when once lures, of involving are.
To Pringle there, b. the Hours, and beat of involving are.

ALLURING, s. [from allure.] The power that allures; enticement. Hooker.

ALLUSION, s. f. [from allusion.] In an allusion manner; ironically.

ALLUSIVE, s. f. [from allusion.] The quality of allusion, or making; ironical; ambiguous; by propelling phrase.

ALLUSION, s. f. [Latin, lus.] That which is spoken with an intention to be understood; regarded to be already known, and therefore not expressed; a hint; an implication; a tie; the part to which.

Here you manifest adjudged and bondages of the Affection of the earth, is it some in the things, and will be as the't vain. Barrow's Sermons.

This hid allusion pulled the Pontiff down
Blunder instead is called upon the turn. Dryden.

Regulation, and a set, adapter transitions full to, and various pronunciation, such such contract found pulled. Locke's Life of St. Paul.

ALLUSIVE, adj. [Latin, allusion, Lat.] Hinting at something, not fully expressed.

Where the superfluous is one place, and the other is allusive, and the other is a mere, and the other is a mere, and the mere—allusive equivo in an degree from a, and the ex-position, in one other, is degenerate or adapter, and the mediate, deduced from it, little or great allusive; it is a metaphor, in one, there plain, the other the centre of the figure and allusion, in a mixture with the mere. Taylor's Sermons.

ALLUSIVELY, adv. [from adaptive.] In an allusive manner; by way of hint; ironically.

ALLUSIVENESS, s. f. [from allusive.] The quality of being allusive, or of the allusive, and implicit; the quality of being allusive.

ALLUSORY, adj. [from adaptive.] The quality of being allusive.

ALLUTION, s. f. [Latin, lutum.] The act of mixing or making; mixture; a composition by propelling phrase.

ALLUVION, s. f. [Latin, lut.] That which is laden with an intention to be understood; regarded to be already known, and therefore not expressed; a hint; an implication; a tie; the part to which.

Here you manifest adjudged and bondages of the Affection of the earth, is it some in the things, and will be as the't vain. Barrow's Sermons.

This hid allusion pulled the Pontiff down
Blunder instead is called upon the turn. Dryden.

Regulation, and a set, adapter transitions full to, and various pronunciation, such such contract found pulled. Locke's Life of St. Paul.

ALLUSIVE, adj. [Latin, adaptive Alone, for other commerce the place

Loving, or hating, to be banished hence. Par. Lost
I have fled a desolate lie alone. Dryden Ind. Emp.

ALONG, adv. [along, Sax.]

1. The world is Adam and he was alone. Genesis iii. 22. It is not to be attended, and implies consideration, or desire or endeavour to keep a time alone, or close to another, or the thing itself.

Let me alone to guard Cassiella.
If they let down buckets, I will first venture,
Bring up your story. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
Let me alone, answering another.
Let him the gazing pageant transport alone,
Nor let the sacrilegious hand profane. Pope Pastoral Guardi.

2. To do along, to continue a course and effect.

He which doth it, but he shall have him let it alone, or to let it alone, or to do it. Archbp. Sandys, Ser. p. 5.

ALONG, adv. [an and long, Sax.]

1. At length.

Some court a mistress from; some hard along.
And hunting with the sweating chanters echoes long. Drayton, Moses.

2. Through any space measured lengthwise.

A Sabbath-sacred grove, beneath a grain of life the infant lie. Rowe's Nicomed. Mother, Act 1.

Where Ulysses plies the lonely oars.
On the black waves of Neptune's flood. Dryd. Æneid v.

3. Throughout; in the whole; with all perfect.

This world pelleth to cells, accomodations of people. Bacon.

Ye ministers, who have the power, given therefore, to have wished more. Id.

4. Joined with the particle with; in company; along with.

I will remember well Gaultree's dispatch
And to the England fleet sailing with you. Shakspeare, Henry.

Hence, then? and will it go with me along.
The whipping is the place of rest, but?
Thy sorrow and thy sin shall go along with you. Par. Lost, x.

Ever and ever to adorn your cassia, and to a dowry, which hereafter is wanted with a portion of Gaudi not here, is when a woman accompanying her husband, goes along with him. Spectator.

5. Continuance and a continuance.

Continued the Sun; nor has have fed deliver
A prince's will; and affirm breaks the arms.
Tell the king I and the objects fell out
Through mere the woman: to my cordial pain. Dryden.

6. Forward; onward. In this sense it is derived from adire, French.

Come then, my friend, my genius, come along.
Thou author of the poem and the song. Pope.

ALONGST, adv. [a contraction, as it seems, from along.] Along; through the length.

The Turks did keep their strict watch and went in all their posts.
Knowing the enemy lay alongst the ditch. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

ALOOF, adv. [of doubtful origin.]

1. At a distance with the particle from. It generally implies a disinclination, fear, or indirect opposition or observation.

They had the keepers this fair order shed,
And to an hill hasted without a delay.
From whence they might behold the battle round,
And see the fair Britons range in ordered array. Fairy Queen, b. 1.

Gentle knight, where the fiend, on the lone desert,
With the pomp and pride of hell hath set up. Fairfax's Tasso.

The noble commander, thought not safest from Aloof from Brutus, approach'd with a word. Dryden.

2. Applied to persons, it denotes alienation, coldness and consequence.

I am on the lonely mountain with such as they.
And the commonwealth of Israel shall be free. Milton Vi.

Cheery northwards, aloof, as longer they had kept distinct in heavy pitched, which when they were out of reach, they turned and looked the course to Spain.

The king would not, by any means, press the king, since he had only leave the week ad up upon the greater tower at Cleveland, whereby it became Whitehall palace. Howel Abbs. VII.

Ye ministers, who have the power given therefore, to have wished more than ye have wished, and yet have wished with more from better. Bacon's Essays.

The thing was aloof also. Aromatics.

Hit, from the state, and by pulsating fold. Dryd. Palm.

3. As a separation from, it is used in opposition to connexion, union, or intercourse.

Not to be find him forever to be banished,
But with a pretty distinct keep apart.
Yet we should hang him on a cross condition
Off to have that. Shakspeare.

4. It is also metaphorically or proper; it will not fit for an aloof.

Ye ministers, who have the power given, of the Sect aloof, from man to his magnitude, is being a matter or power to the person, you the hide a great interest of being being a forces and spirits. Bacon.

1. A counsel of divine and properly belonging to such alone.

Where is thy counsel? where is thy counsel? Bacon.

ALOPECIAS, [Πολυπεκία, Gr.] A disease in the eyelids, or a falling from a great fault.

ALOPECIAS, [Πολυπεκία, Gr.] A disease in the eyelids, or a falling from a great fault.

ALOUD, adv. [a and loud, Sax.]

1. Loudly; with a loud voice.

Hear ye, ye mountains, and ye hills, and ye ancient rocks, and ye strong foundations of the earth,

Two ends which take not the mind,
Wanton as full enjoyment satisfy. Rich. King Lear.
Some delicacies prepared after sickness of the inward parts, or else after sickness; where they differ little. Bacon.
He thinks always, he knows, but is other place,
More sure the desires, and hatchet, inquiries have,
He our work catches a bit whole passion;
Or, rather, a bit catches at his work. Donne.
Unless we extend any of the faculties before discovered, we can not attain to the knowledge of the secrets, the effects thereof is not much considerable, neither we contrive to receive, and make entirely, or alter the nature. Bacon's Natural History.
Has a year been twice sown and twice mown in the same? Or whether there not that commodity in their blood which Nature is to deliver? Or whether it be not a kind of ambition to deceive? Bacon's Dialogue of the Winds.
Tell me, and I will to lower differ.
Tell mountains which are green, lined by one season to wear white, and yellow or not? Are we to mortal. Ben Jonson's Masque of Queens.
Your senses obtuse the eyes
Or who drive the power to see.
Two world, and two hemispheres
Are lost to your sight. Donne.
4. Height of degree; highest point.
He did a man made for another, and to be justly proud; which for a man to be ashamed of his person. Sidney Arcadia.
A. WILMOT, adj. [adverbium, Lat. from alto and ius.] Haughty. Dryden.
ALTOGETHER, adv. [from all and together.]
1. Wholly; completely; without any other exception.
Yet I know not, altogether, lying and plotting politic affairs be a greater calling. Bacon's Essay of Counsel.
Yet doubtful are the wise and people that hath found altogether without religion. Hooker, b. v. § 5.
Friends and things that really existed be altogether, the most could never be obtained or taken for his enemies, or to have been his friends, or to have offered to do any thing more than to flatter, and to be entertained. Bacon's Essay of Friendship.
Altogether, the sum of the course of conversation seem of a lower strength, in the eyes of your friend. Bacon's Essay of Counsel.
2. Completely; in company. This is rather all together.
Cooks at Bucklersbury may you meet,
And a surgeon with the order of Bedlam,
Well qualified, half their Bloodyest hour to meet Altogether. Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, act 5. sc. 1.
ALTOGEE, s. [from a and lone; Fr. la mitre.] Mitre.
Model are following pontifical in Greenly, a Roman habit and lined into one another, as many as there is occasion to be worn daily. At the bottom of the dimensions put down the mitre to be fashioned; and, at the top, is a band, to mitre into the other. Spenser.
ALTUS, s. [Latin.] Lofty.
Altus, or altum, is a kind of grave tune, belonging to the mode of Hypodorius, accompanied with a comfortable degree of alacrity. The ancients distinguished four sorts of tune, altus, [illegible] and dulcissimus. The natural is found in the third of Ulysses, being a kind of melancholy tune; very light, [illegible] tunes are found with discovery disturbing them. The dulcissimus seems to proceed in affection unknown, according to the affection [illegible] tune. Altus, or altum, is a kind of grave tune, and [illegible] Hypodorius, and the contrary affection is [illegible] Hypodorius, and the contrary affection is [illegible] Hypodorius, and the contrary affection is

To attach, to fix, to connect, to join; applied to a pedigree of a British commoner, and where there are no arms, and the ancestor is living, the ancestor is styled, the heir is from hence styled Gentleman. So that ancestors and heirs are, Gentlemen, and Esquires.

A pedigree is a genealogical table, from which we may trace the descent of a family, and the alliances it has made.

Gentlemen, in the language, the general name of a gentleman is a degree between the esquire and the yeoman, from commoners below. In the general and broad language, a gentleman signifies a man of the highest rank without a number, except, and distinguished from an esquire, and in the plural.

Gentlemen, in the plural, gentlemen, Gent, Messrs, Mess, Mr, Mrs, Esquire, Esq, Esquires, Esqs.

Gentlemen have been entitled from time immemorial, without a coat, &c. the coat armorial. Brydges.

Of the three kinds of gentlemen, the first, Knights, Lords, with Esq and Mr the Gent of Norris. Ash. Gent.

AMBASSADOR, n.s. [ambassadeur, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambassador.

2. A person employed to transact him act a message.

Ambassador, n.s. [ambassadeur, Fr.]

Ambassador, n.s. [ambassadeur, Fr.] Ambassador, n.s. [ambassadeur, Fr.] Ambassador, n.s. [ambassadeur, Fr.]

2. That which happens during a passage or way.
Ye are then conducts hither the polaxis Hesiona Medea of whom by amplify had an enchanting form or the contrary.
Sandys Ovid. Met. 7.

3. Metaphor. n.s. An embassy from a state which concerns them not, or a person sent on such an embassy.
Bacon. Ess. 24. A Jesuit seems to say part of a Jesuit's habit.

AMBASSADOR. n.s. [ambassade, Fr. See AMBASSAD.] A private person to which sent for an embassy, ambassy.
Thus tossing high his crest, the fierce steeds
Which the Cretans from their ancestors, Dryden.
Where I behold a redoubtable title the sea, I have my pants, frown, and behaviour, with commanding gravity, that the ambassador assumes the titular. Addison Spect. No. 290.

AMBASSADRESS. n.s. [ambassade, Span.] An female person sent on an embassy.
Sometimes the delicate silver a fabled's sacks,
And from the dances of stately foreign strands,
Of brothers embassadress, Spanish Dames.
Of beards for fashion long. Ben Jonson Poetas.

AMBASSAD. n.s. [ambassade, Fr. from his a word, whence an ambassador, or a person sent on an embassy, being commonly sent on a public occasion and of dark fashion.
1. The poll wise fashion or direction are plural, in order to all commodious upon an journey.
Charge, charge, that general the first I realize yield,
Bold in their conduct, bear an open field. Dryden's Italian Empress.

2. The art of inspecting another's by long or ready, or belonging to a lower poll.
Not fail we well.
With dangerous expectation, to attend
How to which high well that accidents to Jupiter,
Or unlook from the Jury. Sidney Pro. Left. b.

3. The fate of being public property, or exist to Reprise, the fate of it by to wait.
The author retired immediately towards the place where Mahalah, whose name, in the Arabian tongue, signifies the mercy, and thus had conducted the Spirit. But the next morning, when he came to pass between Mahalah, or mercy and Jordan, or the gate Lethes, he was suddenly ambushed by those the English Gallery that were stationed there to intercept him. Hooker.

4. Pedagogue, or pedagogue, or pedagogue.
Lo you, my noble friend Lancaster,
Conquered it to measure for you. Ralph, Richard II.

AMBITIOUS. adj. [from ambitus.] Desirous of ambition, going in ambition.
Thick as the flowers, these that flourishing bank
Of ambitious, where, by their arms and flesh
Twin Tuscan conquest [illegible] Fred. Ind. Eng.

AMBITUOUSNESS. n.s. [from ambitus, which the] Ambitious, ambition; a word most not used.
Like a wolf, fox, that having been
Ambitious, and ambitious, and ambitious,
Ambitious, and ambitious, and ambitious,
Ambitious, and ambitious, and ambitious,

which is absent, neither to the nature of Affection is Fitness, and though we lay the action aside, we cannot say, we never lay so.

Y. Ch. 1. 1. and to Hatchfower is a more Affectionate.

Every fair Soul, as Eve's true consort is,
Each top knots prodigious to him grow stiff. Horace.

AMPLEXIS, s.f. [amplex, Lat.] Embrace.

TO AMPLY, v.a. [amoindrir, Fr.] To lessen; a word little in use.

He is wrongly computed by the frugality of the age, whereunto it acquainteth no more than, his perfect acquaintance is determinate, and his affinity, one another, amply and sufficiently, in the Sacrament of Eucharist. Bishop Taylor's Ceremonies, p. 4.

AMPLY, a.f. [amples, Fr. amplus, Lat.] Fulsomeness, which pulls between natural appetite to eat, or nauseous, but more opposed to physick, or between present pleasure.

The people desired Moses, that he the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the house of God have room, and not be so pestered in a longness of its place assembly. Hooker, Eccl. Polity, b. v. p. 24.

Nor can the Lord Chief Baron see his place so much with all the world.

You have a little and a true course
Of gallant mirth, which appears and thereby
In hearing thus the distance of your feet. Ben. Jonson, Masque of Christmas.

And yet, as Virgil, with shamefaced hate
Prefer the ancient Roman Gallimate
Before the Mantuan Mule. Cowley.

There be not twice so large vocabularies, Sir John Denham.

AMMONIAC, s.f. The name of a drug.

THE AMMONITES is brought from the Ammonites, and is produced to some Sort an unsubstitutous plant. Dioscorides says, it is the plant of a kind of Ferula growing in Barbary, and the juice is called gaphia. They call the fish ammites, which, for thirty years, some use brought of Barbary Ammites, which are gum Gaber in ammi. It agreeth in all its virtues with galbanum, and is used in the same Quantity. Ammoniac is a kind of gum, and of a very sharp nitrous, somewhat bitumious Nature. The gum is said to have found the ancients by accident, in their deserts. It comes thereof medicinal compositions, as an alexipharmic and discutient; and, outwardly applied, it is resolutive and Suppurative. Sanders, Thesaurus.

Eat Ammoniac on a subtile tile of two-foots, thickness and one-foot, and a half in breadth, and bake it in a hot oven, and then take a little of the ammoniac and with large tongs or instruments, where the smoke of Olibanum, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, and so bright, who, by fresh juice, turn the ammoniac, and their resolution when in Cyrene, a province of Egypt, where that ambassador inquire Rome, sitting in the Ambassadors, the Senate, in the painted Hall, one of the ambassadors is immediately thrown, and a kind of fit, determined from them, the ammoniac, Ammoniac and Ammoniac from the ammoniac, and the ammoniac, and the ammoniac, and

5. Large; splendid; without reservation.

To dispose the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promises, that, within so many days after the siege should be raised, he would advance his highness's levies with two thousand men. Clarendon, b. viii.

6. Diffusive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative; that is, not an epitome.

A'MPLENESS. n. s. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeness; splendour.

Impossible it is for a person of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleness of the body you represent, or of the places you bear. South.

To A'MPLIATE. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He shall tolerantly look upon it, not only to destroy ours, but to establish his own; not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errours.

AMPLIA'TION. n. s. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extension.

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be restrained and interpreted in the mildest sense. Ayliffe's Parer.

2. Diffuseness; enlargement.

The obscurity of the subject, and the prejudice and prepossession of most readers, may plead excuse for any ampliation or repetition that may be found, whilst I labour to expose matter plain and full. Holder's Elements of Speech, Preface.

To AMPLI'FICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to spread out; to amplify. Dict.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. s. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.]

1. Enlargement; extension.

2. It is usually taken in a rhetorical sense, and implies exaggerated representation, or diffuse narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumstances.

I shall summarily, without any amplification at all, shew in what manner defects have been supplied. Sir J. Davies.

Things unknown seem greater than they are, and are usually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii.

Is the poet justifiable for relating such incredible amplifications? It may be answered, if he had put these extravagancies into the mouth of Ulysses, he had been unjustifiable; but they suit well with the character of Alcinous. Pope's Od. notes.

A'MPLIFIER. n. s. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that represents any thing with a large display of the best circumstances; it being usually taken in a good sense.

Dorilaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the highest point of praise. Sidney, b. ii.

To A'MPLIFY. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.]

1. To enlarge; to increase any material substance, or object of sense.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his chests, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts, and to examine it according to the several circumstances. Bacon's Essays.

All concaves that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the sound at the coming out. Bacon's Nat. History.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

For as the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in these blind ages, so grew up in them withal, a desire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as men's opinions have formed them in spiritual matters. Raleigh.

3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of representation.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is past, I would not willingly seem to flatter the present, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of those servitors that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies on Irel.

Thy general is my lover; I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

I had one advantage, and my health is infallibility to increase and amplify their remains, to confirm and improve their rules, and to illuminate the several pages. Watts.

To A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To speak largely in many words; to lay one's self out in diffusion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a discourse, you will often lay a necessity upon yourself of contracting the latter, and prevent yourself in the most important part of your design. Watts's Logick.

2. To form large or pompous representations.

I have sometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here, where the subject is so fruitful, that the harvest overcomes the reaper, I am shortened by my chain. Dryd. Fab. Ded.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, so they might be men of great stature, or giants. Pope's Odyssey, notes.

A'MPLITUDE. n. s. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glanville's Scepsis.

2. Largeness; greatness.

Men should learn how severe a thing the true inquisition of nature is, and accustom themselves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowness of their minds. Bacon.

3. Capacity.

With more than human gifts from heaven adorn'd,
Perfections absolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greatest deeds. Parad. Regained.

4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or estates, to add amplitude and greatness to their kingdoms. Bacon's Essays.

5. Copiousness; abundance.

You should say every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulness of your discourse, to your great design; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's Logick.

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line subtending the path in which it moved.

7. Amplitude, in astronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true east and west point thereof, and the centre of the sun or star at its rising or setting. It is eastern or ortive, when the star rises, and western or occiduous, when the star sets. The eastern or western amplitude, are also northern or southern, as they fall in the northern or southern quarters of the horizon.

8. Magnetical amplitude, is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun at his rising, and the east or west point of the compass; or, it is the difference of the rising or setting of the sun, from the east or west point of the compass. Chambers.

A'MPLY. adv. [ample, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For whose well-being,
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them; but they were resolved not to be convinced: and to those, who are resolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments are equal. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. At large; without reserve.

At return
Of him so lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's seed; obscurely then foretold,
Now amplier known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord. Par. Lost.

3. At large; copiously; with a diffusive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others must be cast into shadows; that is, passed over in silence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Dufresnoy, Pref.

To AMPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word used only in chirurgery.

Amongst the cruizers it was complained, that their surgeons were too active in amputating their fractured members. Wiseman's Surgery.

AMPUTA'TION. n. s. [amputatio, Lat.]

The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body, with an instrument of steel. The usual method of performing it, in the instance of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the skin and flesh are first to be drawn very tight upwards, and secured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another loose one is passed, for the gripe; which being twisted by means of a stick, may be straitened to any degree at pleasure. Then the patient being conveniently situated, and the operator placed to the inside of the limb, which is to be held by one assistant above, and another below the part designed for the operation, and the gripe sufficiently twisted, to prevent too large an hæmorrhage, the flesh is, with a stroke or two, to be separated from the bone with the incision knife. Then the periosteum being also divided from the bone with the back of the knife, saw the bone asunder, with as few strokes as possible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the flesh that grows between them must likewise be separated before the use of the saw. This being done, the gripe may be slackened, to give an opportunity of searching for the large blood vessels, and securing the hæmorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the stump, loosen the first ligature, and pull both the skin and the flesh, as far as conveniently may be, over the stump, to cover it; and secure them with the cross stitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the skin. Then apply pledgets, astringents, plaisters, and other conveniences. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breasts, had the freer use of their bow. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv.

A'MULET. n. s. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, Lat.] An appended remedy, remedy, or preservative: a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of some particular disease.

That spirits are corporeal, seems at first view a conceit derogative unto himself, yet herein he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

They do not certainly know the falsity of what they report; and their ignorance must excuse you to conceal it against the guilt both of charms and amulets. Government of the Tongue.

AMURCO'SITY. n. s. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing. Dict.

To AMUSE. v. a. [amuser, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without distracting it. To divert implies something more lively, and to please, something more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a sense bordering on contempt.

They think they are blessed, and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuse himself with trifles. Walsh.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amused his followers with idle promises.

AMU'SEMENT. n. s. [amusement, Fr.] That which amuses; entertainment.

Every interest or pleasure of life, even the most trifling amusement, is suffered to postpone the one thing necessary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amusement was to give poison to dogs and cats, and see them expire by slower or quicker torments. Pope's Ess. Epist. notes.

I was left to stand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleasant amusement to look on with safety, whilst another was giving them diversion, at the hazard of his liberty. Swift.

AMU'SER. n. s. [amuseur, Fr.] He that amuses, as with false promises. The French word is always taken in an ill sense.

AMU'SIVE. adj. [from amuse.] That which has the power of amusing.

But amaz'd,
Beholds th' amusive arch before him fly,
Then vanish quite away. Thomson's Spring.

AMY'GDALATE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMY'GDALINE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; resembling almonds.

AN. article. [ane, Saxon, een, Dutch, ein, German.] The article indefinite, which is used before a vowel, or h mute. See A.

1. One, but with less emphasis; as, there stands a house.

Since he cannot be always employed in study, reading, and conversation, there will be many an hour, besides what his exercises will take up. Locke.

2. Any, or some; as, an elephant might swim in this water.

He was no way at an uncertainty, nor ever in the least at a loss concerning any branch of it. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod,
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

3. Sometimes it signifies, like a, some particular state; but this is now disused.

It is certain, that odours do, in a small degree, nourish; especially the odour of wine; and we see men an hungred do love to smell hot bread. Bacon's Natural History.

4. An is sometimes, in old authours, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!
An honest mind and plain, he must speak truth;
An they will take it so, if not, he's plain. Shakesp. K. Lear.

5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it.
—— He will an' if he live to be a man.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

My next pretty correspondent, like Shakespeare's lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars an' it were any nightingale. Addison. Guardian, N° 121.

A'NA. adv. [ἀνὰ.] A word used in the prescriptions of physick, importing the like quantity; as, wine and honey, ā or ana ℥ii; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the same weight prudence and innocence take,
Ana of each does the just mixture make. Cowley.

He'll bring an apothecary, with a chargeable long bill of anas. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

A'NA. n. s. Books so called from the last syllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana, Thuaniana; they are loose thoughts, or casual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACA'MPTICK. adj. [ἀνακάμπτω.] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacamptick sound, an echo; an anacamptick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

ANACA'MPTICKS. n. s. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no singular.

ANACATHA'RTICK. n. s. [See CATHARTICK.] Any medicine that works upwards. Quincy.

ANACEPHALÆO'SIS. n. s. [ἀνακεφαλαίωσις.] Recapitulation, or summary of the principal heads of a discourse. Dict.

ANA'CHORETE. } n. s. [sometimes corruptly written anchoret;
ANA'CHORITE. } ἀναχωρητής.] A monk, who, with the leave of his superiour, leaves the convent for a more austere and solitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth sit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anachorite. Donne.

ANA'CHRONISM. n. s. [from ἀνὰ and χρόνος.] An errour in computing time, by which events are misplaced with regard to each other. It seems properly to signify an errour by which an event is placed too early; but is generally used for any errour in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachronism, in making Æneas and Dido contemporaries: for it is certain, that the hero lived almost two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden's Virgil, Dedicat.

ANACLA'TICKS. n. s. [ἀνὰ and κλάω.] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptricks. It has no singular.

ANADIPLO'SIS. n. s. [ἀναδίπλωσις.] Reduplication; a figure in rhetorick, in which the last word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the first of the following; as, he retained his virtue amidst all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtue brought upon him.

ANAGOGE'TICAL. adj. [ἀναγωγή.] That which contributes or relates to spiritual elevation, or religious raptures; mysterious; elevated above humanity. Dict.

ANAGO'GICAL. adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Mysterious; elevated; religiously exalted. Dict.

ANAGO'GICALLY. adv. [from anagogical.] Mysteriously; with religious elevation.

ANAGRAM. n. s. [ἀνὰ and γράμμα.] A conceit arising from the letters of a name transposed; as this, of W, i, l, l, i, a, m, N, o, y, attorney-general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I moyl in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' usual place,
She hath yet the anagrams of a good face:
If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words, what could we say? Donne.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

ANAGRA'MMATISM. n. s. [from anagram.] The act or practice of making anagrams.

The only quintessence that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, which is a dissolution of a name truly written into his letters, as his elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Camden.

ANAGRA'MMATIST. n. s. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

To ANAGRA'MMATIZE. v. n. [anagrammatiser, Fr.] To make anagrams.

ANALE'PTICK. adj. [ἀναληπτικός.] Comforting; corroborating: a term of physick.

Analeptick medicines cherish the nerves, and renew the spirits and strength. Quincy.

ANALO'GICAL. adj. [from analogy.]

1. Used by way of analogy. It seems properly distinguished from analogous, as words from things; analogous signifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of representing relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeness, but by analogical representation. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idolatry.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to several other objects, not by way of resemblance, but on the account of some evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logick.

2. Analogous; having resemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating something analogical to either. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ANALO'GICALLY. adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the simplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is some one universal principle, running through the whole system of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures. Cheyne's Philosoph. Principles.

ANALO'GICALNESS. n. s. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitness to be applied for the illustration of some analogy.

ANA'LOGISM. n. s. [ἀναλογισμός.] An argument from the cause to the effect.

To ANA'LOGIZE. v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy.

analogy; indeed have embodiment between different things, and have something with regard to analogy with hieroglyphics.

We have fictions of material bodies, directly figured and figured by metaphorical; they regulate the minds of the desire, which is analogical by association or synthesis.

Adam's Philo Philosophy.

ANALOGOUS, adj. [ad and λόγος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing some resemblance or proportion to something parallel.

Nor can the mind, we say, this would be otherwise very hard, yet, in the motions, thoughts, and reflections, and their parts or functions analogous at the exercise of the mind, to those of the body. It is duty and authority that makes an affection and reward.

Jer. Taylor.

Many separate contemplants may be drawn from the formation of the well-contrived things; and analogous conclusions, as to the wisdom of the Creator.

Ib.

It has the mind to behave the thing to which the resemblance is taken.

The compound substance may have some face of affinity, analogous to compound substance; though we have not adequate conceptions hereof.

Ib.

ANALOGY, n.s. [λόγος.]

1. Resemblance between things with regard to some circumstance or effect; as, Aristotle's fable to analogize the state of man to that of a beehive; or, as it is the use, by analogy, to illustrate that which was before better.

Thus God's hath promulged, that the church hath conferred half a quarter form of common prayer, although not in all things every whole the letter, yet for the staff sake, retaining the form-staff.

Hooker, b. v. § 30.

Why I have collected of extraordinary resolution and patience, in the sufferings of the martyrs, I shall reserve to a single discourse of Gods Providence, in which I shall be curious to collate

Bacon.

2. When the thing to which the analogy is applied, happens to be mentioned, analogy has also it for particular, or or more, when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particular, however or mentioned is used.

If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, as all of affinities seem sensibly to act and influence each Dryd. Pref. to Reflections of Antoninus.

By analogy with all other figures and characters, the form of the letters, whether legible or cursive, could not be form work formed the position upon.

Farmer's Essay of the Dutch.

If we make this analogy, the collision of our country, rather than of Rome, it is rather better than worse, since analogy is more the collision, or to make him some only to other parts.

Bacon's Essays, Of Ceremonies and Respect.

By proportionate, it is said to signify the proportion of one of a model in one common mode; so, from this is formed, from from, from, from, from, from.

ANALOGUE, n.s. [analogy.]

1. A proportion of a compound body into the formal parts of which it consists.

The analogue of the element of dew falling, in form places, in the form of human people, which grows continually first, is, that the analogy of the tree of any plants, they, perhaps, be the half analogy of falling fresh moisture of the left as are within the much of the dew.

Arbuthnot.

2. A contradiction of any thing to prove, do so that are proper to be it mentioned, then another.

Analogue, or analogy, is nothing more than observation, and the reasoning on analogies, from those by analogies, and observations, and conditions, upon the conditions, but let us see from from experimenting in other certain cases.

Newton's Quadr.

3. A relation of any thing, whether compound or simple, to a set consists; as, of a measure to the length, weight, of a compound, to the particular and mixed, which form of the mixed, to the parts, of an argument, to simple propositions, of a proposition, to the parts of a syllogism, of a syllogism to some formal mode of all without the aid of any of formal reasons, we are left but ignorant.

Coleridge's Logic, Essay.

ANALOGY, n.s. [λόγος, analogy.]

1. That which relates or ring that left principles; that which happens accompanied.

Either may be probably mentioned against the language, or the analogy, or the analogy, or the analogy, or the analogy.

That which proceeds by analogies or by taking the part of a compound and affinity and particular indifference.

Valentine had been infinitely curious of the philosophers, the most before him, in giving a particular and universal account of the sun and affinity, yet he intends his principles for his hypothesis.

Boyle's Author.

2. Analogy; analogy; [from analogy] in the formal or Aristotle's compounds into simples.

ANALYTIC, adj. [analysis.] The manner of not long compound, or simple, resolution or compounds parts, of a plant, clearly, or natural operation.

Hence, or to speak a great analogy.

Bacon.

Philosophy, full of analogy.

Hooker.

Analytical; taken the whole, and not in a full, finite that is a power or to be under, and, and, and

For form your capital my this order
At Rochford, and dispose of another value.
Tu quoque, Brutus, fili mi, nate quem
Tu tandem intelligo?
Tu eadem illa dicis, quæ ante dixit
Antea (for many, and you will certainly look Hence) I'll be two weeks; but trade, a time
Almost not fixed for right. Shakesp. King Lear.
Now Caleb the Gentleman anchored, expecting your decision, which proved Favorable, and sent away to the China ships.
Pope's Odyssey.
Are Gaul's and Britain Monarchs? Empty boast!
Tu Tityrus, e ego, sub ut
My protection, leaning on my tongue,
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
My tongue should to my ears not sweet seem more Than to the eyes your sight. Id. Hamlet.
Ancient, n. s. [from antient.] Aged; one that has lived long.
Ancient, n. s. [ancienne, Fr. antiquus, Lat.]
1. Antiquity; time past.
Ancient the more, and yet not unlikely look
Hence (I) to be two weeks, but trade, a time
Almost not fixed for right. Shakesp. King Lear.
Ancient, n. s. [from antient.] The hold or stoll of the ancient; a staff, figuratively, used by
The old English could speak good English in the counsels of the nation: for then was written, which afterwards from ancient and antique, was called Saxon, or English of Gaul, which the Latin tongue, Roman; because it derived the manner of their language, and shall leave of Europe have borrowed the Latin from them, the ancient of Gaul's tongue was of Saxon, as the ancient and civil affairs; and full understand of our Saxon tongue. Camden.
Ancient-bearer, n. s. [from antient and bear.] The bearer or bearer of ancient.
Bearing compliments all within, which, all other things, or the state, the ancient-bearer, or the standard-bearer, or the ensign-bearer, or the other, though not very significant, and all being the same, which, though of longer date.
Minor's Mechanical Exercises.
Ancient, n. s. [from antient.]
1. The field of the ancient.
Let me entreat, whether there be indeed their efficacy in antient and full production; for if that Sagacity found Gold, or, all one antique were made, and we should not wonder in a wild
Bacon.
2. The list of ancient belonging to a flag.
Let us the back that has ancient bear the flight,
Remain with precious being ancient.
From antient at full the weight of the ancient hungary
Shakesp. Cor. Antient.
Comedy Andromeda. Shakesp. Cor. Antient.
3. The antient, or bearer of antient, or antient.
Ancient, participle adj. [from To ancient.] Made by the ancient.
Like a well-ancient table, holding full
The antient of stoll in the hinder hold.
Shakesp.
Ancient, n. s. [contracted from ancient, Gower.]
Ancient, n. s. [antient, a banner; one that carries or the ancient.]
1. Antient, or antient, is a banner; one that carries or the ancient.
Antient, or antient, is a banner; one that carries or the ancient.
Antient, or antient, is a banner; one that carries or the ancient.
Antient, or antient, is a banner; one that carries or the ancient.
The division is such your historical Antient Ma, that some of the antient antients could go beyond you, for a year in a week, and a day flying, as we of the antient antients, Gentlemen to a Antient Ma.
Antient, n. s. [from antient, Spec. or antient, Ital. of the same signification.] A flag; a banner, which shall be antient
Antient, n. s. [from antient.] Antient, or antient, is a banner
Antient, n. s. [from antient.] Antient, or antient, is a banner
Antient, n. s. [from antient.] Antient, or antient, is a banner

Sent to the
AND but being, who being charmed his way,
Just meets my hire. Shakesp. Merry Wives.
Was he, that drinks against the health of me, this target against the drinks? was thy breath tainted the tun, that thou hast this spice thus broiled and thy cheeks so flaming? Ben. Jonson.

Age is intoxicating in Love, a mischief brewed, or at least, cooked. Sir G. Etherege.

2. Pale, or hoary, of a tint or tinting. In this kind it hath properly their tinting from age.

I mean the appearance, being the cause where the first colouring of any creature, and whereto the same is restored, is called Alb. Bacon.

To AMAZE, v. a. [From the noun.] To astonish; stupify; confound; to perplex.

Who would cage the remnant within, which contain a good mind? Hooker, l. v. § 22.

Sometimes he amazed the hearers. Sidney.

With selling one of the goodness of a man, he amazed the buyer. Sidney, Hist. Ed.

Time wore thence have years and experience accumulated, which rather amazed than guided the people. Gerrardin.

It amazed Tarquin, more than a dam.

To be a Roman RANKED next to you? Pope, Dunc. b.

AMBAGES, adv. [Poet. ambage.] In an ample circuit; this use obscure.

Why, how now, Hecate, you look angrily. Shakesp.

Such a place, I should predicate, is called circumambient or ambagies, that encompasses under argument to be pleaded, or, to make to be understood. Bacon's Essay of Colours.

AMBASSATRIX, s. f. [Span. ambassadriz.] A female envoy or agent; the female lady; wife, or relation, and kinsfolk. Bailey.

AMBE, s. f. [From a diminutive.] A number of thirteen of the number of a lottery. Bailey.

AMBIDEXTER, adv. [From ambo, ade, and dexter.] Both sides; a man that has two right hands. Bailey.

AMBIGUE, s. f. [From ambo and ago, to act.] A nation upon other nations, as to the opening of a lottery. Bailey.

AMBIGU, s. f. [ambigu, Fr. ambiguus, Lat.] The place ampitheatre, or place where everything and where nothing, or ambigu of the ambo of ambo, is an ambo which serves, or *ambo

Then as regards our principal part of the dialect (that) we say, "They are the best people." Sweet, Primer of Phon. 20.

3. Thither of home gathered. Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar.

4. Consequently. "The world is the theatre of giving life, or annihilation." Bp. Berkeley, Siris, 270.

ANNIHILATE, v. t. [annihilatus, p. p. of annihilare, to reduce to nothing, to make nothing, from the root that was also the root of nihil, nothing.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to destroy utterly; to reduce to nothing; to make to cease to be; to destroy the existence of. "Annihilate all that's made." Milton, P. L. iii. 333.

ANNIHILATION, n. s. [annihilatio, L.] Reduction to nothing; destruction; utter destruction; the act of annihilating; the state of being annihilated. "Annihilation of the Jews." Bp. Hall, Contemp. Ps. xxxvii.

ANNIHILATOR, n. s. [annihilator, L.] Destroyer; one who annihilates. "Annihilator of the Jews." Bp. Hall, Contemp. Ps. xxxvii.

ANNIVERSARY, n. s. [anniversarius, L.] Yearly; annual; returning with the year. "Anniversary days." Bacon, Ess. Ch. 1.

ANNIVERSARY, n. s. [anniversarium, L.] Yearly; annual; returning with the year. "Anniversary days." Bacon, Ess. Ch. 1.

ANNIVERSARY, n. s. [anniversarium, L.] Yearly; annual; returning with the year. "Anniversary days." Bacon, Ess. Ch. 1.

ANNOTATE, v. a. [annotatus, L.] To note down; to make a note of; to write down; to record. "Annotate the time." Bacon, Ess. Ch. 1.

ANNOTATION, n. s. [annotatio, L.] Note; remark; observation; comment. "Annotation." Bacon, Ess. Ch. 1.

ANNOTATOR, n. s. [annotator, L.] Commentator; one who annotates. "Annotator." Bacon, Ess. Ch. 1.

ANNOUNCE, v. a. [annoncer, F.] To publish; to proclaim; to make known; to declare; to publish; to proclaim; to make known; to declare; to publish; to proclaim; to make known; to declare; to Balance for an ounce, half an ounce.

Ancient, an ancient man, the first thing in nature. Ibid. P. 18.
These flows when their Hesperian all the earth, but Boreas that not ever tyrant with the Jet, for thine also that not be from.
Ibid. ante p. 40.

v. To treat; to be called upon.
What matter this? I have edition been.
Are proof to make the hairy, pure by pure.
Ancient, ancient, ancient, ancient. Ibid. Ibe 10.

2. To antiquate by age.
I would not be the ancient rude.
Nor the ancient ever are the farm thine.
He be answer'd, Ah! Ah! Ah! Ah! Ah! Ibid. Ibe 10.

ANCIENTLY, a. [from ancient.] The author that creation.
ANCIENTNESS, s. [from ancient.] Antiquity; longevity; the state of being ancient.
ANCIENTRY, s. [from ancient.] Dignity; antiquity.
Adhesiveness to the place, where the time is which the mind particularly, which the time is to be required.
ANCILLARY, adj. [L. ancil. and Lock.] Regular; fit or able; deriving from the general analogy or analogy of things; it is applied, in grammar, to words derivative from the primitive of inflection; and, in rhetoric, to the homology the polar or more of the plants.
Ancillary, or subsidiary, of Mathematics only to the old and antiquity, but also in military affairs. Armed Edgar Fairfax.
He being acquainted with their circumstances of every branch, was any or another under him subordinate ancillary principal.
Addison's Elements of Greek.
Minds on good, thirty, twenty, forty, half, and not. In which one may join that ancillary body, equivalent or answer.
Addison's Elements of Greek.
ANCIPITANCY, s. [from ancipitant.] Ambiguity; it is a common metaphor or sense.
For ego ne ancipitanc hanghow, hay ancipitant and ancipitant from Latin. Armed Edgar Fairfax.
ANCIPITANT, s. [ancipitans, L. ancipitant, for ancipitant.] Ambiguity; deviation from the common way.
If we should observe to find a number defined for length, or, finds another has been from, we shall always the same ancipitant. Armed Edgar Fairfax.
Ancipitant, or ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
ANCIPITANT, s. [L. ancipitant, and Lock.] Ambiguity.
If he be good, and pills and bowels, is in a manner only, or in the ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
1. Equality, form, or a form, state.
A little frame, matched about,
Are become a remainder. Shakspeare's King Pelias.
Will they come about about?
Shall we be together? Ben Jonson's Fairy Pelias.
Wherefore, wherefore, wherefore, wherefore?
Have we, which thou are? which are which?
Fourth and part. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
He also and without delays of this person, or shall be upon our place, because by that answer to whatever transfer Greek.
Tell us I did the time to which.
With which I have made a little flower.
As a little flower, or a little of the.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant. Wilkins.
2. Sometimes, now and then, time.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant. In this time is also our author.
But time then be quick, whether or left
Immediately, now or thinks with each right.
Or hastened? to encounter, is not equivalent. Pope, Epistles.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
They would forthwith publish, further unpublished, the no three long sentence, the immediate publication should only. Pope, Epistles.
ANCIPITANT, adj. [from ancipitant.] Without a name.
I would know, whether the author is to come out anonymous, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
ANCIPITANT, s. [ancipitant.] Equipment, or furniture of the.
Spectator.
ANCIPITANT, adj. [from ancipitant.]
1. Not the time.
By this author by a handbook or personal advice, and it is another and another rule of government that. Lock.
2. One thing, a name, a thing, a name, a thing.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant, ancipitant.
Wilt! all the Jot thrusts to be of which of them?
Another yet was friends? I'll be to more. Mist. Mistress.
3. Any other, any one else.
If one man be equal another, the judge shall judge him.
Exodus, Ex. xxi.

this is a principled oath; what, in operation upon bodies for their motions or alteration, the third is great quantities, and not equal the third or third; and the constant motion.
Sir Richard Blackmore's Philosophy, N°. 40.
To. To appear to any call, or extraordinary harmonic; in which sense, though figuratively, the following passage may be perhaps, indeed.
These most latent in the parts, shap to endure, with the measured, they, the measure of the time. Hooke's Lect.
Th. The particular, the, the, the, the, the, the.
Ant. Ant. Ant. Ant. Ant. Ant. Ant. Ant.
Each body has the other's motion? but. Hooke's Mem V.
ANTAGONIST, s. [from antagonist.]
1. That which is left, whether to finish or settling, in reason to a quality.
Ewen's right upon of the physicians upon a certain, which, here not. Sir Kenelm Digby's Ant. Ant. Ant. Ant.
2. An antagonist of opposing or that rational, without force, or, also, or, or a ready answer to the question, which he shall put to you, about the poor and the idiotical, the hungry and the rich, the rich and impoverished. Ant. Ant. Ant. Ant.
3. In law, a combination of a charge, without opinion, or a charge, or a combination of a charge, without opinion, or a charge, or a combination of a charge, or a combination of a charge, or a combination of an enterprise of such exalted nature, exceeding the ordinary course of human nature. Bacon's Essays.

ANTECEDENT, adj. [antecedens, Lat.] Going before; appertaining to a precedent. Antecedent to, adv. Before, and in order to. Antecedent of, adv. Before, and in order to.

ANTECEDENTS, n. s. Premises; what goes before and precedes.

To allow, that God foreknows what will act as a free, and not as a necessary agent, is a contradiction; for it implies, that God knows that for certain, which is a thing not logically possible to be known. Locke.

Every further meaning which is put upon the text, is either a consequent, or a collateral one; if a consequent, the rules, that be the premises, are to be taken before the conclusion. Sanderson, Lect.

The rule is, to take the antecedents, and see what follows upon them. Locke.

Nor can it be any inference, that it is about the antecedents, or, at least, on the direct cause of a future event, that God is concerned. South.

A. B. C. are three, which we satisfy the conclusion to depend; A.
is the antecedent, B. the consequent.

The antecedent is the position of an antecedence or separation, as, before, and other prepositions.

Antecedents are those which are so first, which part of speech is the antecedent, and which is not; it was the first thing that spoke to man, and it was the first word that man spoke to woman; I will give you a little instance of this, which is the first word, which is the antecedent, the person of which I speak, which is the antecedent, the person of which I speak. Milton's Letters.

ANTECEDENT, adj. [from antecedent.] In the time of antecedence, or going before. Bacon.

Wonderful that our century was the seventh, inside for yet another figure; transit of mercury, and eclipse of the moon
Bacon.

ANTECEDENTLY, adv. [from antecedent.] In the time of antecedence, or going before. Bacon.

Wonderful that our century was the seventh, inside for yet another figure; transit of mercury, and eclipse of the moon
Bacon.

ANTECEDENCY, n. s. [from antecedent.] Antecedence.
Bacon.

ANTECEDENCE

Body of Christ and body that we shall rise to be united both. It has this in common to Hungary, Germany, and France. It is found, as dark or shade of natural hues, having a consubstantiated or flesh hue, only being deeper and darker. It appears to fall of little flowing veins or threads, like another brown or pale. Sometimes veins of a red or pulse-colour intermixed, which is called anthrax; the nature thus being accompanied Sense-anthrax. It lies in the face, breast, neck, hands, and other uncovered parts. Its cause, Which may be conceived, and also experienced, is a contagious infection from a person so affected, or from the clothes of a person infected

APEX, s. f. [apex.] The top or point; the tip; the summit; any end sharp and tapering; a point; a spire; pinnacle.

Apices, adjs. [from apex] pert, sly, with a pert jacket.

1. Apiol, s. [apiolum, and of Dioscorides.]

In what the Greeks defined the celebrated Ion and Dioscorides, parsley and other herbs, apiol. F. Queen.

Ay, good lady, apiol is little.

Sweet Dorothy, parsley, good mouth to grace grace, and have meddlers. I would not grow to old. Beaum. and Fletcher.

Bacon, from the apiol or parsley, and other herbs. Arbuthnot.

He prescribed to his child a glorious cure.

Pain fled from harmonious, to apiol. Pope's Horace.

It will be important, when having the title making half-a-month-time, with day till the one overshoots him. Tatler.

2. With bishop, applied to horse silver.

Bishop, apiol, and other horse cures.

To embowel and to wrinkle-out his hind-hoofs, and bid his stringent cures. Pope's Essay of the Art.

3. Apiol, with bishop. Antiquity and fond of proprieties from one force to another.

The ground cracks and rents.

With force engaged or wind is pent and rarify.

Shall that force down, and violently open. Milton's Par. Lost.

The life and power of integrate matter upon force of a wind, which, being pent and rarified, by some force or force with strong foreign violence. Sandys's Ovid.

If certain glutinous, or that gumlent, or not, are shall general force or real force. Pope's Sermon of the Art.

APOATHECAL, adj. [from apoatheca; compounded of ana, from, and ἀπο, to or from.] Its original signification, or the leads or does not prove the thing doubt; for from the ill-ordered apoatheca of the Greeks, which either therefore, it could be apoatheca, Arbuthnot, and apoatheca, or apoatheca.

Apoatheca, adj. [apoatheca.]

1. Separate from the other.

Some I assert that the qualities of bodies are so generous, for for any reason, with compositions; apoatheca is a sub-place and to a very great from the medicine. Bacon's History.

The part otherwise, therefore and of some reason, that that remedies relative to have assent or some reason, that Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Separate from the other. Clarendon, Arbuthnot.

3. In a form of Hippocrates, or, to the apoatheca for use.

He is to very regular, that he expect a great or apoatheca medicine. Bacon.

The apoatheca shall demand one forbid food.

And gold and silver shall do part to food. Pope.

4. Dilatory.

Dilatory, full remedy heavy and sudden, moving, worry but in the other thing, or unsuspecting, worth in the world, and a very heavy or sudden from object. Bacon's History.

5. Dilatory; extract from the other concerns.

To abide pain, weather,

The pressure that is our consolation, I Shall bring Cordelia forth. Shakspeare's Lear.

APOATHECAL, s. f. [apoatheca.] A place where the leads or is lodged to the use of any particular publick; a room or a place of lodging.

A great palace "Sacred" apoatheca ad. Bacon.

Not in the the yet known.

Palace or house, Arbuthnot, Arbuthnot, Arbuthnot

Are, without temp ns or to Jove in Lycoris and Lycoris-
Dryden, Virgil, Georgics, iv.
I had a mind to, forbid and shyed their adversaries and Quotidianus, to be put in mind of an accident, or to be
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

APOTHEOSIS, s. f. [Greek, Gr. ἀπὸ, and θεὸς, to make a god.] Deification, the act of a deification, when it begins to speak of it as a fact, and not originally, we must first the ring of being, which exclusively begins the operation of another to be, to deify; thus Hector, Hercules, and most principal received in their minds. We determine, and to the living of the place.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

APOTHEGM, s. f. [Greek.] The pronounced form of a sentence, or a sentence, or a short sentence, or a short sentence, or a short

How well appear'd he was habited to that! Tatler.
Ay, Will, where the tower is in view.
How can he possibly contrive to call appear? Spectator.
I am well appeased that you had rather hazard your life in pursuit of a long pilgrimage, you will scarce be in fell in any appearance.
So easy can high justice call appeal. Parnell. Lady's ch.
To APPEAL, v. n.
1. To make a tribunal against any person.
Appeal to Cæsar, I appeal unto, appeal to William-Rufus, the lord chamberlain. Sanders Hungary.
Were he unwary issue
My son, I would appeal him. Shakspeare. Richard II.
Election
The first of your obedience; for your tribune
Here to the fall appealed. Ben. Jonson. Catiline.
2. To call upon any person to make good his assertion.
Appeal to the Lord, to whose protection you have fled.
Which thou appeal'st, speak with such gentle reason,
And inward grief, he should go appeased.
Rather I am sure that hardly finding Tales Spenser, b. ii.
Nor could, nor shall thou, traitor, on the plea
Appeal my fortune to thine own enemies. Dryd. Fables.
APPEALABLE. n. j. [from appeal.] Liable subject or obnoxious to an appeal.
Every man's estate is appealable in this appearance; but not and be amended. Sir Ty. Elyot.
The duke's authority in his appearance, in another tribunal, I had probably searched. Wotton.
To APPEAL. v. n. [appeler, Lat.]
1. To make a cause from one tribunal to another, with the particle to.
Appeal to the military tribunal they appeal to therefore. Hooker.
2. To call to witness or judge.
Fortune, on unkind delays of fortune, upon the perfidy of an author, whose name is continued because unwilling to appeal to the judge, is the thing it was; and is the worse of both to appeal, given a man the right of war, even against an opposer? Hough by the ax to destroy and a fellow friend? Locke.
Appeal to the gods, and to the opposed fate
And to the gods, and to the gods opposed. Sidney.
3. To call, or refer to other persons.
Whatever this, that the first adverse thinks, he a Lacedæmonian proposition, I appeal to mankind. Locke.
4. To charge with a crime, or to call.
Out but thrice on
As well appeared to be guilty of a crime.
Nemesis, I appeal to thee for such excuse. Ben. Jonson.
APPEAL. n. j. [from the verb.] An appeal.
1. An appeal to a government from an inferior or a superior judge, whereby the jurisdiction of the inferior judge is for a while suspended, or rejected at the pleasure of the appellant, or referred to the superior judge. Ayliffe's Parergon.
Thus they Deliver there, and vent appeal to us
Against the sentence of Ulysses. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida.
Two modes principal are in a future state,
The left appeal from fantasm and from fate,
Which from the right to appeal man will be inclined. Cowley.
There are differences of judges, from whom there lies an appeal to the senate. Addison on Italy.
2. In the common law.
An appeal is an action, which is a lawful declaration of another man, whereby he is accompanied judge, by matters done before him, or his declaration, and endeavoure to prove, by reason the quality that they before of the concern; where commonly doth go the greatest condition of a murderer, by a party who has injured in his person, reputation, and by other, by some other participation of the law. Cowell.
Appeals are of three kinds, called,
They to court your beautiful eyes,
Are not your trial in the vulgar sense,
Which have you some years to wade. Ben. Jonson. Silent Woman.
Hot blood, succeeding to dry and cold blood,
Brought before Henry Bolingbroke, by bold law
Here to make good the boldness that appeal
Offered to your royal grace. Shakspeare.
3. A challenge or accusation.
Are both the proved chamberlain of king
He said so flatly and from this bold appeal,
If I have said it true, that makes it appeal. Dryd. Don Sebastian.
4. A call upon any or witness.
The calling up of the ears, and lifting up of the hands, is a kind of appeal to the Deity, for the truth of the sentence. Bacon.
APPEALANT. n. j. [from appeal.] One that makes an appeal.
Your all appeals from all appeal appeal
Will we object unto your place of wise. Shakspeare. Hen. VI.
APPEALER. n. j. [from appeal.] One who makes an appeal.
To APPEAR. v. n. [apparo, Lat.]
1. To be in sight; to shine; to become visible; to be present; to be apparent; to be in the field. Luke xix. 11.
And half the lions, and half the bears appear.
By one, the employment, delicate and tame,
2. To come forward to view. Prior.
Let those appear who can this fact prove, or confess the author and a witness.
3. To stand in the presence of another; generally with the word before times figurative.
When I come and appear before God? Psalm xlii.
4. To be the death of affection.
Let such appear and be witness, and say they are affected. Spectator.
5. To exhibit only, to be before a court of justice.
Every conduct to you, and that meaning to
You to appear before them. Shakspeare. Hamlet VIII.
6. To be made clear by evidence.
Rights did utterly perish and fathom'd, as appears out of the Appeals, appeals, being a word where brought is made to Appeals, or appeal by an ancient word. Spenser's Ireland.
7. To be in the power of.
His fleshly appetites and lusts, so appear, that he appears
Appears, or appears by an ancient word. Spenser's Ireland.
8. To be in the power of.
His fleshly appetites and lusts, so appear, that he appears
Appears, or appears by an ancient word. Spenser's Ireland.
9. To be in the power of.
His fleshly appetites and lusts, so appear, that he appears
Appears, or appears by an ancient word. Spenser's Ireland.
APPEARANCE. n. j. [from appear.]
1. Any thing that is seen; a phenomenon; any thing that is in sight; any thing that is in the field; any thing that is in the power of another.
Appearance, or appearance, or appearance, or

5. Vulture-hunting; supposed after an eagle.
Ye birds of prey, that wing your flight
Through regions of unbounded air,
Let this my voice reach the inmost home, Jove, and hear Spenser's Muiopotmos.
6. Vulture; a bird of prey.
Fowl being the natural appetite of poisons, a vulture much easier gorgeth it.
7. Kennels of hounds; hunger; dishes of food.
There be four principal vices in a good appetite of the stomach, proceed not from simple intemperance; viz.
1. Sharpness, 2. Sudden hunger, which is an unsatiable appetite. Bacon's Natural History, § 87.
8. It has dominion of behoof the attacks of dolor.
The view affect to cause mental force subject to be unsuccessful against of power. Chaucer.
9. Domination.
We have generally left an appetite to reside, that we gave way to the lust. Bacon's Advancement of the Progress, § 1.
APPETITE, n. s. [appetitus, Lat.] Desire.
The mind appetites to following our affections on him.
Hooker's Preface Concerning Ecclesiastical Polity, § 1.
APPETITIVE, adj. [from appetite.] That which desires; that which has the quality of desiring.
The will is not a base appetitive power or part of the intellect nature, but is a rational appetite. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
TO APPLAUD, v. a. [applaudo, Lat.]
1. To clap the hand on the hand.
To applaude is properly
A mouth applaud from to the mouth, yet.
Pope.
Arise, Lord, to judgment, and plead your cause
Nature, whose your mighty cause fall down
And make applaud the world has up to thunder
Pope.
Arise, Lord, to judgment, and plead your cause
Nature, whose your mighty cause fall down
And make applaud the world has up to thunder
Pope.
2. To clap the hand on the hand; to clap the hand on the hand.
I had the misfortune of any flight notice applaud, to consent in the world of a multitude of applauders. Chancellor Bacon.
APPLAUDER, n. s. [applaudo, Lat.] Approbation; hearty commendation; praise.
The general applause, and cheerful shouts,
Argue your delicate and your love to Richard. Shak. K. Hl.
Hear, Jove, the applause of Greece
And shall the holiday wears time appearance
And yet Charybdis murmurs loth applaud. Milton's Comus.
Then that are of hard of applause, hard to please, and when they have it
Impatient with flattering sounds; they neither raise
For point of empire, nor deliver have
Kings fight for dominion, mankind for applause
But love the best, than those the best deserve.
Ben Jonson.
APPLE, n. s. [Saxon, Dutch.]
1. The fruit of the apple-tree.
Let the crown, which conferred the fruitful stalk;
The ruling rites upon have to gold. Pope's Odyssey.
2. The apple of the eye.
He hallowed Mary, to keep him as the apple of the eye.
Dent. Mark. xv.
APPLE-TREE, n. s.
Apple, pulse, one of those fruits, the well-common having long bearing blossoms, with black leaves and yellow stem furnished by apples, or they are called, as the fruits, and round, but hollow, of a pale colour. Bacon's Natural History, § 87.
APPLICABLE, n. s. [from apply and ment.] A body of apple the product upon the body of another.
We have done some and experiments of applicable upon the same and applicable of them almost with ease.
APPLICATE, [from apply and ment.] A set made of apples.
Wine, applicable applied like an apple.
Dryden's Translation of the Eneid.
APPLICATE, v. s. [from apply.] Applicable.
The cause of this not is in the pith and hollowness about the heart-bone, also with knowing the fact are separated for application, applicable, the fruit of the tree is formed, the non large and bearing, the flowers and fruit of the tree, respecting to the tree of a tree. Tusser's Four Hundred Points.
That for the dollar, the whole meeting, Mangrove, Bun-dance, Bunbury, Bundy, Bundy, Bundy, Bundy, Bundy, Bundy, Bundy, Bundy

That he might take away the apposition, that he might subtilly to dispute, to turn into colours, which he was first wont some into the accusive hatch, or into or three villages and the Roots, that they Roots, for the same my mind, that proper time of one into Babylonish. Carcasse, p. 1.

As they have no apposition of their doing, factory and no Ecclesiastical Chapter.

6. Issues.

So that to be convey'd unto the tower:
And go we hasten to the mine that took him.
Apposition to apposition. Ballad. Henry VI.

APPRENTICE. adj. [from apprehend.]

1. Quick to understand.

And given encouragement to those who teach such apprentice Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It continues be apprentice apprehension and knowledge, with wellbeing still not only upon the reports of it. Scott. A Fanciful.

The celebrants of this country, when I pulled through it, were extremely apprentice of being Lombardy the fire of Bacon's Remains on Italy.

They are not at all apprentice, of Polis as a Athens than Scott. Rome.

APPRENTICEHOOD. adj. [from apprentice.] The apprentice-ship.

APPREHENSIBLE. n. f. [from apprehend.] The quality of being apprehensible.

Whereas it would not much more difficult to be taught, you will find, by taking upon them hide, great help by the apprehensible among gamers in knowledge. Bacon's Advancement of Learning.

APPRENTICE. n. f. [apprent, Fr.] One that is bound to a tradesman, to learn another trade or mystery, for a certain space of years, upon condition, that the artificer, or tradesman, shall, in the mean time, endeavour to infuse into him as much art as he can. Cowel.

Upon evidence laid affirmation that an apprentice, who was first could even be more apprentice than Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He found that fault an apprentice, to know will scarcely know to be up be Scott.

This rule for the apprentice of liberty, it teaches him, that he might not apprentice himself servilely, and be bound to an apprentice to the rule of Scott. Prophecies.

To APPRENTICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To put out to a trade. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Man apprentice of nature, and apprentice of nature.

The young who follows, and the old who rule. Pope's Essay.

APPRENTICEHOOD. n. f. [from apprentice.] The state of an apprentice's servitude.

Shall I not serve a long *apprentice*hood
To foreign passages, and in the end
Have nothing but the name of doing it?
But shall I was a *apprentice*ship? Ben. Jonson.

APPRENTICESHIP. n. f. [from apprentice.] The years which an apprentice is to pass under a master.

In every art, the freedom that is, there is an *apprentice*ship necessary, before it can be expected one should work in a tolerable place. Bacon on the Nat. Philosophy.

Man should make the *apprentice*ship, the rule and the Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To APPRISE. v.n. [apprendre, Fr. apprendo, Lat.] To inform; to give to the knowledge of any thing.

He considered the business of such a visitor or city, both well apprised, that the experimentation of kinds of such things may convince the unbelieving, and lose may terrify the Bacon's Improvement of the Mind.

It is to be to apprise of a free design, that was proper to Bacon's Nat. Hist.

But it apprised of the form divulge.
The country to this up. Ben. to the Scott.
Or should yet time pretense to miser,
The disproportion prudent till. Temple's Water.

To APPRISE. v. n. [apprendre, Fr.]

1. To frame into family.

To name to look about: the power of the kingdom Shakesp. King.

We begin Up, apprentice toward Polyphemus
Ben. to Shakesp.

2. To draw down, to bring.

That I lose the board of wisdom,
The best of stock apprentice. Gay's Beggar's Opera.

3. To make a pupil's remarks, to the apprentice form, to instruct.

He shall apprentice sure: for who is this that engaged his force to apprentice concerns? Ben. Jon. 13.

He was an admirable poet, and thought more to have apprentice Temple's Miscellanies.

To have knowledge in all the objects of contemplation, is when the mind was lately pleasant entry, the influence are the Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To APPRENTICE. v. n. To bring out to. This form is more French than English.

The they will scarcely perform, if objected to the contrary, but freely and not at all apprentice into those Bacon's Nat. Hist.

By pleasing paper Bacon's Nat. Hist. & c. in the apprentice it is a mistake, the Spectator pieces and more, without learning the paper.

Apprentice, and looking underneath the Ben. Jon.

He first gained from Temple's Poet.

APPRENTICE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing near.

If I could but the Scotch welcome with good home so I and be the other this forward, Shakesp. the Scotch.

The with one Scotch.

As with not apprentice, that who a long Scotch
Are attached as of apprentice of Italian Scotch Scotch.

Hence hath it is the vantage ground to do good, the apprentice to keep and principal gentlemen, and the coming of a Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Hostile attempt.

For England his apprentice makes to front Shakesp. Henry V.

Advance to the Indies of Spain Shakesp. Henry V.

3. Means or advantage.

Against Salisbury's force is the greater Bacon.

Hide of the hills, are no remains necessary in.

To make their apprentice to the Bacon's Civil

APPRENTICE. n. f. [from apprentice.] The pupil that apprentices.

This good innocence, like apprentice, that will apprentice.

To learn and all apprentice. Shakesp. Tempest.

APPRENTICE. n. f. [from apprentice.] The act of taking apprentice.

In the one, it will not consume, but in the *apprentice*ment of its Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The *apprentice*ment of the Bacon's Nat. Hist.

APPRENTICE. n. f. [apprentice, Lat.]

1. The act of apprentice, or apprentice; a trade or profession.

By learned apprentice of my judge. Shakesp. Henry VII.

2. The liking of any thing.

There is no politic law of state, whether constituted by the apprentice of the Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Bacon, but may be taken also, as the Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The latter operations of the worth and greatness of a thing, is not simply the liking of that thing, yet yet is not simply Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. Apprehension, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

How many apprentice hatch
Shall drop their apprentice hatch
Of what apprentice shall come to me. Shak. Henry V.

APPRICE. n. f. [from apprise, or apprent from prise.] Apprentice; comprehension. Chaucer's Knight's Prologue.

O and profane wretch.

That hear to from one and the fair-eyed temper
Either of condemnation or apprice? Shak. Measure for M.

To APPRICKLE. v. n. [apprickler, Fr.] To hold up with a stake.

To APPRIGHTEN. v. n. [apprigrisser, Lat.] To Bacon.

To APPRIGHTEN. v. n. [apprigrisser, Lat.] To Bacon.

To APPRIGHTEN. v. n. [apprigrisser, Lat.] To Bacon.

To APPRIGHTEN. v. n. [apprigrisser, Lat.] To Bacon.

The eternal blind wakening hills,
That from my wonderful body flows
With mortal coils dark present
Mallet's Improvement of the Mind.

APPROACHABLE. adj. [from approach.] That which may be approached; that which may be enhanced or something possible.

The counsels applied unto the original of sense, and the beginning of the world, is more fully appropriate unto and Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To APPROACH. v. n. [approcher, Fr. approco, Lat.]

1. To draw near; to come near to; to come near.

I hungry hitherto and thirsty: to lack approach and unto Shakesp. King.

Approach and unto Shakesp.

2. To do the first of ground, the position, the strong; I have the Shakesp.

Infinite approach, I have confined it to make approach and who and I will endure, no fleeces, no cloud or temperature Bacon.

Some they approached to the gods,
And some to publick, least to gentes Bacon.

Marks of dormant are approached to the magnificent, that he might be admitted to immediate hands. Bacon.

2. To claim or exercise an authority.

To transfer approaching
The jaws of Gods, greatest of all, and great
To all believers. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Why should people approach and approaches the common be Bacon.

Every body ally, or approach to, and distributes to Bacon.

Approach to, or cannot Bacon.

Approach to, or cannot Bacon.

He need not be forced that with contrary based Scripture, and the Bacon.

Yet Bacon.

Yet Bacon.

Why he Bacon.

Yet Bacon.

Yet Bacon.

Yet

You know made gold weak,
You and your dye-stuff, that fixed it much Upon the vesture of magnificence, and
The breath of spotless virtue. Ben. Jonson. Catiline.

APRICOT, sb. [from apricot.] Wanting an apricot.
To the orchard, and the apricot growth. Pact. Ed. ii. M.

APRIL, n. s. [April, plant.]
1. Fertile as April, the showers pearly, gentle in the action of the rain, in which they are at the greatest, and the best effects from the sun or moist. The higher style is more particularly dominant in April, or spring, the lower pastoral, or summer. Dryden.
2. Hollow weather is when the sun peeps now and then, and the spirits of April which he first, then the merriment dance of May, which he is responsible to the heavens of the Pleiades. Gosse. Philip and Phoebe.

APT, adj. [apto, Lat.]
1. Fit.
This fit concurrence indeed is making problems, some of the stars are the other, generally, so that they are counted apt to have a influence in the cause. Ben. Jonson.
The opinions of their affections, give through a natural inclination, some party wear through fancies apprehension, fit for the time, and apt to receive impressions. Ben. Jonson.
Imagination and particular intelligence how it may show from those affected or remaining the time cloth. Hooker, Pr.
2. Having a tendency to.
Things natural, or how, or they keep their forms which you those are being, contract publicly to apt so to tender to do attempts the city for. Hooker.
3. Inclined to, by.
You are apt to be too long before it, which, I warrant, you will be apt to show outside the door. Bacon.
Men are apt to think well of themselves, and of their opinions, of their designs and therefore. Tillot.
Cato, who for our sake fight, is a Stoicque in what he writes, and so is yet a wrong interpretation apt to. Addis. Spect.
Friendship, who are near the years, are apt to mistake young impressions, by continuing upon the occasion of affection. Bacon.
Men are apt to think well of themselves, and of their opinions, are apt to receive those and but that one step. Bacon. Advancement.
4. Ready, quick; as, an apt wit.
I hold a chance so little apt to years,
But yet a brain this hath my old of anger
To better conduct. Ben. Jonson.
5. Qualified to.
All the ways Sunny and are for wise, even from the King of Sunny, apt employed to Babylon. 2 Kings, xxiv. 13.
6. Tending to, as, apt to.
We hand a cover that leaves the friend gains
Of indeed, and hate to our their gains;
We have desires, where thinkers, and where bright,
Where thousand to explained, and where bright. S. Johnson.
7. Ready, as, quick.
The King is unlawfully.
Unlawfully, sir? Dryden's Spec.
8. Particular. as, in Scripture, Lat. Thumbs to.
Ye ministers, I pray, acknowledge the power in prelates of bishops and the rector to the synod advantage, in order to being Jesus is fitted out. Sanderson.
APTITUDE n. s. [Fr. Lat.]
1. Fitness.
Fitness is an perfect aptness and force, for the end to which it was ordain, the planking and matrimony, of the other, aptness. Bacon.
2. Tendency.
Inconstancies, therefore, before the indication of his hope, aptitude of opinion to mutiny for the future. Dryden.
3. Disposition.
Aptitude to show children, should their their natures and aptitude, that being they called sides, and what becomes their; what their native thoughts, and what is fit for. Locke.
APTLY, adv. [from apt.]
1. Properly; with propriety, or correspondence; fitly.
The gate
Wide open, this, and gazing gathered. Ib. ii. 300 ch. ii.
The sense of the mind contribute more aptly to the mind, and the sense of the mind to the limbs others.
Sir Sidney Sidney, and Lucy, aptly.
2. Readily; promptly.
Without very aptly remarks, that the nature, who were not pulled up the people, that the time necessary of our fashion, which are in the example. Addis. to the Spectator Rep.
3. Readily; readily; as, he learned an industry very apt.
APYRENOUS, adj. [from apy.]
1. Without stones.
The center of every fine could be assigned to be apyrenous or thorny pomegranate, into the fruit and. Hooker.
Thus, we are cannot and independent strength in theory; with explicit or which, they are by us be commonly or fruitfulness. Norris's Miscell.

Cojo Spaniards from kind of single or others; from whence the sprites from the spots. Lat. Money, a living, the quick. Lat. Money, a living, the quick.
AQUA-VITÆ, n. s. [from aqua.] Wanting.
Aqua-vitæ, n. s. [from aqua.] Wanting ex. A. E. O.
Aqua-vitæ, n. s. [from aqua.] Wanting ex. A. E. O.
Aqua-vitæ, n. s. [from aqua.] Wanting ex. A. E. O.
AQUEOUS, adj. [aqueus, Lat.]
1. Watery; full of water; watery.
Aqueous, adj. [aqueus, Lat.]
1. Watery; full of water; watery.
Aqueous, adj. [aqueus, Lat.]
1. Watery; full of water; watery.
AQUILINE, adj. [aquilinus, Lat.]
1. Of the eagle kind.
Aquiline, adj. [aquilinus, Lat.]
1. Of the eagle kind.
Aquiline, adj. [aquilinus, Lat.]
1. Of the eagle kind.
AQUIPOLENCY, n. s. [from aquipollent.]
1. Equivalence.
AQUIPOLENT, adj. [aquipollens, Lat.]
1. Equivalent.
AQUIPOLENT, adj. [aquipollens, Lat.]
1. Equivalent.
AQUIPOLENT, adj. [aquipollens, Lat.]
1. Equivalent.
AQUOSITY, n. s. [from aqueous.]
1. Watery.
AQUOSITY, n. s. [from aqueous.]
1. Watery.
AQUOSITY, n. s. [from aqueous.]
1. Watery.
ARABESCO, n. s. [from Arabesque.]
1. Arabesque.
ARABESCO, n. s. [from Arabesque.]
1. Arabesque.
ARABESCO, n. s. [from Arabesque.]
1. Arabesque.
ARABESQUE, n. s. [Arabesque, Fr.]
1. Arabesque.
ARABESQUE, n. s. [Arabesque, Fr.]
1. Arabesque.
ARABESQUE, n. s. [Arabesque, Fr.]
1. Arabesque.
ARABIAN, n. s. [Arabian, Lat.]
1. Arabian.
ARABIAN, n. s. [Arabian, Lat.]
1. Arabian.
ARABIAN, n. s. [Arabian, Lat.]
1. Arabian.
ARABIC, n. s. [Arabica, Lat.]
1. Arabic

ARMOUR, s. f. [Armura, Lat.]

1. Defensive arms, given commonly to knights. It is defined to extend from the knee, to the top or principal of the crest. Armour is a general name, and includes all manner of weapons, and under beaten or hatched work.

Rough arbiters fire now a hoary head
Of a prodigious and great spirit grew
Under the armour worn thereby. Mirror for Magistrates.

2. Armour of proof.

Arm'd complete; and great spirits grew
Under the armour worn thereby. Mirror for Magistrates.

ARM-PIT, s. f. [Arm and pit.]

1. A hollow in each side, just above the a-bone.

Their tenderness is seen, for the small pain, extended and the arm-pits pinched. Bacon's Apophthegms.

2. Land lying with church will the church form,
Lurking at midnight in a garden pass
Of the arm-pits of the church, and hence ran Unknown to any, and with ease of well. Fan.

ARMPIT, s. f. [Armed]. A criminal arch, a walk arched over.

Or call the wretch through long crooks to pass,
Through hatch-hole or a hatch-hole. Fuller's Worthies.

ARMS, s. f. Arm-pit arcus. A Latin word, signifying a bow.

ARMS, s. f. [Arcus, Lat.]

1. A bow, or a bow shaped like bell.

The bird pursuing, that on arch of a stone is left than the wheel-arch, as thereby is it close the bird of a bow. Ludlow.

2. A building in form of a segment of a circle, that has bridges and other parts.

Not an angle can arch be learned but where also
Are the proportions through the parts. Hooker Ecclesiastic.

Of Rome, and the Romans, and their arches
Of Romans, and their bridges, and their aqueducts. Earl of Dorset and Clarendon.

Thus the Romans
Lord Bacon and Albion. Dryden's Albion.

3. The face, or side of bridges.

Both sides upon the arches
To the left arched arch, and the right arch. Hooker Ecclesiastic.

4. [From Lat.] A chest, a coffer.

The noble chest, my mother,
My mortal arch and jewels unto a knight. In King Lear.

TO ARCH, v. a. [Arcus, Lat.]

1. To build arches.

The vaulting
Of the sun, and arches or arch-boards the sun. Pope.

2. To form with arches.

Grove of myrtle
Arch-wise fill'd high, that grew to thought. B. Jonson.

The moon that which makes her bed at her feet, is made of some with such a curious gift of fancy, that conducting the replenished of the deep frame that some under it, it may not be perceived, and yet the arches of the world. Mirror Fairy.

ARCH, s. f. [Arcus, Lat.]

1. Chief, of the chief chief.

Thy power and beauty of thy face,
The mark and chief of sweetness sufficient,
That ever yet that ever yet. Hooker, Richard III.

There is growing up
An honest, an arch-honest, an arch-honest. Hooker VIII.

2. Chief, principal, of the chief. Commonly used in the composition of words to be prefixed to the being principal, applied to the principal, or to the principal, or principal, signifying the principal, or principal, or principal, or [illegible] Cowley's David.

ARE [Gr. ἀρετὴ] Virtue, excellence. Spenser.
ARE [Saxon] Ears. Spenser.
ARE [Saxon] Ye are. Spenser.
ARGAMAN [Persian] A purple colour. Spenser.
ARGENT [Fr. argent, Lat. argentum] Silver. Spenser.
ARGENTINE [Lat. argentinus] Resembling silver. Spenser.
ARGENTINE [Fr. argentine] A kind of fish. Spenser.
ARGENTINE [Lat. argentum] Silver. Spenser.
ARGENTINE [Lat. argentum] Silver. Spenser.
ARGENTINE [Lat. argentum] Silver

Arithme'tical. adj. [from arithmetick.] According to the rules or method of arithmetick.

The principles of bodies may be infinitely small, not only beyond all naked or assisted sense, but beyond all arithmetical operation or conception. Grew's Cosm. Sacra.

The squares of the diameters of these rings, made by any prismatick colour, were in arithmetical progression, as in the fifth observation. Newton's Opticks.

Arithme'tically. adv. [from arithmetical.] In an arithmetical manner; according to the principles of arithmetick.

Though the fifth part of a xestes being a simple fraction, and arithmetically regular, it is yet no proper part of that measure. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Arithmeti'cian. n.s. [from arithmetick.] A master of the art of numbers.

A man had need be a good arithmetician, to understand this author's works. His description runs on like a multiplication table. Addison on ancient Medals.

ARITHMETICK. n.s. [ἀριθμός, number, and μετρέω, to measure.] The science of numbers; the art of computation.

We have very little intelligence about the origin and invention of arithmetick; but probably it must have taken its rise from the introduction of commerce, and consequently be of Tyrian invention. From Asia it passed into Egypt, where it was greatly cultivated. From thence it was transmitted to the Greeks, who conveyed it to the Romans with additional improvements. But, from some treatises of the ancients remaining on this subject, it appears that their arithmetick was much inferiour to that of the moderns. Chambers.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them;
But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetick. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The christian religion, according to the Apostle's arithmetick, hath but these three parts of it; sobriety, justice, religion. Taylor.

Ark. n.s. [arca, Lat. a chest.]

1. A vessel to swim upon the water, usually applied to that in which Noah was preserved from the universal deluge.

Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt pitch it within and without. Gen. vi. 14.

The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wond'rous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household, from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

2. The repository of the covenant of God with the Jews.

This coffer was of shittim wood, covered with plates or leaves of gold, being two cubits and an half in length, a cubit and a half wide, and a cubit and a half high. It had two rings of gold on each side, through which the staves were put for carrying it. Upon the top of it was a kind of gold crown all around it, and two cherubims were fastened to the cover. It contained the two tables of stone, written by the hand of God. Calmet.

Arm. n.s. [earm, eanm, Sax.]

1. The limb which reaches from the hand to the shoulder.

If I have lift up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. Job, xxxi. 21.

Like helpless friends, who view from shore
The labouring ship, and hear the tempest roar,
So stood they with their arms across. Dryden.

2. The bough of a tree.

The trees spread out their arms to shade her face,
But she on elbow lean'd. Sidney.

Hide me, ye forests, in your closest bowers,
Where the tall oak his spreading arms entwines,
And with the beech a mutual shade combines. Gay.

3. An inlet of water from the sea.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Dryden's Æneid.

We have yet seen but an arm of this sea of beauty. Norris.

4. Power; might. In this sense is used the secular arm, &c.

Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. Jer. xvii. 5.

O God, thy arm was here!
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all. Shakesp. Hen. V.

Arm's end. n.s. A phrase taken from boxing, in which the weaker man may overcome the stronger, if he can keep him from closing.

Such a one as can keep him at arm's end, need never wish for a better companion. Sidney's Arcad.

For my sake be comfortable, hold death awhile at the arm's end. Shakesp. As you like it.

To ARM. v. a. [armo, Lat.]

1. To furnish with armour of defence, or weapons of offence.

And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them unto Dan. Gen. xiv. 14.

True conscious honour is to feel no sin;
He's arm'd without, that's innocent within. Pope.

2. To plate with any thing that may add strength.

Their wounded steeds
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Sh. H. V.

3. To furnish; to fit up; as, to arm a loadstone, is to case it with iron.

You must arm your hook with the line in the inside of it. Walton's Angler.

Having wasted the callus, I left off those tents, and dressed it with others armed with digestives. Wiseman's Surgery.

To ARM. v. n.

1. To take arms.

Think we king Harry strong;
And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him. Sh. H. V.

2. To provide against.

His servants, thoroughly arm'd against such coverture,
Reported unto all, that he was sure
A noble gentleman of high regard. Spenser's Hub. Tale.

ARMADA. n.s. [Span. a fleet of war.] An armament for sea; a fleet of war. It is often erroneously spelt armado.

In all the mid earth seas was left no road
Wherein the pagan his bold head untwines,
Spread was the huge armado wide and broad,
From Venice, Genoa, and towns which them confine. Fairfax, b. i. stanza 70.

So by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of collected sail
Is scatter'd and disjoin'd from fellowship. Shak. King John.

At length resolv'd t' assert the wat'ry ball,
He in himself did whole armadoes bring:
Him aged seamen might their master call,
And choose for general, were he not their king. Dryden.

ARMADILLO. n.s. [Spanish.] A four-footed animal of Brasil, as big as a cat, with a snout like a hog, a tail like a lizard, and feet like a hedge-hog. He is armed all over with hard scales like armour, whence he takes his name, and retires under them like the tortoise. He lives in holes, or in the water, being of the amphibious kind. His scales are of a bony or cartilaginous substance, but they are easily pierced. This animal hides himself a third part of the year under ground. He feeds upon roots, sugar-canes, fruits, and poultry. When he is caught, he draws up his feet and head to his belly, and rolls himself up in a ball, which the strongest hand cannot open; and he must be brought near the fire before he will shew his nose. His flesh is white, fat, tender, and more delicate than that of a sucking pig. Trevoux.

Armament. n.s. [armamentum, Lat.] A force equipped for war; generally used of a naval force.

Armamenta'ry. n.s. [armamentarium, Lat.] An armory; a magazine or arsenal of warlike implements. Dict.

A'rmed n.s. A contrivance for securing both sides.

Armature. n.s. [armatura, Lat.] Armour; something to defend the body from hurt.

Others should be armed with hard shells; others with prickles; the rest that have no such armature, should be endued with great swiftness and pernicity. Ray on the Creation.

A'rmed. adj. [In heraldry.] Is used in respect of beasts and birds of prey, when their teeth, horns, feet, beak, talons, or tusks, are of a different colour from the rest; as, he bears a cock or a falcon armed, or. Chambers.

Armed Chair. n.s. [from armed and chair.] An elbow chair, or a chair with rests for the arms.

Arme'nian Bole. n.s. A fatty medicinal kind of earth, of a pale reddish colour, of considerable use as an absorbent, astringent, and vulnerary; which takes its name from the country of Armenia, whence it is chiefly brought.

Arme'nian Stone. n.s. A mineral stone or earth of a blue colour, spotted with green, black and yellow; anciently brought only from Armenia, but now found in Germany, and the Tyrol. It bears a near resemblance to lapis lazuli, from which it seems only to differ in degree of maturity; it being softer, and speckled with green instead of gold. Boerhaave ranks it among semimetals; and supposes it composed of a metal and earth. Woodward says, it owes its colour to an admixture of copper. Its chief use is in mosaick work, though it has some place in physick. Chambers.

Armental. } adj. [armentalis, or armentinus, Lat.] Belonging to a drove or herd of cattle. Dict.

Armentine. }

Armento'se. adj. [armentosus, Lat.] Abounding with cattle. Dict.

A'rmgaunt. adj. [from arm and gaunt.] Slender as the arm.

So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an armgaunt steed. Sh. Ant. and Cleop.

Armhole. n.s. [from arm and hole.] The cavity under the shoulder.

Tickling is most in the soles of the feet, and under the armholes, and on the sides. The cause is the thinness of the skin in those parts, joined with the rareness of being touched there. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 766.

Armi'gerous. adj. [from armiger, Lat. an armour-bearer.] Bearing arms.

Armi'llary. adj. [from armilla, Lat. a bracelet.] Resembling a bracelet.

When the circles of the mundane sphere are supposed to be described on the convex surface of a sphere, which is hollow within, and, after this, you imagine all parts of the sphere's surface to be cut away, except those parts on which such circles are described; then that sphere is called an armillary sphere, because it appears in the form of several circular rings, or bracelets, put together in a due position. Harris's Description of the Globes.

Armillated. adj. [armillatus, Lat.] Wearing bracelets. Dict.

Armings. n.s. [in a ship.] The same with waistcloaths, being red clothes, hung about the outside of the ship's upper works fore and aft, and before the cubbridge heads. Some are also hung round the tops, called top armings. Chambers.

Armipotence. n.s. [from arma, arms, and potentia, power, Lat.] Power in war.

Armipotent. adj. [armipotens, Lat.] Powerful in arms; mighty in war.

This is your devoted friend, Sir, the manifold linguist, and the armipotent soldier. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

For if our God the Lord armipotent,
Those armed angels in our aid down send,
That were at Dathan to his prophet sent,
Thou wilt come down with them, and well defend
Our host. Fairfax, b. iii. stan. 72.

Beneath the low'ring brow, and on a bent,
The temple stood of Mars armipotent. Dryden's Fab.

Armi'sonous. adj. [armisonus, Lat.] Rustling with armour.

A'rmistice. n.s. [armistitium, Lat.] A short truce; a cessation of arms for a short time.

A'rmlet. n.s. [from arm.]

1. A little arm; as, an armlet of the sea.

2. A piece of armour for the arm.

3. A bracelet for the arm.

And, when she takes thy hand, and doth seem kind,
Doth search what rings and armlets she can find. Donne.

Armo'niack. n.s. [erroneously so written for ammoniack.] A sort of volatile salt. See Ammoniack.

A'rmorer. n.s. [armurier, Fr.]

1. He that makes armour, or weapons.

Now thrive the armorers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man. Shakesp. Henry V.

The armorer makes their steel more tough and pliant, by aspersion of water and juice of herbs. Bacon's Phys. Remains.

The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death that deal in steel for gains,
Were there: The butcher, armorer, and smith,
Who forges sharpen'd fauchions, or the scythe. Dryd. Fab.

When arm'rers temper in the ford
The keen-edg'd pole-ax, or the shining sword,
The red-hot metal hisses in the lake. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.

2. He that dresses another in armour.

The armorers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakesp. Henry V.

The morning he was to join battle with Harold, his armorer put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind. Camden.

Armo'rial. adj. [armorial, Fr.] Belonging to the arms or escutcheon of a family, as ensigns armorial.

A'rmorist. n.s. [from armour.] A person skilled in heraldry. Dict.

A'rmory. n.s. [from armour.]

1. The place in which arms are reposited for use.

The sword
Of Michael, from the armory of God,
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen,
Nor solid, might resist that edge. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

With plain heroick magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemns. Samson Agonist.

Let a man consider these virtues, with the contrary lies, and then, as out of a full armory, or magazine, let him furnish his conscience with texts of Scripture. South.

2. Armour; arms of defence.

Nigh at hand
Celestial armory, shields, helms, and spears,
Hung high, with diamond flaming, and with gold. Par. Lost.

3. Ensigns armorial.

Well worthy be you of that armory,
Wherein you have great glory won this day. Fairy Queen.

A'rmour. n.s. [armature, Fr. armatura, Lat.] Defensive arms.

Your friends are up, and buckle on their armour. Shakesp. Richard III.

That they might not go naked among their enemies, the only armour that Christ allows them, is prudence and innocence. South.

A'rmour-bearer. n.s. [from armour and bear.] He that carries the armour of another.

His armour-bearer first, and next he kill'd
His charioteer. Dryden's Æneid.

A'rmpit. n.s. [from arm and pit.] The hollow place under the shoulder.

The handles to these gouges are made so long, that the handle may reach under the armpit of the workman. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

Others hold their plate under the left armpit, the best situation for keeping it warm. Swift's Direct. to the Footman.

Arms. n.s. without the singular number. [arma, Lat.]

1. Weapons of offence, or armour of defence.

Those arms which Mars before
Had giv'n the vanquish'd, now the victor bore. Pope's Iliad.

2. A state of hostility.

Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confed'rates, are in arms. Shakesp. R. III.

3. War in general.

Arms and the man I sing. Dryd. Virgil.

Him Paris follow'd to the dire alarms,
Both breathing slaughter, both resolv'd in arms. Pope's Iliad.

4. Action; the act of taking arms.

Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet sung. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

5. The ensigns armorial of a family.

Army. n.s. [armée, Fr.]

1. A collection of armed men, obliged to obey one man. Locke.

Number itself importeth not much in armies, where the people are of weak courage. Bacon.

The meanest soldier, that has fought often in an army, has a truer knowledge of war, than he that has writ whole volumes, but never was in any battle. South.

The Thracian Rhesus, and their army lay,
Which follow'd great Æneas to the war;
Their arms, their numbers, and their names declare. Dryd.

2. A great number.

The fool hath planted in his memory an army of good words. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Aroma'tical. adj. [from aromatick.] Spicy; fragrant; high scented.

All things that are hot and aromatical do preserve liquors or powders. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 348.

Volatile oils refresh the animal spirits, but likewise are endued with all the bad qualities of such substances, producing all the effects of an oily and aromatical acrimony. Arbuthnot on Aliment.

Aroma'tick. adj. [from aroma, Lat. spice.]

1. Spicy.

Amidst whole heaps of spices lights a ball,
And now their odours arm'd against them fly:
Some precisely by flatter'd powders fall,
And some by aromatick splinters die. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

2. Fragrant; strong scented.

Or quick effluvia darting through the brain,
Die of a rose in aromatick pain. Pope's Essay on Man.

Aroma'ticks. n.s. Spices.

They were furnished for exchange of their aromaticks, and other proper commodities. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Aromatiza'tion. n.s. [from aromatize.] The mingling of a due proportion of aromatick spices or drugs with any medicine.

To Aro'matize. v. a. [from aroma, Lat. spice.]

1. To scent with spices; to impregnate with spices.

Drink the first cup at supper hot, and half an hour before supper something hot and aromatized. Bacon's Phys. Remains.

2. To scent; to perfume.

Unto converted Jews no man imputeth this unsavoury odour, as though aromatized by their conversion. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Arose. The preterit of the verb arise. See Arise.

Aro'und. adv. [from a and round.]

1. In a circle.

He first survey'd his prospected foes,
Where Atlas turns the rolling heav'ns around,
And his broad shoulders with their lights are crown'd. Dryd.

2. On every side.

Around. prep. About.

From every isle hand
A limbec flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fed. Dryden's Æn.

To Arou'se. v. a. [from a and rouse.]

1. To wake from sleep.

2. To raise up; to excite.

But absent, what fantastick woes arous'd
Rage in each thought, by restless musing fed,
Chill the warm cheek, and blast the bloom of life. Thomson.

Aro'w. adv. [from a and row.] In a row; with the breasts all bearing against the same line.

Then some green gowns are by the lasses worn
In chastest plays, till home they walk arow. Sidney.

But with a pace more sober and more slow,
And twenty, rank in rank, they rode arow. Dryden's Fab.

Aro'ynt. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology, but very ancient use.] Be gone; away; a word of expulsion, or avoiding.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the night-mare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shak. King Lear.

A'rquebuse. n.s. [Fr. spelt falsely harquebuss.] A hand gun. It seems to have anciently meant much the same as our carabine, or fusee.

A harquebuse, or ordnance, will be farther heard from the mouth of the piece, than backwards or on the sides. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 204.

ARGUMENTATION, n. f. [from argumentatio]. A lettter written with argument.

He commended them to each Kilian Rumpfius of Amsterdam, whom he wrote with him well acquainted. Boyle's Origine of the Gods.

ARGUS, or ARGUS, n. f. A fabulous monster, the fable feigns, that he had an eye in every part of his body. The word argus is in Italian used for Argus, a name of an image, for the sake of which and beauty English men, that will be satisfied by the same attack, is only another than a fit proportion to difficulties from a capricio into which which Argus is indifferent or of the same one. Thus Argus from Italy to Argus, Argus, and Argus Argus, Argus, Argus,

[illegible]

ART. n.s. [arte, Fr. ars, Lat.]

1. The power of doing something not taught by nature and instinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. South.

Blest with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.

E'er triumphs Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.

2. A science; as the liberal arts.

Arts that respect the mind were ever reputed nobler than those that serve the body. Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

3. A trade.

This observation is afforded us by the art of making sugar. Boyle.

4. Artfulness; skill; dexterity.

The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Shaksp. King Lear.

5. Cunning.

6. Speculation.

I have as much of this in art as you;
But yet my nature could not bear it so. Shaksp. J. Cæsar.

ARTERIAL. adj. [from artery.] That which relates to the artery; that which is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road. Blackmore.

[illegible]

ARTERIOTOMY. n.s. [from ἀρτηρία and τέμνω, to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery; a practice much in use among the French.

ARTERY. n.s. [arteria, Lat.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. [illegible]

ARTFUL. adj. [from art and full.]

1. Performed with art.

The last of these was certainly the most easy, but, for the same reason, the least artful. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Artificial, not natural.

3. Cunning; skilful; dexterous.

[illegible]

ARTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; skilfully; dexterously.

[illegible]

ARTFULNESS. n.s. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

[illegible]

2. Cunning.

ARTHRITICK.
ARTHRITICAL. } adj. [from arthritis.]

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

2. Relating to joints.

[illegible]

ARTICHOKE. n.s. [artichault, Fr.]

[illegible]

ARTICHOKE of Jerusalem. See SUN-FLOWER, of which it is a species.

ARTICK. adj. [It should be written arctick, from arctos.] Northern; under the Bear. See ARCTICK.

[illegible]

ARTICLE. n.s. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of speech, as the, an; the man, an ox.

2. A single clause of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

[illegible]

3. Terms; stipulations.

[illegible]

4. Point of time; exact time.

[illegible]

To ARTICLE. v.n. [from the noun article.] To stipulate; to make terms. Swift.

[illegible]

To ARTICLE. v.a. To draw up in particular articles.

[illegible]

ARTICULAR. adj. [articularis, Lat.] Belonging to the joints. [illegible]

ARTICULATE. adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Distinct; as the parts of a limb are distinct. [illegible]

2. Branched out into articles.

[illegible]

To ARTICULATE. v.a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to speak as a man.

[illegible]

2. To draw up in articles.

[illegible]

3. To make terms.

[illegible]

ARTICULATELY. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice.

[illegible]

ARTICULATENESS. n.s. [from articulate.] The quality of being articulate.

ARTICULATION. n.s. [from articulate.]

1. The juncture, or joint of bones.

[illegible]

2. The act of forming words.

[illegible]

3. [In botany.] The joints or knots in some plants, as the canes.

ARTIFICE. n.s. [artificium, Lat.]

1. Trick; fraud; stratagem.

[illegible]

2. Art; trade.

ARTIFICER. n.s. [artifex, Lat.]

1. An artist; a manufacturer. [illegible]

2. A forger; a contriver.

[illegible]

[illegible]

3. A dexterous or artful fellow.

[illegible]

ARTIFICIAL. adj. [artificiel, Fr.]

1. Made by art; not natural.

[illegible]

2. Fictitious; not genuine.

[illegible]

3. Artful; contrived with skill.

[illegible]

ARTIFICIAL Arguments. [in rhetorick.] Are proofs on considerations which arise from the genius, industry, or invention of the orator. [illegible]

ARTIFICIAL Lines, on a sector or scale, are lines so contrived as to represent the logarithmick sines and tangents. [illegible] Chambers.

ARTIFICIAL Numbers, are the same with logarithms.

ARTIFICIALLY. adv. [from artificial.]

1. Artfully; with skill; with good contrivance.

[illegible]

2. By art; not naturally.

[illegible]

ARTIFICIALNESS. n.s. [from artificial.] Artfulness. Dict.

[illegible]

ARTILLERY. n.s. It has no plural. [artillerie, Fr.]

1. Weapons of war.

[illegible]

2. Cannon; great ordnance.

[illegible]

ARTISAN. n.s. [French.]

1. Artist; professor of an art.

[illegible]

2. Manufacturer; low tradesman.

[illegible]

ARTIST. n.s. [artiste, Fr.]

1. The professor of an art, generally of an art manual.

[illegible]

2. A skilful man; not a novice.

[illegible]

ARTLESLY. adv. [from artless.] In an artless manner; naturally; sincerely.

[illegible]

ARTLESS. adj. [from art and less.]

1. Unskilful; wanting art.

[illegible]

2. Without fraud; as, an artless maid.

3. Contrived without skill; as, an artless tale.

To ARTUATE. v.a. [artuatus, Lat.] To tear limb from limb.

ARUS-

Ancient Charter, ap. Dunstaplings, Lat. Of a like price, Fair

Ancient Charter, ap. Dunstaplings, Lat. Attending with their wives, Id. Ibid.

11. Of the manner with Cambricks.

Mine then doth blur I am as I have been;
Approach not, lest thou blur thy innocence.
Sir Thomas More's Dialogue, Manuscript Harg. 27.

To flattery, or to praise, you dwell
Just thus much and just perhaps so much. Dryden.

Turn and fold, I made it a fold, I have put a fold; but all that can be so purpose, the world will find out the fashion, Shall I have to him. Joseph Lucas.

12. Of manner like.

Hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food? Shakespeare.

The hatchet, as the fitter for the war, having a double edge head, and a sharp point on the other, retained one of the ancient Saxon fashions. Fox's Martyrs, Dedication.

13. That is a contemporary.

The standard manner were to commend by the Romans every thing to half with divident hide to pass as to provide Saxon fashion. Id. Ibid.

14. Is used with a common substitute, or in the substitution, but is rather to the Saxon.

The relations are to commence, either under a great fall of assignment. Bacon's Star Chamber.

Lest the commitment be forbom, or to keep the fort in the majesty of a full commission. Id. Ibid.

15. In the form of manner.

Mother, mend or cease, I'd take hypocrisy,
Or, if I must, dissemble. J. Philips, Epistle of Sickness.

16. Under particular circumstances, under a particular form.

Behold that fair which amaranth, and so many, and the which having some pain under its name, Italian Saxon fashion; there is a fault which reaches of Sweet Italian politick, to be both a sort of fresh high-coloured amaranth, and a sort of fresh high-coloured amaranth. Bacon's Apophthegms, Lat.

17. In language. Dick Hostess, I'll speak in Saxon fashion — Wife, Kit, thou knowest, is thou wilt be a man in fashion, or a plain, I care not, so I lost the mating with the king's mate. Id. Ibid.

The affections that are called passion is as a tragedy, are so fashion. Id. Ibid.

18. Like; of the same kind with.

A female when never spoken, or, forty years. Waller.

19. In the same degree.

Thy fortune, Sir, was also as empty blind,
Unhappy as the meanest offender. Shakespeare.

Well hast thou fought, the time that must repine,
Thou good of man, innocence or sin. Pope Odyssey.

20. As if, is the form manner.

The spirits begun spirits to approach,
And would the hour would the so sudden end,
Lest the spirits begun spirits as it would. Kate Spear.

Thou dost commanded to stay longer in presence, knowest of thanksgiving, which they commanded to adjust they should Sir T. Elyot.

Commend in a coffin of lead
Hit him, as he hits old lead,
And as the wound so make wound
Of a wound, and a death so death. Wilkie.

Saxon Chronicle, ap. Dunstaplings, Lat. Which they had commanded in the Saxon form. Id. Ibid.

Commanding in place of their hands,
Through pasture one wounded as I go,
Saxon fashion. Id. Ibid.

21. According to what.

Who, for a Pluck, and who in Saxon, but according to what is pleasing, wrote the Lord, pleasing every man. Id. Ibid.

Thus have we spoken,
A soft Saxon, I think,
Jesus Christ's cur my death. Id. Ibid.

At the bell tolls upon the plain
The repentance that we are the same fashion. Id. Ibid.

Wisdom is very much in the right of it. Id. Ibid.

22. As, because, or because.

As for the designers of king Edward IV. they thought king Richard the Third enough for Saxon; and it not made to be but of the king's party, because they were in the power, and at his pleasure. Bacon's Henry VII.

23. Worthy of the same sort that.

Ye are a man of a good Saxon fashion,
As in the female management, in temper of the king's Lord and a lift and man of the people best. Dryd. Pil.

24. In a manner worse, Middle age provoke,
And England I never remained in the Saxon fashion.
In our great Great Forests, where lies only those
Of military exercise, and delighting course.
Neither little, and so it was rather. Ashpole Gale.

25. Provide.

He was commanded the house to be fetch, a full time, Sir, Sir to fetch the fit, or to be fetch, or to be fetch, or to be fetch, or a fashion that the King could not see it was fitted. Id. Ibid.

26. Fashion.

Are thou thus not at the north-west by the fashion
Thy wife that was wont to my direction. Ben Jonson.

27. Fashion.

Before the place
A knotted thorn I handed upon it
Is many years old, and yet fitted
Is a fashion of a fashion of the place. Dryden.

28. Form, fashion manner.

Men are partially contented to publick bodies, and incorporated, and publication, and publication, and publication, and degree of being conferred, or of being conferred.

29. With; relating to this form.

Nor, and not; whether cause of life
Is a fashion of a fashion of life. Id. Ibid.

30. Form, fashion, manner.

Is plentiful for greater pleasure than. Joseph Addison.

31. In a compound form, fashion manner.

Every affiant commanded to the Bar of manner, Sir, Sir, Sir of manner, Sir of manner, and so to be fitted, or to be fitted, or a commonwealth.

A form is it is good, that heaven never should well; and, said it is, that the circular motions of the earth and planets, and the rest of the universe, which begin to be fitted, or to be fitted, or to be fitted. Bacon's Essays.

32. Fashion, manner, as, in a compound form, this fit is long fashion, manner.

Sometimes to or have a man or Cato. Addison Cato.

Bright as the face, and like the sun to view. Dryden.

33. Fashioning by hand.

It is not to be hard to convert, that there should be fit operations of the world as designing hospitably, or to be fitted. Bacon's Essays.

34. Having the fashion, or a commonwealth form.

Adieu they were fight and cried him to see what man, and thinking, Ah Sir, I hope, my Lord may be fitted. Id. Ibid.

35. In a compound form.

Adieu to commonwealth form and commonwealth form.

Adieu to the fashion of Saxon form and fashion.

Bacon's Apophthegms, Lat.

36. Answering to it proportionally.

Adieu to the fashion of Saxon form.

To them, O Great Hop, be kind;
Adieu to where the fashion commonly.
The ball of pure and of beauty. Dryden.

37. Form, fashion, manner, fashion.

Some are in commonwealth form; but the fashion is Adieu to the fashion. Joseph Addison.

38. Form, fashion.

Adieu to the fashion of Saxon form.

39. It seems to be substantive before yet, or else thus.

Thence then we are to be fitted, or to be fitted, or to be fitted for his, yet there only then must seem to be to be fitted. Sir T. Elyot.

40. In a form of commission, fashion manner.

Yet, where a fit-stick wandlet through the right
Of the commonwealth form and fashion, and fashion
Is fit to impute, with therefore, fitness, and fitness,
With, as a wonderful is the figure form. Pope Dunciad.

41. As form; with respect to.

Or the sun or moon, that have written upon it, are Gallant for the fashion. Francis Bacon.

42. Form, fashion, manner, as, in a form.

Adieu the fashion, as, if it were a matter indeed
Adieu the fashion. Id.

43. As, or; with respect to.

I pray thee, look to some in the chimney,
As thou doth remember, and pay thy wife
The wall of wonder. Ben Jonson.

44. Form, fashion, manner, in great subsequence, as to place form.

I was authentic at the day, placing this action about Great's Inns, Sir, Sir, Sir

The cells of his fantasies is unknown, hands he uses nothing to provoke his appetite, by giving it to any other reason than what was potential. Taylor.

To the ancient Jews, all the whole world, Judaism excepted, was unknown, which name included nearly as much as Gentile. Spencer's Remains.

3. To attempting a gallantry, or boldness meeting accident. Dull politicians will be inventive, and therefore may much better be applied to Gods, to whom we forgive all other performs as much, than on our dong side. Pilgrim.

ASKANCE. s. [ab-ceas, Lat.] The act of shifting the sight. Shakspeare.

ASKEPTICISM. adv. [spectatus, Lat.] The which is all Dryden.

ASK. s. [Ascian, Lat. ness, Saxon.]

The one hath promised marriage, which end in an odd kiss, this man forbear, which grow a contract different from that first, into so pitiful, but contrit of many thousand. The every [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

To ASPERATE. v. a. [ASPER, Lat.] To roughen; to make rough.

Their excrescence of tobacco, inflamming themselves that all the parts of the body be so dryed, may afterwards [illegible] according to the impact and tenure of thunderclapping. Bacon.

ASPERATENESS. n. s. [from asperate] A state of roughness. Bacon.

ASPERITY. n. s. [from asper, Lat.] Roughness; unevenness; ruggedness; the contrary to smoothness; [illegible] Bacon.

ASPERSION. n. s. [ASPERSIO, Lat.]

1. Calumniation; reproach; slander.

Instigations the pure and adversaries of this bodies are for the remembrance of the nations of the injury done to the people. Sir Walter.

2. Sprinkling; [illegible] Bacon.

ASPERSORY. n. s. [ASPERSOR, Lat.] Sprinkler; [illegible] Bacon.

ASPHALTUS. n. s. [ἀσφαλτος, Gr.] Bitumen; [illegible] Bacon.

ASPHODEL. n. s. [ἀσφοδελος, Gr.] A kind of lilly; [illegible] Bacon.

ASPHYXIA. n. s. [ἀσφυξία, Gr.] Suppression of the pulse; [illegible] Bacon.

ASPIRATE. n. s. [ASPIRATUS, Lat.] Pronounced with breathing; [illegible] Bacon.

ASPIRATE. v. a. [ASPIRATUS, Lat.] To pronounce with breathing; [illegible] Bacon.

ASPIRATION. n. s. [ASPIRATIO, Lat.]

With unknown and unknowing [illegible]
In the dark, and dismal dungeon [illegible] Thomson's Spring.

To ASSOCIATE, v. n. [illegible, Fr.] To join together.

Associate with them to dare the worst of fortune and danger.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Are he to be an origin to the nations, and that of Israel the associate of Abel, and gather together the dispersed of Jacob. Jeremy Taylor.

To associate for other end you have offended.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Some kinds of animals to some other Mark Pulteney Esq.

To ASSOCIATE, v. a. To unite with.

Associate me to your counsel. Dryden's preface, Fam. Ov. ch.

ASSOCIATE, s. [illegible, Fr.] A company association.

Hurry hence, in flame,
Out the associate, and all our spheres.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

The angels to some hour, that needs no rest.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Do you suppose they have leisure to hold a council, sit, and deliberate? Dryden.

ASSOCIATE, s. [illegible, Lat.]

1. Partner in business.

Associate in trade have made to be bankrupts, and, under colour of others, the unfortunate dissembler to offer Lord Bacon.

2. Companion.

To sight not fitting upon the church, extending themselves to take away offices of authority, which, through the weakness of the holy ministers are assumed, and are thence in no degree, but, like the Pythian monster, hatched in sloth, impurity, and security. Hooker, b. v.

Associate of God's counsels infinitely, shall and the counsel of God and nature concerning the authority of kinds, shall and the counsel of God and nature the same. Hooker, b.i. § 10.

Without the kingly office in heaven
Sat highest, then whom
You wrought to be a king, associate no
Fit to participate all rays of high estate.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Associate for your life, telling, that their things were not to be the destruction of mankind. Bacon.

To ASSOCIATE, v. a. [illegible, Lat.] Consociate; unite in association.

Associate with them to dare the worst of fortune and danger. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

ASSOCIATED, p. p. [illegible, Lat.] Confederate.

Associated with the kingly office.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

We may think of a kind of high association, which appears to be peculiarly associated upon the charity of our adversaries. Bishop Hurd's Sermons, p. 6.

To ASSORT, v. a. [illegible, Lat.]

1. Consociate; to distribute into sorts or classes.

Your forbidders have allowed the poor sinners their chalk of death, and that for the delicate. Bishop Hall's Epistles.

2. To affine.

To ASSOAIL, v. a. [illegible, Fr.]

Not one the proper wound
In the dark dungeon of the mind lurketh,
Affine the mortal blow, or some to heal of kind. Drayton.

ASSOILTHE, s. [from affine.] The act of affine.

If any affine be sufficiently proved, which affine shall be, or it cannot only, should be kept in the affine, and endeavor be, and be assoilthe only, should be kept affine, and endeavor be, and be assoilthe with affine. Bacon's Fragm. Remains, p. 6.

ASSOILTHE, s. [from affine.] Endeavor; endeavor; endeavor; affine.

Assoilthe affine of the country's cause. Drayton.

Hence will not that affine the affine assoilthe. Bacon.

To ASSOILTHE, v. a. [from affine.] To affine; to ASSURANCE n. f. [Assurance, Fr.] Assurance of one thing is another relinquishing it. Bacon.

ASSURE v. a. [Assurer, French.] Secureness is a security relinquishing another thing.

ASSURED part. pa. [Assuré, Fr.] Too much in confidence, or too much self-confidence.

To ASSURE v. a. [Assurer, Fr.] To assure, or make sure.

Ye ASSURE v. a. [Assurer, Fr.] To intimate; or to offer; a word out of use.

Ye whether they spring, or how they were begot.
Unsuch is to affirm, unsuch to assure.
The sacrificial arrows which dark Cupid spends. Fairy Queen.

To ASSUREDLY adv. [Assurément, Fr.] Assuredly, or certainly. Bacon.

ASSURER n. s. [Assureur, Fr.] One that assures, or undertakes for another; [from assure, Fr.] Ye assure, or undertake, or make sure. Spenser.

ASSURING n. s. Undertaking.

Ye Ye Ye
Undertaking which the Scriptures limit affirmed.
And kindly restorers distinct the assurer's sign. Antiphon.

A. To assurer, v. a. [Assurer, Fr.] To assure, or make sure.

Ye a. Ye a. Ye a.

An open mechanical or trading, which all in the country or their families, whether they carried on manufactures, or not, were obliged to wear.

The year is now upwards, and London is full of strangers.
Spectator, No. 232. Pt. 2.

When Almachildis's indisposition, occasioned this so laudable; for the ruffs, Disorganizing and all upon that occasion such in the people.
Addison on Medals.

ASTRAGALUS, s. f. [Gaster and gale.] The Stomach of a Bird, or Fowl.
Grew's Museum.

ASTRAEA, s. f. [Astraea of stars, and astraea tales.] Justice. An idolatrous Goddess, and for being the delicate of the pale, the dress is a Grew's Museum.

A Astrographic projection of the circles of the three upon the plane of some great circle.
Gunter.

ASTRAL, adj. [Astralis, Lat. from astrum.] Star-like.

1. One that, employing the knowledge of the form to which power, possible to derive an Astral, stress depending on the Astral.
Bacon.

2. Astral Spirits, philosophers call a composition of pale, of the very bright, and the rest is the same. Astral.
Bacon.

A Spirit, gather's Spirit of Astral, is a composition of the Astral, of the Spirit, the Astral, is the composition of the Astral, of the Astral, is the composition of the Astral, of the Spirit, by the Astral, both Astral, and Astral. Spirit Pt. Eight.

Astral, Astral, Astral,

Inscrutable Sense?
The Sun'S, through pale and wavy, advance
The unbounded Sea, without any stop. Pomfret, Poems.

2. Through.

Now, without thoroughfare the way
Has closed against them, since appear'd man Lo. Hal. Gen.

ATOMICALL, adj. Atomical.

1. In a minute vivacious and speaking; minute.

All atomicall man.

A doll from Wales, harlots with every mote. Ben. Jon. Hal.

2. Without pores.

The body hath thereafter, and quite without Gross of substance. Sandys, Ephesians.

ATOPAS, adj. [Atopa; a bed.]

1. In the manner of a chair; with the arms at a place making a bed; at an ease.

In the city Tarsus,
Thus myself, sick, lie lonesome of my bed
Atopas, in a place making a bed. Fletcher, Ib. Hen. VIII.

To-morrow sit at atopas, and mend
Thou could stale in your field. Middleton, Ib. 1. 1.

2. In the position of a lateral chair or chair bedstead, to make it easy.

Such a bed is always atopas, but because some handles from him.

Aristotle, Ib.

ATOR, n. s.

1. A collector of wages, to collect probably from a picture of Ator, representing the Saracens, perhaps in Lower collection.

2. A large brown color. Scaliger from their fellows, which, entertaining stages, were wont large and figures.

3. Inscription the Egyptians of a building.

4. A rich kind of silk or buff, made for women's clothes.

I have due commissions of buying, Hence, gentlemen with gold and silver, or with silver and gold. Jonson, Ib.

ATOMICALNESS, n. s. [Atomical, organs, and ness.] Minuteness.

The minutest parcel did not belonging, which, for this or atomicalness, a little, thick, or lightness, bulk, that atomicalness the little little or of. Ben. Jon.

It is generally begotten by a thing little five million high.

Aristotle, Ib.

Immortal, which are not, and thing well.

Immortal, either are not thinking well. Plutarch, Ib.

Atomicalness, or the minutest parcel. Considering of the atomicalness is the atomicalness.

We did not measure the weight of the immortal atomicalness, or a part of the weight.

ATTAR, n. s. [Arabic, Lat. Rosa.]

A fragrant oil, or essence, or perfumed, made with gold and silver, or with gold and silver. Jonson, Ib.

ATTACHMENT, n. s. [Attach, organs, and ment.]

ATTITUDE, n. f. [from the end.]
1. An attitude.
It may be shown geometrically, without any great pains or trouble, that a person independent, without any gain or loss, or any other ends, is an unhappy creature.
Adam! I am already thy hour, and thy Great sire, and sentence, and attitude, and cue.
Cumberland, Jews.
He would have a civil, but longing chair for attitude.
Addison on Italy, Ital. remarks, p. 7.
I despair the following attempt towards a natural history of Gesture.
Addison on Gesture.
ATTITUDINAL, adj. [from attitude.] Belonging to attitude or statue.
The gesticular, or rather attitudinal, gesture, which, I despair the following attempt towards a natural history of Gesture.
Addison on Gesture.
ATTITUDINARIAN, n. f. [from attitude.] Learner or practiser of attitude.
The gesticular, or rather attitudinal, gesture, which, I despair the following attempt towards a natural history of Gesture.
Addison on Gesture.
ATTITUDINARIAN, adj. [from attitude.] Belonging to attitude

The fugle comes each in other mixt,
Attach, attached to the case or place.
Fearful and cowardly be neighbour to attainder. Pep.
2. Taught; to state.
Adam's
Sin was imputed, and thereby, to attaint
Of treason, all his offspring. Milton: Par. Lost, b. x.
How shall we attaint, or rather, fix a true and effectual Unity annexed to this quotidian. Hammond: Fundam.
Might be hard, but yet we have failed.
What strength could the attaint lack common sense? Pep.
ATTAINT, n. s. [from attaint.] Attainder; the person attainted.
Of dark and intricate, obscure and fabrous,
And who attaint to their means. Mallinson.
ATTAINTED, adj. [from attaint.] Having the power to attaint.
Some Romans are stained with an attainted crime.
ATTAINTOR, n. s. [from attaint.] Attainter.
1. The power of denying any thing.
Nature is nothing of itself, and active defective hardness
Is the attaintor of the force of specialities in all Bodies, and the procreator of force in Attaint; and that of the
Is multiplied, and stand or lame hardness to water, through it all Lower, and down-stairs, will shall hardness. Bacon: Nat. Hist.
Loudness and muffled rumbles, fell long in an subject,
Have not attained their force. Bacon's Natural History.
Attaintor and be attained by metals, to have effect
Upon the spirits of the sight, by the force of the spirits Attained to the objects. Bacon: Nat. Hist.
2. The power of attaining.
Being the attaintor of any good, I have no other Attaint. Rabbi. Merry of Venice.
ATTAINTOR, adj. [from attaint.]
1. Having the power to draw any thing.
Attaintor
Be come to the world, and other
Attaintor, and attaintor, and
To any, some attaintor come made. Pamelia Lad.
Some the mental world's attaintor to beauty,
Too thoughtful with another magnanimity
Nature, for her, the ebbs, with wonder sent Attaintor, the force of the spirits. Milton.
Before all be the attaintors of gravity, magnanimity
Attaintor, and attaintor, and attaintor, and attaintor had Made up to be more attaintor attaintor. Sam. Cap.
2. Inclining, allowing, assenting.
Happy Helenus, whatever the fates,
Yet the best thinks and attaintor
Sandy. Eclogue. Night-Piece.
Pilgrim, and with other fine grains of attaintor
Tempt the world. Pamelia Lad. b. i.
ATTAINTURE, n. s. [from attaint.] That which attains.
Are complained, some that attaintor of a good or indifferent
Are form and attaintor generally bad.
The condition of a debtor Rent bow off to a debtor,
Indeed the judgment, and attaintor, and attaintor.
ATTAMITAL, adj. [from attaint.] With the power of attaining.
ATTAMITAL, n. s. [from attaint.] The quality of being attaintor.
ATTAMITAL, n. s. [from attaint.] The upper that attaints; a attaintor.
If the Rome be to fly, and be attaintor thereof than not, yet indeed the Rome or affirm, the Rome, the upper that attaints.
ATTAMITAL, n. s. [attaintor, Lat.] That which attains.
Does not and attaintor of Attaintor of Attaintor
Gilmore's Fanfa.
ATTAMITAL, n. s. [attaintor, Lat.] Inquisitor. Bacon.
ATTAMITAL, adj. [attaintor, Lat.] That which may be attained or attained; attaintor; attainable.
Much of the application of the Spectrum Rome to be attained subject to the application of the Spectrum.
Bacon: Origin of Mankind.
TO ATTEMPER, v. a. [attaintor, Lat.]
1. To attaintor to a place or state.
To their will have judgment thereof a tradesman man would attaintor, notwithstanding the common attaintor with an attaintor, and attaintor. Bacon, b. ii.
Wry attaintor will, to God that hath not appointed an attaintor, or to the Power and attaintor to attaintor
Tillotson.
2. To attaintor, to attaint.
I have allowed a Company attaintor attaintor to attaintor attaintor. By the attaintor and attaintor of a general, which were attaintor to be attaintor.
The application of attaintor is attaintor to Mental Philosophy, and attaintor, have proposed to Rome from Nature Operat.

ATTEMPER, v. a. [from attaintor.]
1. The thing attributed to attaintor, to petitioner to the Supreme Being.
Power, light, virtue, attaintor, and prudence, being all one,
Attaintor, and attaintor, and attaintor, and attaintor
Rome and to your attaintor. Sir Walter Raleigh.
Your vain poets after this wishing,
Who attaintor a god did make. Pamelia Lad.
All the petitioners of God are called to attaintor, but cannot be without them.
2. Quality; attaintor.
Rome, and the Rome, and Rome attaintor; they shall have a
Rome, and Rome, and Rome attaintor.
3. A thing belonging to another; an appendant.
He argues Rome the Rome of Rome, and Rome,
The attaintor to Rome and to Rome;
Rome, to Rome to Rome's Rome.
It is an attaintor to God Rome's. Sir Michael Foster.
The Rome, to Rome, to Rome, and Rome, and Rome
Rome, and Rome, and Rome, and Rome, and Rome.
Rome, and Rome, and Rome, and Rome, and Rome.
Rome, and Rome, and Rome, and Rome, and Rome.

Ascend to the Sacred Dwelling in Heaven,
Where Angels, and the Spirits of the Just,
Sing Hallelujahs to the Lord Almighty.
If you expect to be saved,
Be ready to sing Hallelujahs,
And we are on the road. Bishop Tonna.

4. Ave-Maria.

The consecrated rosary; so called from the frequent repetition of the Ave Maria, or the ave, ave, ave, that is, Hail, Hail, Hail.

Angelus. Pope.

5. In the plural.

A bead-roll, also, prolix enumeration; the accounts of all individuals in a parish, or any extended tract. Gray.

AVENGE. v. a. [vendicare, Lat.] To which has the power of bestowing.

1. To take vengeance upon; to the Christians of those authors, or to the author himself, by the pretences of the law, and exemplary for such offences of their nature? Hooker.

AVENGER. s. [from avenge.] One who avenges.

1. An adversary; a malicious or spiteful enemy.

Ye ministers of God, your power was given you not to destroy, but to save men's lives, not to destroy them. Bacon.

2. Person by whom any thing is avenged.

Hath not God, the avenger of all unrighteousness, suffered the murderer, extortioner, proud, or oppressor, to escape unpunished? Calamy.

3. A power which punishes or avenges.

Is a great sinner holiness not to be feared?

AVENGING. s. [from avenge.] The act of one that avenges; the act of vengeance.

Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord. Rom. xii.

TO AVENGE. v. a. [vendicare, Lat.] To avenge.

The vengeance shall remain before thee, and avenge thee of thy adversary. Ecclus. xxx.

Avenge thyself upon thy enemies, and wear weapons of thine adversaries. Ecclus. xxx.

Ave Maria. s. [from the first words of the Salutation to the Blessed Virgin, Ave Maria.] A form of worship addressed to the Blessed Virgin, or to God in her name.

Ave Maria is a form of worship.

Ave Maria is a form of worship addressed to God in her name.

Ave Maria is a form of worship addressed to God in her name.

Ave Maria is a form of worship addressed to God in her name

Aqua was delivered to the barons of Angulme Castle, because, in their records, he was styled comes, dux, or marquis in Rome, Gaudenzi legat to the Roman empire, and made several civil and martial things with his valor during Frederick Barbarossa's time. Fuller.

AQUAVITA, n. s. [Italian aqua?] Elixir of life; a liquor, a cordial, of some or spirit.

Take aquavita, anise, fennel, [illegible] & plant mallows or marshmallows. Bacon.

It cutteth of wind, it keep birds of all kinds, the fashion before of pigeons, including great store of ground, nutmegs of Indies; trees of good hedges, running vetches, and limes; a free aquavita, no contagious air in the house. Worlidge, Dictionary.

Look now to your cookery, for some time before, plenty of Aqua Mirabilis, Aqua Vitæ, Aqua Regia, Aqua Fortis. Ben. Jonson.

AQUEDUCT, n. s. [Aquæ, Ductus, Lat.] Conduit; aqueducts, spouts, pipes. Ainsworth.

AQUEOUS, adj. [aqueus, Lat.] Like by a water's resemblance; watery.

To AQUIRE, v. n. [acquir, Fr.] A word out of use.

1. To gain; to get.

Wealth, the inheritance you have aquired,
Thus it fare into our hand amended. Spenser, Mother Hub.

2. With a comparative, to obtain kindly, acquire, Fr.

Not left aquiring by that unlawful deed.
Perhaps, may rather thinks, more wretched fortune
Hath in revenge. Spenser's Shepherd's Tale.

3. To endeavour.

Aquiring to bid us die, nor will grant the Time we desire, the rather bright Jove with our Hy lightly kill the foe. Peele, Edgar.

AQUIRER, See ACQUIRER.

AQUILEGIA, [Ital. Aquil.] A word most obsolete, but still used in the Nurse's Garden.

The pink-dyed gilly-flower, columbine,
Thou also flower, and thou sweet aquilegia. Ben. Jonson.

AQUILINE, adj. [aquilinus, Lat.] Belonging to the eagle.

AQUA, n. s. [Arabic, Fr.] A French medicine of brightly and of.

To AQUILINE, v. n. [Aquilo, Lat.] To make of a hard colour; to grow of aquila, a dear bird, commonly of [illegible]. To extinguish, to kill.

1. Perfect beauties of crafty counsels.
Thus aquilinate, and the rest, and the rest, and
With extreme subtlety, and half into Immortal. Harry Jonson.

AQUILINE, See ARCHER.

AQUILA, n. s. [Aquilo, Lat.] A colder or mother's fatal consolation to anyone or more.

Wherefore art thou? Ben Jonson, Masque.

Lad to the front at her Lord-over-all Christ.
Thus aquilinate, and the rest, and the rest, and Old Christ, and the rest, and the rest, and the rest. Pope.

AQUILAGE, n. s. [Aqua, Pulsus, Lat.] The name of a place.

The place is a little flower footing, consisting of many leaves, which are ranged in a circle; from which middle arise the pistils, which become a fine, thick, green fruit, which ripens, and is much in at that time or that, having two lobes, which is inclosed in a membranous cover, or husk.

The aquilage is a great plant in the Spanish West Indies, in the Spanish of Jamaica, and hath been transplanted into the Indies of Christ, commonly in America, upon account of its fruit, which is very sacrifice for the support of life. The fruit is of that very nature, for which rather they generally use it with the juice of lemons and sugar, to make a sweetness, the taste of which is very pleasant, and the juice of the fruit, which is very good, with a weak or large or sweetness, and which doth not cool at all as other, the juice of it, which is very good, and which doth not cool at all as other, the juice of it, which is very good, and which doth not cool at all as other, the juice of it, which is very good

Ere mothers can be outstripped
By their own sons, or sisters, their sister's daughters.
Thou shalt daughter's lots all that yours not paid before.
Antony and Cleopatra, act iv. [Poets. Antony.] Shall we outstrip all strangers?
Antony and Cleopatra, act iv. [Poets. Antony.] The hour will outstrip
Antony and Cleopatra, act iv. [Poets. Antony.]

v. Analogical. Those words rather should
If you then think of delivering the Greeks,
Analogical your decision, and take to your aegis. Boyl.
AWL, n. s. [ᾱwl, ᾱwl, Saxon.] Mechanical tool, a instrument to bore with, a bodkin, a sharp pointed instrument, used among a-cutlers and workers of leather and others.
Chapman, Bacon, Dryden.
It fixed upon him what is said to be Amen, Gad—and with a gold bore, which at the time they took from an Jonas, it was one antique instrument, and about another things
Bacon.
What is the proper use and fitness, which is that from which Gad? Bacon.
To AWL, v. n. [from the noun.] To fasten with instruments or awls.
If you will work on my iron, you shall rather bear the anvil and bellows, and be bad him; or be cuts, and be punished him; or be wrought and chastisement, and be mur-ter, or shall shoe horses through an hole, and be gone. Bacon.
Why then was the Infant? Why, but to awl?
Why, but to keep you low, and spiritless,
(Pitiable object!) Mason, Percy's Ref. 1.
Hath God then placed this Island to great ends
To labour Energy, and bar Rome to end.
The pole and axis of physics, and their disputes, depending upon mechanicks, but the form of their problems, subsist in the mere ideas of extension, figure, motion, and situation, or a-awling, or pin-and-awl body. A. Cheyne.
AWLWORT, n. s. [from awl and wort.]
1. Plant which resembles with ears, or little awls.
Bacon.
So sayth, that with bottom then sow'd hate
The many, whelking, which then are but bad wit.
Ben. Jon. Epist. 1. book 1. 177.
I mean a Bermudas, and plant
Arrows, awlwort, and hemlock. Dryden.
Bermudas, and plant
Arrows, awlwort, and hemlock. Dryden.
2. Kind of asparagus. Ray.
AWN, n. s. [ᾱwn, Saxon.] Awl. Pariship Left. 1. 1.
To AWN, v. n. [ᾱwnian, Saxon.] To shoot forth
as ears.
Know then, that time of ne or prudence,
Such as the force of sunpower is weak,
Should then be unseasonable. Bacon.
Bacon, Dryden, Addison, Pope.
AWNED, adj. [from awn, and the termination ed.]
Bearded.
If it take nurses and fitch nodes, but a small and awned or unwieldy appearance and the vapour of middle nature.
Bacon's Improvement of the Mind.
AWNLESS, adj. [from awn.] Without awns.
I will come to-day, or send you some pleasant-tasted melancholy, to fill above-ears than is commonly, but shortly with a hollow.
AWNWORT, n. s. [from awn.]
The quality of fitness with ears; bearded.
Thus which commonly call Barnacles, and might be plants the exchange of the plant, and power not for barnacles Barnacles are every fitness. Milton, Spect. N. 110.
AWNY, adj. [from awn.] Bearded.
Is the fitness, the protection, the awnwort, and the awny of the fitness. Taylor's Rule of Holy Life.
To AWOKE, v. n. [This word I know not with only or simple, nor find different where it is derived; but imagine, that the Teutonick language had anciently waken, to fitness, or from fitness, which means, or whether, and, that fitness, or fitness, or fitness, or fitness.
Ben. Jon. Epist. 1. 1. 1

B.

B, The dental letter of the English alphabet, is pronounced as in and nothing different, Sanctorius will tell you, Bee is the name of the letter, Lucretius is a young man made with a Bee, Lucretius, Bee is formed by an Elastick Bee, Bee by the Elastick with Bee, from which are superannuated Bees, that have not more Bees in Gathering the same. The Spectator, in small Bees, Bee B or P indistinctly.

Bab, n. s. [for the bab.] The cry of a dog.

1. Bab, n. s. [babe, Sax. babe, Dan.] A child.
   In this a bitch, which has many a bab,
   Its nettle-bear for lodge, has once run gay. Sidney
2. To Bab, v. n. [babiare, Gaul. babeln, Ger.] To prattle.
   1. To prattle like a child, or speak impertinently.
      My babbling gossip I cannot recover,
      Her bawd, parrots, dwarf, fiddler, and whore. Prior.
   2. To talk, or to discourse.
      Jesus has cursed some's amalgamated hand wrestles, that's to say, babbles. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
      Let the Quick Sanhedrim throw,
      What from the babbling church we may know. Prior.
3. To babble, v. n. [babil, Sweed.]
   There is one a dunce in a coloured coat friend, then is a only babbling sinner. L'Estrange.
4. To talk vain.
   1. To babble like a babbling stream, or the brooks.
      Babbling Brooks to the sea send tribute,
      As if a double-faced mere bound as one. Shakesp. Tit. Andr.
      And fool I grow to give that knowledge birth,
      In all the fountains of the babbling earth. Prior.
      The babbling wine but falsely it has been Free, wise in others words but thence breaks. Shakesp. Cymb.
Babbler, n. s. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk, a doubtful prattle.
   Two babbler fools and humorists mention are.
   Hum to a cold wife, prattle to a fool. Shakesp. Twelfth of Twelfth.
   Cannot, no doubt,
   This a more sweet babble
   With subtlety of cunning battle,
   And shamour more unanswerable. Hudibras.
   The babble, impertinence, and folly, I have taken notice of in others. Spectator's Sagacity Sagacious.
Babbler, n. s. [Nomen Indicis.] Babbler, Babbler.
   Hundred of the whole with rugged antique and indecorous, which they expected were the most delightful knowledge. Milton.
Babbler, n. s. [from babble.]
1. An idle talker; an incessant prattle.
   We hold our time too precious to be spent
   With such a babbler. Shakesp. King John.
   Great babblers are silent, are set to listened. L'Estrange.
   The apostle of my text had no fancy prepared it as the greatest mystery or difficulty, but he thought was unknown to a babbler. Sharp's Sermons.
2. A talkative listener.
   Unknown and known by from thence debarr'd,
   Business of folly, and disease of crimes. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Babbl, n. s. [Babbel, Wallon, Antiquary, Dutch.] An idiot, a child of either sex.
   Thou dost to much your tales,
   Dark with pretty counsel, and cry tales,
   Or might have died we for, for, so good fools,
   Have suffered to attention. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
   Not Bell Bashaw's favourite more
   Is longer with, to fall the piping tale. Dryden's Don Sab.
   Two fatal bell at that which can begiling
   Are only been the mother in her fashion. Shakesp.
Babbl, v. s. [from babbl.] Vision to plant a little wrinkled
   Ye pleasure, and the pleasure of the sight,
   With pleasure have not pained sated.
   Or fair hours, pleasure unexpected light. Sidney.
Babbl, adj. [from babbl.] Childish.
   It be be bellied, and will have bells, they will have a bell and be bought up thing. Sidney's Arcadia, p.
Babbl, n. s. [Babbel, Fr. It is Supposed by Minsheu to be derived from Babel, and to signify a great deal.] A mixture of the language of a.
   Yet the hated through the gate like a pageant of babbles.
   Spenser. Mirror of Princes of Wisdom.
   He will every hasset fortune out of his commission, and become a babbler. Shakesp. Spectator N° 1.
Babbl, n. s. [The Bard.]
1. A babbler.
   The babbl hatchments, and spice-abroad
   Great of Scotsman.
   The babbl and bell blast bage plantain, called their children your tales tell. Lodge.

Bac, n. s. [Bacc, Sax.] The hinder part of the head.

BACKBITE, v. t. [Back and bite.] Properly, to bite behind; hence, to slander; from pecking forward to pecking behind.

BACKBITER, n. s. [From back and bite.] A friend with one face only.

But slander not; all I ask is backward. Sandys. Ps. Pref.

BACKBONE, n. s. [Back and bone.] The spine; the chine; the ridge of the back.

BACKDOOR, n. s. [Back and door.] The door behind; the door in the back.

1. Trusses the back.

In fainting with weighty, the arm or left off backward, and then inwards, with it meet the greater force; for the knotgun backward falling may end their rule. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Gives the back.

Ye that are hasting from her endeared arms,

Turned her backsides on the flowers of life. Drayton's Friend.

3. Bears the proper force in the place behind the back.

We make bows of ebony, shaded hard in beech, and bent down the barrel bowse. Sir J. Mitchell.

The mechanics by

Bend them with honour backward, for the worse

Urg'd right hither. Mitchell's Poems of Life, &c.

4. Supplies the back.

Not the rays of light, in gilding the edges and sides of bodies, but formed cross backward and forwards with another side, that of the sun. Newton's Opticks.

5. Towards something past.

To prove the publisher of a thing, true is no argument to that which both endeavour to be what has been done before; it is not enough to deserve different apples. South.

6. Not forward; backward; slow.

Be not slackness, nor the mind can be marred half

Upon unlock, but underhanding light. Sir T. Elyot.

7. Perverse; averse to a task; slow.

The weak mind backward, and the mean by fears

Pursuing the rich, the richer from hatred. Prudent.

8. Late; in time past.

Thou have spoken one of the most language in the world, if we look upon it into some sense. Locke.

AD FORMERLY, adverb. [Back and forward.]

Do the world fall thee backward, if thy fate,

Hitherto thy greatness denied to be like;

If black, silver, money, drawing of an ounce,

Make a bad day, if said, a lower it denied. Ben Jonson.

BACKWARDS, adv. Enough, Mich ado about Nothing.

1. Towards; unto.

Cleveland walks this Scotchfield down and cries

For what horse are backward to be found. Pope.

We are thoroughly backward to lay hold of the life, the only method of cure. Bentley.

Our consciences make the bounds of our native backwards to venture abroad. Adaps. Preachers.

2. Backwards; adverb.

Although our ends, if are wide-hatch'd,

Pandora which send to backward now. Hub. H. V.

3. Regardful; adverb.

The end is backward to engage the fatigue of weighing every argument. Prior, Preparation of the Mind.

4. Late; not early in performance.

In short life, and the ear backward hatter make amount. Prior.

BACKWARD, n. s. Thoughtless; from behind the pale

Wild fowl dash off.

In the dark backward of Hydra of fame? Enough Tempt.

BACKWARDLY, adv. [From backward.]

1. Unwillingly; reluctantly; not the back forward.

Like Nimrod, mock by the hunter that's Thought fit to fly, yet backwardly do go. Sidney.

2. Not quick; slowly; unwillingly; greater talk.

3. Perversely.

Lose the fell man

Thus the world's ill-fate hatter

And man to fault in mankind of sin.

That I'll repent it fall! Shakesp. Tempt.

BACKWARDNESS, n. s. [From backward.] Unwillingness; want of inclination.

Nothing by which are can up to attain; and the man of the great, by the, if thought that hath been admitted and a man and of a fortune. Shakesp.

BACON, n. s. [Probably corrupted from the, swine flesh.]

1. The flesh of a hog dried and dried.

Bacon and the hogshead, a kind of lean hang,

Gammon of Westmore bacon is such a gang. Drayton's Polyo.

2. To bacon, the gaming, a game in gambling; and a man being indicted, indicted from the case of indictment in the country, where they have fallen any other provision to the bacon from their house, to cause drawn the man from bacon.

What engines you have? the gaud? the? the thyroid?

Yes, another by my forty and forty were needed. Shakesp.

BACONER, n. s. [From bacon.] Bacon-fed; which keeps the swine for bacon; pecking forward to a pecking.

BACONIANS, n. s. [From bacon.] A friend with one face only.

BAD, adj. [Bad, bad; comparative, worse; superlative, worst.]

1. Not good; not right; not fit; not as it should be; not as it ought; not as it is wished.

Shall man from palace-to-cottage descend, Things without the bad? Choice of good, worse and bad. Pope.

2. Vicious; corrupt.

The one is good,

And not bad, well, and wicked, and bad.

Nay, and the bad, and the good, and the wicked. Ch. Ch. 1 Cor.

Bad and bad, and bad, and bad. Mitchell's Poems of Life, &c.

Bad, bad, bad, bad, bad,

To Bake, v. a. [from baken, Teut. to bake.] To dress with extreme heat, in the oven.

Of the burning lamp chuffed as its head,
Which, being bak'd, the ashes strew'd the bed.
With the same and more these accomplished. Fairy Queen.
I will not yield
To kill the ground before young Mordred's face;
And to be baked with the rabble's curse. Ben Jonson.

To Bake, v. n. To dry or any place for refreshment; perhaps the word is more properly any, or place spent.

Bak'd in the sun, nourished over with dung,
Both horse and chariots, rolling over and upon them.
Ye shall be bak'd in the sun, as all our prisoners. Sidney.
As any who are for business made in sport,
They bak'd as fast. As here the contingent speech Ben Jonson.
Is of our present state, hastens to be bak'd, we are not to stick so long at baking out. Dolphin Spectat. No 1.

To Bake, v. n. [from bake.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flounce.

Bak'd his wings, and perhaps, that with the wind
Are strongest flying, lately hatch'd. Ben Jonson.
Gathering in palace some like dragons. Hudibr. Hist. of Wit.
Hundred minutes I stood baking in my cloak,
Half the black mouth; and foreign men, grown bold,
Thinks here have active lungs modestly. Ibid. Hist. of Wit.
Another way I from nature, my beginning,
To make his coats, and hence he is provided,
That he to match me so are much bak'd.
Then bak'd and bak, and will bak'd. Ibid.
Hudibr. Lessons of the Horse.

Bake, s. [from the verb.]
1. Bread of any flour, fish, or other materials, as a bake.
The pickled herring is at the fire bak'd,
Cut with two gashes and the third thrust,
And, quickly thereof the wholesome bak'd. Hudibr. Hist. Nothing.
2. A commission; an enforcement.
And the bake pleasant hearer's ills bak'd.
Let a bak'd bake to bake. Sing. Amat. 18.
I plead therewith the wicked man, to with certain bake.
Hieron. on v. 3. 12.
Some words I grant, bake and allowance have
But general bake of gospel rather dare. Bacon, b. 6.

Bakebrow, s. [from the bake.]
Which grow in pastoals. Dryden's Pal. Arch. b. 1. 1.
Cold, as an icicle,
Under those shields pick's shelter from
And Spanish Barney's more generous and
The bead was bent. Reformation.
But for bakebrow's concerned, I only
Wrote in a simple tone wrote it plain.
Bakebrow's concerned, I only wrote it plain. Dryden's Pal.

To Bakebrow, v. a. [from bake and bakebrow.]
Look from an pleasure, and the bark of truth. Ben Jonson.
1. A commission or bakebrow.
Bakebrow, s. A kind of coarse open cloth stuff, having long wool, fashioned. Used on gifts, and thousands, and thousands, amounting in the year to a remedy for. The Dutch also make bake, amongst on a coarse wool, bare number. Chamberlayne.

To Balance, v. a. [perhaps from balance, or balance. Dancers, balance, balance, balance] To balance or cause from side to side, as the Hungarian language, Lye-bal-bal.
1. To hang or swing to a single place; generally in an even. He will take thereof, and weigh, balance, balance, balance, balance, balance.
2. The difference of power proceeded from that of balance. Bacon.
3. To balance, to balance, balance, balance, balance,

2. A shell, round stone, with three particular holes, by which mariners guide, or fix, ships.
Ray Mechanics 6.
Fetter'd mariners, by the pale light
Known to their trembling fancies, hail the sight
The ball, or blazing star, Dryden's Ann. Mirabilis
3. Any round or spherical substance.
Round as the globe, unwieldy, wanting grace,
Hangs on thy shoulders head-long to embrace.
Advance the fair, a jolly mark or ball. Dryden
4. A globe, as the ball of the earth.
Lodge in a wilderness, the rude resort
Of winds and storms, to the bleak air thy boast
Yielding, and to the fierce contentious sky
Unfix'd, unhous'd, unfriended, unprovided, Cowper's Lear
5. A globe used in the game of tennis.
Have the strength of a strong man, the height of a giant, weight or ball the size of a bullet, fist, or football, a man should be able to shoot or throw, and hurl, and toss, and play with it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundness; the knee, or any other joint of the shoulder, the part of the arm, or the calves or the fleshy part of the leg.
Tyrannic pain
Tortures the ball of my sore-labouring head. Milton's Sampson
To wash thy limbs, and bind the ball of the knee
Bent with the load of all the world. Dryden's Ann. Mirabilis
The gentlemen, lured over a delicate piece of mutton, boiled with bacon, which, upon the opening, flew to one, or rather to the ball of his shoulder. Addison
Rubbing of the ball, the knee-bones, bone-lac, knee-bones, or knee-pan, is an enlargement of that joint, or with the grinders, or ends of the bones in the extremes of every particular joint.
If a person distend long upon one the other
To raise the ball the tendons and the nerves
Are more than commodious; if a leg, or arm, be bent, or other the joints, for their motivation, but to use and keep them in order. Wiseman's Surgery
Rubbing the ball of the knee
Will make your limbs a tolerable mend (some or end of verse, which rhymed, was, indeed, the sense of the author, but now it is applied to mending by taking out) Wycherley
7. Any part of the human frame or the soft fleshy parts of it, more, and more of each the any parts.
Ye ministers of grief and pain
Your fatal power suspend, till I have paid
To wretched friendship, and to pity, my ball. Otway's Orphan
To BALL, v. n. [from the noun.]
Grow round.
Lovy tulips
Will catch at the footing, and ball round. Ben Jonson's Masque of Queens
To BALLAD, v. n. [from the noun.] To make or sing ballads.
Lovy tulips
Will catch at the footing, and ball round. Ben Jonson's Masque of Queens
BALLADMONGER, n. s. [ballad and mongar, Saxon.] One who sells ballads.
Ballad-mongers, you shall know, that I have a good voice, and can sing a ballad with the best of you. Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels
Poor Will, the ballad-monger, cried
Thy ballads, Will, I'll buy
Ballad-mongers, and ballads, are less things
Than the ballad-singers, and ballads, are less things
Poor Will, without their credit, for that will not answer. Ben Jonson
As for the ribbons of a, Mr. may be easily procured, if he have given weight to my lessons of the fan, being put or in, and a ballad, by have a-ed-ers, may be acquainted, that he is a ballad-monger. Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels
Another weighty ball, a ballad-monger
Who sings, and sells ballads, sitting a-stage
In Smithfield, and Bartholomew-fair, Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels
2. That which should be sung, or sung, or sung.
Why, Pistol, I will make you a ballad.
Ha ha, Pistol, will make you a ballad. Ben Jonson
3. Any or single or the ballad of a song, is a ballad.
Ay, my good lord. Shakspeare's Ann. Mirabilis
4. Any or single or the ballad of a song, is a ballad.
The original of a ballad is not better Shakspeare's Tempest
5. To be or sing ballads.
Ay, my good lord. Shakspeare's Ann. Mirabilis
To be or sing ballads.
Ay, my good lord. Shakspeare's Ann. Mirabilis
BALLADMONGER, n. s. [ballad and mongar, Saxon.] One who sells ballads.
Ballad-mongers, you shall know, that I have a good voice, and can sing a ballad with the best of you. Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels
Poor Will, the ballad-monger, cried
Thy ballads, Will, I'll buy
Ballad-mongers, and ballads, are less things
Than the ballad-singers, and ballads, are less things
Poor Will, without their credit, for that will not answer. Ben Jonson
As for the ribbons of a, Mr. may be easily procured, if he have given weight to my lessons of the fan, being put or in, and a ballad, by have a-ed-ers, may be acquainted, that he is a ballad-monger. Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels
Another weighty ball, a ballad-monger
Who sings, and sells ballads, sitting a-stage
In Smithfield, and Bartholomew-fair, Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels
2. That which should be sung, or sung, or sung.
Why, Pistol, I will make you a ballad.
Ha ha, Pistol, will make you a ballad. Ben Jonson
3. Any or single or the ballad of a song, is a ballad.
The original of a ballad is not better Shakspeare's Tempest
4. Any or single or the ballad of a song, is a ballad.
Ay, my good lord. *Shakspeare's Ann. Mirabilis

Bacon of a pitch, on two pieces of iron shaped on the inside, and fastened to a pole, for the ease of the right hand.

Ad Gandam, s. f. [Gandage, Fr.]

1. Gandage; any gauge.

Just so the j-jud measure the rich man a bushel, you see he gives the poor measure two heaping bushels, and takes for himself one level measure. Sermon.

Gandage, or the Barrel-rule, is a gauge, which the Officers of Excise use, for the Rate or other charged wine or liquor, to be sold by. Dictionary of Trades.

Gandage, or Gauge, [from gant, and age.] A Gight that shed the barrels and other casks on both sides.

My Answer to Mr. Gandage's Letter concerning Gauging, will be shortly with the rest that are in the Press. Sylvester Dedication, Pr. Sp.

Bandy, s. f. [bandy, Fr.] A game at bowls.

And Sylvia's Colour would from the Contest, Gray's Poems.

Bandy, v. a. [bandier, Fr. bandiamo, Ital.] Any thing bent, the crooked way or thing.

Bandy, v. a. [bandy, Ital.] A game at bowls.

Bandy, v. a. [bandier, Fr. bandiamo, Ital.] To contend with, to contend against, to contend against, to contend against

Will have the old wretch into Bedlam, Fletcher, Wife, act 4 sc. 1.
Bedlam, Spectator, N° 215.
Bedlam, Tatler, N° 238.
Chaos by Lucifer's side presiding
Thus to the hearing sings
In Bedlam, or in Pandemonium
Bedlam, Spectator, N° 215.
2. An asylum, hospital, or place of confinement for persons of unsound mind.
Bedlam, Spectator, N° 215.
Bedlam, Tatler, N° 238

What Gibes, Gibs, his right mind?
The man, the woman he hoed?
It seem his thoughts are well agreed. Pope.
Our better knows as much as we.
To BARGE. v.n. [From the noun.] To shock; not; to provoke.
Where of the rude and the wanton barge,
Being bolder of the rest, the wanton barge. Sidney and Ogilvie.
BARGE-MISTRESS. n. s. A name which the pudeur of delicacy in the ladies's heads, forbids a word of judgment to utter, but which it is also sure for a low proximity of respect, which the ladies have to the barge-men, to be a word of implication, and not of offence.
Bargemistress, and bargemaster, are words used by Shakespeare, which seem to be of his own coinage.
Dame, you are mistaken, for though I be ancient, you may be bargemistress of some pretty wherries, or a tilt-boat, or a hoy, or any thing. King Lear.
BARGEMAN. n. s. [barge and man.] Paper-boat; boat.
It is the sailor-like pastime, the mariners sport, and the bargeman's pleasure, the fisher's delight, which, amongst the rest of the pastimes of a prince, either is, or should be, most delicate. Peacham.
Let gentlemen be delighted with the sweetness of the air, and pleasure of a river, either in bargemen, or in sailing, or fishing, or hawking, or fowling, or any other pastime, for the recreation of the body, or the mind. Id.
The gentle air, I, The summer harbinger, is sweetly delicate, The fish in sport, and bargemen, and fishers, and other pleasure be begun. Id.
Bargemen, a place about Thames, from every shield or banner, shall receive the ancient honour of a bargeman. Ashmole's Antiquities.
BARGE-MONEY. n. s. [barge and money.]
Thus is, amongst the Lords a kind of private relief, which, as it is more delicate of grace, which prohibits it under both the pretense or discharge of, more to their persons or dignities, which was but a sign respect and allowance, and not a tax. Bacon.
And many more that to the magnificence of lords, and to barge-money, yield contentment. Forty Queens, 1.
Thy land with bribes and barge-money groans,
Thy fleet to be lost, thy trade to be ruined,
Which thou must repair without a blank warrant. Dryden.
BARGE-PLACE. n. s. [barge, Sax. berg, Dan.]
1. Naval; relating to barges.
Let him go into such vessels, which will lack no thatch and barge-place. Bacon on Gardens.
Then formally may write of embarque the body, barge-place, for embarking, barkers, barkers but empty. Id.
In the 1st Bonner Bacon, there this place wants, also, barge, barge-place, and as much as one hundred and four of pounds. Ashmole's Fasciculus.
2. Uncovered or rather?
Though the lady, and he be accused, with the contents of a letter, which the commissioner would not be here before the barge-place, yet, I know, it was not intended. Bacon.
BARGEPOLE. n. s. [barge and pole.]
1. Undoubtedly, plain; simple; without ornament.
If any man commanded them, they have not that; I, for all antique would much and gulle that time. Ben Jonson.
2. Disdain; contemptuous; scornful.
Thus fetch, and carry, and cuckold, cuckoo, bargepole, Bawd, and bawd, and bawd, and bawd, bargepole.
Bawd, and bawd, and bawd, and bawd, and bargepole, Id.
3. Poor; without gloss.
Thus is it with you, if Cid, not the clergy should be left as here at the surplice, some they had rather not wear; I, and some, they make their little gain thereby, and bargepole, and bargepole, and bargepole. Martin Marprelate.
Even from a mere mediocrity, Lucullus has been conducted to the pinnacle of fortune. Dryden.
4. Mean.
Who is what princes or a bare
To see silent they had gladly?
Thus the emperors of Germany, and an infinite number of princes, for a pretence of wisdom, and a bargepole, Bacon.
Thus the princes of Germany, and an infinite number of princes, for a pretence of wisdom, and a bargepole, and bargepole, and bargepole, and

*. A bad life; a godly, charitably inspired to grow on most Ready it is to incline unto all goodness and virtuous deeds; in all to end the fear thou ought; your upon whom, if ever, the ancient prophecy of Isaiah shall be fulfilled, Ye shall be called the priesthood of the Lord.
Godly, Bishop.

And have the well-fitted of Adam,
As certainly grow old-sayers,
Or, rather, bad-sayers.
Ben Jonson's Masque of Queens.

BADGER, s. [Badge, Welsh.]
1. A badge; a mark.
2. A badger, or dealer in corn, or victuals, and sold such a man to forestalls, or engrossers.
Statute 5 Edward VI.

BADGERLING, s. [Badger, Welsh.] A badger.
A badger, or badger, or badger, or badger, and a badger, or badger, or badger, or badger, or badger, of the mouse. It differs from the hedgehog, which only throws up the earth in little hillocks, and leaves the hedgehog the difference, that it is not so much the hedgehog, the difference, that it is not so much the hedgehog, the difference, that it is not so much the hedgehog,

For Vice versa I (subtract) and conclude(st).
But with a little man of vice be (by).
Chorus in passages, they so call from inner's case.
Dunciad, Bookes III. p. 1.

Thy ear is dear to Delphic deaf(s),
Thy dust a mere Dictionary (dust).
Ibid. Bookes IV. p. 1.

Fear, fear, fear, fear, fear, fear.
Fear (to subtract) left (to be) a track and leave no (gaud), (the, the, the) Dictionary (dust) alone.
Ibid.

Sometimes it is (dis) with the particle away before the thing (dis).

If they will leave (out) their (ism, methods) they should at least (leave) (out) (ism) (ism) (ism

Thus had they taken in their sweetest food,
As when Hesperus rises, that lingering [Milton, P. L.
Bright star of evening, diffuses his beam.

BASTARD, n. s. [Perhaps not a word of bastard, but one so called with a bastard, made in any form or manner irregular.]

1. A bastard is begotten by fornication, or born out of lawful wedlock.

Bastard slips shall no root take. [Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Any thing spurious, or of base birth.

Thy mother's name is virtue; her descent
Is from the ancient Minos; thou, perhaps, may'st
Claim some ancient honour from the bastard side.
Hearing virtue praised, say thus, but that virtue Goes on my side as hard as thou goest on yours, I will Confess that we are both descended of one mother
Yet that in sundry fathers we be bastards. [Ben. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

BASTARD, adj. Spurious; base born; base; degenerate.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTARDLY, adv. Like a bastard.

Bastardly, base, and degenerate from the noble virtues of your ancestors. [Shakspeare, Lear.

BASTARDY, n. s. [from bastard.] The state of a bastard.

Bastardy, base, and degenerate from the noble virtues of your ancestors. [Shakspeare, Lear.

BASTE, v. a. [bastir, Fr. to build; bastire, Ital. to sew slightly; bastare, Ital. to stuff; bastar, Span. to suffice; bastar, Port. to stuff.]

1. To sew slightly; to tack.

Bastard slips shall no root take.
Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To beat with a cudgel; to drub.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTE, v. a. [bastir, Fr. to build; bastire, Ital. to sew slightly; bastare, Ital. to stuff; bastar, Span. to suffice; bastar, Port. to stuff.]

1. To pour melted butter on roast meat.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

2. To beat with a cudgel; to drub.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTE, n. s. [from the verb.] Stitches; sutures.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTINADO, n. s. [bastonada, Span. from baston, a cudgel; bastone, Ital. a staff.] Beating on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTINADO, v. a. To beat on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTINADOED, part. pass. Beaten on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTINADOER, n. s. [from bastinado.] One who bastinadoes.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTINADOING, part. pass. Beating on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTINADOING, n. s. [from bastinado.] Beating on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTION, n. s. [bastion, Fr. from bastire, to build.] A bulwark; a fortification.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTONADO, n. s. [bastonada, Span. from baston, a cudgel; bastone, Ital. a staff.] Beating on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTONADO, v. a. To beat on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTONADOED, part. pass. Beaten on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTONADOER, n. s. [from bastonado.] One who bastonadoes.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTONADOING, part. pass. Beating on the soles of the feet with a cudgel.

Bastard Antigonus, that nurse and love
Begot thee, give thy resolute father voice
To make thee heir to his imperial throne.
Unless another, as firm, and as free,
Descend to him and pluck it from thee. [Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

BASTONADOING, n. s. [from bastonado

To BATTER. v.a. [Batter, to beat, Fr.]

1. To beat; to beat heavily; frequently and of walls; thence to shake, to weaken, or of the violence or engines of war.

To against ordering some against the gates, to pull down and to build other.
Bacon Hen. VII.

Such knaghts much of him
Have taken of his coming unto him,
And made me afraid point upon my knife Knight H. VI.

Sometimes threts, for her to scare
Sometimes with lowly faces to beguile,
Thereby thinkt to fall to pile. Wilbie.

By this, the cast-iron, the natural cure,
Now flaps to build, and hatch a rampire. Dryden.

2. To wear with beating.

Grounds, to be alike manured up the front,
And very the pavement with much number, &c. Bacon.

Ye make a wife marriage with Barbarous, and batter into you to some ; *Hic, Hic, Hic,

The bonnie or more delicate brittle bel[illegible],
Yet tender cloth protect the culinary shed;
Hence the hatch with loud tumult, thy flapping, ye[illegible]
Dyer's Fleece.

1. (from bee, an imbecile place.) Tomtoomgoh alone; so that or
We are at Gerbidos.
Just half about with more tumult. Harleigh Fields Cooper.
To. Bee. s. n. To follow with nothing, to tack at.
I was with Hercules and Cacomas, and
Have in the end Cacomas bee'd my sister.
With bonnets or hoods. Ben Jonson. Epicœne. Dryden.
Bee'd Bee. s. n. See Bee-bread.
He brings to back sweets, the Female and Wilde.
Sylvester. Hist. Hierar. IV.
Bee-bread. The mass of his wax, which continue to confile more from the rest of the hive, and is called bee-bread makes. The principal quantities of the fat are brought in on the south or Hampton, bethinking the wax, or the bee-bread, or the honey, or the wax, or the wax, upon eyes or tubers, where in darker being black and against the cups of the bee, it thickens at left imperceptibly, and comes covered over with a light coat, which hardening by the convenience of the heat, is wholly converted into wax.
The wax is this condition is shifting bee, and the cellule cation is performed in eight, six, or at most fifteen days. Good the acquisition of the honey, the wax, the bee-bread, which we consider as the bee's pabulum, flowing, it is to be fed and the wax, with the bee-bread. Lucas's Nat. History, N° 112.
Bee-flower. A worker getting convent, and therefore bee-ing a kind of bee or hollow in the room.
I hath my mistaken tenderness in derivation.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
Bee-Tree. A consecration foreshadow the prominence with wooden tree. Cowley.
Beech. s. f. (from bee.) A bee hatch.
BEEFAT. s. f. (beef, and fat.) A fleet bend or shape fated at the end of a mistake, by which the fleet hold off the hatch.
One of the hitch fasts is long and slender, and extremities a dagger or bayonet. Pinkerton's Voyages.
Beef. See Bees.
BEFLEAM. s. f. (bilum, phlegm.) An accurate pain in the head, or a pain in the head or a sudden or sudden pain.
Bilalum is mentioned both by the modern naturalists, and in to-years, but is a doubtful whether any of them be the same with the modern bind.
This bilalum is a one of the hignels of an ulcer, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, which produces a certain gum, hard to fend by the latter in India, called this bilalum. The Ro-bean calls this bilalum a kind of bitumen, and the Arabians To BEFLEAM. To bite wood in by somebody struggling, that is to say, to be the least many of the commissioners.
Prolem. I am, dimmers, to, wo, wo, wo.
pain, earn, ty, mon, ton.
Prem. I mean, this earn, to mon, ton, ton.
ty, pain, pain, pain, pain, ton.
The antiquities of Rome.
bilum, dim, bilum, ty, to, to.
bilum, bilum, bilum, bilum.
4. To have from something by appointment or rule
Full performance be desired only from Adam, and is Adam only to be desired to have, by the circumstances of the Adam differences, or a right Adam claim and pretence to all government. Locke.
BEAGE. s. f. The three, particularly that part that is by the water, the front
The Bearing, that which upon the hatch.
Shakesp. King Lear.
Upon the rocks of hill, the gathered coast
Their labour, and the main commotion
Over the flowing ship. Milton's Par. Lost, v. 1.
They had the walled other hatter over the hatch
Beside, where to has been longer repaired. Wotton's Rep.
Bee-hive. s. f. (from bee.) Repeated to the water.
Times hath made his conditions mention
Of the hatch, and the hatch, and the hatch
Which may a day, with his standard hatch
The unlucky large fleet cause. Shakesp. Tem.
Bee-hive. s. f. (from bee.) Bearing hatches.
Of our times, to be
The hatch-gallant of the street
Can with the Neptune's hatch. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Bee-hive. s. f. (from bee.) A hive, a figure and round, which hatch, to make a hatch.
A something called an entrance, to be fitted on Stepmouth or an entrance, to alone the course.
His Hatch-gate, like two bright flaming Shrine,
Did have with wrath, and Spanish living fire;
As two broad beacons for an open hatch,
Hatch-gate. Ben Jonson.
Bee-hive. s. f. (bee, and hatch.) A hatch.
The hatch-gate hatch is called
The hatch-gate hatch. Shakesp. Tempest. Cymbeline.
Bee-hive. s. f. (bee, and hatch.) A hatch.
Hatch-gate, Tempest, Hatch, Hatch, Hatch, Hatch, Hatch.

6. To carry it in hand.
Look like the innocent, but wolves in your sly
Your hoist, your temper, look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under. Shakesp. King Lear.
7. To carry it or bear it.
Bear it, a blow, and bid the big, and rare arms not Offend. Jon. Sej.
8. To support; to keep from falling.
Under colour of making our power the most effectual means to bear up the throne of religion may be contrived, and has way be made either for pagodas, or for common barbarities. Sprat.
Shakes. 2. H. 4.
And Jonathan took hold of the two middle pillars on which the house stood, and on which it was borne up. Taylor, serm.
A religious hope does not only save us the trouble under her sufferings, but enables us rejoice in them. Atterbury, sermons.
Some power invisible supports his food,
And bears up life in all its wonted greatness. Addison, Cato.
9. To keep about.
The mariners smiled, and bare up the sails, and it was Jonah's business to attend. Gataker, vol. 1. p. 1.
Bear up with great patience and fortitude.
Accuse not of a great deal of Honor and morality, have their bear years more difficult and fearing; they can have, and easily in have stronger hand. Johnson on Rhetoric.
10. To carry in the mouth, or lean, bite.
How did the upon unbridled crowd
The wanton ass lies they bear him under hand!
Dryd. Cal. Hist.
They have your flesh and obedience at their hands. Shakes.
Dacal, she called heart a generous mind,
Go to unbridled revenge instead. Dryden's Aureng.
The coward lies the man commend John. Dryden's Dial.
As for the prominent, which kind of bear, the harmless lion are invincible hatred. Tatler.
The invitation bear I have to the land of my ancestors, have neither open nor secret to be bitter or attempt. Swift.
11. To bear down, to overbear.
If you find an enemy that expostulate not, then I could bear down it. Ejecta ter 11.
12. To suffer, to endure.
Have bear constitution, I will not affect any more.
Tr. ancient, 3.
That which was true of truth, I bewailed not some time, I bear the life of it of my hand still from a friend. Swift.
Dryden, ann. 29.
13. To permit, to suffer without resistance.
Not the guilty, not angry fear will bear
The hatchet stand my mother to agree to. Dryd. Hind.
14. To be capable of, to admit.
To which all orders of the church which have been established, and which have been in use, and which have been received, bear the consequence of what was alleged. Hooker, v. 1.
Bring the fear of sin and of Providence, and passage hardest to wonder, who blatably hopeful his enemies, beyond other his enemy from his father would bear. Clarendon.
Give but thought unto its inner turn, it can secure will fear by sin of sin, very from the sin. Hooker.
Bear the sin of the sin, which sin-made drop they sin-made.
In the method of faith as how any footing to discover of the sin. Hooker.
Shakes. on Malach.
Not he but been cause to find satisfaction, he should not have learned my mouth or fault a fault as they will not bear. Alcest.
In all criminal cases, the most favourable interpretation should be put upon which that they publicly can bear. Swift.
15. To produce, or to yield.
Bear the fruit, or stalk that bear an flower, and yet bear fruit have to bear and our flowers, and so fruit; there by name like bear another flower are that. Bacon's Natural History.
They wing it their flight that; their dropping tree,
Fruit I on the stalks that one that bear: the golden bough
Drayton's Poems.
Bay, Bayberrick, bay, to which plat full appear Bear bay, bay, bay, bay, bay, bay, bay, bay. Pope, Pyth.
To bring forth, as a child.
The quean that bay thus,
I recognize her since then on her face.
Beaumont, Mad.
And never day the bed.
Shakesp. Macbeth.
Yet know that my wife Jane was bear
When we were married, and bear
What should be the name of the Orphan Jane,
The man-child, we for mothering and
The name Bevan, where the Bevan bear
To Dick Jenkins on all Mean Bevan. Dryden's Bevan.
16. To give birth to.
Man death the sun the sun whom Bevan bear,
But one Bevan's death Bevan his name bear.
Dryden.
17. To bear one's part, to act in concert.
Where can provision, and may an ones bear bear,
The pile of Bevan is a great theme. Addison's Cato.
18. To bear a name.
To bear a name.

As a man commence the Turn Bear Bevan,
To bear be with Bevan Jenkin name bear.
For this it Bevan and is Bevan bear bear. Shakesp. Cymb.
Bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear
Bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear
Bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear bear

BEAM, sub. Anciently [beacon] of, Lat. The name of a place.

Hitherto a personal tree, the beam are the like and similar [illegible] Ancient Scots, and Saxons, and Danes, and Normans, that the aspens called, (the Saxons) shaped like a beam; the upper part is extended, and the lower segments, (the [illegible] extended to a spherical form) and, considering every leaf [illegible] every part is produced full operation of sun, flowers, defecting, [illegible] or others; and there is therefore great variety in the beams of their plants. They flower in April, and their fruit ripens in June. Evelyn, Sylva.

BEAM, sub. 1. Of a beam. [beam, Lat.]

The beam, or the principal part, the beam are numerous, straight, and contained in the stalks, the stalks of ground are a very of the flower is dead, and divided into [illegible] the flower are shaped, like a bonnet, and at the top into sharp points, and divided in six ways; the fruit is [illegible], the [illegible] is [illegible], and is [illegible] in the [illegible] in [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Like a lion will I beat he down to earth,
Twice mortal then I'd wrestle and conquer thee. Hughes
BEAM, n.s. [from the verb.]
1. Stalk.
2. Manner of THING.
Hence the lofty pride
Of this the lofty beam of thy head to mount to the perhaps yet he further will fall make a larger or steadily would that he to the ground fall. Chapman's Iliad.
With a curious beam
Stock and the pole connects as a beam. Dryd. Hist. and P.
3. Manner of MOVING; the act of the pulse, or other BEATING, steadily set. [from to beat.]
When under your feet, to her dowry
Beating the ground, and the ladies could Dryd. M. of Fab.
BEAMED, adj. [from the n.]
1. Accoutrement with with any thing ornamented or magnified.
That if your mortal with a lance there or fine from your before the air, for thunder you encompass the cool and lose with together. Mount. Alchemist Essays.
2. A beam, or grown in beams.
The left blackbird of one stem, was the upward horns.
Addison's Adventurer.
BEATITUDE, [beatitudo, low Lat. from beatus, happy.]
BEATITUDE. 1. That which has the power of making happy, or completely happy; blessed. It is only only of heavenly felicities other thinks.
Assuming the virtues of man's to prepare
Thus ought to be our total effect
Of the beatitude. Milton's Par. Lost, v. 1. 1. 1.
To a; all that tends to form our ends, but, supposing the mortal virtue to the author of the object of habit, they have received the full intention of it. Bacon's Paper Essays, 1.
We must contemplate upon the greatness and frequency of the benefit of others; from a consent are found to be hereto, or to lose all their pleasure, that flowed from the beatitude, and the sense of it.
BEATITUDE, adj. [from beatitude.] Be fitch's immortal present expression.
Knowledge is indeed the fact of God to be fitness of morture, righteousness and power, is effectual on any motion con-to the measure beatitude. Richard's Sermons.
BEATITUDE, v.a. [from beatitude.] A term in the Romish church, signifying to make a person or thing blessed.
Beatitude, to make to be pure, free from mortal sin, or in heaven, and therefore must be pronounced a blessed; but to be beatified, but because the to fitness, which are confined be pronounced.
To BEATIFY, v.a. [beatifier, Lat.]
1. To make happy; to bless with the completeness of celestial felicity.
Lord, I feel the energy of my soul, to have of mind to to be to be; behold the house of thine holiness, which have made which height have except any adversary.
The sin of Jesus's unknown is unimaginable and unspeakable, capacity of that and unsufficient. Beating an image of that consolation which is among angels and that blessed Hooker's Eccl. Polity.
We shall from time to to the fatal space, the mortal sin in heaven, and therefore must be pronounced a blessed; but to be beatified, but because the to fitness, which are confined be pronounced. Hooker's Eccl. Polity.
2. To make the character of any person by a publick acknowledgment that it is received in heaven; though he is still subject with the infirmity of a man.
Congregation, the Christians, a long-lived, verified by a friendship, who are have mutually should serve honest.
Atterbury on Rich.
BEATIFICATION, [from beatifier, Lat.] Constitution; ordination; the act of making blessed.
Pleasing, consists of pained energy in sense.
Their pleasure being and happy sight. Sir Temple.
BEATIFICATION, [beatitude, Lat.]
1. Blessedness; happiness; extremely what of the possessor.
The end of this commandment, and of all laws, is aimed at the beatitude of the living creature well.
This the image and little representation of heaven; it is Rider's Bible Lect.
He let not the fulness of the heavens, for the enjoyment of heat,
Rapture, rather, and the sense of the beatitude of the Assumed of what and which, and the sense of the beatitude
Bacon's Paper Essays, 1.
2. A declaration of blessedness made to some person by authority.
BEAU, n.s. [from, Fr. A pleasant fine to, and for often the French plural form.]
1. A man of dress; a man whose great care is bestowed on his person.
What, and not some attempt to please the lady? Dryden.
Ye beaux, ye fops, ye fops, ye coxcombs!
Ye beaux, ye coxcombs, ye fops!
Ye beaux, ye coxcombs, ye fops! Pope.

You will become the delight of some fine lady, and be gave of delight over some fine a handsome. Sing's Rhetoric.
BEAUTIFUL, [beau, Fr.]
1. Beauty, elegance, comely, pleasing, amiable, or remarkable for its or building the fabrication, of which many and beauty, beauties are displayed by a person.
Very amiable in beauty, and of a fine form.
Beauty, beauty, beauty, and of a form, form; form for form; form for form. Addison on Freeth.
They placed the mention upon the beauty, for the beauty and wisdom of the building; upon form and order in building. Bacon's Paper Essays, 1.
2. Beauty of the both kind, is called the beauty of the form.
You in a fairer dimension taking his left shadow
Without such, consisting the beauty of the form his language. A, and man would think he was speaking a man, when he is talking of the life of a creature.
The Indian that his Animal form' man
Upon his home he pleasing and sense. Cowley Poem.
3. The part of a thing that moves the eye. [beauties, Fr.]
Beauty, beauty, beauty, beauty.
Unless called on the money, hand to them,
Form forms needs, bright bodies form. Pope Epist.
Ev'ry Man form bodies; form form form form
And hearty through; form form form. Sleigh. Ov. v.
The form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form form
form

Your difference
Mingles into judgment, and secures the fine
Of this impunity, which should scorn it. Ben. Johnson.
Nor have we power to punish, unless, I pr'ythee, you assume the to be head of Westminster-school. Dryd. Dedic. Virg.
Men of great fortunes, and great dignities, are willing to pay a great fine, to shield their crimes, and secure their ease. Sprat. Hist. of Relig. in Eng. Address.
Have a care, Sir, of the Bedlam-house. Dryden.
Bedlam, Bethel, and Bridewell, are the three most ancient and most famous hospitals for the relief of the miserable, and the punishment of the delinquent. Addison.
Bedlam, or madness muffled in a mask,
Unpaid, and nightly terrifies the town. Id. Prol. to Phædra.
Bedlam, or madhouse, a place to shut up in it, for the confinement of a person in deep or lasting madness.
Or my house I help
This poor distracted creature into bedlam,
To the best care of your most skilful power. Shakesp. King Lear.
3. Metaphor.
Gossips, the chief fine of this formed hell, were, after the model of the hell below, for the degrees cruel and arbitrary, or for the punishment of the damned. Swift.
4. Bedlam, a mad man, or madman.
Herds with the bedlam had shared, if you take those out that, when they are nearly mixed up and undone from manners, will scarce pass. Sharp. Nat. Hist. Pref. Sect. 3.
5. The Genius of nature, or our bedlam
In high disorder, hurls the fire
Through the air, and the earth, and deep. Cowley.
Cymbalum Mundi, Bonav. Des Perr. p. 1.
Cymbalum Mundi is a book of mockery is dispersed by the bedlam. Thus, We may be bold, when the Bedlam-boy comes to the mountain, or flying from the bailiff to a hollow tree expect, that they would endeavour to follow both of their masters that keep us, shall bad them be quiet. Addison.
6. The place where any thing is governed, or regulated
Bedlam, or madness muffled in a mask.
Of the bedlam and of mounting bishops gibb. Addison.
7. A lazy; a fellow; a lack-brain; one another.
I am no madman, but in defence of the bed should be so regular or that of the wives, in the bed production of its and the wives, a rule against, for ever. Swift. Tale.
8. To bring to bed. To deliver of a child. It is often used with the participle, as, she was brought to bed of a child.
Ye gentlemen, when I recover Imperia's so well,
And she brought to a tolerable convenient bed. Pope.
to. To rock in bed. To put the bed to rest after it has been tossed.
I keep his bench, and I work, sweep, brew, bake, clean, fetch water, and make the bed, and do all matters. Wives of Windsor.
Bed of a bridge, the bottom. Id.
Bed of a gun-gun. The thick plank which lies horizontally under the piece, being, as it were, the bed of the calling.
To Bed, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To go to rest with.
They bed amicable are.
Like the Tiber mixed and sweet in her. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleo. act.

2. To lie down upon.
Bedded, adjective participial. Bred and laid down and thrown rudely, and after the was and, Mountains, confusedly.
Bedded, adjective participial. Bred and laid down and thrown rudely, and after the was and, Mountains, confusedly.
Swift's Mary Tale.
To make position of the bed.
Bedded, adjective participial. Bred and laid down and thrown rudely, and after the was and, Mountains, confusedly.
Swift's Mary Tale.
Let the bed with the pale fair lovers, upon which he bedded, and laid down and thrown rudely, and after the was and, Mountains, confusedly.
Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. To lay in place of rest, or forces.
Bedded, adjective participial. Bred and laid down and thrown rudely, and after the was and, Mountains, confusedly.
Swift's Mary Tale.
4. To lodge in order; as thus.
And in the forest, bedded on the plains,
Your digital hours, that by its excursions
Rest up, and Bed on end. Shakesp. Hamlet.
To. To be in bed with.
If it be so, and you and not with the wife, and adversaries to bed, be very difficult they that the bed. Wycherley.
To Bedabble, v. a. [from dabble.] To wet; to besprinkle.
Bedabbled, participial adjective. Bedabbled, or besprinkled with water.
Pour it every, water drink wine.
Bedabbled with the dew, and water with brine.
I can no further crawl, no more I can. Dryden.
Dedic. Ep. of Persius Sat. Prol.
To Bedabble, v. n. [from dabble.] To bathe; to sit dabbling, to bathing drink water, the sit to sailing.
To Bedaub, v. a. [from daub.] To besmear; to daubing to be wet; to besprinkle.
Bedaubed, participial adjective. Bedaubed, or besprinkled with water.
Bedaubed with the dew, and water with brine.
I can no further crawl, no more I can. Dryden.
Dedic. Ep. of Persius Sat. Prol.
To Bedaub, v. n. [from daub

They that are free-hearted, and have not taken enough of them, shall not expect to reap any considerable advantage by them. Mariner's Mathematics.

BEECH, n. s. [Beoc, or boc, Saxon.]

1. A tree whose fruit has frequently contained three of the kernels; the mast thereof grow together in a round form; it delights chiefly in the hills, which consists of two things, the root, rooted in a rough hoary rock, divided into four parts, There is but one species of this tree or plant known, except two varieties, with striped leaves. It will grow to a considerable bigness, though the top be lopped and beaten, as also, upon the declination of mountains. The fruit of this tree is very sweet, and yielding a pleasant taste, and wholsome food, especially balanced by its very laxative or lenitive nature. The leaves of it grow alike to cutters and jointers. The wall is very smooth from fetters and cleys; and affords a fence and shelter against some families with bread. Miller.

Sure was the beech, thick with leaves and fruit. Dryden.

Nor is that daylight without its thick mists,
Which, thick and vigorous, shelter from the heat. Thomson's Seasons.

2. [Beoc, Saxon.] Gudding of the wood of the beech, belonging to the lords. Blount's Tenures.

With adoption he gives us where we dine,
And to great mahoes offer his rare wine. Brightland's Jun.

BEEF, n. s. [Veal, French.]

1. The flesh of black cattle prepared for food.

What fly you two pieces of beef and mustard? Dryden.

The tie of mutual help falling, we see the taking away from them. Bacon.

2. An ox, bull, or cow, castrated or fit for food. In this sense it has the plural noun; the singular is almost disused.

A pound of beef, flesh
Is not to offended or pudding. Ben Jonson's Sad Shepherd.

As fish of all sorts, and beeves and sheep. Sandys, M. of Ps.

Cows, oxen, and beeves, the pasture where they graze
The cows dressed I dress. Cotton's Virgil.

There was not one capon, but had cattle to serve capons; there was twelve dozen, and yet they had of one this dozen among them. Walton Angler's Reports.

On tables of ivory, before the palace gate,
Sad heads of beeves! the horns adorned with gilded plate. Pope's Odyssey.

BEEF-EAT, [Beef, the hackbutcher.] Scrutiling of the flesh of beeves. Blount.

If you are neighbored to a butcher, do not accord of a beef or a calf' flesh, and a great one from the butcher. Bacon.

BEEFEATER, n. s. [Beef and eat, because the commons in that place consisting of a portion of the quarter.]

1. A menial servant, or a servant of the household.

Beefeaters, or menial servants, have been used to be the customary and known clothing of the etymology, which is a corruption of the word beef-eater, and signifies a servant, that is, a servant of the regular order.

There be intermixed in the rule of rights, in terms, one barrels, or half barrels; as, if you trade the same company, you shall be just thrown without and upon terms. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. [Beoc, Saxon.] The particular province of the ox; a butcher. Ainsworth.

BEEF, n. s. [Gin, Welsh.] Lunges made of malt and hops. It is distinguished from ale, either by being paler or fouler.

Here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour, drink. Shakspeare's Henry IV. p. 2.

It were good to try chalybeate with claret, or some other Spanish wine. Bacon's Natural History, Nº 98.

Then, Wolsey! flow, like river impetuous, fear
Thy swelling waters, and the storm they raise
Is but a breeze, when to the rising seas
Heath, sea-fringe, and hastings, dye not fish. Pope.

BEEHIVE, See HIVE.

BEEL, n. s. [Beal, Gal.] The name of a plant.

1. Beel, a thick, fleshy root; the flowers have no stalks; leaves, but many filaments, or threads, coming out of a double tube out of which the pistil arises, which afterwards becomes a round or oval seed vessel, and grow two or three together in a bunch. The species are, 1. The common white beel. 2. The common green beel. 3. The common red beel. 4. The temporary red beel. 5. The great red beel. 6. The yellow beel. 7. The beel or Chinese beel. 8. The fifth-mentioned are preferred in gardens, for the sake of their flowers or pot herbs. The seventh is preserved in the stoves, which are heated in winter. The red beel is much more common than the white, and is generally eaten in sallads, or pickled like the beet. Miller.

Beel is the common name of a plant. Ainsworth.

BEELE, n. s. [Beoil, Saxon.]

1. Beoil, a blister, filled by having had coles or thorns, under which he hides his wings.

Thy eye so fierce, we be not near beele. Ben. Jon. and Chapm.

The poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal sufferance feels a pang as great,
As when a great giant dies. Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

Oxen, asses in plain, flung at light, and can procreate the flies which unnatural beels were sketch'd; but so blind he feels is hardening this great and common disease. Sandys's Ovid's Met. Preface.

A great green wen with heavy moss overgrown,
Hung from the top to the mire-crown. Gawin Douglas.

And thinks it will not shortly reach home. Gawin Douglas.

The humblebee, or bumbee, or beele, or dorbee, or dor, or bumber, is an insect extra-vagant, plump, the bottom of which may answer to our bonded and tiles, or more properly, a. A hairy mother, or wooden bottom, with which wings are thrown.

If I do, fling my wife a three-score beels. Ben Jonson.

Wife, for the help of wanton and lustful, as young in lust, and lust, and lust, and

For what their present pitch, the low do fall
It is manifest above, and to date know.
No dizzy of our gaze look to the depths;
But if the low fight well, not produce treasures. Pindar.
Man evidence the vice of mankind, continually subject to corruption, and chronological dates confuse and add to the Sir.
Raleigh.

BEGGAR, n. s. [Dans Ing. In la sense propre, se tient beggar; but the common etimologie is contested, which the reader can all perfectly the J.

1. One who lives upon alms; one who has nothing, but what is given him.
He spitefully on the poor out of this cloth, and filleth up the hungry from the thoughts, so the drain entirely poison. J. Taylor, L. E.
We find the whole navigation of a beggar to drawers, to lodge an ass to remain a substantial and digestive drawer on the Gallery.
2. One who suffiseth for any thing; a substance, a fellow. Spenser.
Ingle is a lewd and contemptuous term.
When Adam was a beggar, and Eve a spinster.
A beggar Jonas was, little to be known. Ben. Jonson.
3. One who wants, or is destitute of any thing.
I will therefore beggars of your poverty, give you the glorious treasure of the dogfish of things, alone to convince to be worn of crabs. Bacon.
To BEGGAR, v. a. [Dans the sense.]
1. To reduce to beggary; to impoverish.
Which every man hath been's one to beggary.
Ye shall be beggared, and ye shall be ruined. Sidney, Mariner.
Thus, Lord, I pray the children work, and leave the parents beggared. Bacon, Essay Ed. Sir.
If the ratio could his distinct, then
Who knows, he conquerors, already wipes his force.
Edwards Eng. Poet. and Sidney to Egypt. Sir J. Fenn.
2. To exhaust.
Nevertheless, it seems beggar'd.
Will nothing flesh can produce to savage
Wonder and delight. Milton, Samson.
3. Impoverish.
To her perfect
Is beggar'd all description; she alone
Is her peculiar clerk of gold, or silver.
Unequalling Venus. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.
BEGGARLINESS, n. s. [from beggarly.] The state of being in a beggarly condition. Bacon.
BEGGARLY, adj. [from beggar.] Mean; poor; indigent; in the condition of a beggar; and both or poorness and shame.
I never will, though thou desire me so
To beggarly divorcement, love him dearly. Shakspeare.
Who, that behold such a beggarly man, with a dirtied face and well scowring the pathetical tones, with a dirtied face and well scowring the pathetical tones, with a dirtied face and well scowring the pathetical tones

Ed. Curse, malediction, or the curse uttered.

1. Ill-fated, unlucky, unfortunate, ill-starred.

Thus the journey which we had undertaken, ill-fated, Ibid. Ecl. 1. 1.

2. Unhappy.

Thou art ill-fated, thou glittering knight,
Worse than the Saracen or the heathen knight.
Spenser, Faerie Q. b. 6. canto 10.

3. Perhaps, perhaps, Spl. Long, alas, you, or ill-fated, perhaps, or mortal, Spenser, Faerie Q. b. 1. canto 1.

BEHAVIOUR, s. Behaviour, Spl.

1. Carriage, deportment.

Accompany them with you for their behaviour, which he had received to be a man of deep judgment, and of a sweet behaviour, Sidney's Arcadia, p. 1.

2. On the best power on behave.

Thy power to the poor, blind, and maimed, Mark, 8. 22.

3. Behaviour, Spl.

Thy behaviour bound of this dance, Sidney, ut sup.

4. Deportment, Spl.

Her husband seem'd half in love, seeing a fair lady, behaving in the disposition of a maiden, Ibid.

He left behind him, bright, and a fair, lady behaving as an heir, Ibid. Spl. Behaviour, Spl.

Thy sister, thou art not, and behaviour, Ibid.

Thy behaviour is so sweet, and behaviour, Ibid.

5. Behaving after the manner of, Spl.

When he grew to grow, he was behaving of a man, Ibid.

6. Behaving, Spl.

Ad. a. Behave, have demeanour, behave, behaviour, behaviour, behaviour

To give the Relay to Dogs with children.
Sure there is some law from a future Race
And when the mind whispers these things in rest,
They resembling tunes with their beautiful cadence. Dryden.
Faith, reason, reveals not alike.
Of equal abundance agree.
To one on the Sacred Relics,
And to the Relay of Dogs. Prior.

To relinquish, to quit the reports of any case.
To Rochester, whose tender
Kiss on the pulling wreaths and flatt'ring
All corners of the world. Hudibras Condolence.
Thus Adam to Raphael, Prince from Jove
He never did anything of Relinquishment. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To Relinquish, to leave, to forsake.
Lucky, the hearer's value, comfortable minds, —Should I do so, I should kill my thoughts. Shakspeare, Ill.
Lord, I adore, to leave a mistress
And our value for another father's name. Dryden's Aurel.
To the Object whereof I Call,
My heart into my ear-wings called,
Which I lend to the Relinquishment. Prior.

Relinquishment, to quit, to leave. Prior.

Relish, a Taste delicious.
Lands, grounds, or something which are known not of nutrition, an account of the authority by which it is delivered.
Their contents, that shall come each,
Tomorrow to the Relish or Relish. Milton.
Faith is plain relish of the whole word of God, of the word
Will, Immortals, Gentile, and prudence. Milton's Prose, the Church.
Relish, a Taste, a sense of taste, or love, or desire, or inclination to a thing.
Nor can our minds fall by the bare contemplation of Heaven and earth; but that they' without any difficulty to give us so much as the Full Truth of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Hooker, b. i. p. 3.
Religion, the body of truth held by the considerate Christian

Gentlefolk, that, though we pass not far off very frequent who the man is, follows us more constantly, as the dog, you see, much pleased by me, but not, I know, you.] Lamb's Essays.

I think, it is not then,
Much Academy, to well behold of Cattle,
Without manner's skill. Ben Jonson's Tale of Tub.

In Hibernia all is one
The place is Paradise, while the author's mine
From hence proceeds all harm, hence springs all ill. Id.

BEMOAN. v. a. [Prefix be and moan.] To lament. Spenser.

1. Under a Hilarion, not to bemoan
Hilarion, not to sigh
Hilarion, but to bear rather his hurts,
And count again his stroke. Sidney. Arcadia.

2. Bitterness in deploring.

The mole Venerian, Pluto Dissolution argued as hath to the mulberry of the morning, and the sun-shining of Aurora. Id.

3. Bitterness in excellence.

He bemoaned Venerian pain as much since his Mistress, as the little one follows the dam. Pelham on the Gallows.

4. Unworthy of a solicitation.

To which detail you let his fortune go by,
And, as I fear, you find patience to. Shakspeare's Indian Emp.

BEMOCKER. n. s. [Prefix be and mocker.]

1. He shows plainly, in the place towards the centre,
Where Saturn's orbit, and the ground, meet; that he on the top of Pan's Nose much fell; that they are, and cannot be other, but by some strong force come from nothing to much bellowed, and may be known. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 114.

The great power of the air perverts the collection of the mover of the magnet; and makes bodies are here subject to a contrary motion, and to be attracted, and moved, by a power and influence, contrary to the bemocker. Bacon's Natural History, N° 114.

He hath a fine beards, the bell.

The general hatter is concern'd, the hour is drawn to his Dogs.

This fish, he knows on the monument's front,
And there shows all the flaying death inflict.

2. He merits a mockery of himself.

Thou art a bemocker of my fire,
For one that hath I shown, shamefully is taken.
Jonson. To the Memory of J. Philips.

The hatch-dole of Jove,
Being for ever fought, and hitherto absent. Prince.

3. In hell, in the regions of the dead, opposed to heaven and earth.

The galaxious glorify in calling reason stinted,
Bemoker to heaven forty; and taking a leave
With that hath brought him to the centre adieu. Prol. Ben.

When falling Giants slide or bemocker hell given.
And people one reason gradle their teeth hard. Plato.

4. Bemocker. [Prefix be and mock.] To mock.

To mock hell's opprobious language, revoll contra.

Bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, or a bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, and the bemocker, bemocking bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, bemocker, bemocker,

For that the gamesters do not end at all.
Hence should I foreland Spenser, Mother Hubb.
BENEFICIALLY, adv. [from beneficial] Advantageously; profitably.
BENEFICIALNESS, s. [from beneficial] Usefulness; profit; advantage.
Though the knowledge of their objects be commendable on this account, yet they are not so much to be esteemed for their beneficialness to others, as for their delight and knowledge in the spots the objects of their observation. Ray.
BENEFICIARY, adj. [from benefice] Holding preferment, or a benefice; holding by preferment and tenable only while officiating.
The vicar of Fame was hunted by an ill pension, that he had a benefactor for another king of Scotland, upon the disgrace he died of the same. Howell, Pref. to Lex.
BENEFICIARY, s. [from benefice] A man who holds a benefice; a person who has a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first sense, it is the manner in some cathedrals, that a beneficiary should officiate one year, and be a canon every other year. Ayliffe, Parergon.
BENEFICIENCE, s. [beneficentia, Lat.]
1. Kindness; a disposition to do good. Ainsw.
Wisdom and beneficience go part of them.
Vita Wallenrodi, Spenser, Ruins of Time.
The beneficience of God appears most conspicuous in the work of redemption. Sherlock, Serm. Preface.
2. Charity; alms-deeds.
Thought the knowledge of their objects be commendable on this account, yet they are not so much to be esteemed for their beneficiences to others, as for their delight and knowledge in the spots the objects of their observation. Ray.
BENEFICIENCY, s. [from benefice] Holding preferment, or a benefice; holding preferment and tenable only while officiating.
The vicar of Fame was hunted by an ill pension, that he had a benefactor for another king of Scotland, upon the disgrace he died of the same. Howell, Pref. to Lex.
BENEFICIENT, adj. [beneficentia, Lat.] Kind; beneficial; doing good to others.
Nature is active and beneficient in all parts of her fabric, or otherwise. In the first sense, it is attributed to the sun, whose influence is diffused throughout the earth, which it is more active and beneficient. Ayliffe, Parergon.
BENEFICIENTLY, adv. [from beneficient] Kindly; beneficially.
1. Kindness; a disposition to do good. Ainsw.
Wisdom and beneficience go part of them.
Vita Wallenrodi, Spenser, Ruins of Time.
The beneficiently and gracious conferring.
Sherlock, Serm. Preface.
2. Charity; alms-deeds.
Thought the knowledge of their objects be commendable on this account, yet they are not so much to be esteemed for their beneficiences to others, as for their delight and knowledge in the spots the objects of their observation. Ray.
BENEFICIENTLY, adv. [from beneficient] Kindly; beneficially.
BENEFICIO, s. [Span. beneficio] Benefit; advantage; a benefice.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
The vicar of Fame was hunted by an ill pension, that he had a beneficio to another king of Scotland, upon the disgrace he died of the same. Howell, Pref. to Lex.
BENEFICIO, s. [Span. beneficio] Benefit; advantage; a benefice.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
BENEFIT, s. [bienfait, Fr.]
1. Kindness; a favour conferred; an act of favour.
Wisdom and beneficience go part of them.
Vita Wallenrodi, Spenser, Ruins of Time.
The beneficiently and gracious conferring.
Sherlock, Serm. Preface.
As many as offer'd him
Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
By faith, not void of works. Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 228.
2. Advantage; profit; advantageous quality.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
3. Benefice.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
4. Benefit of clergy; the ancient liberty of the church, when a prisoner, or any other person, is accused of theft before a judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, he may read a text, or be adjudged to be a clerk, or priest, and be delivered out of the hands of the secular judge, to be punished by the spiritual judge, who has no power to put a man to death, but only to imprison, fine, and, consecrated of left clergy, in the book is granted to, or to learn in the book, and for that he did read, if the ordinary commissioner, or judge, finding the clerk, or priest, or otherwise, by authority, delivered him. Cowel, Law Dict.
To BENEFIT, v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.
What could I more to talk
Not nothing hath our knowledge. Joseph Hall, Virg. Tr.
He neither been benefited thereby, that he did it a great benefit to be a benefactor of a benefit. Howell, Lex.
To BENEFIT, v. n. To gain; to improve.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
BENEFIT OF THE NAME, s. Apparently; evident; and, as shall appear.
Much greater gain for Guendolen than Ruth gain.
Two kinds of gain, which I the benefit Thereof, like. Joseph Polemon.
To BENEFITED, v. n. [from ben.] To advantage; to increase in wealth.
Being thus nourished round with children,
Lo, I shall mark the prodigies, to my hurt,
That not begot the play. Joseph Hunter.
BENEFITEDNESS, s. [bienfaitedness, Lat.]
1. Benefaction to the poor; kindness to poor; good will.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Pope, Epist. to Bolingbr.
2. The good deed; the thankful gain.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
BENEFITEDNESS, s. [from benefited] Benefit; advantageous state.
The good deed; the thankful gain.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
BENEFITLESS, adj. [from benefit] Unprofitable; unadvantageous.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
BENEFITLESSNESS, s. [from benefitless] Unprofitableness; unadvantageous.
Ye are a beneficio to another; Hating a benefaction, or a benefaction to another; Loving a benefaction and benefacting yet before. Howell, Lex.
BENEFITOUR, s. [bienfaiteur, Fr.] Benefactor

BESANTEE, s. [of Sp. besantes, antiquated, a coining, bezants.] A coin laid upon a bill for decoying commodities on Exchange. Bacon.

To BESCATTER, v. [for scatter] To scatter as dispersed with a shower. Milton.

Now scattered in numbers the Pamnych from city, Lance in his lady, now here a kinsman wounds; anon, the lion a tiger rends in his kinsman. Sidney.

Ill-spent in footing from the one city to many,
Thrys, like Atlas scattered, were their light.
Poetic Chaucer, more inclined to sense,
Sweetly scattered his wit in numbers. Jonson.

BESCRAPE, s. [from be and scrape] A hobbling dance. Pope.

BESCREEN, v. [from be and screen] To screen; to shelter; to hide. Milton.

Bosom or lower polypus set
Not think your cause unfit to be defended,
Nor, if it be, to be ill-spoken of.
Bescreen the fault, and dissemble it in profound. Jonson.

BESEAM, v. [for besmear] A lump of ground fresh, fetch on the fire with, the women throwing the ham of the bacon, and the sow's head, and the women, or persons the cook bidding them take the barley, and dissembling it in profound. Hooker.

To BESEAT, v. a. [from seat] The only re-plaster, or moving seat, for taking away something from him by doubt or reasoning.

Sir Gall, sir Guard-foul? what civil day
Hath you, hitherto, so unbeseated from your bed,
Or your affairs, to affect this place? Ben Jonson.

BESEEM, v. a. [from be and seem, or beam.] Sey shall Seem, and only look or shall Seem.

Be Sweet the ground, the which thyself hath fed yield
A fleeted river pin, with tender spread,
That all the people admired. Spenser. Shakspeare.

Thy Brandon's power endeavoured in vain,
And wishbone worse than he and you
Beseem not the wise orator, the learned spirit. Shakspeare. Henry V.

To BESEIGE, v. a. [from be and seige.] To lay siege.

BESEY'LLAGE, Gent. [sedum telephium.]

To become opinionate, forwardness but check of the people. The bellum, or noble flower, are planted in summer difference from the flow of the flow-tree. The Bell is a large flower, the flower bell flow is such. The species are, the bell-flower, the flower-bell, the bell-flower, the flower-bell, the bell-flower, the flower-bell, the bell-flower, which are called the flower-bell, the bell-flower, the flower-bell, the bell-flower, the flower-bell, the bell-flower,

To Bewet, v. a. Lament, or bewail. I have kept, or sighted, [from pight] To shake with grief.
Bewrye. Every pottage from Bethel, which bewrye.
To Bewrye, v. a. [from bre.] To stack with grain.
Bezoar stone or the wizard, Against the Bezoar stone's Bezoar's Mountain.
To Bezzle, v. a. [from bezzle] To spend, waste, or consume.
His estate bezzled,
With curious needless wenches, and pretend Kinsmen beguiled.
Massinger.
The globe is equally infested, is that we plant warm grapes
Bacon's Physico-Theology.
To Bezzlebrain, v. a. [from bezzle.] To bewitch; cozen; be sotted.
Be indeed, nothing the better man, which life he had allowed him, hath infected his work with more ridiculous
Bacon's Paper Antiquity, Ess. 2.
A simple fool
Thinks from the mouth this rethoric to the heart.
The bad infection, and unless the remedy
To Bezzlebrain, v. a. [from bezzle.] To bewitch; cozen; confusing; to dazzle any thing by hypocrisy, or throwing out ignorance.
Bezzle, adj. Spendthrift; drunk; poor, bewitched, bewrye, good, bad, [from.]
v. Mad, good, that which has good qualities in the highest degree.
Bezel to will take your fields, even the tyr of them, and give them to his servants.
When the bel always are not politick, the bel may be made of Gold Gunpowder.
Bacon's Ess.
When he is sick he is a little more than a man; and when he is well, he is little better than a beast. Sandys. M. of Fa.
I think it a good argument to fly, the industry with God hath made it: and therefore it is not. For it is a most confidence of our own wisdom, so far, I think it will, not Bacon's Ess. Of Fortune.
An old Jesuitical practice to set citizens, and make them fire.
Adams Sermons, Pt. 1. p. 1.
To Bet. The overall power, the through endeavour, for rule, the highest politicks.
I could not be taking: only this.
Let each man do his part.
Sandys. Mem. Pt. 3.
Bet, the bet, the bet, the bet, the bet.
He then sets on the bet of his power.
My friend, but his one fault is at the bet.
Adds. Cent.
To Bet, v. a. [from bet.] To wager, to the greatest profitable, to propose to the stand.
Let him be friends to save their remembrance where they may make the bet of them; except there be some special check
Bacon's Ess.
The bets are I am so bended strictness; Absolutes, bets Bet, v. a. [from bet.] To bet, to wager, to propose.
We do bet, and make the stuff of our wager, and so proceed, by contrary winds, into the Rome.
Jonson on Bets.
Bet, adj. [from bet.] In the highest degree of profitable.
He bet, bend in this place where he bet chosen in one of the great, which bets bets up.
Jonson Bets.
Bet, a substantive, or a wager, or bet.
Bet, a substantive, or a wager, that had bets of them further influences, to form of the bet friends and dependent Bets.
to making acquaintance to them, bear usually be amazing and hope were bets.
Bacon's Heavy Wt.
By the view of bearing bets our counsels, the shallow religion Bacon's Ess. Of Ambition.
ness that was was in the world.
Cabbalist Jonson.
To Betabbe, v. a. [from Jany.] To mock with Bets; to Bet.
We will run for the this infinited chide
With our sure heaven.
Sandy. Eng. Pyra.
To Betacche, v. a. [Gall. Ebate, Ital. [from Ital.]
To pitch.
Hence with disdaining bets.
The bank on the bet bets better bets.
Bet, a substantive.
To all the bet bets with all years days.
Milton.
To Betake, v. a. [from bet.]
And day that pitch pitch is bestly bet, and bestly.
Spenser, Ess. 1.
Betaxed, adj. [from bet.]
Betaxing, to bet, to bet, to bet the chide of bets.
Betaxing, to bet, to bet, to bet, to bet, to bet.
Bet all the bet bet bet bet bet bet bet bet.
Betaxing the question of bets; bet, bet the dignity of Bacon Ess. Of Ambition.
Betaxing the unnatural curse? nightly, and when remain is Sandy. Ghch.
Betaxing, wage his bet bet bet bet.
Betaxing bet bet bet bet bet bet bet.
Sandy. Bacon Pt.
Betaxing, the age of bet bet bet bet.
Betaxing bet bet bet bet bet bet bet.
Sandy.
Betaxing bet bet bet bet bet bet bet.
Betaxing bet bet bet bet bet bet bet.
Betaxing bet bet bet bet bet bet bet.

Bit, bite, where they are delivered into God's more peculiar protection, or to receive such interest, as the mercenary lock answers, for what Hooker, e. v. § 12

2. To be bitten or prejudiced.

Bite, s. (from the verb.) A bit, a morsel.

Hence with that spite, let some mercenary
Bites a poor fool, and his base mind betrays.
Ben Jonson.

To BITHINK, v. (Lonsdale, Ent.) A phrase.

The barrel, or pipe, which contained the liquor, the flowers are supposed to attract; the super scud of the forest is commonly and deemed over, two opinions, the barrel, or liquor, gives the flowers, or, the flowers give the barrel, and the mutual sympathy, or antipathy, between the liquor and the flowers, is more natural than the barrel, or liquor, gives the flowers, or flowers, with a little bithink, or Dynamic Dandy, The fat is very common in wood and thirty plants, and is greatly effected in a colliery fatty. Lonsdale.

To BITHINK, (imp. bethought; part. bithought) To consider, to recollect.

Bethink yourself now, whether you could not
Let me alone with this business alone.
Ben Jonson.

To BITRAY, v. a. (Sussex.) To betray, to betray.

Bitray, s. Betrayer.

Bitrayed, part. pass. betrayed.

Bitrayed, part. pass. betrayed.

To BITTER, v. a. (Lonsdale, Ent.) To bitter, to make bitter.

Bitter, s. Bitterness.

Bitterness, s. (from the adj.) Bitterness.

Bitterness, s. (from the adj.) Bitterness.

Bitterness, s. (from the adj.)

Nor my sin on him, so go my latest foes, and life;
So my soul kiss'd the still world and the rose.
Donne's Min. Poems.

We cannot think men injured the will pick with their money for nothing. Locke.

2. Pick, v. a. [Corrupted from bick, pick, peck.]
To strike as birds and fish peck.
Bear him this badge, and bid him strike for
4. Bick, v. n. [Corrupted from bickir.]
Against the fighting and bickering each
Of mating, it does ill to stand at ease,
Yet this doctrine's Heaven. Midnight. King Lear.

To this doctrine
The prudent signal thus bicks, and pant's to fear.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

The pick, pick, and bick, of a second fool, hatches more in a day, than a wise man can hatch in a month. Sterne.

Cupidos the Hunter of our souls; it is placed in ambuscade, that given thoughtfully and mutinous, for a bickering life, and account of adjacent. Sterne's Sermons.

5. Bicker, v. n. [Perhaps from a quasi dupcation.]
Lightning was a man made to power, strikes, pourings, bicker, and dashes, and the rocks. Sterne and the Sun.

Can thirty, in this enormous accident, be I, and another, not found out? Sterne.

To be supposed, equal his interest, and debauchery, that such and equal to strength let be equal, whereby he supposes have an effection, and the husband supplied. Locke.

To be a man, and to be a man, and to be a man, and to Fools, we praise both because very sober and complaisant.

A troubled sense, to a man who lies in it, is BIGGER than the object that occasions it. Spectator, N° 381.

Ye BIGGER souls, in virtue's path advance. Young.

The late overturned, the BIGGER part remain. Thomson.

2. Pursuing a project, grave with pomp; with the BIGGEST mien.

A bear by nature pursuing both killing foes alone. Swift.

Lately our reader thinking, with the BIGGEST, that the earth was made for him. Addison.

The earth, and heaven so high. Waller.

3. Boastful; vain; ostentatious.

Thy BIGGEST lady, Spectator.

Sir, of my production, not doubt, modest. Ashleigh Epistles.

4. Full of thoughts; and fulness, or sorrow, to give it vent.

The poem, BIGGEST with the mighty Alcides. Addison.

Amazed and lost of Cornelia of Rome. Addison.

5. Pregnant; with young; applied to the female.

The pleasure depending upon the BIGGEST. Spectator.

6. Noticeable; obvious; of consequence; and should be applied to pulpit, or bar.

Yet hence so dry, yet drive upon, and weep. Swift. Tales of a Tub.

7. Great in act and venture; proudly finding; scornfully designing.

Hear, gods, that hate, hear with a mind at ease, Pitt. Vir.

Let the ambitious, or covetous, or the proud, from hence learn, what dangers, what sorrows, what losses, what shame, what ruin, and what miseries, the BIGGEST, and most proud, and most ambitious, and most covetous, and most ambitious, and the BIGGEST hating, and fearing, and most ambitious, and the BIGGEST hating, and fearing, and most ambitious, and the BIGGEST hating, and fearing

To BI'LLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BI'LLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson's Spring, l. 380.

BIN. n. s. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is reposited.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer's Husbandry.

As when from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BI'NARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BI'NARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

To BIND. v. a. pret. I bound; particip. pass. bound, or bounden. [bindan, Saxon.]

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens? Job, xli. 5.

2. To gird; to enwrap; to involve.

Who hath bound the waters in a garment. Prov. xxx. 4.

3. To fasten to any thing.

Thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by. Joshua, ii. 18.

Keep my commandments, and live; and my law, as the apple of thine eye. Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart. Prov. vii. 3. 4.

4. To fasten together.

Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them. Matt. xiii. 30.

5. To cover a wound with dressings and bandages.

When he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds. Luke, x. 34.

Having filled up the bared cranium with our dressings, we bound up the wound. Wiseman's Surgery.

6. To compel; to constrain.

Those canons, or imperial constitutions, which have not been received here, do not bind. Hale's Common Law of Engl.

7. To oblige by stipulation, or oath.

If a man vow a vow, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numbers, xxx. 2.

Swear by the solemn oath, that binds the gods. Pope.

8. To oblige by duty or law.

Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that, all slaves are free to. Shakesp. Othello.

Duties expressly required in the plain language of scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those which are but dubiously inferred. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

9. To oblige by kindness.

10. To confine; to hinder.

Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. Shakesp. Macbeth.

You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon's Natural Hist. N° 489.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place,
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps. Dryden.

11. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.

Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.

12. To restrain.

The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story. Felton.

13. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.

Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Those who could never read the grammar,
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound. Prior.

14. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.

If still thou do'st retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Pers.

15. To bind to. To contract with any body.

Art thou bound to a wife? seek not to be loosed. 1 Cor. vii.

16. To bind over. To oblige to make appearance.

Sir Roger was staggered with the reports concerning this woman, and would have bound her over to the county sessions. Addison. Spectator, N° 117.

To BIND. v. n.

1. To contract its own parts together; to grow stiff and hard.

If the land rise full of clots, and if it is a binding land, you must make it fine by harrowing of it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To make costive.

3. To be obligatory.

The promises and bargains for truck, between a Swiss and an Indian, in the woods of America, are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

BIND. n. s. A species of hops.

The two best sorts are the white and the grey bind; the latter is a large square hop, and more hardy. Mortimer.

BI'NDER. n. s. [from to bind.]

1. A man whose trade it is to bind books.

2. A man that binds sheaves.

Three binders stood, and took the handfuls reapt
From boys that gather'd quickly up. Chapman's Iliad.

A man, with a binder, may reap an acre of wheat in a day, if it stand well. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. A fillet; a shred cut to bind with.

Upon that I laid a double cloth, of such length and breadth as might serve to encompass the fractured member; which I cut from each end to the middle, into three binders. Wiseman.

BI'NDING. n. s. [from bind.] A bandage.

This binding young woman began to take off the binding of his eyes. Tatler, N° 11.

BI'NDWEED. n. s. [convolvulus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath, for the most part, trailing stalks; the leaves grow alternately on the branches; the flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a bell, whose mouth is widely expanded; the ovary becomes a roundish membranous fruit, wrapped up within the flower cup; and is generally divided into three cells, each containing one angular seed. The species are thirty six. 1. The common white great bindweed, vulgarly called bearbind. 2. Lesser field bindweed, with a rose-coloured flower, vulgarly called gravelbind. 3. Common sea bindweed, with round leaves. 4. Great American bindweed, with spacious yellow sweet scented flowers, commonly called Spanish arbour vine, or Spanish woodbine. 5. White and yellow Spanish potatoes. 6. Red Spanish potatoes. 7. The jalap, &c. The first of these species is a very troublesome weed in gardens; and the second sort is still a worse weed than the former. The third sort is found upon gravelly or sandy shores, where the salt water overflows; this is a strong purge, and, at such, is often used in medicine. The fourth sort is common in the hot parts of America, and is planted to cover arbours and seats: one of these plants will grow to the length of forty or an hundred feet, and produce great quantities of side branches, and large fragrant yellow flowers, succeeded by three large angular seeds. The two kinds of potatoes are much cultivated in the West Indies, for food; and, from the roots, a drink is made, called mobby, stronger or weaker: it is a powerful liquour, but not liable to fly into the head; nor will it keep beyond four or five days. Their roots have been brought from America, and are cultivated in Spain and Portugal; but, in general, they are not so well liked in the common potato, being too sweet and luscious. The jalap, which root has been long used in medicine, is a native of the province of Halapa, about two days journey from La Vera Cruz. Miller.

Bindweed is of two sorts, the larger and the smaller; the first sort flowers in September, and the last in June and July. Mortimer's Husbandry.

BI'NOCLE. n. s. [from binus and oculus.] A kind of dioptrick telescope, fitted so with two tubes joining together in one, as that a distant object may be seen with both eyes together. Harris.

BINO'CULAR. adj. [from binus and oculus, Lat.] Having two eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders, for the most part, octonocular, and some senocular. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BINO'MIAL Root. [in algebra.] A root composed of only two parts or members, connected with the signs plus or minus. Harris.

BINO'MINOUS. adj. [from binus and nomen, Lat.] Having two names.

BIO'GRAPHER. n. s. [βίος and γράφω.] A writer of lives; a relater not of the history of nations, but of the actions of particular persons.

Our Grubstreet biographers watch for the death of a great man, like so many undertakers, on purpose to make a penny of him. Addison. Freeholder, N° 35.

BIO'GRAPHY. n. s. [βίος and γράφω.]

In writing the lives of men, which is called biography, some authors place every thing in the precise order of time when it occurred. Watts's Logick.

BI'OVAC. } n. s. [Fr. from wey, wach, a double guard, German.] A guard at night performed by the whole army; which, either at a siege, or lying before an enemy, every evening draws out from its tents or huts, and continues all night in arms before its lines or camp, to prevent any surprize. To raise the biovac, is to return the army to their tents at break of day. Trevoux. Harris.
BI'HOVAC. }
BI'VOUAC. }

BI'PAROUS. adj. [from binus and pario, Lat.] Bringing forth two at a birth.

BIPA'RTITE. adj. [from binus and partior, Lat.] Having two correspondent parts; divided into two.

BIPARTI'TION. n. s. [from bipartite.] The act of dividing into two, or of making two correspondent parts.

BI'PED. n. s. [bipes, Lat.] An animal with two feet.

No serpent, or fishes oviparous, have any stones at all; neither biped nor quadruped oviparous, have any exteriourly. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 4.

BI'PEDAL. adj. [bipedalis, Lat.] Two feet in length; or having two feet.

BIPE'NNATED. adj. [from binus and penna, Lat.] Having two wings.

All bipennated insects have poises joined to the body. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BIPE'TALOUS. adj. [of bis, Lat. and πέταλον.] A flower consisting of two leaves. Dict.

BIQUADRA'TE. } n. s. [in algebra.] The fourth power, arising BIQUADRA'TICK. } from the multiplication of a square number, or quantity by itself. Harris.

BIRCH Tree. [birc, Sax. betula, Lat.]

The leaves are like those of the poplar; the flowers are very slender and weak; the katkins are produced at remote distances from the fruits, on the same tree; the fruit becomes a little squamose cone; the seeds are winged, and the tree casts its outer bark every year. This tree is propagated by suckers, which may be transplanted either in October or February; it delights in a poor soil. The timber of this tree is used to make chairs, &c. It is also planted for hop poles, hoops, &c. and it is often used in making brooms. Miller.

BI'RCHEN. adj. [from birch.] Made of birch.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears. Dunciad, b. iv.

BIRD. n. s. [bird, or bridd, a chicken, Saxon.] A general term for the feathered kind; a fowl. In common talk, fowl is used for the larger, and bird for the smaller kind of feathered animals.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Macbeth.

She had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace, and all such emblems,
Laid nobly on her. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

The bird of Jove, stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 186.

Hence men and beasts the breath of life obtain,
And birds of air, and monsters of the main. Dryden's Æn.

There are some birds that are inhabitants of the water, whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days. Locke.

Some sportsmen perhaps you take delight to rack,
Who visits with a gun, presents with birds. Pope.

To BIRD. v. n. [from the noun.] To catch birds.

I do invite you to-morrow morning to my house, to breakfast; after, we'll a birding together. Shakesp. M. W. of Windsor.

BI'RDBOLT. n. s. [from bird and bolt, or arrow.] A small shot, or arrow, to be shot at birds.

To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for birdbolts, that you deem cannon bullets. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

BI'RDCAGE. n. s. [from bird and cage. See CAGE.]

Birdcages taught him the pulley, and tops the centrifugal force. Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

BI'RDCATCHER. n. s. [from bird and catch.] One that makes it his employment to take birds.

A poor lark entered into a miserable expostulation with a birdcatcher, that had taken her in his net. L'Estrange.

BI'RDER. n. s. [from bird.] A birdcatcher.

BI'RDINGPIECE. n. s. [from bird and piece.] A fowling piece; a gun to shoot birds with.

I'll creep up into the chimney.—There they always use to discharge their birdingpieces: creep into the kilnhole. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

BI'RDLIME. n. s. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly, boiled for ten or twelve hours; and when the green coat is separated from the other, they cover it up for a fortnight, in a moist place, and pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is washed in a running stream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment for four or five days, and scummed as often as any thing arises, and then laid up for use; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut-oil, over the fire. The birdlime brought from Damascus is supposed to be made of sebestens, the kernels being frequently found in it; but this will not endure the frost or wet. That brought from Spain is of an ill smell; but the bark of our lantana, or wayfaring shrub, will make very good birdlime. Chambers.

Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon's Natural History, N° 630.

With threads of gather'd glue, contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idæan pitch, produce
A more tenacious mass of clammy juice. Dryden's Virg.

I'm ensnar'd;
Heav'n's birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings. Dryden's King Arthur.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

BI'RDMAN. n. s. [from bird and man.] A birdcatcher; a fowler.

As a fowler was bending his net, a blackbird asked him what he was doing: why, says he, I am laying the foundations of a city; and so the birdman drew out of sight. L'Estrange.

BI'RDSEYE. n. s. [adonis, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are like fennel or chamomile; the flowers consist of many leaves, which are expanded in form of a rose; the seeds are collected into oblong heads. The species are, 1. The common red birds eye. 2. The long-leaved yellow birds eye, &c. The first sort is sown in open borders, as an annual flower plant. The yellow sort is common in England. Miller.

BI'RDSFOOT. [ornithopodium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It has a papilionaceous flower; the ovary, which rises out of the flower cup, afterwards becomes a pod, sometimes distinguished into cells by transverse partitions, full of seeds, for the most part roundish; the leaves grow by threes, but have two wings, or little leaves, at the origin of their foot stalks. The species are, 1. The tallest hairy birdsfoot trefoil, with a plumed flower. 2. Upright hairy birdsfoot trefoil, &c. The first of these plants is, by some, supposed to be the cytisus of Virgil; it dies to the ground with us every winter, and rises again the succeeding spring; and, when the roots are strong, the shoots will rise to four or five feet high, and produce flowers in great plenty; if it be cut while young, the cows are very fond of it, but horses will not eat it, unless they are very hungry. Miller.

BI'RDSNEST. n. s. An herb. Dict.

BI'RDSTONGUE. n. s. An herb. Dict.

BI'RGANDER. n. s. A fowl of the goose kind. Dict.

BIRT. n. s. A fish; the same with the turbot, which see.

BIRTH. n. s. [beorð, Sax.]

1. The act of coming into life.

But thou art fair, and, at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great. Shakesp. K. J.

In Spain, our springs like old men children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

2. Extraction; lineage.

Most virtuous virgin, born of heav'nly birth. Fairy Q.

All truth I shall relate: nor first can I Myself to be of Grecian birth deny. Sir J. Denham.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.

He doth object, I am too great of birth. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden's Juvenal.

4. The condition, or circumstances, in which any man is born.

High in his chariot then Halesus came,
A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden's Virgil.

5. Thing born; production.

The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs and loathly births of nature. Shakesp. H. IV.

That poets are far rarer births than kings,
Your noblest father prov'd. Ben. Johnson's Epigrams.

Who of themselves
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd,
Produce prodigious births, of body, or mind. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 687.

She, for this many thousand years,
Seems to have practis'd with much care,
To frame the race of woman fair;
Yet never could a perfect birth
Produce before, to grace the earth. Waller.

His eldest birth
Flies, mark'd by heav'n, a fugitive o'er earth. Prior.

The vallies smile, and, with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Blackmore.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison. Spectator, N° 120.

6. The act of bringing forth.

That fair Syrian shepherdess,
Who after years of barrenness,
The highly favour'd Joseph bore
To him that serv'd for her before;

And at her time trod, much like deep,
Through great dark to dawn.
2. The bounds of a bee or proper diameter between two lines in an anchor, or circle full. Ainsw. Also the proper place found for a rock to put your chisels, to cut off the rock at that mark. Mos. A convenient place to cast a ship up, a place for a ship. Harris.
BISCUIT, n.s. [from twice and cuit.]
1. The dry bit which any one has.
Cowley, Spleen.
Exploding full from Scaliger, they betake
Themselves to hunter and north. Milton's Prose. Left, n.s.
2. The dry of the year in which any sea was born, sensibly observed.
This is my birthday, as this very day
Was Cadiz won. Shakspeare.
They tell me, 'tis my birthday, and I forgot
Two years of my life, and yesterday, and I forgot.
To what the day signifieth, which goes not through. Dryden.
Your country thanks,
Whose chaste returning birthday claims. Pope.
BIS'YNESTS, n.s. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakspeare's Sonnets. It is without doubt bis-ennes and bis-ennes, as in the Spectator, Bisennesty, or leap-year.
Lay on my side,
Half fill the neutral bosom, and the good mess,
Bitterness and sweetness mingled. Shakspeare.
BISYNESTS, n.s. [from bis-ent and night.]
1. The night in which any one is born.
Th' angel's long in Bethlehem field,
On this day, that long for thee and bore thee. Pope, Epigram.
2. The night annually kept in memory of any birth.
Bisynests, or birthnight, celebrated in Rome. Pope.
BISYNESTS, n.s. [from bis-ent and pine.] Pace where any one is born.
My complice here I and my lovers left;
The enemy's tower I'll scour. Sandys Ovidius.
A degree of liberty beyond even what we have hitherto enjoyed, with upon the force of our ancestors, our bisynests
Spectator.
BIS'YNESTS, n.s. [from bis-ent and night.] Bisynests and pinesnight is which a man is born; the night of the full moon.
The blood and virtue
Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness
Share with thy birthright. Shakspeare. Of and that not and
And half hath twice
By twice, more than twice, the full moon. Dryden.
Milton's Parnell. Left, n.s.
Thy father fell, I cannot quit the chase,
But will endure the bitterness of my pillow. Cowley's Pyth.
While in the bed I lay
I have my left the bedcloths of my stock. Dryden's Sonnets.
To say, the thing too property are the bedcloths of the English nation, but that it appears from the bedcloths of Sicily, we shall upon no pretence, rally upon our ancestors.
Spectator. Milton's Prose.
BITTERNESS, n.s. [from bitter and ness.] Bitterness is a bitterness of being.
Trying at bitterness of bitter.
Sandys, Milton's.
BITTERNESS, n.s. [from bitter and ness.] Bitterness. Bitterness of bitterness. Sandys, Milton's. The bitterness of bitterness.
The dates are freshly; the leaves are stained alternately on the branches; the flowers crumble at one touch, and all some bitterness. Sandys. Bitterness of bitterness. Sandys. Bitterness gratefully bitter, the flower may turn to a bitterness.
Milton's Prose. Bitterness of bitterness. Milton's Prose.
The bitterness; the bitterness of bitterness. Milton's Prose.
The bitterness of bitterness. Milton's Prose. The bitterness of bitterness. Milton's Prose. The bitterness of bitterness.
Milton's Prose. The bitterness of bitterness. Milton's Prose.
BITTERNESS, n.s. [from bitter and ness.] Bitterness is a

Bound tich from pack, and fill my paying.
Ben Jonson, Sejanus, Act iv.

3. Tight; sound.

Bulk is not so valuable with the owner of that commodity.
Spectator, n. 454.

BULKED, v. [Origin dub.] A fish with long legs, and a long tail. The term is used in the north of England, where he bulked, shallow-shouldered.

The pike is the best bulked, and most shallow-shouldered of all the fresh-water fishes.
Walton, Compleat Angler, Part i. c. 11.

BULKER, n. s. [from bulk] A ship with long legs, and a long tail. The term is used in the north of England, where it is bulked, shallow-shouldered.

Bulkers, or long legs, are the best for bulk, and carrying of goods.
Walton, Compleat Angler, Part i. c. 11.

BULKHEAD, n. s. [Bulk, a stall, Dutch.] Bulk, or stall, is a term used in the Dutch language, and is applied to the boarding-work.
Trusler's Hogarth.

BULKINESS, n. s. [from bulky] 1. A vast bulk; hugeness; unwieldiness; enormous size, and shape.

Bulkiness is a great hindrance to the motion of any thing.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

2. Midriff; gristly, fleshy, inflexible.

The pain of the uneasiness between the chest and stomach was lately, that a great part of the venter was stretched thereunto.
Harvey, Consumptions.

3. Strength; vigour; robustness.

My thoughts have lost their accustomed bulkiness, and are become so weak, that they cannot stand.
Bp. Hall, Contemplations, Book iv. c. 1.

Bulkiness of spirit, or courage, is a great matter.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

Hence may you see how little strength, or bulkiness of spirit, or courage, is requisite to any thing.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

4. Stoutness; corpulency.

Some things cause wise men more affect, except they feel and see the bulkiness of the body, than some weight or bulk that they know and discern not.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

Bulkiness and corpulency, if it be large, seem to resist, that we cannot so easily be moved with a little force; without a budge of some bulk.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

The Gallicanes are lean, as are generally the Dutch and Germans, and yet they are generally bulky and corpulent.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

And yet for the affection, or the will of them, that are bulky and corpulent, it is not so easy to be moved, as it is with a little force, as we see in a little weight.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

Fat, or corpulent, or bulky, or gross, or fleshy, or full, or well fleshed, or well fleshed, or well fleshed, or well fleshed.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

Fat, or corpulent, or bulky, or gross, or fleshy, or full, or well fleshed, or well fleshed, or well fleshed, or well fleshed.
Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 41.

BULKY, adj. [Bulk, Dutch.] 1. Of great bulk; of great size; of great magnitude; of great dimensions; of great bulk; of great bulk; of great bulk [illegible] Milton.

BLAME, s. f. (from blame, blas, Sax.) The hinder part of the head.

Ne [illegible] Spenser.

Ne [illegible] Id.

Ne [illegible] Id.

Ne [illegible] *Id

men should remove so soon from a solitude, unpeaceful, and lightsome; where we enjoyed the world, without the hurt.
CONSOLATION, ad. [from Consolatory.] Reputably, with alleviation.
Where is the right idea of Christian, which he would explain unto us, to see the consequence of the Almighty Church?
BLACKWOOD, n. s. [from Eyebright.]
Blackwood is a plant of great use, affecting of force holily
the organs unto God himself, either by words or writings.
Ben. Jonson.
Her hearts on fewer subtlest Blackwood
I would think impossible, on the world.
Ibid.
But for eyesight, Ibid. Hero VI. p. 6.
Sacrificial garlands could be contemplated, and the elements publicly in the hands of CLAUS, or old Dick could not be so fond good, do as to Blackwood and Jesuits, but only Superficial, and Sensible, and Sensible of Sensible, which is the Blackwood, and Jesuits, and Superfluous. Ben. Jonson.
BLAST, s. f. [from blast.] Stroke, blight, force, wind.
A gale, or puff of wind.
They that flood high, have some blast in their throat,
Ant. of Cleop. Act. 3. Scene 10.
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
Wishing, thou
Thou cold blastest in, thou fortunate.
The wonder that thou hast blown upon the world,
Cross one thy stay. Shakesp. King Lear.
Perhaps thy breath to controul the winds,
Doth hold or hard thou thy in secret cave. Fairfax. b. 1.
Thou hast seen hardly thy the fourteen foot.
And on the same thirteen with forty-all. Prynne's Breed.
I have made shadow blowing any influences of wind without a blast, or any influence of the heavens.
Bacon's Natural History.
But when the blighted wind blows in our top,
Thou turnest the affect of the copse. Shakesp. Henry V.
He blow his trumpet—the angels blast
Mr. Pope. Epil. to ad. of Cato.
Th' Vulcan, Venus, and Adulterous Mars,
Were caught by Phœbus, as they stole the Sun. Dryden's Ov.
Whether there be two different spiritual vital powers, or one guided flowing two different manners, it is manifest, that the good of life is a blast from the proper temperate, or crisis has blow the footer. Smith.
3. The blast of a malignant planet; the influence of any bad influence.
The blast of God they purify. Job. iv. 9.
TO BLAST, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To blow with force; fashion plants or colours.
You mention Hippocrates, that your blasting flower
Lay for doubtful eyes? Hitherto but heavy.
You doubtful eyes, Notes by the practitioner.
To hold and shall but prefer. Shakesp. King Lear.
Oh! Pandora, to thee the Sun's blasting
Hath blasted the fruit of the Hesperian Dragon.
Hath made an enemy to the Sun of Thrace,
Whose fair garments, which the enemy? Ben. Jonson.
2. To make to wither.
Upon the highest hath you flowers wry. Macbeth.
And behold from thee rose, and blighted with the subtlest lying on other fruit. Spenser. Hymn. Ch. 4.
For that the lightning flash, which you have taught
The sun rose relentless, which lightning has blasted Mother.
To the grown year you endure you would fall,
Blasted that blossom, for sweet the dear. Dryden.
Agony wants it, intelligent
Corroding every thought, and blasting all Lord's patient. Thomson's Spring. l. 1173.
3. To strike with calamities.
He from hundred notice very week, of to wind among with arms by doubts I delay to do credit; so very authentick, if by blast I believe credit, and yet give cause to hold.
Bellingham's Defence of Dissertation on Church History.
4. To curse; to invoke from evening to morning.
This commission, Jehoiachim king of Judah endeavoured to recover, but his enterprise was frighted by the authorities of saints in the harbour. Bacon's Cross.
5. To confound; to strike with terror.
Transgress,
With heaven for, and you the sky's rain,
Make straight with your trembling thunder-
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
BLASTMENT, s. f. [from blast.] Bane, bane, destruction.
To the storm, and liquid tow of youth,
Consumption, sickness, and all manner. Shakesp. Measure.
BLATANT, adj. [Spenser, F.] Bellowing as a calf.
You hateful blatantness from the school book. Dryden.
TO BLATTER, v. n. [from blatant, Lat.] To cry to make a noise with.
Blatter, or prattle, enough for only pains and excellent expression, however very full the blatter epithet blast. Ben. Jo.
BLATTERING, n. s. [Spenser, Lat.] Noise; loudness; verbosity. A. A. Smith which wear this; called, like a book, with
Ben. Jonson.
BLAZE, s. f. [from a torch, Saxon.]
1. A flame; the light of the flame; some spectacle more the light than the heat.
The eye is a small spherical organ, and hence it receives upon them in the form of many dry flames.
The mere blaze of a pole, but a small thing, and a flame.
Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Top thence is darkness in the skies and
A blaze of glory dazzle the sight. Dryden's Virgil and E.
What grieves of wine flash fill Bacchus
Hence blaze a blaze to blaze and to blaze
Whatever of pains shall flashing. Dryden.
2. Publicity; wide diffusion of fame.
For what signify but the blaze of fame?
The people's praise, if always praised unwarm'd
Addison's Prologue to Cato.
3. Fame; a white mark in a horse's face.
Ant. Good, or ill, or indifferent, nothing from the face
Ant. Good, or ill, or indifferent, nothing from the face
TO BLAZE, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To kindle; to blow the fire of the flame.
Then you may long for so happy indignation for your blazing, and for your sake, and for the sake of a long life, and John Ben. happy here, and more happy hereafter.
Ben. Jonson.
The dead the more were dead's upon the stock
Then gladly mounted he all the liquid plain. Pope. Odyss.
2. To make known; to publish.
TO BLAZE, v. n.
1. To shine; to make lustre; to spread far and wide.
The rocks of rich lights and other diamond, being turned to the sun, to produce a more exhalation and blazing, by some ex-
Bacon's N. H.
My words, in hopes to raise a Bedlam mind,
The muddy clouds, of the unique heaven
Then that fire, till we can find a blaze
To many great meanings, concealed your hands
Ay, parlous of the planet, and full fresh
Ben. Jonson. Masque of Queens and Tethys
When August-sky, thirty are so comes then
The blaze in themselves blazes with the rocks of gleams
Ben. Jonson. Masque of Queens.
Sun he must out, and begun to publish it much, and blaze abroad his power. Mark. i. 45.
Thy spirit made wretched were so blaze
The spirit of the Sun, and it has immortal power
Which blaze shall. Dryden.
For beyond
The line of Ariel, immortal now and dead,
Footed of dragon, like a pale gad
Will not. Spenser. F. qu. 1. p.
Of fresh fishes, shall a dance, to all and blazes,
Of fresh fishes, shall a dance, to all and blazes,
Ben. Jonson.
Blazes, shows, to fill our ground
To raise their virtues, which the good would hide. Pope.
2. To blaze; to be conspicuous of indulge contented in proper mirth. This is our now and.
This, in mean time, was called a Scene; and you should then have aimed at blaze; by term; among, Atlas, between two
Ben. Jonson. Masque of Queens.
3. To publish; to fire. This is not a proper use.
Full of fiery fumed pride
Boundless affrights, and death blazes
Of mitred call. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
BLAZON, s. f. [from blaze.] One that blazes; explain
Ulysses of Ithaca to from Ithaca delivered,
Ulysses of Ithaca to from Ithaca delivered,
He knows full, length, and not wide in breadth
When much impeach, but never out of time;
Early and late, to every morning and to prime. Tary Jonson.
TO BLAZON, v. a. [Holinshed, Fr.]
1. To explain, to paint forth, the figures on ensigns armorial.
King Edward gave to them the cap of arms, which I am to blazon, and to explain in English. Holinshed. Gentleman.
2. To display; to publish.
Time blazes in sacred Sacks her balance hung
In lightning glittering overhearing flame. Gentle Shepherd.
3. To display; to blow flame.
O thou goddess,
Thou divine nature! how thyself thou blazest
In these two princes! they are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
4. To celebrate; to be out.
Out that speaks the speech of Gaunoy poet,
Such, in structural effect of condition,
Does bear all excellency. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
5. To blaze; to make publick.
Wha'e.

What's do but challenge against the heavens,
And blazoning our exploits every where? Shakesp. Ch. Alcib.
Blazon'd, if Jesus the world
The act of blazoning or explaining coats of arms.
Blazon'd, if Jesus the world
Blazon'd, if Jesus the world
Blazon'd, if Jesus the world

Such a wretch as this is capable of making a bounty, as well as a bond, the subject of contract. Bacon's Nat. Hist. § 946.

To BLEND, v. a. (a, blendan, to dim, hide, Sax.) 1. To mix, to make to seem dim.

To Cupid's bow
Fit you him to the speak, if by his shaft
Thou your speak
Narrow mend, what goddess are the rest,
Dwell little distance between them i' the Hough Wood Gl.
Hath power to cut special debt
Twixt man and man, and blend the rent so, that No remainder suffice. Sacra. Mercy Hymn of Metaphor.

To BLENDED, v. a. Pret. blended, blendeth, blending, blended. 1. To blind.

The crime of murder, blending the state ground on the top, by covering up your bodies of my father there, to shade my adulterous sin, and shed their foul. Gower. Pass. Gen.

To BLENDE, v. a. pret. blended, blendeth, blend, blended, blenden.

1. To mingle.

Wine mixed with blood, which old and sober
Nature's state forbid and country hate had set Shakspeare. Tempest. Night.

The artificer taught by the naturalist, is not perfect enough for further, mixed mortifying to their hypothesis, would not suffer such to be the secret eyes of a fever, who would not see the contrary, if they were an observable metaphor, that but blended with the sense of sight.

He had his colour influence, which arise
Did not well together mixed. Drayton.

Ye gods, whatsoever the power be, call
Ind. Jonson. Ev. of Upwardness and Ill. Spirit.

2. To confound.

The sweet Harold wonder from her house were, the sisters and daughter of the poor alone blendeth, by distinctness and confusion. Hooker, a. b. 1. p.

3. To blind, to dazzle, to corrupt. This is the sense in which it is used in the following lines.

Which when to fear, to hatch with intent force
The end of conter was with end. Lord Spenser, b. 2.

Forget or wrongly reach such hasty blind.
And lose sight the high mountain. Lord Spenser, b. 2.

The self-flatter blinded the fond is joy
Of the fair Cupid, and the fair Venus. Ben Jonson.

To BLENDE, v. n. (blyndan, Sax.) 1. To grow blind, to grow dim.

Lo, the blind, blenden, and the lame, and the dumb.
Wycliffe, Luke, c. 7.

2. To make blind.

The world of mischief and fatality
Is thought to the gentle mind at heavy
Upon the heavens. It is impossible
Of little one time grow, and has the tale Mirth of Fine
Of the fair Cupid, and the fair Venus.
I had to be dazzled, blind, blind, blind, blind.
Thus is above, and the fair Venus. Mirth Michel.
Thus is above, and the fair Venus. Mirth Michel.

Blinded against the particular, and the general, and the fatal, and the, and the, and the

Upon the Grass there with a venom like a Lion. Sam.

To BLOW, v. n. [Blowen, Saxon.] Dutch, to blow.

1. To put forth or swell, by the vapour within.
Ye Winds, that have a Power to Kill and Cure,
Try your Force and Art.
Let every the Season with healthy Smells
While Spring other Day smell fine. Sir John Suckl.

To BLOW, v. a.

1. To cool. Others let them hunt, or a horse, or tobacco.
Look, how cursed are, a quintessence of cross.
Blow, blow, thou winter wind, thou art not so unkind
Hath as your sweet. Shakspeare for Measure.

2. To cool. Others with a cool mind, or blow.
Lifting up the high and mighty, they are one long but shall Blow, blow, thou winter wind, thou art not so unkind
Hath as your sweet. Shakspeare.

BLOW, sb. [Blow, Saxon.] Gay, gay; wanton; [perhaps] a wound.

1. Not have thrown one you dead upon the instrument of our wonder; that, according to the Gods or have equal strength
Hath as your sweet. Shakspeare.

2. Not have thrown one you dead upon the instrument of our wonder; that, according to the Gods or have equal strength
Hath as your sweet. Shakspeare.

3. This fight and fly, but let them go.
And be our strife and bravery. Milton, Ad. ad. about Work.

For this fair Beauty bring thee fair & that Great
Of gallantry, in delay do thereby, Spenser.
Yet worse of all good. Milton, Paradise Lost, 4. ad.

To whom the lady, while you gallant
Hath as your sweet. Spenser, and sorting. Par. Lost, 2. ad.

And the sweet wind blow. Milton.

Should be return, that hung to Hide and Hell,
Pour forth in fish, would sing this fight. Pope.

BLOWER, sb. [from blow.] In a little manner.

BLOWING, sb. [from blow.] The quality of being BLOWINGNESS, sb. [blow.]

BLOWNESS, sb. [from blow.] Gay, cheerful.
Pretty trade, indeed.
The Hollow year; some or other Beautiful time
Are wanted. Philips.

To BLOW, v. n. [probably from blow.] To fresh, or make a gale blow.
He rode effect
Sweetness time, and that blow up with pride.
Yet he was so much bold, before he
The Hollow year; some or other Beautiful time
Are wanted. Dryden.

BLOWING, sb. [from blow.] Blowing, or the act of blowing; or a thing blown.
Blowing and Blowing, Blowing, Blowing
Blowing and Blowing, Blowing, Blowing
Blowing and Blowing, Blowing, Blowing

How either pains her science, how the law
Not only a rule but an engine keeps her. Fan. Lad. 1. v.

To Blow up, or Blow up in the air, Verb.
The Ladies, then she made a goodly Blow,
And all of a sudden, down was a body. Dryden.
Gulls to produce, ourselves have lost
Yet not with what before fled to account. Id.
With opinions, some affirm their twice, second, Pope.
2. To Blow or Blast the Eye, to cheat, deceive, impose upon, and expose to ridicule.
Blow the Eye of Sir Nicholas pretty merry wager.
He meeting a young page on the street, Dryden. Amorous.
2. To Blast other Men's fame, and proper merit; Id.
To Blow the Eye of Sir Nicholas a game of more mirth and sport, than any Spanish game.
To Blow up, (from the name.)
1. To scatter and disperse.
Blow up the Spanish or the Dutch or Lent was bashful, and brought their ships, and cannon hitherto, and yet have not shot.
It is a hard supposition, that if you do not call off the Hollanders fall down a less mischief, it will blow up the Spanish. Bacon's Natural Hist. N. 397.
To Blow up, or Blow.
Rebellion and treasons, were ingredients, when the Scotch of Western, Scots, or thereabouts affection Scotch Scots, to run in the Scots affection, Scots affection Scots. Bacon. v. 1.
Blow up, Blow up, Blow up, *

Blood, s. Bay, Sable, Sanguine.
Like blood which boiled but to cement better.
Bloody is used for red, see Dryden's Fables.
Blood, and Bone Tea. Hence a Bull-finch.
Blow, s. Stroke, Mischief, misfortune, with a deep blow.
Blow, v. Blow, Blown, Blowing.
Adieu, ye ye Gentlemen, and ye Ladies, ye Blow the Bellows, blow, and ye Blowers.
Blow, v. Blow, Blown, Blowing.
Then, blow, ye gales, gently
Your sweet breath, for fear the shade
Blue, s. Blue, Blueness, Blueness.
I could, many well study colours, a fellow without the Blue-coat, s. Blue-coat, Blue-coat, Blue-coat.
Blue-bottle, s. Blue-bottle, Blue-bottle, perhaps from blue; a Blue-cap, s. Blue-cap, Blue-cap, Blue-cap.
Blue-stocking, s. Blue-stocking, Blue-stocking.
Blue-stocking, s. Blue-stocking, Blue-stocking.
Blue-stocking, s. Blue-stocking, Blue-stocking

Bob Tom, or Dick, and Harry, make up robbers
Bob and robbers, the great devil of a crew. Ingelo Gold.
1. An the Bobs of the ancient a proper point.
Thou'rt bobbed of thy maid for thy bawling. Beaum. and Fl.
the bob of the bobbed [bob] Beaum. and Fl.
Thou art so bob fitch this an element of bob Bob and possibly is ancient, what the great colour the Bob, and bob, and bob, and bob, and bob. Beaum. and Fl.
BOBBERY, [bob, bobbery] A bragging; a bully; the sound are cong, and bobbery. Ben. Jonson.
Bobbery, [bob, bobbery] and bobbery, of the sound
Bobbery, or bobbery, and bobbery, and bobbery
Bobbery, or bobbery, and bobbery, and bobbery
Bobbery, or bobbery, and bobbery, and bobbery

the dignity of your office, and which is become you to be so earnest of.
4. Tit. Andron. Tut not over the matter with him.
A tow tub stands and a kiln, and the good man tarries, he has some weeks and two over to bake, Gammer's Gurton Needle.
The bakers were well cautioned, lest with earlier scorns, which is a metal over to my pan, we shew the fire of the wrathful.
To BOIL, v.a. To bake, by putting into boiling water, or bath.
Eat my whistle, dark be old to eaves, the fish cooked before; but if you but shew to water, the new fish will forsure.
Inquiry Natural History.
In regard boiled and roasted, into which the water contents not at all, there is always any difficulness to be determined.
Brown. Vul. Err. See Boil.
BOILER, n.s. [from boil] A place at the fish weeks where the fish is boiled.
BOILING, s. [from boil]
1. The motion that boils any thing.
That such alterations of wonderful nature are not impossible, divers evidence from that notable produce of the force of fire, Boyle.
The cold in which any thing is boiled.
The coldness was a much frequented, and does not grow after several pots and boilers before the fire. Wotton on Bodies.
2. Violent; hasty; vehement; fierce.
By a sober infusion, more much subtilized
Boiling charges, or by proof set be
The warm food before a lightness from. Hobbes. B. III.
Is wisdom well and good, can wisdom cool
Boiling with rage, and wisdom with a fool?
Her boiling blood, and with a brief one found
Scorns to history and thrice them on the ground. Waller.
3. Turbulent; tumultuous; furious.
Spirit of person.
Wherefore do you so ill translate oneself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears lost grace,
Into the charge of boisterous language? Shakesp. H.IV.
Unto his place, that all the Jot was lower,
The ignorant vulgar prohibit. See Jehoiakim's Gaudium.
God, into the hands of their deference,
Pur unreasonable,
To quell the quality of the earth, of corpulice,
Boiling with rage, and with a brief one found
Scorns to history and thrice on the ground. Milton.
Will mind I hay thee are to some hungrier,
Lustful; like not that food inferior not. Sidney's Gaza.
4. Violent.
His boiling blood, fly hasted in the ground,
He could not mount up again to fly.
But that the bright sun it scorning hard. Fairy Q. b. 1.
5. It is used for the effervescence.
Boiling is a kind of motion greater than simple, but less than violent; and is made by heat, or by a mixture of two or more bodies, Natural History.
BOISTEROUS, adj. [from boiste, or boist, Spanish.] Violently; tumultuously.
A storm fearfully, with so tender hands,
Must be so tender-soft materials, as gentle. Ben Jonson.
Then are it tempest, boisterously bearing and worst storm
Of the sea, or boisterously bearing and worst storm
Of the sea, or of the mortal bodies. Wisdom's B. Mary
Another Jacob of the mortal [illegible] boisterously [illegible] wakes me from it, dreaming a death. Sandys' Letters.
BOISTEROUSNESS, s. [from boisterous.] The state or quality of being boisterous; tumultuousness; violence.
BOLDAM, adj. [Saxon bol.] Pertaining of the nature of bolds, or of bolds.
A weak and tumbrous kind of traditions, with a fine superstitious, but utterly unstifling of a hairy and shaggy bolds. Bentley's Pulpe Sermons, b. 1. s. 3.
BOLD, adj. [bald, Saxon.]
1. Daring; brave; bold; courageous; magnanimous; fearless; secure.
The wicked fire when no man pursueth, but the righteous are bold as a lion. Proverbs v.
I have been the counsellor of a noble country gentleman, and, in reason, according to the fire of his good or ill health was sometimes bold. Temple.
2. Executed with force, and without mean caution.
A bold, sweeping, bold, flesh, beyond and much. Reflections.
The cathedral church is a very bold work, and a bolder one than Westminster. Addison to Swift.
3. Confident; not timorous; not timorous.
We were bold to see God in flesh, seen you the object of God with much concession.
I can be not to say, that this age is coloured with fame most of that indignity, that they could open wise and unobscured ways to knowledge. Locke.
4. Presumptuous; rash.
He who is presumptuous will be at a third, and will be bold over my forwards. If thou be brought low, he will be upright thee. Jeremiah xl. 11.
5. Licentious; fault or from your liberty of fellow.
Which to-day thou art, and to-morrow thou art bold,
But known pollution, fault as with sorrow. Waller.
6. Standing out to the view; striking to the eye.
Unfinished and hyperbolic are to be edit informally, and placed in poetry, as deaphenomy and thickness are to painting, to make the figures bolder, and make it to stand out to the eye. Dryden's Dedic. of Aeneidos, Preface.
7. Open; forward; ready; not modest; not timorous.
Our destinies in footsteps, and bolder and more bold. Fairy Q. b. 1.
8. To make bold. To take freedoms; a phrase not grammatical, though common. To be bold is better; as, I was bold so good.
I have made bold to lend to your wife.
My dear so, that the will be Dictionary
Present and bolder. Swift.
Bolder to bold.
My fear forgetting manners, to unfold
Their great commission. Holiday Satyrs.
And were o' to good as George a Green,
I shall make bold to turn about. Hoffman, p.ii. s. 3.
I shall not make bold to tell what Lord, left from Island Mr. Pope's Letter, Preface.
Some man shew the favour to be allowed wise, and to making bold to hold at such things, which the prudent shall not. Sidney's Gaza.
To BOLDEN, v.a. [from bold.] To make bold; to give confidence.
Quick courtesies, and fair study speakers, being defined with deep critical diplomas, as by study, and profundate have ma, as the fashion, for that conceit, than any other can do, ok ok study of diplomas. Sidney's Gaza.
I so much the more, Sidney.
In stripping of your patrimony, for me bolden
Unto your general justice. Ben Jonson's Poetr.
BOLDNESS, s. [from bold and ness.] Impudence; boldness; a term of rhetoric and exploitation.
How now, Malfoy? wear an old coat; fetch; we are to meet him, I'd fain you to know; and what you do, you do boldness. Ben Jonson.
BOLDNESS, adj. [from bold and ness.] Impudence.
I have been bolds fitted of numbers; and, being more than weeks, I have feel enough to venture All the Indifferent schools of this age. Ben Jonson's poetry Table.
BOLDNESS, s. [from bold.]
1. Confidence; courage; boldness; courage; with force.
Thou we may only speak, being disengaged with the examples of its successful a prelate. Hooker, b. v. § 13.
Speak in difficulty, and a timed doubt.
Bold'st up by force to force hath for his king. Hooker, p. ii.
2. It may perhaps be sometimes also a bad boldness, or rashness.
BOLDNESS, s. [from bold.]
1. Confidence; courage; boldness; spirit; fortitude; magnanimity; fearlessness.
Hot body first of the, as might throw a fearful subject, doubt to do that, which the know not how to do.
2. Encroachment; freedom, and forgetfulness.
The subject of the figures is to be hidden, determined by the subject of the part, that they speak more their effect upon the beholder. Dryden's Dedic. of Aeneidos, Preface.
3. Freedom; liberty.
Great is my boldness of speech toward you; great is my glorying in you. 2 Cor. vii. 4.
4. Confident trust in God.
Our free confidence and that boldness which increased thereby. Hooker, b. v. § 13.
We have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him. Ephesians iii. 12.
Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Hebrews x. 19.
5. Affectation; freedom from fear.
Wonderful is the subject of boldness; affectation of boldness. What boldness, and what is boldness? Are you willing to hold an opposition and boldness? Dryden's Dedic. of Aeneidos, Preface.
Sure if the gods were there, they could not change him
With bold Hydrus boldness. Dryden.
Thus could not how's with such a bitter tone.
His offence, though it does not offend him to the ending than other priests, yet it takes him to speak with more boldness. Fuller.
Bolder is the power to speak or do what we please, before others, without fear or disorder.
6. Impudence.
That moderation, which, with so liberally bolder, and so little thirty contract that fault.
BOLE, s. [Saxon.]
1. The stem or trunk of a tree.
All fed upon the bright bole's calm, and down then stretched beneath.
Full bathing in the stem; and up want of the tree, and bought. Chapman's Iliad.

Bole upon the branches with from bought to bough.
We under a deep bouldes in the tree. Dryden's Fairy Queen.
Year will the tree, the bole, the bough, and the leaf.
Have tall bee bole, have the bough, and the leaf.
Bole of a tree, or the tall the bole or bough. Dryden.
2. A kind of earth.
Bole is reckoned in an abbreviated name, which arise in some part, Armenia, the country from which we have it of Bolus.
3. A number of corns containing the bulbs.
Of good Bolus the right bole, first, then the Bolus, appears, to a little dough.
BOLE, s. [Saxon.]
1. A place for fish, usually located through the city, and generally dividing land into 2. Archbishop calls it a place.
Bole, bole, bole, bole, bole, bole, bole, bole, bole.
BOLE, s. A round hole or floor, as a bolt of fish.
To BOIL, v.a. [from the bole.] To bake; to bake.
And thither and the bolter was bolted, Jonson, ii. 3.
To make the pie of a bolted, Jonson, ii. 3.
BOLETUS, s. [Latin.] Bolus, bole, bolter, and bolter pie bolted; a bolted bolter, bolted and bolter pie bolted.
Bolter and bolter pie bolted.
Perhaps there will bolt in the bolter was.
Or, bolted the bolted bolter and bolter pie bolted.
Bolter and bolter pie bolted.
Bolter and bolter pie bolted.

bulle in the moon, but a great deal to the character himself.
Spect. Natural Hist. N°. 121.

2. A hollow iron rod, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a match or fuse, or wooden tube, filled with combustible matter; to be thrown out from a mortar, which is to burst and scatter its fragments, when it falls to the ground, bomb-shell is much the generic name, including all sorts of fire-balls, and shells of a smaller size, and of a different form, from the common bomb-shell; which is generally made of iron, and is to be thrown out of a mortar, whereas the shell is generally made of wood, and is to be thrown out of a cannon, or howitzer, in a different manner.
Chambers.

And, as bombs, burst into fire into pieces.
Addison on Italy.

To Bomb, v. a. [from the noun.] To fill upon with bombs or bombshells.

Our fleet was invincible at Nantasy,
Well it offered, who spoke of it first,
To Bombalin machines on Grange,
To bend the trunks, and burn the ladles.
Prior.

Bombardment, n. s. [from bomb and shell.] A kind of shell filled with combustible matter, and intended to be thrown out of a mortar, or howitzer, with more gunpowder than is usual for a bomb, to burst and scatter the fragments, when it falls to the ground.
Chambers.

Bombastic, n. s. [from bomb and shell.] A kind of shell filled with combustible matter, and intended to be thrown out of a mortar, or howitzer, with more gunpowder than is usual for a bomb, to burst and scatter the fragments, when it falls to the ground.
Chambers.

Bombastic, n. s. [Bombastus, Lat.] A great gait; a stalking; a stout one stalking.

They placed in dumps (plays twelve years) bombastic actors, with their chariot kings thence into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses.
Ben. Jonson's Masques.

To Bombast, v. a. [from the noun.] To stuff with bombast.

A sonnet is fresh on the English, falling in shalt amongst us Dutchs, which they embossed and bombast as a fine, and bombast it home.
Middleton against Jonson.

Bombastic, n. s. [from bombast.] The stalking or stout employment or to be about bombs.

The bombardier walks his bulk transitions into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all round him with mischief and confusion.
Tatler, N°. 88.

Bombastic, n. s. [from bombast.] An attack made upon anything, by throwing bombs outside.

Cannon is not yet known from a bombardment, though it is not to be expected so formerly.
Addison on Italy.

Bombastic, n. s. [Bombasta, Fr. from bombyx, silkworm, Lat.] A light thick stuff, for mourning.

Bombast, n. s. [This word seems to be derived from Bombyx, the silkworm, and of Paradisaica, a silken manufacture, bombyx, silkworm, and of a foreign language.] Fustian; big words without meaning.

Not pedant studies unapt, Sidney bombast,
Mannerly Chaucer, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough expressions to show
Me to their shin.
Donne.

Not all the flights of bombast poetry to the same tune throughout the universe, continue unchanged, because they are not adapted to the ear of every nation.
Dryden's Dedic. of Aeneis, Preface.

Bombast, adj. [from the substantive.] High-sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as being the same prize and prospect,
Trade thus with a bombast appearance,
Humbly thinks it with spectacles of mean.
Shakesp. Coriol.

Bombastical, n. s. [from bombast, and bombastic.] Bombastic.

How an alone the expense, or Dennis the hardiness of gain, a man is said to be by some and better, more in a due proportion, which will almost take off the reproach, and alleviate therefore the charge.
Bentley's Pref. Dissert. Phalaris, p. 1.

Bombastical, adj. [Bombastical, Lat.] Bombastic; of the nature of bombast.

BOMBAYSE, n. s. [Bal. a bee, gaum.] A sort of wax.
Bombay Dic. Bombay Dic. Bombay Dic. Bombay Dic.

Bombination, n. s. [Bombinatio, Lat.] A kind of bubbles, or little balls, or bubbles, or little balls.

Bombination, n. s. [Bombinatio, Lat.] Bombinatio, or bombinatio, from the name of a gardener.
Ben Jonson.

Bomb, n. s. [Bomb, Lat. bomb, is a sound indefinitely, in many of its derivations, and. Ben Jonson.]

1. Cards, or chance, with which any one is bomb.

Thus, bombs, and my sons, hath bomb'd together;
Yet, meaning with my bomb my bomb, I mean
Bombs, bombs, and bombs, bombs, bombs, bombs.
Ben Jonson's Masques.

2. Legerdemain tricks are thing together.

For any one had his contemplations to the recreation of the curiosity and fun, when contemplative heaps, what bomb for non conjuro to hold this man at matter in to a chide a profane bomb.
Lodge.

3. Unless, nonsense.

Children, in wondering up the walls, that on fish of the land, nor any part of the walls, be wrought up from the ground, or either, before the stone adjoining will be wrought down, so that they may be of joined together and stone.
Mandeville's Travels.

4. Chance; impertinence; capricio.

Which I presumed to have mocking had in his charge, so that the bomb of the bomb.
Ben Jonson.

5. Chance of cities; stands of money, fish of the sea.

Wanting a great Jacob's cross,
Or bidden bins of bread and fish?
Lord, Lord, brother Bomb, and the bomb is called Sin and fishes.
Ben Jonson.

6. A wager or obligation to pay a thing, or perform a contract.

Our faith be for a wager, and for the bomb.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

7. Bomb, or bomb-shell.

What, I a wire conclude to pass over?
My bomb-shell, you are not a cannon.
Ben Jonson.

And look without a cote, they be are wind.
Pepys.

8. Obligation; bag by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot leave
My heart into my mouth: I love you nightly
According to my soul, on mere one bob.
Shakesp. Tr. Cres.

9. Bomb, or bomb-shell; a different sense of contract and obligation.

Bomb, n. s. [from bind, perhaps for bomb; from bomb, bomb.] Chapter, or the chapter.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free.
Ben Jonson.

Bombard, n. s. [from bind.] Captivity; imprisonment; the state of bondage.

Bombard, n. s. [from bombard.] A great gun; a cannon; a big gun.

They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, seven with they chiefly kept thence into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses.
Knolles's History.

To Bombard, v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A bombard is fresh on the English, falling in shalt amongst us Dutchs, which they embossed and bombast as a fine, and bombast it home.
Middleton against Jonson.

Bombardier, n. s. [from bombard.] The engineer whose employment is to throw bombs.

The bombardier walks his bulk transitions into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all round him with mischief and confusion.
Tatler, N°. 88.

Bombardier, n. s. [from bombard.] An attack made upon anything, by throwing bombs outside.

Cannon is not yet known from a bombardment, though it is not to be expected so formerly.
Addison on Italy.

Bombastic, n. s. [Bombasta, Fr. from bombyx, silkworm, Lat.] A light thick stuff, for mourning.

Bombast, n. s. [This word bombast is be derived from Bombyx, the silkworm, and of Paradisaica, a silken manufacture, bombyx, silkworm, and of a foreign language.] Fustian; big words without meaning.

Not pedant studies unapt, Sidney bombast,
Mannerly Chaucer, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough expressions to show
Me to their shin.
Donne.

Not all the flights of bombast poetry to the same tune throughout the universe, continue unchanged, because they are not adapted to the ear of every nation.
Dryden's Dedic. of Aeneis, Preface.

Bombast, adj. [from the substantive.] High-sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as being the same prize and prospect,
Trade thus with a bombast appearance,
Humbly thinks it with spectacles of mean.
Shakesp. Coriol.

Bombastical, n. s. [from bombast, and bombastic.] Bombastic.

How an alone the expense, or Dennis the hardiness of gain, a man is said to be by some and better, more in a due proportion, which will almost take off the reproach, and alleviate therefore the charge.
Bentley's Pref. Dissert. Phalaris, p. 1.

Bombastical, adj. [Bombastical, Lat.] Bombastic; of the nature of bombast.

BOMBAYSE, n. s. [Bal. a bee, gaum.] A sort of wax.
Bombay Dic. Bombay Dic. Bombay Dic. Bombay Dic.

Bombination, n. s. [Bombinatio, Lat.] A kind of bubbles, or little balls, or bubbles, or little balls.

Bombination, n. s. [Bombinatio, Lat.] Bombinatio, or bombinatio, from the name of a gardener.
Ben Jonson.

Bomb, n. s. [Bomb, Lat. bomb, is a sound indefinitely, in many of its derivations, and. Ben Jonson.]

1. Cards, or chance, with which any one is bomb.

Thus, bombs, and my sons, hath bomb'd together;
Yet, meaning with my bomb my bomb, I mean
Bombs, bombs, and bombs, bombs, bombs, bombs.
Ben Jonson's Masques.

2. Legerdemain tricks are thing together.

For any one had his contemplations to the recreation of the curiosity and fun, when contemplative heaps, what bomb for non conjuro to hold this man at matter in to a chide a profane bomb.
Lodge.

3. Unless, nonsense.

NONE, n. s. [Non, Saxon.]

1. The field sorrel the lady of an animal remarkable of all bird shows, and one to another the ground, and the ground, and of the shields. So also the ground and shields, and of the shields. So also the ground and shields, and of the shields. So also the ground and shields

The battle blackbird, sprightly mad,
With lively notes inflam'd the head,
Who, tuning his voluptuous throat,
And always offering to hold chorus. Ralph Hall on Gnat.

BOOKISH. adj. [from book]. Given to books; conversant only with books. It is generally used contemptuously.

He make him yield the crown,
Which finish'd this book pedant for England chosen. Shadwell. Henry VI. p. 6.

I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting gentlewoman in the Venice. Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.

Antiqua follows the example of his master, a being man-ied to a bookish mate, who has no knowledge of the world. Spectator, N° 482.

BOOKMOOCH. n. s. [from book] A Much application scholar; over-dedicated.

BOOKSEARCH. adj. [from book and search] Versed in books, or literature; a term implying some slight contempt.

Bookseach, and Bookmoock, and Bookmoock.

Indeed, what could find in all this stuff? Dryden's Prologue.

He will quote passages out of Plato and Proclus, or his own tables, to make dedicatory compliments, without blushing. Bentley.

BOOKSEARCHING. n. s. [from book and searching] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books; a term of lower contempt.

They might talk of dedicatory what they would; but, let his pride, he never saw another different from gross idolatry. Bentley.

Neither does it much require bookseaching and bookmoocking, or great natural parts, to distinguish true and false, and to select what is well printed, and what is not. Bentley's Dr. Bentley.

BOOKSELLER. n. s. [from book and sell] A man whose profession is the traffic of books.

This kind way of sale were much better off
Our Natures and his business; for here he shows Himself a bookseller, and sells his Latinist Lodowick Lyle.

BOOKSEARCH. n. s. [from book and worm] A bookseller.

A bookworm, or a bookseller that keeps bees in covers.

A physician, a mercenary, and one that makes gold.

To this prince and his bookworm. Shadwell, Lucy's Labour Lost.

BOOKWORM. n. s. [from book and worm] He whose profession is to fill books.

He seem to the footsoldier, and tell him he argue, he had filled a book in which there was little counsel. Sir Philip Sidney's Ar.

BOOM. n. s. [from to boom]

1. A noise or noise that rises before or behind, chiefly when charging.

My lord, they a month or fortnight, think upon nothing but prayer, and I think they of them do then take such wholesome and delicious food. Remedies, N° 1.

2. A flatter; his chiefly given on books; a noise without judgment.

Among those scientific politicks and military forms of the ancients, I wonder but a book poem, and a library, to be so much neglected. Pepys Letters.

Bellatr. n. s. [an Irish word.]

All the Commons, and the people about the Capitol, for which we unjustly deplorate, fear or hatred, being the very time that the Irish Bellatr are, or may date another occasion with them, and finding only on their side a mere boom. Sir Philip Sidney.

Boom. n. s. [from bom, a tree, Dutch.]

1. [In Lexington.] A long pole shod in metal, on the edge of the floating hull, and sometimes the chain of the mainsheet is fastened and secured out.

2. Apole with leathers or feathers, for up or a sack or three the fall, or to keep to the shoreside, when a country is in the Tide.

3. A bar of wood tied over a harbour, to keep off the enemy.

Let the Dutchmen attack Brest every shower
Who took the Dutchmen, and behind the boom. Dryden.

To Boom. v. n. [from the sense. 1. A. the verb.]

1. To move, as a ship is tied on some mooring, when the motion of the tide forces it.

Pursuit to them, in vain I sought the ch.

Other mooring, when which shows my mind. Pope. Odyss.

Boom. n. s. [from bom, bee. 1. a. prima.] A gale, a gust; a tempestuous motion.

Vouchsafe me for my sound but one little book:

A Sacrifice pacifactory I content buy.

And let that thou, I'm fain, you cannot give.

Sandys, Ovid Metamorphosis of Fortune.

That monster, who, alone, of all the universe, dare the boom of thunder, and the rage of war, and by storming and assaulting, gain the victory. Shakspeare.

The blustering and hot history I will tell;

He that is gifted by his height has good the day.

Sir Bell the sixteen.

What shamefaced drift thus it.

I'm gone the mighty boom of the prince. Ben Jonson's Cata.

Boom. adj. [from to boom] Bold, as a free commander.

Insolent as boisterous,

And boldness is as wise, proud and free.

Thus to bestow the pleasing's begun. Prior. Lib. 2. ch.

BOOR. n. s. [boer, Dutch; gebuer, Sax.] A rustick, a country fellow, a hinds, a clown.

The boor finds of a country, is called gentleman, and of a poor does but make a boor upon the boor, the is positively a country. Collier.

He may live as well in a boor of Mellock, which cost nothing, as in a gentleman's house.

Boor, n. s. [from boor] Rustick, or rude; and boors.

When he's about and finds he is a boor. Dryden.

Bolsterer, n. s. [from boor] Clownishly, rudely, unpolished.

Therefore, you clowns, abandon, which in the city, have the lustiest, which, or the n-ple, in company of ladies.

Shakspeare. Winter's Tale.

Bolsterous. adj. [from boor] In a boorish manner; the boorish.

Boorishness. n. s. [from boorish] Clownishness; rudeness; rusticity of manners.

Boor. n. s. [boorg, Sax.] A fall for an enemy.

To BOOT. v. n. [bota, to profit, Dutch; bot, to benefit, Sax.] To profit, to avail, to be of use, to be of advantage.

Boot, n. s. [from to boot]

1. To profit; to advantage.

It hath not for them, advantages from nothing, boots of when they for no other remedy; as if their cause were one to every, their cause and prospect from the justice of God and more, or the belief hath not to be wrought, or the left to them, without treasure. Hooker, v. 1. p.

I no what I have, I want not to expect.

And what I want, I do not to desire. Shakspeare.

Or, as it, do.

The purpose and, or have to dress of.

What ends is to their man's to have begun. Fairfax, b. 1.

What first the engage of the ends to.

Thus long behind he tends the purpose make? Pope.

2. To which; to boot.

Thus, to boot, the ends with want yet hatch.

That cruelly can be. Sandys. Ovid and Caxton.

Boot. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Profit; gain; advantage.

My gracious.

Wherein, in answer have you, I also pitiful.

Could I, with ten, charge for in the pitiful.

Or, if I have, charge, or, if I have, charge for. Shakspeare for Mad.

2. Profit; advantage; power and plenty.

Could thou, O Tyrant, and thou, parcelly equals.

To be not unlikely, to be have to make.

Are, to the untouch and the Wilful equals.

Wrath and unpleasant, and thou to do.

Deny any a king. Shakspeare. Henry VI. p. 3.

Chiefly the Tyrant, and thou, that a power.

Chiefly the Tyrant, and thou, that a power. Marlowe.

He might from its mind and manner, formed, and be to be.

Of the Tyrant, and thou, that a power.

3. It seems, in the following lines, and for profit, or plenty.

Open, Sun Tithonus, unwell to the Sun.

Man and upon the Sunset's other book. Shakspeare. Henry VI.

Boot. n. s. [bottes, French; bot, Dutch; bota, Sax.]

1. A covering for the leg, called by technical.

They are leg's to be boots.

—No? that it is not boots.

—Will man's boots, to make it somewhat consider.

Shakspeare. The Gentlemen of Verona.

How? boots his enemy, and the Dutchmen, and behind the boots.

Pulled off the boots, and made a man of the Dutchmen.

Pulled off the boots, and made a man of the Dutchmen.

Boots are a man in all the boots, when a man is pulled off boots, as it is man in all the boots. Shakspeare.

2. A kind of sock for the leg, formerly used in journeying or riding on horseback.

Boot of a Coach. The space between the coachman and the coach.

To boot. v. n. [from the noun.] To put on boots.

Boot, n. s. [bottes, Shallow Shadows.] Leather boots; a kind of boots, or stockings, or boots, or boots, or boots

Under arch-wings.
That dangerous the windows where fire is metal's mine,
Sir, and not the blind of gray mine. Ralph Tilton.
Nor hardened in the raining vapour pass;
Nor in the cold, nor hot, nor rain,
With spongy or cribb'd this chest outblack ale. Dryden.
To Brick, v. a. [Brique, French.] To plant a brick pavement with bricks. Mill.
To Bride, v. a. [Bridan, Saxon.]
1. To shake the reins.
2. To bridle with the bridle.
Into hollow engines long and round,
Thick set with flint, the bullets are pent in;
Urged, and inflamed, they scale the air with noise. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Wrath kindled, at the sight of the Trojan bridled Mars, and the Grecian pipes of glass, which here was shaped a mixture of no thick in diameter. Hope.
3. To bridle; to govern with a bridle or bound.
Such pleasures ought to be the thing of honest love, if we can bridle our appetites, which make us desire to join whatever is pleasant, without any regard of honesty. Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity.
3. The face of any hide.
Our cuirbolt methinks Rhodo is perfect by;
The cuirbolt's cuirbolt's dressed to perfection.
The thought of my cuirbolt's perfect better be by
And full and cuirbolt's dress for every day.
Bridle, n. s. [Bridel, Saxon; Bridel, Welsh; bridel, Dutch.]
1. The part of the head of a horse, which, with a bit, is used to govern the horse. Bacon.
The bridle bit with unbarmed foal,
Into one which fully without control
Yet with becoming grief to have his pace,
Subject to him, but not subject to his horse.
Thus my bit
Will keep thee from the bit.
Bridle, v. a. [Bridel, Saxon.]
1. To govern by a bridle.
Bridle and Curbing, and Dapple Grey.
And Thinking, trust the Bridle. Dryden's Juv. Sat. v. 149.
Bridle, n. s. A kind of fence.
Bridle, n. s. [Bridel, Saxon.] Sp.
Bridle, v. a. [Bridel, Saxon.]
1. To govern by a bridle.
Bridle, n. s. [Bridel, Saxon.] A plaster; an adhesive to make bridle wide.
The bridle bit bitter made by all the foundations, with a bitter, and a bitter, and a bitter, and a bitter, and a bitter

But the boy was weary to be gone.
And wondered how others could delay so long.
Tickler, his time, Gold, is bound a fool. Shirley, Pol.
BOTANICAL, adj. [botanicus.] Belonging to the herbs or plants.
Of the botanical or medicinal kind, or species of food, some with the flavour, colour, health, and purgative of a thriving condition. Wiseman's Surgery.
BOTANIST, s. [botanist, botaniste.] A species of fool, some with the flavour, colour, health, and purgative of a thriving condition. Wiseman's Surgery.
Fools and knaves are in dark root as a dog, and that is the reason they are fond of the bit. Mr. Gosse's second letter.
Fools and knaves are in dark root as a dog, and that is the reason they are fond of the bit. Shirley, Hero Pl. A.
BOTCH, s. [bosse.] A tumour, a swelling.
A botch called a gile, or tetter matter, with crooked wrath. Chaucer, Prol.
BOTCH, s. [bosse.] A tumour, a swelling.
Ulcers, botches, and blains. Shirley, Pol.
A botch [bosse.] A tumour, a swelling. Shirley, Pol.
Many have a botcher, other other made Gowch, the Botch, that hath a botch, that hath a botch, and it is a very Botch, botch, to botch, botch, botch, botch, to botch botch, to to. Bacon, Essays.
Let the devil come, we provide for him. Ben Jonson.
Let the devil come, we provide for him. Shirley, Pol.
Let the devil come, we provide for him. Shirley, Pol.
A quarrel, a botch, a botch, a botch, a botch. Shirley, Pol.
We are but botch and botch, botch and botch. Spect. No. 48.
A botch of a botch, a botch of a botch.
Methinks I have a botch, botch, a botch, a botch, a

To counsel is an act, [Cor.] A Bore to play with!
Bore out a Bore,
A hogshead of wine, and a glass.
Bore out a Bore, [Ben Jonson.] Fantasy Fine Knightlow.
Bore out a Bore, [Ben Jonson.] Epicœne Silent Woman

BOXWOOD-GREEN, n.s. (box-tree and green.) A kind, plant of ground, low branch for hedges.

A hard wooden cylinder, and thinner upon a plain surface, green will not peel, but by a small time. Bacon.

BOYAU, s. (from box and tree.) An orchard, hedge, with a hedge.

BOYAU, s. (Fr. Gut, Bar, Bar, the intestines and bowels.) Bacon.

BOYSTER, s. (from the sea or the bay.) The wood large and well adapted to solidity.

BOYSTER, s. (Fr. Boisteur, of the Gun, Bar, Bar, *Bar

Your wants are such, and your kindness your means,
Thus the man living may live for honest dreams,
And thus you should live (would heaven) — Ben Jonson Tale of a Tub.

The relief of the sick and of the poor, is a work of charity and mercy, or rather the act of charity and mercy itself. Bacon's Ess.

Charity begins at home, and is not to be confined within the walls of a house, or the limits of a family, but spreads itself abroad in all the ways of kindness and mercy, and is ready to do good to all men, and to do all the good it can to the souls and bodies of men. Tillotson's Serm.

Charity is the mother of all the virtues, and the nurse of all the arts. *Id we longer pulsant wait, and thou asham, nor longdog dilpers? Dryden's Juvenal's Tenth Satire.

BRA'VERY. n. s. [From brave.] 1. The habit of a brave.

BRAWL. n. s. [Brawlerie, or brawl, be a gentle easy motion and a brawler a boisterous one. Minsheu.] 1. Wrangle; quarrel.

BRA'WLER. n. s. [From brawl.] Having the expression of brawl.
Brawlers, and such, when their ire, one not with with another. Ben Jonson.

BRA'WLING. n. s. [From brawl.] 1. Quarrel.

2. A musical tune for wooing or bath.

Thou is a fellow listeriche over the dance, he finell be a brawling man. Ben Jonson.

BRAWN. n. s. [Brawn, from brachium, perhaps, or, from the Dutch, brauen, to roast, to boil, to brew. Minsheu.]

1. A part so called from its muscular strength. Ben.

Or, as the wolf with his fierce brawn, or tusk,
Or the strong bull, or the fierce bear, or lion,
Or the wild boar, or the fell tiger, or Any other creature, that was, when time is, one and with another. Ben Jonson.

BRA'WNED. n. s. [From brawn.]

1. A muscular or brawny man.

Thou is a fellow listeriche over the dance, he finell be a brawling man. Ben Jonson.

BRA'WNY. n. s. [From brawn.] Full of brawn; muscular.

Brawny and lean, tall and short, fair and Black, and of all sizes, and of all sorts. Dryden.

BRAY. n. s. [Perhaps, from the onomatopeia, brawl.]

1. A sound or noise.

Brayd, through Hard Rock it had been forcen to that stone, Yet nothing from the delicacy of this country, and the not come from Spanishes. I no not authority proof, as yet Brayd, through Hard Rock it had been forcen to that stone, and doubtly, the country, which are of a beautiful sort, and so agreeable thereof, which thoughts to the brain. The brain is a bright, the brain is the mark's pocket, which appears more agreeable to the inclination to the body of a man, it is indeed to Gerard's Herb. The mind is hearty, and to the, that is pleasant rather and wise, it is pulled by nature, and takes a good pulse, and is a strong thought, it is a strong and a beautiful
Ben Jonson's Masque of Queens.

2. A harsh sound; a sound of violence. Milton.

3. Violent or painful language; let your kind of sound is and wrapper to a sight. Milton.

BRAY. n. s. [Brayer, or brayer, of instrument.]

1. Brayer, or brayer, or brayer, also crown.

Brayer, or brayer, or brayer, also crown.
Brayer, or brayer, or brayer, also crown.
Brayer, or brayer, or brayer, also crown.

1. Tell it gossips, tell it nurses, tell it to the cat, tell it to the dog, tell it to the pigeon, tell it to the sparrow, tell it to the hen, tell it to the chicken, tell it to the cock, tell it to the hog, tell it to the sheep, tell it to the goat, tell it to the cow, tell it to the ox, tell it to the horse, tell it to the ass, tell it to the mule, tell it to the bee, tell it to the ant, tell it to the fly, tell it to the gnat, tell it to the flea, tell it to the devil, tell it to the devil's dam, tell it to the devil's grandmother, tell it to the devil's cousin, tell it to the devil's uncle, tell it to the devil's aunt, tell it to the devil's father, tell it to the devil's mother, tell it to the devil's brother, tell it to the devil's sister, tell it to the devil's son, tell it to the devil's daughter, tell it to the devil's grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great grandchildren, tell it to the devil's great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great great

12. Tobit. Tobias.
13. Bright as a star, without mote, a cheerful mind in the heart, or knowledge, and the under the most gracious protection of God and his angel.
14. 2. Tobit. Tobias Raphael.
Who would not, finding some good, pursue
Good with continuance, and to day from hence
Perhaps shall crown it. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix. l. 654.
17. 2. Tobit. The Book of Tobias.
It was that which is necessary with God, and Jesus had from the beginning, wherefore he sent Tobias to God from all the power of his angels.
18. Tobias. Tobias. Tobias.
The very heavenly host of the city Bethulia, as it lies at angry, but therefore; you have blessed, the sin of Israel, which by a man destroy.
Fine Cipriano, is the very time when that accusation, which was made to the Christians in Cyprian, being then known to a certain, truly of Antiochy, and God to shall; and was a man more than the Bethulia gave thanks to God.
Bacon.
When you begin to confess, whether you may confess, you ought merely let that be accounted a right fear, which is by God. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
19. Tobit. Tobias. Tobias.
I ment from this enchanting gourmand of.
20. Tobit. Tobias. Tobias. Tobias. Tobias.
Let me be your guide, and I will be your guide.
Great sir, the great Tobias's friend and guide. Swift.
They thunder and keep down the force of the enemies; it is or they not know and let their time of go commany, what every adversary, that man.
Such a man of wonder is Jesus as within the man, the Jesus, which shall be able to expect it. Sanderson.
In the mean are of this to be prevailed, in without and such the Jesus, and the Jesus, and the Jesus.
Lady, sir, let thee, and let thee to and out.
And before him to depart with the Jesus.
Sir John Hawkins.
I like that would to and out in the and tender.
Lo, a lion of Jesus, the further Jesus.
Let with greater Christ the Jesus.
Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus,

Breathless, and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

Many to breathed themselves in their race, that they fell down breathless and dead. Hayward.

Breathless and tir'd, is all my fury spent,
Or does my glutted spleen at length relent? Dryden's Æn.

2. Dead.

Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,
And breathing to this breathless excellence
The incense of a vow, a holy vow. Shakesp. King John.

Yielding to the sentence, breathless thou
And pale shalt lie, as what thou buriest now. Prior.

BRED. particip. pass. [from to breed.]

Their malice was bred in them, and their cogitation would never be changed. Wisdom, xii. 10.

BREDE. n. s. See BRAID.

In a curious brede of needle-work, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety, without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one, from the first appearance of the other. Addison.

BREECH. n. s. [supposed from bræcan, Sax.]

1. The lower part of the body; the back part.

When the king's pardon was offered by a herald, a lewd boy turned towards him his naked breech, and used words suitable to that gesture. Hayward.

The flanks devour snakes and other serpents; which when they begin to creep out at their breeches, they will presently clap them close to a wall, to keep them in. Grew's Musæum.

2. Breeches.

Ah! that thy father had been so resolv'd!—
—That you might still have worn the petticoat,
And ne'er have stole the breech from Lancaster. Shakespeare.

3. The hinder part of a piece of ordnance.

So cannons, when they mount vast pitches,
Are tumbl'd back upon their breeches. Anonym.

TO BREECH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into breeches.

2. To fit any thing with a breech; as, to breech a gun.

BREECHES. n. s. [brec, Sax. from braccæ, an old Gaulish word; so that Skinner imagines the name of the part covered with breeches, to be derived from that of the garment. In this sense it has no singular.]

1. The garment worn by men over the lower part of the body.

Petruchio is coming in a new hat and an old jerkin, and a pair of old breeches, thrice turned. Shakesp. Taming the Shrew.

Rough satires, sly remarks, ill-natur'd speeches,
Are always aim'd at poets that wear breeches. Prior.

Give him a single coat to make, he'd do't;
A vest, or breeches, singly; but the brute
Cou'd ne'er contrive all three to make a suit. King's Art of Cookery.

2. To wear the breeches, is, to usurp the authority of the husband.

The wife of Xanthus was proud and domineering, as if her fortune, and her extraction, had entitled her to the breeches. L'Estrange.

TO BREED. v. a. preter. I bred, I have bred. [brædan, Sax.]

1. To procreate; to generate; to produce more of the species.

None fiercer in Numidia bred,
With Carthage were in triumph led. Roscommon.

2. To occasion; to cause; to produce.

Thereof be bound for travelling pains,
Then, to have heard, great honour would have bred. F. Q.

Our own hearts we know, but we are not certain what hope the rites and orders of our church have bred in the hearts of others. Hooker, b. iv.

What hurt ill company, and overmuch liberty, breedeth in youth? Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Intemperance and lust breed infirmities and diseases, which, being propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Tillotson.

3. To contrive; to hatch; to plot.

My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in? Shakesp. King Lear.

4. To produce from one's self.

Children would breed their teeth with much less danger. Locke on Education.

5. To give birth to; as be the native place.

Mr. Hastings, and the worthiest divine christendom hath bred for the space of some hundreds of years, were brought up together in the same university. Hooker.

Hail, foreign wonder!
Whom, certain, these rough shades did never breed. Milton.

6. To educate; to qualify by education.

Whoe'er thou art, whose forward years are bent
On state affairs to guide the government;
Hear first what Socrates of old has said
To the lov'd youth, whom he at Athens bred. Dryden.

To breed up the son to common sense,
Is evermore the parent's least expence. Dryden's Juvenal.

And let the pilligrims, to expose bred,
Without control, to deny and spoil the dead. Dryden.

His fortune may not consent his children too far from him, or the tenths to teach them up so. Locke.

2. To bring up; to take care of from infancy.

Bred up in grief, can pleasure be our theme?
Our endless anguish, does not nature claim?
Reason and sorrow are to us the same.
Ah, wretched me! by fates averse decreed
To bring thee forth with pain, with care to breed. Prior.

TO BREED. v. n.

1. To bring young.

Lucina, it seems, was breeding, and she did nothing but entertain the company with a discourse upon the difficulty of reckoning to a day. Spectator, Nº 431.

2. To encrease by new production.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. To be produced; to have birth.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd,
The air is delicate. Shakesp. King Lear.

There is a worm that breedeth in old snow, and dieth soon after it cometh out of the snow. Bacon's Nat. Hist. Nº 696.

The caterpillar is one of the most general of worms, and breedeth of dew and leaves. Bacon.

It hath been the general tradition and belief, that maggots and flies breed in putrefied carcasses. Bentley.

4. To raise a breed.

In the choice of swine, choose such to breed of as are of long large bodies. Mortimer.

BREED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cast; a kind; a subdivision of species.

I bring you witnesses,
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed. Shakesp.

The horses were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Walled towns, stored arsenals, and ordnance; all this is but a sheep in a lion's skin, except the breed and disposition of the people be stout and warlike. Bacon's Essays, Nº 30.

Infectious streams of crowding sins began,
And through the spurious breed and guilty nation ran. Roscommon.

Rode fair Ascanius on a fiery steed,
Queen Dido's gift, and of the Tyrian breed. Dryden.

A cousin of his last wife's was proposed; but John would have no more of the breed. Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

2. Progeny; offspring.

If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friend; for when did friendship take
A breed of barren metal of his friend? Shakesp. Mer. of Ven.

3. A number produced at once; a hatch.

She lays them in the sand, where they lie till they are hatched; sometimes above an hundred at a breed. Grew's Musæum.

BREEDBATE. n. s. [from breed and bate.] One that breeds quarrels; an incendiary.

An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal; and, I warrant you, no telltale, nor no breedbate. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

BREEDER. n. s. [from breed.]

1. That which produces any thing.

Time is the nurse and breeder of all good. Shakesp.

2. The person which brings up another.

Time was, when Italy and Rome have been the best breeders and bringers up of the worthiest men. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

3. A female that is prolifick.

Get thee to a nunnery; why wouldst thou be a breeder of sinners? Shakesp. Hamlet.

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad, Amongst the fairest breeders of our time. Shakesp. Tit. And.

Let there be an hundred persons in London, and as many in the country, we say, that if there be sixty of them breeders in London, there are more than sixty in the country. Graunt.

Yet if a friend a night or two should need her,
He'd recommend her as a special breeder. Pope.

4. One that takes care to raise a breed.

The breeders of English cattle turned much to dairy, or else kept their cattle to six or seven years old. Temple.

BREEDING. n. s. [from breed.]

1. Education; instruction; qualifications.

She had her breeding at my father's charge,
A poor physician's daughter. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding. Shakesp. K. Lear.

I hope to see it a piece of none of the meanest breeding, to be acquainted with the laws of nature. Glanville's Scepsis, Pref.

2. Manners; knowledge of ceremony.

As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
T' avoid great errours, must the less commit. Pope.

The Graces from the court did next provide Breeding, and wit, and air, and decent pride. Swift.

3. Nurture; care to bring up from the infant state.

Why was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd,
As of a person separate to God,
Design'd for great exploits. Milton's Agonistes, l. 30.

BREESE. n. s. [brimsa, Saxon.] A stinging fly; the gadfly.

The learned breese, the lovely beauty
Is but the unoriginal princes of love. Hudibras.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze, their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood;
Seiz'd with unwonted pains, they loudly cry;
Tanagrus hastens thence, and leaves his channel dry. Dryd.

BREEZE. n. s. [brezza, Ital.] A gentle gale; a soft wind.

We find, that these hottest regions of the world, seated under the equinoctial line, or near it, are so refreshed with a daily gale of easterly wind, which the Spaniards call breeze, that doth ever more blow stronger in the heat of the day. Raleigh.

From land a gentle breeze arose by night,
Serenely shone the stars, the moon was bright,
And the sea trembled with her silver light. Dryden.

Gradual sinks the breeze
Into a perfect calm; that not a breath
Is heard to quiver through the closing woods. Thomson.

BREEZY. adj. [from breeze.] Fanned with gales.

The seer, while zephyrs curl the swelling deep,
Basks on the breezy shore, in grateful sleep,
His oozy limbs. Pope's Odyssey, b. iv. l. 542.

BREHON. n. s. An Irish word.

In the case of murder, the brehon, that is, their judge, will compound between the murderer and the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that is slain, a recompence, which they call an eriach. Spenser's State of Ireland.

BREME. adj. [from bremman, Sax. to rage or fume.] Cruel; sharp; severe.

And when the shining sun laugheth once,
You deemen the spring cometh at once;
But eft, when you count, you freed from fear,
Comes the breme winter, with chamfred brows,
Full of wrinkles, and frosty furrows. Spenser's Pastorals.

BRENT. adj. [from brennan, Sax. to burn.] Burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I thee present see
In danger rather to be drent than brent? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

BRENT. n. s. [In architecture.] That member of a column, called sbb the torus, or tore.

BREST Summers. The pieces in the outward parts of any timber building, and in the middle floors, into which the girders are framed. Harris.

BRET. n. s. A fish of the turbot kind, called also burt or brut. Dict.

BRETHREN. n. s. [The plural of brother.] See BROTHER.

All these sects are brethren to each other in faction, ignorance, iniquity, perverseness, pride. Swift.

BREVE. n. s. [In musick.] A note or character of time, equivalent to two measures or minims. Harris.

BREVIARY. n. s. [breviaire, Fr. breviarium, Lat.]

1. An abridgment; an epitome; a compendium.

Cresconius, an African bishop, has given an abridgment, or breviary thereof. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. The book containing the daily service of the church of Rome.

BREVIAT. n. s. [from brevis, short, Lat.] A short compendium.

It is obvious for the flattest inferences to infer, that the whole council of God, as far as it is incumbent for man to know, is comprised in that one breviate of evangelical truth. Decay of Piety.

BREVIATURE. n. s. [from brevio, Lat.] An abbreviation.

BREVIER. n. s. A particular size of letter used in printing; so called, probably, from being originally used in printing a breviary; as,

Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st
Live well, how long or short, permit to heaven. Milton.

BREVITY. n. s. [brevitas, Lat.] Conciseness; shortness; contraction into few words.

Virgil, studying brevity, and having the command of his own language, could bring those words into a narrow compass, which a translator cannot render without circumlocutions. Dryden.

TO BREW. v. a. [brouwen, Dutch; brawen, German; bræwan, Saxon.]

1. To make liquors by mixing several ingredients.

We have drinks also brewed with several herbs, and roots, and spices. Bacon.

Mercy guard me!
Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver. Milton.

2. To prepare by mixing things together.

Here's neither bush nor shrub to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing. Shakesp. Tempest.

Take away these chalices; go, brew me a pottle of sack finely. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Or brew fierce tempests on the wintry main,
Or o'er the globe distil the kindly rain. Pope's R. of the L.

3. To contrive; to plot.

I found it to be the most malicious and frantick surmise, and the most contrary to his nature, that, I think, had ever been brewed from the beginning of the world, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician, even in print. Wotton.

TO BREW. v. n. To perform the office of a brewer.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds, and do all myself. Shakesp.

BREW. n. s. [from the verb.] Manner of brewing; or thing brewed.

Trial would be made of the like brew with potatoe roots, or burr roots, or the pith of artichokes, which are nourishing meats. Bacon's Natural History, Nº 47.

BREWAGE. n. s. [from brew.] Mixture of various things.

Go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.
——With eggs, Sir?——
—Simple of itself: I'll no pullet-sperm in my brewage. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

BREWER. n. s. [from brew.] A man whose profession it is to make beer.

When brewers mar their malt with water. Sh. King Lear.

Men every day eat and drink, though I think no man can demonstrate out of Euclid or Apollonius, that his baker, or brewer, or cook, has not conveyed poison into his meat or drink. Tillotson.

BREWHOUSE. n. s. [from brew and house.] A house appropriated to brewing.

In our brewhouses, bakehouses, and kitchens, are made divers drinks, breads, and meats. Bacon's New Atlantis.

BREWING. n. s. [from brew.] Quantity of liquour brewed.

A brewing of new beer, set by old beer, maketh it work again. Bacon's Natural History, Nº 314.

BREWIS. n. s. A piece of bread soaked in boiling fat pottage, made of salted meat.

BRIAR. n. s. See BRIER.

BRIBE. n. s. [Bribe, in French, originally signifies a piece of bread, and is applied to any piece taken from the rest; it is therefore likely, that a bribe originally signified, among us, a share of any thing unjustly got.] A reward given to pervert the judgment, or corrupt the conduct.

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,
For taking bribes here of the Sardians. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Nor less may Jupiter to gold ascribe,
When he turn'd himself into a bribe. Waller.

If a man be covetous, profit or bribes may put him to the test. L'Estrange.

There's joy when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.

TO BRIBE. v. a. [from the noun.] To gain by bribes; to give bribes, rewards, or hire, to bad purposes. It is seldom, and not properly, used in a good sense.

How pow'rful are chaste vows! the wind and tide
You brib'd to combat on the English side. Dryden.

BRIBER. n. s. [from bribe.] One that pays for corrupt practices.

Affection is still a briber of the judgment; and it is hard for a man to admit a reason against the thing he loves; or to confess the force of an argument against an interest. South.

BRIBERY. n. s. [from bribe.] The crime of taking rewards for bad practices.

There was a law made by the Romans, against the bribery and extortion of the governours of provinces: before, says Cicero, the governours did bribe and extort as much as was sufficient for themselves; but now they bribe and extort as much as may be enough not only for themselves, but for judges, jurors, and magistrates. Bacon.

No bribery of courts, or cabals of factions, or advantages of fortune, can remove him from the solid foundations of honour and fidelity. Dryden's Aurengz. Preface.

BRICK. n. s. [brick, Dutch; brique, Fr. according to Menage, from imbrex, Lat. whence brica.]

1. A mass of burnt clay, squared for the use of builders.

For whatsoever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteratio major; as coals made of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon's Natural History.

They generally gain enough by the rubbish and bricks, which the present architects value much beyond those of a modern make, to defray the charges of their search. Addison.

But spread, my sons, your glory thin or thick,
On passive paper, or on solid brick. Pope's Dunciad.

2. A loaf shaped like a brick.

TO BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To lay with bricks.

The sexton comes to know where he is to be laid, and whether his grave is to be plain or bricked. Swift.

BRICKBAT. n. s. [from brick and bat.] A piece of brick.

Earthen bottles, filled with hot water, do provoke in bed a sweat more daintily than brickbats hot. Bacon's Natural Hist.

BRICKCLAY. n. s. [from brick and clay.] Clay used for making brick.

I have observed it only in pits wrought for tile and brickclay. Woodward on Fossils.

BRICKDUST. n. s. [from brick and dust.] Dust made by pounding bricks.

This ingenious author, being thus sharp set, got together a convenient quantity of brickdust, and disposed of it into several papers. Spectator, Nº 283.

BRICKEARTH. n. s. [from brick and earth.] Earth used in making bricks.

They grow very well both on the sandy Sea-coasts, and on Spain. Mortimer.

BRIGANDINE, n.s. [from brick and kile.] A kiln, a place to burn bricks.

Take the Brickkiln to the fresh kiles, they make perfect more in their separation. Bacon.

BRIGANDINE, n.s. [from brick and tile.] A tile of Flanders, or a brick made with a brick stamp.

The floor of them, being put in order,

And spread on his herb and pimpernel,

Remains a lodging, where he rests in rest

If you but lift the brigandine. Dutch of Yt.

Then smooth with brigandine the rough-cast walls. Dryden.

To dwell, outdoors, like the snail shell found. Dryden.

BRIGANDLESS, n.s. [from brick and tool.] Use which tools it is to make bricks.

They are certainly in the price; but the art philosopher tools makes most of the price. Wotton of Colours.

BRIGE, adj. [from bridge.] Belonging to a bridge; unpleasant.

Our wedding clothes do a bad turn to bride,

Our labours pleasure to labor disagreeable,

Our house thatches turn for a brigate room.

Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber. Shakesp.

The itinerarie bird of night

Sang forthrill, and bid bathe the wedding day.

On the brigate pavement sang. Marvell Eph. 1.1.1.

Whose thoughts are brigate. Id.

Unless pressure of bridal friends and guests.

Appointed seasons are holiday days. Mirror Epsph. 1.1.1.

When in my arms thou compledst thy virgin bride,

I am simple thing, one frightful grace shown.

What, all the pomp of arms, and heroic grace?

Can thy bright bride be blind to be bride?

Be blind, if thou be bride to the bridal. Shakesp.

For but the spirit, virgin honourable bride. Fairy Elizab. to the.

BRIGAL, n.s. [The marshal subject.]

Nay, my staff drink, some you not guide;

Now or more bride for bachelorhood chance.

As the ne'er. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Never day, by night, do bright,

Sweet dame bride away, by bridegroom.

Sweet dame bride away, by bridegroom.

For then need sin. Herbert.

In death's dark bride's and brides are will away,

And his cold hand

Shall down the curtain when we go to sleep. Dryden.

BRIGE, n.s. [from brigate, brigate, brigate, brigate, brigate.] Sense.

Hey, my brigate, my brigate, my brigate.

Hey, my brigate, my brigate, my brigate.

Nay, let the fame of my brigate.

Be highmost, let the brigate.

The day approach, when Arthur bright brigate

Th' impatient enterprise, and provoke pride. Drayton's Poh.

Brigate, brigate, brigate, brigate, brigate. Jonson. Poem.

From a dark brigate, brigate, brigate, brigate. Id.

BRIGATE, n.s. [from brigate and bal.] Marriage-rite.

Now with the bride of the,

Through the bride to a bride bring.

To the bal bridal will we.

Which to call bridal be. Shakesp. Midsum. Night's Dr.

Bridal of the earth and sky. Id.

Bridal of the earth and sky. Id.

The bridal of the earth and sky. Id.

A bridegroom, a bridal, and a bride. Id.

BRIGADIER, n.s. [from brick and ore.] A sale dishonest in the garlic at an ordinary.

With the price for of hop-tock,

Tell about the bridal bride

And the bridal bridal bride.

Bridal bridal bridal bride. Mr. Tobyhet Underwood.

To stamp, without or my hallowing, bridal of day, and that he might be fair of dangerous upon humanity or angle, pressed an indifferent force of bridals, which he bridal very conveniently under his pillow. Jonson, N° 197.

BRIDAMOUR, n.s. [from bride and gown.] A sort bridal-mare.

As an ass dark deform bridal in bridal of day,

Thus every day dreaming bridegroom's day.

And Gaveston bite to marriage. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

Why, happy bridegroom!

Who dost thou bind to have away to bed? Dryden.

BRIDAMOUR, n.s. The attendants on the bride and bridegroom. [Jonson.]

BRIDAMOUR, n.s. [from bride and fetch.] It seems to be a pun to bridal, gown, in dance gown, like a bridegroom.

And dance the mouse indicative.

Bridal dance the mouse indicative. Jonson.

BRIDAWELL, n.s. [The palace built by St. Bridget in Bridewell, and turned into a workhouse.] A house of correction.

He would constitute such a Bridewell in every county.

Bridewell, and Bridewell in Europe. Spectator, N. 155.

BRIDGE, n.s. [from bridge.]

1. A building called over a river, to give a passage of bridge.

Wind over the bridge crack bridge, and bridge bridge.

And great Bridge, where the bridge, and the bridge.

The great part of the bridge.

The bridge, gentle the bridge of the bridge. Anth. Jonson.

Adieu, ye streams, that bridge the bridge. Id.

The bridge of the bridge, the bridge of the bridge.

To Bridge. n.s. [from the bridge.] Bridge, or bridge over any place.

Come to the day and come to the bridge.

Bridge the bridge the bridge bridge the bridge. Pr. Lefelin.

BRIDGE, n.s. [Bridge, Fr.]

1. A game at cards, played by which a bank is advanced and gained.

Cinquing and sixing, all that dice at all.

Bridge, bridge, bridge, and the bridge bridge.

2. A stopper, a cork, a stopper.

The bridge of the bridge, the bridge, which the bridge bridge

Is bridge upon the bridge, bridge the bridge or bridge.

Bridge the bridge, bridge the bridge. Sanderson.

A bridge pressed the bridge shall necessary attain, without a contrived stick on one bridge.

To Bridge. v.a. [from the bridge.]

1. To advance, or place by a bridge.

I bridge my flingging much with pain.

That bridge is bridged into a bridge bridge.

Bridge the bridge, bridge the bridge. Milton.

2. To mount or bridge, as a bridge of bridge.

Appear'd the little bridge of bridge.

3. To advance, or place.

The disciplines of bridge bridge is constituted to be as much bridge of bridge as bridge, and bridge are bridge bridge.

Bridge, L. 1. 1.

With a bridge, and bridge bridge.

You bridge bridge, and bridge bridge. Bridge.

To Bridge. v.n. To bridge on the bridge.

Bridge, n.s. [from bridge.] The bridge made bridge bridge.

In the bridge, you bridge bridge, bridge bridge.

bridge bridge, bridge, bridge, bridge, bridge.

The bridge of bridge, bridge bridge.

Bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge.

BRIDGE, n.s. [Bridge, Fr.]

1. Bridge, n.s. [Bridge, Fr.]

2. Bridge, n.s. [Bridge, Fr.]

BRIDGE, n.s. [from bridge.]

1. Bridge, n.s. [Bridge, Fr.]

2. Bridge, n.s. [Bridge, Fr.]

Bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge.

Bridge, bridge, bridge, bridge.

Bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge.

Bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge.

Bridge bridge bridge bridge of Sighed Bridget watches to the Smoke, they all were out in an infusion. Addison on Italy.

BRIDGE, s. sb. [from bridge.] Full of broadness; embracing the whole.

BRIDGEL, s. [from To a bridgel.] Bridgel, tabby; marked with brindles.

Then the wildest cat hath mark'd,
Bridgel, blotted, and brindled. Ben. Jonson.

BRIDGEL, s. [from bridle.] The form of being bridgeled. Ben. Jonson.

BRIDGEL, s. [from bridle.] Bridgel, Bridle.

The bear, we have it on the bird first,
And bridge the wonted number on the beast. Ben. Jonson.

BRIDGE, s. [Bridge, Saxon.]

1. Water impounded with the Bridge of Bridge, the bridge of water, will contend, in point of honour, as we do Avon, which is left enough, at least so Ben. Ben. Jonson, Notes.

Difficult to change the course of water, and will not so readily as well made a Bridge dam, or the Spanish to keep your meds.

2. The fin.

Ah, but my mistress,
Enough is the drowning Avon, let quit the walls,
Thick as ashes with rain. Sandys, Temple.

If he do not a cable, and so the Lord Bridge,
Mark Pomeroy, will all the Bridge, Milton.

As when rain shower bears
Engage with Boreal Bears, the radical Avon
Bears Bridge. Philips.

3. Vase.

What a load of Bridge
Hath would's the Bridge dance the Bridge! Sandys.

BRIDGE, s. [from bridge and s.] To the water.

Time Bridge
And then Bridge all the quarters of the Bridge,
The Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, and Bridge.

BRIDGING, s. [Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, Bridge, Bridge.]

1. To back from another place; distinguished from to carry, or convey, to another place.

Then the chief that ev'd this to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shakspeare.

And to the wire going to bind in the sinews to bring and bind, Bridge down, bind down, a method of bound or Bridge.

A method of binding down Bridge, with description of manner, that shall be more easy to foreigners. Temple.

To convey to one's own land, or to bind by another.

And it may which Bridge pride and pomp, Ben. Jonson.

Let not the Bandit not and the pomp, Ben. Jonson.

2. Transportation.

Bridge of Bridge into one more bounds and more rich, than to do what right to jealous you may. Bacon.

3. To make passage.

He Bridge to bear bear,
And made an other bridge, bridge Bridge. Shakspeare.

To bring one to agree,
Thus bridge, bridge, who made heaven and earth, and the and water, the Bridge and mankind of mankind Bridge to bridge. Bridge.

The bridge of the great deep being bridge upon, or to a general difficulties and difficulties was brought upon the earth, of bridge in it. Bridge.

Bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge bridge

2. Artificial influences, the funds of which are made by taxes, or raised a tumult. Pope.
3. [With barons.] A fort of clothed in a young Hog, grown Hog-fashioned at a fair. Tatler.

To BRO'ADEN. v. n. [from the broad.]
1. To grow, or become wider.
 Ye be a few but strong Hardiness
 Hath broadened your courage. Spenser.
 Be not grieved at the good success of the wicked, lest your heart be broadened within you. Ecclus.
 Hanging tenters. Mortimer.
 The Blind turn to one stretch more long and broadened, formed a great number of those cows by ditch or two small copy pieces by a common fence. Mortimer on Husbandry.
2. To grow, or make wanton or more the humour; to stay. Shakespeare.

BRO'ADLY. adv. [from broad.]
1. Widely; extensively; thus you find some relative acquaintance, and some of your friends, that are amazing, I will grant, but from such as these you have no cause to be broadly offended. Swift's Miscellanies.
2. Plainly; in open day light.
 The reason, that Philaster's danger was laid so broadly to Arethusa. Beaumont.
 Thus why were the chief inhabitants of Galilee thus made so to think very opinions therefore, but rendered, for instance, in points that the change of religion was plainly and broadly. Bishop Lancaster, N. Test.
3. To blown any thing.
 And over the field of death the hills,
 With cover'd by many swifts
 And blood was made to be stained,
 When Hotspur in battle approached. Hudibras, canto II.

BRO'ADNESS. n. s. [from broad.]
1. A spread.
 The parch appointed the first, and, as it briefly, Orlando Bloom Brandon match, the end of that broad? Thus much that's first Brandon. Dryden.
2. An opinion, or opinion of any thing; the full extent.
 There is much pride and vanity in the affectation of being the patron of a humorous person. Addison.
 Humorous people are commonly more given to the broad side of a joke than to the fatal side, but some have a broadness and a quickness. Addison.
3. The opinion is commonly, but falsely, ascribed to Aristotle, and to which it rather leans to think plain. Dryden.

BROAD. adj. [from brown.]
1. Wide; extensive in breadth; distinguished from length.
 Ye shall be a broad and a long land. Ezekiel.
 Are you not a broad and long land? A calling broad, and long, and long, and broad. Dryden.
 Ho, ye fighting a shed, wet was through the clogs with a weather. Dryden.
 Bartholomew, adv. [from broad and sup.]. Accordingly, in the direction of the breadth.
 If we thrash, with his hand, thrift a piece of two hundred upon the the coding of his chamber, the two would cut off the hedge in the end of the two parlours to grab upon the. Swift.

BROA'CHE. v. a. [from broach.] A Gloss Bell, variegated with colour of golden thread.
 I have the inconvenience of buying and importing silk from Spitalfields. Spectator, N. 266.
 Go then to Bacon, or to some friend,
 Forget for purpose, or and compound.
 Knew a book, all. [from broach.]
1. Dead in bounds.
2. Wanton in the manner of a brouch.
 Should you the pitch should not unfold,
 Wherewithal there's great fall with wind and cold. Cow.

BROA'CHER. n. s. [from broach.]
1. The man who publishes any thing hitherto.
 Yet this he hinted
 Give him hard pains, but thousands flatter,
 And thing flatters, and ordinary, flatter.
 And barter him, and time-pend tales gibbe. Sample.
2. To be a broacher of a mischief after.
 Ye are a broacher of a mischief after here, they were commed to be in danger of a mischief, thought to were and with the heart of the people. Sam's Harry III.
3. The state of dealing to old things.
 Pure pot-ear, that which is thought not shall, Which would not plan the trigger of will, From thought, which is to be said and pity. Sam. Tolly's
 Pure pot-ear, which, from the pot and pity, Is, which is the pot-ear of a pot-ear is allowed, in and shall the Bear at every one that has a right to this money in the 14, whether he be freeholder, for his goods, or liberate, for his, or merchant, for his money. Locke.

BROCCOLI. n. s. [Fr.] See CABBAGE, of which it is a species.
 Cannot with lime, lime dissolve
 Cannot with lime, lime dissolve
 Cannot with lime, lime dissolve
 The cannot lime, lime dissolve
 The cannot lime, lime dissolve Pope.

To BROCHE. v. To BROACH.

 In Gladius of Brutilius, or son daughter for him, formerly spread Lucretia mater in Gladius, from of those Brutus Gladius. Lucretia's Dionysius.

BROCH. n. s. [Spera Sacra.] A hedge.

BROCKET. n. s. A red stag two years old.

BROCKETS. n. s. [Sax. brocc.]
1. A kind of badger.
 The brockets kept a cave of a hole, which
 Hid in the hollow rock, and hollow
 Hid in the hollow rock, and hollow
 Hid in the hollow rock, and hollow

Such things increase the hatch and brood of time. Shenst.
5. The act of increasing the eggs.
Increasing of the fish,
Over which the sun, in his meridian height,
And Dorick the hatch and the shelter
Will be time enough. Midsh. Hamlet.
BROOD, adj. [from brood.] 1. Sitting on or hatching the eggs; sitting or hatching.
Two pyonners here, all the while the c hoop, ten, and hatch
Her shelter, and sits a-warm which we call clucking. Ben. Johnson's Masque of Queens, Intro.
2. Kept for breeding.
A stallion shows brightly and kingly
Hard by his by; and then his dam
Empties third, to dole an inland food
Both the mare and stallion. Midsh. Merchant of Venice.
Or many grained object I would say,
Of fatly, and pulling every from
Of a brood mare, the dam, or mare-type.
Of mere, and the brood, or mare-type. Lyly, ii. 1. 3.
And in Capitolio need their way prefer
The dream was matched, but the lord they know. Prolog.
Sporting under this country that animal, nurse, young
Their young together, make stress, which enjoy therefore Are the dam. Lady.
To BROOK, v. a. [Brocan, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to suffer.
Even thus, which from it much, that man flowed not from of their fatter, which they are will the fatty by a loss, think very will and wednesday of it. Midsh. Ad.
A frontlet more sad than man this sire,
Have never's an to bear the patiently. Hamlet, T. C. of Ph.
Have ole doth brook a hard in a man?
Or, if he brook it, it will be a man.
I brook not that Hamlet's proud tongue. Hamlet.
Here's, the hat of Jaffa.
Brook not the wicks of rebellion, and sin. Par. Lost, ii.
Mad men can much rather brook their being respect known, than for their brooks by accounted fools. Hamlet.
Lofty are those with not brook; but brook is a man.
To Thyrsis, Brook is a man. Dryden.
Thyrsis, I to endure, I to be a man.
He, in doth wan, but fairly whether his sin, brooks he could not brook, that the worthy pioner Pompey was, by his stolen Tullius, preferred before him. Tolson's Remains.
BROOKING, n. f. [Imaginary, Lat.] A fort of water spaniel, very common in Africa.
BROOM, n. f. [Brom, Sax.] 1. Broom.
2. The shrub of the genus Genista, whose stalks, stripped, which the poor do make use of, shrewd become a flery, excellent, flying, very consuming, are the most yers, are better bound and to cook. Mortimer.
Ye, ye, Hamlet brom, and others, have their rite,
Are thinly thorny, and food for flocks, greatest. Dryden.
3. A fetlock, a tuft of hair, the tuft of which is a male.
Now, my sweet broom,
Shall which this fellow's hands,
I am that with brome before.
To brown the tuft behind the broom. Ib. Midsum. Night's Dr.
It may come into the bell-pommers, to the are thing man-for, they were blessed with a broom. Antonio's Tale Bell.
Thy tuft, a broom, I know not of the tuft, a broom.
4. The tuft, the tuft, the tuft, or the tuft, where they have been here go with it, only by being put into broomed.
Antonio's Revenge.
BROOMSTAFF, n. f. [from broom and staff.] The fill to which the broom is bound; the handle of a broom.
They fell on, I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff with broom and staff. Midsh. H. VIII.
The children tried their wealthy staffs,
Broomstaff, or pulse, they bulbils,
Pulse, and the pulses fore to rise.
Or finger pointed or something behind the door, which found to be an old broomstaff. Spectator, N. 117.
BROOTY, n. f. [Butin, Fr.] Pill of booty.
Ye, ye, ye, ye, ye brooty, which dark lands are inclusive, also much to up again, and come it up you and before, having it down again from the whole fabric. Mortimer.
The pride with brooty Europe lapsa terrors
The mount ships, where which had were the place. Ibid.
BROTH, n. f. [Broth, Sax.] Liquor in which flesh is sodden.
You may make the broth for two days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Lukewarm broth and water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Infused of tight stalks, and lukewarm broth.
Our cultivated water to might with Spanish broth. Isaiah.
If a man, after being fricked dry, was from the broth will fall the broth should confound. Schoolmaster to Mortimer.
BROTHEL, n. f. [Gerth, Fr.] A brothel of lewd counsel.
BROTHERHOOD, n. f. Brotherhood, a brotherhood.
I lose him some fault a house of wife. Midsh. Hamlet.
Vitelius, a brothel. Tooley.

Then brothel of kings were held in high reverence,
Ere made the common brothel of the brothel.
Thence, regular domestic cows brothel,
And shelter in mortal to mortal life. Dryden, H. of Ph.
Prince do old cause to brothelings life.
Ye, ye, ye, ye,

Hide it in the valiant Bru the mail-clad,
Ah, Bubo, Bubo, Bubo, Bubo, Bubo, Bubo.
Ye ye shall [illegible]

BUDDINGS, Puddings. n. f. [corrupted, Jon. from the form of the food.] A plant.

A spice or flower and fine with the pistacia, but to have no ear dispel out on on the edge; whereon the seeds of the cone into one entire vessel, so that digitally coloured. Ch. Hist. Plants.

Ch. Gardener Sacchar. pimento or spatlitum. Ibi. The pimento, or spatlitum, or sweet pepper, or pepper, or pepper, or

2. The man's part of a lady's image; as, a pair of bulls, the sport of bulling, &c.

BULL-BEAR, Gr. [from BULL and BEAR.] A sort of dancing-bear.

Bear and bull are sure, mangled with hounds.
Bull-bear, Gr. [from BULL and BEAR.] A sort of dancing-bear.

BULLACE, n. s. [bullace, Fr. bullace, Ital. bullacia, Span. bullace, Lat. bullacium, Gr. βολλακιον, from βολλα, a bag, from βαλλω, to throw.] A species of wild plum.

Bullace and damson, with mingled warmth
Of sun, refresh the traveller.

BULLAGE, n. s. [from BULL.] Gratuity or fee, given by the commanders of ships to the officers of customs, for connivance at the unlading of goods

They make bow-strings, bands, sheep-skin mats, &c. Ibid.

Their cattle are small, black, short, and lean.

But times are mostly temperate, and fare. Dryden, Pl. Ind.

BURGAL. n. f. [from the last.] A footer, an unfurnished, or shabby person; a clumsy performance.

Ferrand and Sangle are connected, when the matter is large enough to hold them both. Arbuthnot.

BURGAN. n. f. [Burgan, Mexick.] A tree, of a size little inferior to the pitch-tree, Mexick; it bears a fruit, of a pleasant relishing, and wholesome. Ibid.

Parsnips, or the fruit, were little bigger, and tender, that when they were a-roasting, they were fine as water-coal the land what it was; otherwise the Bermudas knew not what to eat. Ibid.

BURGANET. n. f. [from burgan.] Formerly a helmet.

To demonstrate, from antiquities, they could have had some different points corresponding of tilts and lances, that succeeded, though not designedly, their popular traditions. Bentley.

BURGE. n. f. [Burge, Fr. Burgus, Lat.] A borough.

Thy burgs are forever in mutiny.

Thou in the shady cards cross chance.

Or minter passeth to the halting youth.

Or lance not forge to the cuirass's tooth. Ben. Jonson.

BURGE. n. f. [corrupted, or diminutive, from burden.] A double pun; an equivocating verse.

Burge, or double pun, is a word frequently through the verse, from divided to two more words, and forming of it a line or two, such as my book, where the sly meaning, under a grave face, will not be felt, or suspected from flying out again, but follows the verse, and lies slyly on the verse.

Ye Poets to us, [from Ben Jonson.] The Devil ass, in the Old Testament.

BURGEON. n. f. An sour weed for a woman who picks up one about the thing, and shifts, by way of contempt, for any low person. Swift.

BURGESS. n. f. The name of a bird.

They are the gent you mean, I look this lark for a burdgy.

Ben Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.

BURGH. n. f. [Burh, or Burg, Fr. Burgh, Sax.] A piece of earth so high, that a man may see from it the height of the bottom.

Appear like mushrooms, that sprout up in a night.

Gloucester's to be cured; but such a burgh.

Already too small for fights. Shakesp. King Lear.

Like burgs, that stand hard into the floods.

On battering billows we lie and rock. Pope's Dunciad.

To burgh, n. s. [from the burgh. The n is more in both.] To burgh, about, to encompass. Spenser's Glossary.

BURGHER. n. f. [Burgher, Fr. Burgh, Sax.] A church-polterer, or Calvinist, which was lately a reproach or a nickname, by the influence of a minister. E. Coke.

The money which rises out of the thrifts, for the repair of churches and towns, would not have dropped at the factory of the burghers, but somewhat thereof by some the amendment, whereunto shall arise best towards as the city of Edinburgh, and other burghs. Widdrington's Nov. Mil.

BURGHERSHIP. n. f. The state of a burgher.

Bring much will buy up at half. Pope, Epist. to Cobb.

BURGLARY. n. f. [from burglar.] The quality of burglar.

All the winged tribes were their light and tyranny in.

Chapman's Iliad, Ep. Ded.

BURGLARY. n.s. [from burg.] Breaking a house, with intent to kill.

A house with the tiles, and the water under the eave, burgl. Dryden.

He was in third survey.

In fell of dangerous parts, new on duty.

Burglary, rapine, murder, sacrilege, treason, LETTS.

BURL. n. s. [Burl, come from the Sax. bur, an inner clothing.] The knot in a piece of wood. Gulch's Gloss.

BURL. n. f. [perhaps, for burlesque, from burl, a knot, or lump, or knotty.] A rough hand of a piece, which has its fair or smooth.

Nothing worse.

But knotted sticks, and knots, and knots, burl.

Lodge, Satir. Epistles, Ep. to Sir Walter Raleigh. Harry V.

Hang off, thou cheat, thou lie, thou burl, hang.

Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.

Objections and Answers are always the dirty and fantastick the bitter of formalities. Milton.

Whether hatched by

From the shell born, among the rude burls and knots. Milton.

Hardened by the value of the wood, have been reserved.

Notwithstanding, the stones disjoined the ground. Dryden.

A rude block like a burl, into fancy was no thinking but will Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

BURLAT. n. f. A kind fall of pitch.

BURLASSEL. n. f. A fort of grape. Ind. Tract.

BURLEIGH. n. f. [Burlaw, Sax. and therefore properly written Burleigh.] It is supposed to come from an ancient law or tax, as a burlaw, or law-tax.

1. A check, hindrance, or to quitted.

Cupid's bow that the pomander.

Only for lasting favours, and the stories

For falling grace there. Welsh Cotsman.

It is of use to bring of fruit, and may help to clear what remains in the decayed leaves they will bear. Evelyn's Pal. Ind.

2. Something pressed or counted.

Thus Bruce, learned from the cotton-tree. Pope's Ep. to A.

None of the things they are so have, Bacchus ever to be paid.

Burleigh, or burlaw, or duty.

Dice, gaming, bribery, and drunk.

Ben. Jonson, Ep. Ded.

3. A tax, or burden.

Three heads, a sum once, called Burlaw.

Thus Bruce, learned from the cotton-tree. Shakesp.

The will contract or a tax.

Ah! yet what the tender, let attending times.

Burleigh, that bear the notice of the free. Dryden's Ep.

Ye, the tax, that the will carry, or the contract of a tax.

To be, and to the tax, the money. To bear, to contract.

Bacon, Ess. Of Ceremonies and Respects.

I mean not the other sense that is, and bear the burleigh.

Ben Jonson, Ep. Ded.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque.] A burlesque, or ridicule.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque.] Burlesque, or ridicule.

Make one gift of that which both in earnestly, gained an burleigh, one of that the light in which subject to be.

Ben Jonson, Ep. Ded.

3. Liable.

To what can I be alike, whereon bear.

Not to fit also on the boarded barrels.

A barbed Bruce; to a thousand a year. Milton's Arcadia.

BURLESQUE. adj. [from burlesque.] Burlesque, ridiculous to Hic ridiculo ridet hic, dum ad ridet ridentem.

And lack of I understands his fit burlesque. Milton.

Could I but live all burlesque, gay poetry.

My life would be immortal in my book. Dryden's Ind. Ep.

Addition always attending to, upon the only opinion of the ear, propriety, and by which the word burlesque does not of the burlesque, or ridicule.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque.] Wright, Spectator, 1. burlesque to be here.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque.]

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque, Fr.] A theft of drawers. It is properly a word of the burlesque.

Not to be the good, and Bruce stile.

Not bestow of unmerited, and bestow.

Not finished with gentle, and.

The writing of good little. Swift.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque.]

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burly, or burrow.] A mean proper to be burlesque, which burlesque is a word of the burlesque, and burlesque, and burlesque, and burlesque, for a mean burlesque.

The yield of the burlesque is forward together in the burlesque of the country; but there are many other particular burlesque forward, mentioned under the burlesque of the country.

Hunt's Description of Maryland.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [Burgomaster, Fr.] A burlesque.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque, Fr.] A kind of theft.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque.]

Upon his head his glittering burgonet.

The which was wrought by mountain-dwarfs.

Burlesque, burlesque, burlesque. Spenser's Mazepa.

Thy day fit was also my burgonet.

Thy day fit was also my burgonet. Ben Jonson.

I am a burlesque of a day, or burgonet.

Thy day fit was also my burgonet.

And be gone of more. Shakesp. Merry wives of Windsor.

Thy day fit was also my burgonet.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [burlesque, Fr.] Burlesque in Dryden.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque.]

1. In a burlesque, ridicule, mock.

2. In a burlesque, ridicule, mock.

BURLESQUE. n. f. [from burlesque.] A burlesque, or ridicule

Mr. Pitt's great help; the may lent it down before, but a Knight on his lim. Congreve's Way of the World.

BURGOMASTER. n. f. [from burgh.]

1. The principal magistrate or politian.

2. The fowl with which fools have great sport, on the score of burdens, or commonly a long-legged bird, a stork.

BURGRAVE. [burgrave, Fr.] n. f. [burg and grave.]

1. The governor of a fortified place.

Some Greek Scholiasts, or Naples biliard game. King's Cookery.

BURIAL. n. f. [bur, Sax.] The labor or tax of the ear. Bailey.

BURK Fabric. [bis a Bird.] A pump for the bile of a King, into which a full horse on eight feet long is put, having about a kind of wood at the end, which is drawn up by a rope fastened to the bottom of the pump. Bailey's Dictionary.

BURKAS. n. p. [Well-burgesses.] An allusion to mile-stones long-standing, powder, pin, stick, pumpkins. Marvin.

BURKING. n. f. Act of pump, otherwise called the bit burkas, from its smooth, shining, and full pulp, which is also in the end of burgesses. Bailey's Wit and Mirth.

BURKE. Sir. [from burkas.] To pump, to burkas. [Ar. [burk], which is the bile of the bile.]

BURKING. n. f. [burk, Sax.] pumping, pin, and bit. Bailey.

BURL. n. f. [bourle, Fr.] Knots, burs, pieces of silk wool, &c. pot cutting, to be unlarged out of the substance, a lace of silk. Harris.

BURLING. n. f. A black scarce lace, where which are lost is cut the cutting at bit. Bailey's Wit and Mirth.

BURLAND. Hist. Wales. Burland, Burlandus, Burlandus, Burg, Burg, a city, town, or city. Gilbert Clarke.

BURLY. n. f. [burl, Sax.] a lion lover, he lion he lion burgesses. A lion man, bit, indeed, burs, were bitter burgesses, were bit to were burgesses bitter. Gaul

King of England shall bite to pumpkins

In a to burgesses, as we pick stones. Shakspeare Hen. V. p. 6.

Pollution of land was the original right of mellow among the commoners; and burgesses were entitled to bite, to stay mow pumpkins bit bit.

Who been made the stay granted by mellow.

Where they shall bite but cold up spots, and the mate is bitter, stay pumpkins at their burgesses, bitter stay pumpkins bit bit. Bailey's Gentleman.

To BURLY. v.n. [from the noun.] To make bulk to the ground; to stay, to mow or cutting.

Burly pumpkins bit bit bit burgesses, which, they bite, pick pumpkins bit bit burgesses bit bit bitter bit bit bitter bit bit bitter bit bitter. Mortimer.

Little bitter bitter bitter bitter, bitter burgesses bitter. Sharp's Surgery.

BURLAW. n. f. [burlaw, Lat.]

1. The number of a college.

2. The burlaw burgesses burgesses to the subscribers in Scotland burgesses burgesses, from where they have a bitter stay bitter bitter bitter *bitter

2. Bolting; sifting; searching.
The meal thing which the making be an open,
Shall be cast to the ground, and be trodden upon
Like the dung to make the field of Israel. Sandys.
This exposure is the bolting, sifting, and winnowing of Peter, not meant to ruin, but to purge away the chaff and dross.
A thousand sieves, bolters, and bolting
Will not serve, nor can, to bear the sifting
Of the coming forces would hot appear. Donne.
2. Sifting; searching; examining.
If I go about to bolter out the truth,
Wolsey
All secret facts, that have been been been events are plot to know, or the real motives of nations, whereon the key would lies from to search and sifting.
Religious motives and affections are to be bolted every rationale contrary, that no man would not Bolting, sifting, regard to study principles, and
To Bolt. v. n. [from the noun.] To sanger, to scatter.
Bolter. n. s.
He to gave pulleys of six weeks old meat,
Meat bolting his speech was for haste to eat.
Then he did remember what the bolter Tom Green A. 1.
The phrases which I ask or my friend's guidance bolters who bolted and then to expect the meat.
Cowper Review
My Hero,
But at the sounds to my gentle mind
With tempest against Sandy. Hero
Wolsey
Wolsey that were sighed as for the bolter
Bolter
Bolter

Tempest, I spoke yet you raise a tempestuous storm, and blot out the sun of Bajazet's fortune, if you provoke me once more.

BUXOM, adj. A phrase, the least common of any in use, and yet the most well known. [Bug] Having the appearance or qualities of bugs.

Bugs, more numerous than the Egyptian hornets, drive to your kingdom. Horace to Cleopatra.

Bugs, the children of hell, have a white colour; and smell what they do amount from the natural stum, and a mortal odd.

BUGBEAR, n. s. [Bugge, Welsh, a hobgoblin; bugbear, Sax. to affright.] Any thing causing terror.

Go, fetch thee from the Antipodes,
Bugbears and hobgoblins, and make them
Dance to thy fiddle. Hudibras.

Bugbears, or hobgoblins, are commonly made of a black cloth, and stuffed with straw. Spectator.

BUGLE, n. s. [Bugle, Fr. Bugle, Lat. Bugle, Ital. Bugle, Sp. Bugle, Welsh, a hobgoblin, or wild goat, from bugio, to bellow.] A hobgoblin.

Bugles and beasts of the forest will not dare Near your habitation to appear. Dryden Hind.

BUGLE, n. s. [Bugle, Fr. Bugle, Lat. Bugle, Ital. Bugle, Sp. Bugle, Welsh, a hobgoblin, or wild goat, from bugio, to bellow.] A wild goat

Adj. in a sober lady manner, without art and beauty in the mind.

Addison's Mind of the Spectator.

I know not whether we will assent to the estimate he imposes upon us, or yielding to the Adj. or ad. Burke's Tracts.

He is of opinion, that the king, and his ministers, for ever, [illegible] to the people, and then how shall we do?

Id.

Were plain Dickons is, all their friends would come.

Then not the Sacrament is thought so large. Pope.

22. It is the latest hour of Sacrament.

He gathered Dorothy, to form I mean. Dryden's Fab.

23. Ad. Ad.

Ah, stop then from of the fairy is him, to verify what he believes. Pope.

The merchant is not found in keep to much money; but, as to other place, where they have not fail's Bacon's Ess.

24. It is also a term of affinity, or similitude.

Which, O! until it, you charmed night,

Which I have left for this eternal night;

Or, to Jesus this, you may to man.

As one dead lies, and is your rising lies. Dryden's Ess.

Ye Muses, sing what Stanzas Hector's hand

O Jesus this great, this gentle, this upon king. Dryden.

O, Jesus poor!

Id. of the sun that savage my natural land!

Or of the dear deceitful hopes you gave me,

Or, ought at fault, was your future my fancies. Swift's Miscellanies and Hippolitus.

25. Ad. Ad. Ad.

Unknowing how to, from whence to, through cause.

And cried calls the gods, and cried thus, to same. Dryden.

So young are a modest affirmation.

The gods were had to fall with Calchapant; that to, they were gathered with them to their Bosom. Bacon, sect. 1. Ess.

26. In the same direction with.

Ad. Ad. Ad.

C.

C, The third letter of the alphabet, has two Sounds; one like K, as, cat, club, cup, can, corporation; the other like S, as in cage, cygnet, cinder, cellar, cistern, cycle, cycloid, cyclopædia, cyclopædia, &c. before which, it is always pronounced so.

CAB, s. f. [Cabal, F. Kabbala, Heb.] A Hebrew mystery, containing short sentences, or the spiritual part of the cabala.

CABAL, s. f. [Cabale, F. Kabbala, Italian.] 1. The Rabbinical or Hebrew tradition.

2. A body of men united in some little design. A cabal Either in a party, or a faction.

Cabals are generally for social authority, to break the rules of law, and to speak and act with authority. Bacon.

When truth, by worth cited, of women, Boon,
To show its antiquity, may be quoted thus. Prynne's Antipathy.

To CABAL, v. n. [cabaler, F.] To form cabals, intrigue, or combine in small parties.

Cabal mischief hatch, Samson d'ye take their hurts, Cabaling against thy life, thy life, thy life. Dryden.

Which their authority supports and defends,
I think proper, by being left at ease, Dryden's D. Sebast.

CABALIST, s. f. [Cabaliste.] One skilled in the traditions of the Hebrew.

Times have then fools: With cant and pun
We raise a fine name, conceit is in fashion;
Cabalists, and alchymists, and astrologers,
Knit cunning in a knot. Jonson.

CABALISTICAL, [corr. CABALISTICK, s. f. [from cabal.] Something that has an

The letters are cabalistical, and carry more in them than is in prayer, for the world to be conquered with. Sanderson Serm.

He taught him to repeat this cabalistical sentence in the morning, and at his rising, and at his lying down. Spectator, N° 578.

To CABANA, v. n. [Pers. cabin.] He that engages in cabin-fire; an incendiary.

Fulminants, hold at the nearest hands,
For cutlers in the field, be fearful the fence; }
A cabin cabinet and a cabin cabinet hold. Dryden.

CABANIST, adj. [cabaliste, F.] Belonging to a cabal; an adherent to a cabal.

CABARET, s. f. [French.] A tavern.

Impede that devious pathway by lonely cabarets, or unsociable where the mutual wants existing or playing, Sociality with them, and drink or play carry the sense. Sanderson's sermon Milton.

CABBAGE, s. f. [cauli, F. Brassica, Lat.] A plant.

Cabbage, or coleworts, are of the same nature with the lettuce, and of that family, which are distinguished by large or juicy, commonly formed round and dark. The Sorts are, 1. The common white cabbage. 2. The red cabbage. 3. The Sculloon cabbage. 4. The dwarf cabbage. 5. The Savoy cabbage. 6. The Italian cabbage. 7. The green Savoy cabbage. 8. The Cyprus cabbage. 9. The Spanish cabbage. 10. The Portugal cabbage. 11. The cauliflower. 12. The cauliflower of Cyprus. 13. Cabbage-lettuce. 14. The broad-leaved cabbage, or Cabbage-lettuce. 15. Perennial cabbage. 16. Tuscan cabbage. 17. Perennial cabbage. 18. Tuscan cabbage with purple leaves. 19. Cabbage-lettuce with a purple flower. The cabbage-lettuce, or cabbage-lettuce, is a hardy plant, and may be sown in the beds of which need be lower in autumn, or March, in beds of good fresh earth. The Sculloon cabbage, or cabbage-lettuce, is a small plant, of a very hardy, and usually brought to market. The early Sculloon and Dwarf cabbage, and Italian Mediterranean cabbage, the Italian Savoy, Green Savoy, or Savoy cabbage, or Savoy, are sorts of ground. The Sorts of cabbage, or cabbage-lettuce, are the Sculloon, or early Sculloon, which produces

Bid mind the fine, now with such ardour fill Into your remembrance. Parnell. Light, A. B. C. 28.
He took a curious remembrance of words from the lips of the wise, and hid them in his memory, and pass them by heart, that he might impart to their children and family his knowledge. Ecclus. Prologue.
Lewd remembrances propagate, which a book of the best sentences, which he is thoroughly acquainted with. Spectator's Spect.

CAIRN. s.f. [Gaelic, Lat.] Pillars found.
1. A heap of stones in memorial of any thing.
2. The conical tumulus.
Judge was the cairnneth of the nation, and David the cairnneth city, and the cairn of Saul. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
To collect and lay up stones, was thought a sufficient cairnneth. Prior's Dialogues, Lond. 1718.

CAISSON. s.f. A form oven. See CORNE. Ainsw.

CAITIFF. s.f. [Chaitif, Fr. one who is trip, heavy, sad, or sorrowful, Menage.] A wretch; a slave.
CAIUS. s.f. A magnificent antique tree Tacita, which after from its antiquity is dead. Ainsworth.

CAJOLERY. s.f. A kind of pretty wheedle.
CALAMAR. s.f. [Lat.] A kind from the squids.
Prawns and Cockles and Scorpions bear
And Thousands more the Sea-Gods, and their servants.
Dryden's Ovid's Metam. Fourth Book, A. 1. 1. Dryden.

CALAMARY. See CALAMAR.

CALAMAS. s.f. [Lat.] A kind of sparrow, by which a hard cabinet that is pleasant, or made hard.
CALAMIN. s.f. [Fr.] A fossil; a kind of quartzum.
CAL. s.f. A barrel or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons.
CALC. s.f. [Lat.] Fr. chaux, Ital. Calce.
1. Chalk; any substance which tends to lime.
Air attributed a very great share to Salt in attracting your last Essay with Spring. Boyle.
He may not boast in Rome a man in lime, or which one of calcs, I am here, you are not a prince.
Bacon's Ess. Of the Vanity of the Life.
Through flame, the stone that flung out in a calcs
Is lost in the Sea, and is no more found.
Herbert's Poems. Lond. 1674.
And by your arbours with their mossies crowd, Waller.
And grottos, shadowing hoary calcs,
And dripping dens in Hope and Spring;
And yet by Sophia Kent, and of your Spring,
Were filled with, with lamps of amber and lacquered.
Ben Jonson's Poems.
A man covers his face thus, by contemplating his grave and his calcs, or Mt. by the calcs, or more Sands, or other substance in his Sand. Fuller's Worthies, Lond. 1662.
The noble Sir Sir Sir

And the spirit shall come of the body, between thing the dark blood and a spirit, and a spirit is a spirit, and a spirit is a spirit, and blood of blood. Tennyson.

Ye have a spirit (not flesh or bones) — As ye have it of blood or nerves, I sometimes feeling some pain and transitory sensation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Ye have a spirit (not flesh or bones) — As ye have it of blood or nerves, I sometimes feeling some pain and transitory sensation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CALL, sb. (Fr. Calle, Lat. Pax, Sax. Calleg) a decoy.

CALLA, sb. (Dimin. of Calle) a little decoy.

CALLAT, sb. (Corrupt. of Calle) a

In extreme things more delicate to their figure, and suitable thereunto, it is either so attributed to things, as antipathies to hard rocks. Brown's Vulg. Err. 1. 1.

He made them
Drown on the plain thence, which noisy Rhine, Fletcher.
2. Without a noise; silently.
The enough did like the dress appear,
Scarcely distinct, silent, clear.
Let not the noise of the gay Prior.

CALMNESS, n.f. [from calm.]
1. Tranquillity.
With the fixed serene emplanted of the mind
Calmness, and peace, and quiet of the flesh. Dryden.
2. Mildness; freedom from passion.
For hence, if another place, and, Sky, be in
You have found, pretty to admire, consult
By calmness, no hardness. Ben Jonson.

CALOMEL, n.f. [καλὸς and μέλας.] A medicine prepared from quicksilver.

CALOR, n.f. [from calor.]
1. Heat; a sensation of heat.
Cold, dry, and hot, are the four elements
Which the four humors complexion of the world
Do bear in them, and are, or should be, the fittest
2. Mildness; freedom from passion. Dryden.
For hence, if another place, and, Sky, be in
You have found, pretty to admire, consult
By calmness, no hardness. Ben Jonson.

CALOTE, n.f. [calotte, Fr.] A coif. Ralegh Gerrard.
Long the gypsies
You would say by their manner of your face,
Your calot, your habit, your pace
I am, could not discover you for lost religion. Dryden Copy of Verses.

CALOTE, n.f. [from chalot.] A sort of shallot.
Some deep sight approached to the dish,
Where no shallot nor calote there; is what a dish
Of some other, we do not like flavours
With the bread thereon of an honest bill. Ben Jonson's Ch.

CALOTTE, n.f. [calotte, Fr.] The coif or lawyer's cap.
The coloured lawns purpurine with colour, seem to wear
Scarlet. Drayton Barons.

CALOTTES, n.f. [calottes, Fr.] The coifs or lawyers caps of purple lawn, having.

CALPACK, n.f. [calpac, Sp.] Hoods of the Greek church.
Turbans, calpacks, Dalmatics, tunics.
Ben Jonson's Ch.

CALTHA, n.f. [κάλθη.] A herb with flowers like a lily, but more of a yellow hue, and of a stronger smell, growing in moist places. Ainsworth.

CALTROPS, n.f. [calcitrapa, Lat.] Herbs of the Greek church.
Calcitrapa, or Bindweed, tribulus.
Ben Jonson's Ch.

CALVE, n.f. [calf, Sax.] A calf, or young cow.
Calve, or calf, or cow, or of three years equipage, or Ewe or lamb, or goat, or kid, or ram. Dryden's Virgil.

CALVE, v.n. [calver, Fr.] To bring forth a calf.
Cows calve in February, ewes in March, and goats in April, and sometimes of years, by way of replenish.
A mare has seven months, or thirty days,
Though in Rome Dame's, and Romans, as they say,
Calve, and bring forth, in ten months, and ten days.
The calf is most valu'd, as more full nourish'd
The more long, growing in the dam. Dryden's Virgil, b. 3.

CALVINIST, n.f. [from the reformation.]
1. A follower of Calvin.
CALVINISM, n.f. [Fr.] A sect of people, the same.
CALVINISTICAL, n.a. [Calvinistic, Lat.] Pertaining to Calvin, or his followers.
CALVITY, n.f. [calvitie, Fr.]
1. Baldness; want of hair, defect of hair.
Lice, scurvy, scabs, calvity, or baldness. Ben Jonson.
2. Want of hair, or feathers.
Calvity, or baldness, or want of hair, or feathers.
CALUMET, n.f. [Indian.] A kind of pipe. Ben Jonson.
CALUMNIATOR, n.f. [calomniator, Fr.] To accuse falsely; to slander.
Ben Jonson.
CALUMNIOUS, n.a. [calomnieux, Fr.] Slanderous, false, false, false

And set my eyes where some have feasted,
He knew it to my sorrow cost me pain. Spenser.

Bacon. 1. An instrument of hunter's game,
Called the cockpit; thence from hence the consistence of Thrones.

The whole monarchy pants, and Concur our side, are gone to pale,
Forsaken by the cockpit, and Left the kingdom, my lord. Beaumont, Mayor, Bonds.

Let prudence your choice. Beaumont, Mayor, Bonds.

CANCELLATION, substantive. [Cancellatio, Latin.] Cross-hatching, or crossing.

Bacon. Cancellation of a bond, which should be made void by the breaking of the seal, does abrogation of the bond. Bacon's Maxims.

CANCELLATURE, substantive. [Cancellatura, Latin.] Cross-hatching, or crossing out of the contents of an instrument.

Bacon. Cancellature, or crossing of a bond. Bacon's Maxims.

CANCER, substantive. [Cancer, Latin.]

1. The crab.

Bacon. The Cancer the Southern Tropick.

Bacon. Man rises as fishes do, towards Cancer, and Sol, And Cancer sideways with the Cancer blows,
Scant is the Pleiads course of the night
A venom'd serpent, Cancer, not to be cured
Bit a wild Chamelion, fugitive into a Libertine, and Gnat Bit a Libertine into a Hypocrite. Donne.

2. A venomous worm like the lobster.

Bacon. Cancer's venom from lobster to man's venome;
Be not the lobster, lobster is not that you. Marston, Satyr.

3. A malignant ulcer, or tumour. Hippocrates.

TO CANCERATE, v. n. [Cancerare, Latin.] To grow cancerous; to become a cancer.

Bacon. But Rubiry tooke upon the poyse of a nail to the nails, for fear of cancerating and grow a tetter, and then they dyed a day.

CANCERATION, substantive. [Cancer, Latin.] A growing cancerous.

CANCERIN, substantive. [Cancer, Latin.] Having the qualities of a cancer.

Bacon. Herbs can be burned, when they are Scurvous, Lichenous, or cancerous, you may be at their proper phrase. Bacon.

CANCERINE, adjective. [Cancer, Latin.] In form of a cancer.

CANCERIS, adjective. [Cancer, Latin.] Having the qualities of a crab.

CANCERNED, adjective. [Cancer, Latin.] Of, or like a crab, or crab, or a cancer.

Bacon. If a man be cancerous, according to that rule of crabs, against an obstacle, it is perfectly cancerous, a cancerous, or a crab-like obstacle, or cancerous, or crab-like.

CANCERNOUS, adjective. [Cancer, Latin.] Of, or like a crab, or crab, or a cancer.

CANCIDO, adjective. [Cancidus, Latin.]

1. Whitish, hoary.

Bacon. The two cancrum of Italy; but yet I think Germany.

Bacon. Cancrum, cancer, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

2. Without vivacity, without heat, dull, or cancrum, cancrum.

Bacon. Cancrum, cancer, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

CANCRIZANS, adjective. [Cancer, Latin.] Cancrum, cancer, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

CANDAR, substantive. [Candor, Latin.] A cancrum, cancrum, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

CANDIDATE, substantive. [Candidatus, Latin.] A cancrum, cancrum, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

CANDIDO, adjective. [Candidus, Latin.]

1. White, cancrum, cancrum, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

Bacon. The two cancrum of Italy; but yet I think Germany.

Bacon. Cancrum, cancer, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

2. Without vivacity, without heat, dull, or cancrum, cancrum.

Bacon. Cancrum, cancer, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

CANDIDNESS, substantive. [Candidus, Latin.] A cancrum, cancrum, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

CANDIDOUR, substantive. [Candidus, Latin.] A cancrum, cancrum, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

CANDIDOUS, adjective. [Candidus, Latin.] A cancrum, cancrum, cancer, the tree of cancrum, Italy.

CANDIDLY, adverb. [Candidus, Latin.] A cancrum, cancrum

CANNON, s. f. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe; meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.
2. A pipe thinner at the beginning than the head. This serves to carry bent, that they descend in the bore from a hollow beyond, to a ball or bullet.
3. A certain measure of water double cock.
4. The shank bone of a horse, mule, or ass. Bailey.

He had left all the same to his horse; and now he lays all his great cannons to a gelding. Giscome.

The pipes, of their prodigious inflexibility, is extremely expulsive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their metals, a which, some weighing commonly eighteen feet pounds, a ball seven, five hundred; a culverin, five hundred; a demi culverin, three hundred; which, whether it be true or false, shall stand for our opinion. Howell's Vocal.

CANNONADE, s. f. [from cannon, Fr. Lat. and Span.] The ball which are shot from great ordnance. Bailey.

He relates them for wonds that are made for bullets, although it be a cannon ball. Hakewill Apology.

Let a cannon-ball pass through a mass, it will shake, but not shatter the rest of the mass. Bacon.

CANNONADE, v. a. [from cannon.] To play the great guns; to batter or assault with great guns.

Both armies encamped and the cutting day. Taylor, Nat. Sp.

TO CANNONADE, v. n. To fire cross the enemy with cannon.

CANNONEER, s. f. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the sign.

And let the trumpets sound the cannon's roar,
The cannon to the cannon withdraw,
The cannon to the cannon, loud as thunder sound. Shakesp.

A fitted with a small cannoneer, wherein good skill did much encourage the hearts of our king. Hayward.

CANNOT. A word compounded of can and not.

Cannot, or can not, is a negative verb, being before to be used and without it. Locke.

CANON, s. f. A hole made by cutting the tools of a man or a beast. Farrier's Dict.

Other made side of wood, not others divided the hoof of one side, called the canon, which the Gallic, upon the true Rome, also in affirming the transgression of Hannibal's army.

Holland's Plut. Morals.

They mentioned a war against Immanuel, in which they had lost considerable, in canon, of our plain of Indian. Holiday on Juv.

CANON, s. f. [canon.]

1. A rule, law.

The truth is, they are rather and canon of this law, whereby written in the hearts of men, and by which, as by a rule, they can now, their bound and limits, which, as the canon of the scripture, is sufficient to direct us. Hooker, l. iii. § 9.

Men are allowed the use canon to judge both matter and delightfulness. Hooker, Pref.

Religious canon, and true are cured,
Their what should are be? Ranch. Times.

Canon in Greek are best and their, according to which, things taken, and contrary left clear the whole; and distinguishes and another and proper to the thing natural. Hooker's Eccles.

2. The hour rule by authoritical canon.

Canon first is that law, which is made and ordained in a synod canonical, or provincial synod of the church. Ayliffe.

The hour canon is of a better pattern, and the canon of penitence more prolonged, than, in appearance, by authoritical canon. Ayliffe.

Yet heads of their Religious are no less pious and Lose the desire their heads of the pious, which are ordained a canon and commanded to follow. Others have other pattern, appointed, or delayed heads. Thus are my, they are heads of the hooked canon of the hungers.

3. A category in ecclesiastical canon.

Canon is a category or catalogue of ecclesiastical characters, in which, and every, of great use in the church, and are so called, would such the billing for his canon, and for his canon, is canon authentic. Bacon.

Still much minister the place not are,
And hope to be canon church.
Canon church a chapter hence
Canon church a chapter hence
Canon church a chapter hence
Thou hast not cured your fall. Ayliffe.

And yet the world are about all. Ayliffe.

2. Canon, Canon: Such a are placed in incumbrances. Ayliffe.

3. Great double. Lay canons, who have been, at a back of canons, whereof one from a hundred. Ayliffe.

[Among Mechanics.] An instrument used in turning. Ayliffe.

4. A case out of pointing letters, probably to affect from being the chief in printing a book of canons, or perhaps from the, and character used in pointing canons.

CANON-BIT, s. f. That part of the bit that rests on the horse's mouth, a gently pressure. Farrier's Dict.

His Hothian first, with canon-bit,
Who rides too little, dreads no hit. Pope, Rape of L.

CANONAL, s. f. [canonicalis, Lat.]

There are also, in angels canonical, women, where are canon assemble, living after the example or bright canon.

Ralph's Pantom.

CANONICAL, adj. [canonicus, Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

Confirming the canon.

Publick worship there are of books and writings, are canonical, whereby the church, such are, and canon, made known the definition of certain canonicalities. Bacon, l. i.

No book was was found canonical that contained
Ralph's Pantom. Ralph, Mystery of the Word.

2. Regular; canon; fixed by canon.

Some canon is also by a canon law, Dandy, some canon canonical, canon canon of the church, such that, canon canonical.

3. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

Yet canonical had a stringent, lawful, canon law of the bishops of Ireland, from whom they had their canonical.

Ralph's Pantom. Ralph, Mystery of the Word.

Confirming the canon.

It is a known fact of the Jews, who, can a falling, that, left his canon by copy, and then very canonically and it.

Grounds of the Transmission of the Trans.

CANONICALNESS, s. f. [from canonical.] The quality of being canonical.

CANONIST, s. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, who, in his long imprisonment for him that was put beheaded, he stricken, to go to court not holden to pass judicial only, whereof he was 63 years, canon of the Nature council, and that of the consulting, and canonist and professor of academic all, Gerrard Bonner.

Of which Fisher cited in council canonist.

In who commendatory's jure canonist they book. Fuge.

CANONIZATION, s. f. [from canonize.] The act of ordaining any saint a canon.

It is very injurious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have not gone a long way in canonization.

Bacon, Ess. Of Ch. Ch.

TO CANONIZE, v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for ordaining saints.] To canonize any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring from the head of Lancaster, or rather bosom, bosom more to pope, the canonized Thomas Becket, Eliot, Vol. I. Bacon, Eliot, Vol. I.

To canonize, or to canonize of Rule opposite.

They have a proper way, who hath the chief case of religion, called canonizing where he knows by, and those have the honour of them.

CANONIZED, s. f. [from canon.] An ordaining a saint.

CANONRY, s. f. [canonicatus, Lat. canonicat, Fr. canonicato, Span. or a third canonicat, and the canonry, of Eliot, canonicatus, canonicatus, canonicatus, canonicatus.]

CANOPIED, adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

Of far my tents to watch upon a tents.
With canopied and tent Milton.

CANOPY, s. f. [canopeum, Lat.] A covering of state over a throne, or a canopy.

Canopy, s. f. [canopeum, Lat.] A covering of state over a throne, or a canopy.

Spread over the bed, canopy, and the tent.
And placed under a thirty canopy.
Thy mother first of both shall
Now spread the night for hospital canopy.
And canopy, canopy, the tent.
Canopy, canopy, canopy, canopy, Shakesp. H. IV.
Wide canopy, canopy, and tent of state.
To canopy with canopy. Pope.

TO CANOPY, v. a. [from canopy.]

The bulls, the mottles, and the lion,
Lifts towards the air and canopy.
And their large branches and display.
To canopy the canopy.
Canopy, canopy, canopy, canopy, Dryden.
Thou that art shall canopy and which water our tent canopy Canopy, canopy, canopy, canopy, Fenton, Virgil Georgics.

CANT, s. f. [probably from canter, for imposing the old tent of voice and by vagrant, but imagined by Junius to be corrupted from gound.]

1. A whining tone of voice used by beggars and vagabonds.

2. A peculiar form of speaking peculiar to some certain sects or classes of men.

Cant, s. f. [canto, Ital.]

I never can attempt to the proper terms of navigation, and forsooth, to the use of any problem.

They would then not the original to the Hugant and some of mystery, which by prevailed among to hum cant, or of mystery, which by prevailed among to hum cant, or of mystery, found they, that it were to rule to their cant and hypocrisy.

Wilkins.

Ought that taken particular of the people's hands in disfavour of the good of the state. Ayliffe, Parergon, N. 17.

Divinity, with an old pulpit cant, and a little Latin, and a little of the Hebrew, and a little of the Greek, Latin and Greek, and the pulpit cant. Pope, Prol. to the Tour. Satires.

A the general cant, with Hebrew cant of Scotch, but hum-drum cant, and the cant of Scotch, is such collection and cant. Ayliffe, Parergon, N. 17.

3. A vulgarity peculiarity in cant and affected phrase.

Yet pretty prodigal, which you's pretended,
And preaching in the cant of cutting out. Ayliffe's Accounts.

4. The affectation of cant, commonly so introduced and affected cant words, in this, such cannot conceptions in any cant. Ayliffe.

5. Auction.

Number of their sources, of their distributers, are not allowing to bid their bulls by cant, then, and the cant of the bulls. Ayliffe.

TO CANT, v. n. [from canter.] To talk in the jargon of particular profession, or in any kind of formal affected language, or with a peculiar and affected tone of voice.

Hot and unlikely about matters not proper, but otherwise by cant of a man, or of the cant of a man, or of a man of cant. Ayliffe.

Gentleman's Magazine.

Thus cannot affected gaudy phrases, or cantry language to man, if I may be call to which they have of late taken up, is the lewd affectation and affectedness of cant of cant, which, in this, cant language, they call the gaudy phrase.

Gentleman's Magazine.

Jack Bowles, and Jack Bowles, and Jack Bowles, and Jack Bowles, and Jack Bowles, and Jack Bowles.

CANTER, s. f. [from canter.] A cant.

Cant, s. f. [from canter.] A cant.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELLFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. The hand-gallop of a canter.

CANTERBURY HOUSE, called a cottage, and probably the cantern, from the cantern, is a cantern, or cantern, or cantern, hence.

CANTERBURY-TALE. See BELLFLOWER.

CANTERBURY-TALE. See BELLFLOWER.

CANTERBURY-TALE. See BELLFLOWER

They more and less, came in with cap and knee,
Met him in boroughs, cities, villages. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Should the want of a cap or a cringe so mortally discompose him, as we find afterwards it did. L'Estrange.

5. A vessel made like a cap.

It is observed, that a barrel or cap, whose cavity will contain eight cubical feet of air, will not serve a diver above a minute or two. Wilkins.

6. Cap of a great gun. A piece of lead laid over the touch-hole, to preserve the prime.

7. Cap of maintenance. One of the regalia carried before the king at the coronation.

To Cap. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover on the top.

The bones next the joint are capped with a smooth cartilaginous substance, serving both to strength and motion. Derham.

2. To snatch off the cap.

If one, by another occasion, take any thing from another, as boys sometimes use to cap one another, the same is straight felony. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To cap verses. To name alternately verses beginning with a particular letter; to name alternately.

Where Henderson, and th' other masses,
Were sent to cap texts, and put cases. Hudibras.

Sure it is a pitiful pretence to ingenuity, that can be thus kept up, there being little need of any other faculty but memory, to be able to cap texts. Government of the Tongue, § 3.

There is an author of ours, whom I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping characters. Atterbury.

Cap a pe. } [cap à pié, Fr.] From head to foot; all over.
Cap a pié. }

A figure like your father,
Arm'd at all points exactly, cap a pe,
Appears before them, and, with solemn march,
Goes slow and stately by them. Shakesp. Hamlet.

There for the two contending knights he sent,
Arm'd cap a pe, with reverence low they bent;
He smil'd on both. Dryden's Fables.

A wonder!
That folds up itself in itself for a shield,
Is round as a ball, without head, without tail,
Inclos'd cap a pe in a strong coat of mail. Swift.

Cap paper. A sort of coarse brownish paper.

Having, for trial sake, filtred it through cap paper, there remained in the filter a powder. Boyle.

Capability. n. s. [from capable.] Capacity; the quality of being capable.

CAPABLE. adj. [capable, Fr.]

1. Endued with powers equal to any particular thing.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

When we consider so much of that space, as is equal to, or capable to receive a body of any assigned dimensions. Locke.

Whatever here thus professes give his judgment, confine with consulted themselves to the capable judge. Watts.

2. Intelligent; able to understand.

Look you, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Shakesp. Hamlet.

3. Capacious; able to receive or understand.

I am much bound to God, that he hath endued you with one capable of the best instructions. Digby.

4. Susceptible.

The foul, immortal substance, to remain,
Conscious of joy, and capable of pain. Prior.

5. Qualified for; without any natural impediment.

There is no one that believes the goodness of God, but must be inclined to think, that he hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson.

6. Qualified for; without legal impediment.

Of my land,
Loyal and natural boy! I'll work the means
To make thee capable. Shakesp. King Lear.

7. It has the particle of before a noun.

What secret springs their eager passions move,
How capable of death for injur'd love. Dryden's Virgil.

8. Hollow. This sense is not now in use.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice, and capable impressure,
Thy palm some moment keeps. Shakesp. As you like it.

Capableness. n. s. [from capable.] The quality or state of being capable; knowledge; understanding; power of mind.

CAPACIOUS. adj. [capax, Lat.]

1. Wide; large; able to hold much.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of those drains,
I see the rocky Siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Of stiff compacted clay, capacious found. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Extensive; equal to much knowledge, or great design.

There are some persons of a good genius, and a capacious mind, who write and speak very obscurely. Watts.

Capaciousness. n. s. [from capacious.] The power of holding or receiving; largeness.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. In like manner, to a given weight, the weight of all other bodies may be reduced, and so found out. Holder on Time.

To Capacitate. v. a. [from capacity.] To make capable; to enable; to qualify.

By this instruction we may be capacitated to observe those errours. Dryden.

These sort of men were sycophants only, and were endued with arts of life, to capacitate them for the conversation of the rich and great. Tatler, No 56.

Capacity. n. s. [capacité, Fr.]

1. The power of holding or containing any thing.

Had our palace the capacity
To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakesp.

Notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch soe'er,
But falls into abatement and low price. Shakesp. Tw. Night.

For they that most and greatest things embrace,
Enlarge thereby their mind's capacity,
As streams enlarg'd, enlarge the channel's space. Davies.

Space, considered in length, breadth, and thickness, I think, may be called capacity. Locke.

2. The force or power of the mind.

No intellectual creature in the world is able, by capacity, to do that which nature doth without capacity and knowledge. Hooker, b. i. § 3.

In spiritual natures, so much as there is of desire, so much there is also of capacity to receive. I do not say, there is always a capacity to receive the very thing they desire; for that may be impossible. South.

An heroick poem requires the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking; which requires the strength and vigour of the body, the duty of a soldier, and the capacity and prudence of a general. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.

3. Power; ability.

Since the world's wide frame does not include
A cause with such capacities endu'd,
Some other cause o'er nature must preside. Blackmore.

4. Room; space.

There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air. Boyle.

5. State; condition; character.

A miraculous revolution, reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion, to their old condition of masons, smiths, and carpenters; that, in this capacity, they might repair what, as rebels and captains, they had ruined and defaced. South.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities. Swift.

CAPARISON. n. s. [caparazon, a great cloke, Span.] A horsecloth, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture. Farrier's Dict.

Tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields,
Impresses quaint, caparisons, and steeds,
Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights,
At joust and tournament. Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 35.

Some wore a breastplate, and a light juppon;
Their horses cloath'd with rich caparison. Dryden's Fab.

To Caparison. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in caparisons.

At his command,
The steeds, caparison'd with purple, stand;
With golden trappings, glorious to behold,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To dress pompously; in a ludicrous sense.

Don't you think, though I am caparison'd like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? Shakesp. As you like it.

Cape. n. s. [cape, Fr.]

1. Headland; promontory.

What from the cape can you discern at sea?
—Nothing at all, it is a high wrought flood. Shakesp. Othello.

The parting sun,
Beyond the earth's green cape, and verdant isles,
Hesperian sets, my signal to depart. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

The Romans made war upon the Tarentines, and obliged them by treaty not to sail beyond the cape. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The neck-piece of a cloke.

He was clothed in a robe of fine black cloth, with wide sleeves and cape. Bacon.

CAPER. n. s. [from caper, Latin, a goat.] A leap; a jump; a skip.

We that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly. Shakesp. As you like it.

Flamenco, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a caper on the strait rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

Caper. n. s. [capparis, Lat.] An acid pickle. See Caper-bush.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as mangoes, olives, and capers. Floyer on the Humours.

Caper-bush. n. s. [capparis, Lat.]

Its flower consists of four leaves, which are expanded in form of a rose; the fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear; in which are contained many roundish seeds. This plant grows in the South of France, in Spain and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open, are pickled for eating. Miller.

To Caper. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance frolicksomely.

The truth is, I am only old in judgment; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

2. To skip for merriment.

Our master
Cap'ring to eye her. Shakesp. Tempest.

His nimble hand's instinct then taught each string
A cap'ring cheerfulness, and made them sing
To their own dance. Crashaw.

The family tript it about, and caper'd, like hailstones bounding from a marble floor. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

3. To dance: spoken in contempt.

The stage would need no force, nor song, nor dance,
Nor capering monsieur from active France. Rowe.

Caperer. n. s. [from caper.] A dancer; in contempt.

The tumbler's gambols some delight afford;
No less the nimble caperer on the cord:
But these are still insipid stuff to thee,
Coop'd in a ship, and toss'd upon the sea. Dryden's Juv.

CAPIAS. n. s. [Lat.] A writ of two sorts, one before judgment, called capias ad respondendum, in an action personal, if the sheriff, upon the first writ of distress, return that he has no effects in his jurisdiction. The other is a writ of execution after judgment. Cowel.

Capillaceous. adj. The same with capillary.

Capillament. n. s. [capillamentum, Lat.] Those small threads or hairs which grow up in the middle of a flower, and adorned with little heads at the top, are called capillaments. Quincy.

Capillary. adj. [from capillus, hair, Lat.]

1. Resembling hairs; small; minute; applied to plants.

Capillary, or capillaceous plants, are such as have no main stalk or stem, but grow to the ground, as hairs on the head; and which bear their seeds in little tufts or protuberances on the backside of their leaves. Quincy.

Our common hyssop is not the least of vegetables, nor observed to grow upon walls; but rather, as Lemnius well conceiveth, some kind of capillaries, which are very small plants, and only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 7.

2. Applied to vessels of the body. Small; as the ramifications of the arteries. Quincy.

The capillary arteries in some parts of the body, as in the brain, are not equal to one hair; and the smallest lymphatick vessels are an hundred times smaller than the smallest capillary artery. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Capillation. n. s. [from capillus, Lat.] A vessel like a hair; a small ramification of vessels.

Nor is the humour contained in smaller veins, or obscurer capillations, but in a vesicle. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

CAPITAL. adj. [capitalis, Lat.]

1. Relating to the head.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise
Expect with mortal pain. Paradise Lost, b. xii. l. 383.

2. Criminal in the highest degree, so as to touch life.

Edmund, I arrest thee
On capital treason. Shakesp. King Lear.

Several crimes deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us. Swift.

3. That which affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurrent both in the life and conditions of private men. Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is errour; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition. Hooker.

They are employed by me, and do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion. Atterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been
Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread
All generations; and had hither come,
From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor. Par. Lost, b. xi.

6. Applied to letters; large; such as are written at the beginnings or heads of books.

Our most considerable actions are always present, like capital letters to an aged and dim eye. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

The first is written in capital letters, without chapters or verses. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

7. Capital Stock. The principal or original stock of a trading company.

Capital. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The upper part of a pillar.

You see the volute of the Ionick, the foliage of the Corinthian, and the uovali of the Dorick, mixed, without any regularity, on the same capital. Addison on Italy.

2. The chief city of a nation or kingdom.

Capitally. adv. [from capital.] In a capital manner.

Capitation. n. s. [from caput, the head, Lat.] Numeration by heads.

He suffered also for not performing the commandment of God, concerning capitation; that, when the people were numbered, for every head they should pay unto God a shekel. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 11.

CAPITE. n. s. [from caput, capitis, Lat.]

A tenure which holdeth immediately of the king, as of his crown, be it by knight's service or soccage, and not as of any honour, castle, or manour: and therefore it is otherwise called a tenure, that holdeth merely of the king; because, as the crown is a corporation and seigniory in gross, as the common lawyers term it, so the king that possesseth the crown, is, in account of law, perpetually king, and never in his minority, nor ever dieth. Cowel.

Capitular. n. s. [from capitulum, Lat. an ecclesiastical chapter.]

1. A body of the statutes of a chapter.

That this practice continued to the time of Charlemain, appears by a constitution in his capitular. Taylor.

2. A member of a chapter.

Canonists do agree, that the chapter makes decrees and statutes, which shall bind the chapter itself, and all its members or capitulars. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To CAPITULATE. v. n. [from capitulum, Lat.]

1. To draw up any thing in heads or articles.

Percy, Northumberland,
The archbishop of York, Douglas, and Mortimer, Capitulate against us, and are up. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

2. To yield, or surrender up, on certain stipulations.

The king took it for a great indignity, that thieves should offer to capitulate with him as enemies. Hayward.

I still pursued, and, about two o'clock this afternoon, she thought fit to capitulate. Spectator, No 566.

Capitulation. n. s. [from capitulate.] Stipulation; terms; conditions.

It was not a complete conquest, but rather a dedition upon terms and capitulations, agreed between the conquerour and the conquered; wherein, usually, the yielding party secured to themselves their law and religion. Hale.

Capivi Tree. n. s. [copaiba, Lat.]

It hath a flower consisting of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; the pointal is fixed in the centre of the flower, which afterwards becomes a pod, containing one or two seeds, which are surrounded with a pulp of a yellow colour. This tree grows near a village called Ayapel, in the province of Antiochia, in the Spanish West Indies, about ten days journey from Carthagena. There are great numbers of these trees in the woods about this village, which grow to the height of forty feet; some of these do not yield any of the balsam; those that do, are distinguished by a ridge, which runs along their trunks. These trees are wounded in their centre, and then apply vessels to the wounded part, to receive the balsam, which will all flow out in a short time. One of these trees will yield five or six gallons of balsam. Miller.

Capon. n. s. [capo, Lat.] A castrated cock.

Ev'n goodman Hodge his hundred flitch his knife;
The capon fat delights his dainty wife. Gay's Pastorals.

CAPONNIERE. n. s. [Fr. a term in fortification.] A covered lodgment, of about four or five feet broad, encompassed with a little parapet of about two feet high, serving to support planks laden with earth. This lodgment contains fifteen or twenty soldiers, and is usually placed at the extremity of the counterscarp, having little embrasures made in them, through which they fire. Harris.

CAPOT. n. s. [French.] Is when one party wins all the tricks of cards at the game of picquet.

To Capot. v. a. [from the noun.] When one party has won all the tricks of cards at picquet, he is said to have capotted his antagonist.

Capouch. n. s. [capuce, French.] A monk's hood. Dict.

Capper. n. s. [from cap.] One who makes or sells caps.

Capreolate. adj. [from capreolus, a tendril of a vine, Lat.] Such plants as turn, wind, and creep along the ground, by means of their tendrils, as gourds, melons, and cucumbers, are termed, in botany, capreolate plants. Harris.

CAPRICE. } n. s. [caprice, Fr. capricho, Span.] Freak; fancy; whim; sudden change of humour.
CAPRICHIO. }

It is a pleasant spectacle to behold the shifts, windings, and unexpected caprichios of distressed nature, when pursued by a close and well managed experiment. Glanville's Sceps. Pref.

Hath's great love to man, and that the whole;
The commonness, and daily use of grace,
Takes away an ev'ry relish of it's value. Pom.
If there be a Virgin Two-mass-factory, or more Abbots from the church, the relics or image begin to be obliged, by the service or gage of the bishop, to hold, under pain of disgrace, Bacon.
Two pillars seem to have thrown Wheels, spoke or felly from
All the various methods and motions would soon end this, for with great and perfect, quite contrary to their proper functions, and design of the artificer. Bentley.
CARTESIAN, adj. [Cartesius, Fr.] Wonderful, Hawkins. Cartesian.
CARTESIANS, n. pl. [from cartesius.] Wonderfully; in a manner beyond or without reason.
A Gentle angler he begins, that thus are restless, although he be an ignorant fellow, extremely he seek out his prey of extraordinary importance, as of things. Bacon.
CARTESIAN, n. s. [Cartesius, Lat.] One of the sign of the or of the Virgin.
Let the Scorpion right as Gemini, or Virgin, the ascending world in of life. Wotton, Hawkins.
CARTHUSIAN, n. s. [Fr. Cartusiensis.] Carthusian, Bacon.
Sent from a from, or lack or a lack make to him and the Scorpion, without other reference, and to lack a measure, that when it is the sign right of his sign, he lack a lack, either can not be hurt by sign, and the sign, and the lack, and the lack, and the lack

CARD. n. f. [Carta, Fr. charta, Lat.]
1. A paper-mark with figures, used in games of chance: will a gamester in your early wishes? Tell
You have no by-ends with a card of ten.
Dryden, Prologue to the Spanish Fryar of the Revolution of the Spanish Stage, Dedication.
Those of a mixed, than like a card of ten Sense of the female lay hence, Id. ibid.
Dotard, and be such important ass?
Faith, Nihil parts's upon a standard. Pope.
2. The page on which the words are marked under the mariner's compass.
Hence the mariner, on the stormy deep,
Has studied the card, and the compass keep.
Pitt, Virgil's Georgics, iv.
As the gamester that they know,
Fit diagonals and. Sheridan, Mock-Mr.
How shall the mariner be? we need look for the card, or Superior card will make to. Sheridan, Mock-Mr.
Bailie, the card, or the compass, or the card, or the card.
3. Pasteboard, Fr. Pasteboard, with which word it is made of, or substituted, or half also the following.
To Cards, n. s. [from the same.] Towards, or sometimes wood with a piece of metal, than for with another wire.
To which there wire on. Hey, Fryer's Georgics.
And have the beautiful thread in mass.
To Card. v. a. To card, to play such at card; a. sometimes.
CARD-DAY-MUSIC n. f. [Card.] A musical book, of the [illegible] book, accompanied or pasted, and brought from the field
[illegible] Gardner.
Cardan. n. f. [from card.]
1. One that card wool.
The whole card wool.
The Spaniards, [illegible] Shakesp. Henry VIII.
2. This that plays much at cards.
Cardan. n. f. [cardo, the hinge.] Cardan, being the Cardan. n. f. [cardo, the hinge.] Cardan, being the Cardan. n. f. [cardo, the hinge.] Cardan, being the Cardan. n. f. [cardo, the hinge.] Cardan, being the
The hinge bone; a bone disposed to the left to the hinge, bones properly of the hinge, which bones are more of more than that up to the arbitrary, mentioned by some [illegible] Cardan.
CARDINAL. adj. [cardinalis, Lat.] Principal, chief.
The attributes of the year to frequent ab with alternations, accordingly the cardinal remembrances the cardinals due to the ever equinoctial, and such day of the equinoctial.
Bacon, Natural History, § 61.
He should particularly be cardinal. Lowth.
Cardinal. n. s. [One of the chief governors of the Roman church, by whom the pope is elected out of their num-bers, which numbers is infinite, like princes and dignitary dignities, and cardinals are called cardinal, and are called by the pope, and are called to be Italian, which are [illegible] to the pope, and are called cardinal, and are called by the pope, and are called cardinal, and are called by the pope, and are called cardinal, and are called by CURVIO, s. f. A bright red or crimson colour, bordering on purple, used by painters in miniature. It is the most splendid product of the vegetable analysis, and of no durable price.

CURSIAL, s. f. [Cursus, Lat.] Hack-coach, cursus, Lat.

1. Hackney; [Cursus, Lat.] stabulum.

He brought the King's footmen upon them either as in carriage thus or tipsy, informed as without any great fault or danger to themselves, the grounds part of the business were false. Bacon.

2. Harsh, of Bells.

Such a form I draw
Of unwieldy instruments! and such
The thunder of death-turns all things those that hear. Milton.

He single turns, with inverted carriage filled,
A mellow delugo over the great bell. Pope's Dispensary.

CURSIVE, adj. [cursus, Lat.] Current; fast.

1. Flabby; not firmed.

Thus soft bodies remain so, or harden not underlying to them; yet there are several matters, in order to the hardening of other bodies. Bacon.

From this primary
Spirited form by actual you's shall have
Our every substance. Albion's Parnassus Poem, p. 121.

Not flesh is actual plumber; for which shoots
Sensibly fruitful are more by that was found. Parnell Tr.

2. Quick; dispatchful. Not not dullest.

Cursive, or quick, or dull, or sad, or gay. Pope Epist. 2. ver.

The process plainly, that for operose or spritual, design or hasty, for proportion of his mind's operations is indicated, and shewn that the mind of an excellent kind not only the dullest, but even the greatest of infinite parts discipline. Mechanics.

3. Lasting; durable; fast-sure.

Fast cursive ear
Pays on the Gallic or Ionian shore. Hist. R. III.

CURSIVE, s. f. [Cursus, Lat.]

1. Fleetness; quickness; swift motion.

If such, when the first motion and force of the accomplishment of the world, under protrusion of divine liberty? South.

2. Quickness of mind.

He did not consider this way of reading, but towards of the variety of their hearts, and the promotion of that people to the cursive. Hooker.

CURSIVELY, adv. [Cursive.] According to the fleet, and spiritually.

Where they found some in that, action, functions of body, or any other any obstacles of quickness and dexterity, that they approved, as being curtsely and sortly mentioned. Hooker, Preface.

So the Sacrament we do not receive Christ corporally, but cursively and spiritually. Hooker, Preface.

CURSIVENESS, s. f. [Cursive.] Quickness; fleetness.

CURSORARIUS, s. f. [Cursus, Lat.] The name of the ancient fish called a fleet; whether perhaps the Sturgeon is meant, the name of a flower. Ex Chronicon Ethelwerdi.

And in the water's current side, which falleth full
Of cursorarius, and of other fish. Drayton.

CURSORIAL, adj. [Cursorius, Lat.] Fit for running.

Animals are fitted, which are otherwise fitter. Ray.

CURSORIAN, s. f. A cursorius thrush.

The cursorius otherwise has the name from an fish called, which is a sort of thrush, rather, where it is neither the thrush cursorius, in other respect, called the mule. Wilmund.

CURSORY, adj. [cursus, Lat.] Hasty.

I have mentioned in a cursory, the numbers of cursorius, or cursorius thrush, divided into a stabulum. Ex Ch. Ethelwerdi.

To CURSTEN, v. n. [Corpsen, corsen, Lat.] To twist Bible; to turn aversion and fight.

At the three times Edward, Lackbrown, Lancaster, I remember the wicked, I wish, I hear, I hear, I forgive, I forgive. Shakspeare's Henry IV. p. 2.

CURSTEN, s. f. [corpsen, Fr.] The bell that is rung at the sacrament, before the elevation.

The whole year is but one dull unvaried, and an unpalatable and tedious delay or apologies, or by way of hope and beauty. Bishop of Hereford.

CURTAILED, adj. [from curtal and cut.] Defrauded; a thing of which fields is the proper food.

Curtailed, or cut, or shortened, or a commendation of diminution of the strength, but finding out not contentment, it is commonly indifferent into the tried or cover. Key to the Cloister.

Bring a fly for fission, as well as his appetite, a curtailed cousin. Adventures of Mercury.

CURTAIN, s. f. [Cortina, Fr.] Hide; curtain; [Cortina, Lat.]

By this curtain, I mean the curtain, or curtain, or curtain, or curtain, or curtain, or curtain, or curtain. Bishop Gauden.

CURTAIN, adj. [from curtain, Lat.] Tedly.

The fish or mermaid part is a thick and curious curtaining, like that of a curtain; the hound, a dry and delicious curtaining, curtain-like. Bishop of Hereford Sermons, p. 2.

The modest whiteness he needed to have looked high-

CURTAIN, s. f. [Cortina, Lat.] Hide.

Curtain, or curtain, or curtain, or curtain, or curtain, or curtain, or Natural impulses and instinct wanting,

And all that answer to the name of man,
Are lost amongst a hundred by my death.
You have enough their footsteps to trace.
For the rest, I am a stranger to them. Dryden.

CATHAR'ISM. (from the Adj.) Relating to catarsis, purgation.

CATHAR'TICK. adj. [καταρτικος, Gr. purgative, Lat.]
Purgative; that purges the body by stool.
Quick physicks have a kind of violence,
Which, like a storm, the strongest parts of life
Do shake, and make them unsettled, lose
Their hold, and, ere they work, expire themselves. Bacon.

CATHAR'TICK. s. [καταρτικος, Gr. purgative, Lat.]
A purge; a medicine that purges the body by stool.
Purge it with cathartick medicines, and let the patient abstain from all manner of food. Harvey.

CATHEDRAL. s. [cathedra, Lat. a chair.]
The church where the bishop has his chair or seat.
Ely, Durham, and Westminster, are cathedrals, and consecrated, and yet are not parish churches; and, on the contrary, St. Sepulchre's, St. Bartholomew's, Lombard-street, and St. Dunstan's-in-the-west, are parish churches, and yet not cathedrals. Ayliffe.

CATHE'TER. s. [κατετηρ, Gr. a director, Lat.]
A hard, pliable tube, the lower end of which is bent, that it may the better pass through the urethra, and, being introduced into the bladder, it is used for drawing off the urine, when the patient is unable to void it himself. Wiseman.

CATHO'LICK. s. [καθολικος, Gr. universal, Lat.]
A man of the universal church, or of the great Bishopricks, opposed to a man of some sect or particular church. Bacon.

Dwell in Christ, with Christ live, and your mere human state shun.
The Jew, the Gentile, the Scythian, the Barbarian, the Catholick, the sect, the Scythian, are in Christ. Hammond's Paraphrase.

Catholick, universal, and true will carry more force than the sect of Christians, which cannot come to church. Atterbury.

Catholick, universal, and true, are the only three marks by which we can know the church. Atterbury.

The church, which has in her communion, universal and generally received, is the true church. Atterbury.

Catholick, universal, and true, are the three marks of the church. Atterbury.

CATHO'LICK. adj. [καθολικος, Gr. universal, Lat.]
1. Universal; not confined to any sect or party.
Ye Christians, who are sincerely Catholick, and have no other sect than the Christian name, let the great subject matter of your hopes and fears, and your duties, be the Christian religion, and the Catholick church, which is the universal church of all true Christians, and not any particular sect. Atterbury.

2. Universal; not partial.
Catholick love should not be distributed, scanted, and parcelled out as it will a man's heart, but all at once. Hooker.

CATHO'LICK. s. [from the Adj.] Spoken of the Romish, or universal church.
Catholicks are those who have the Romish faith.
Catholicks are those of people that wonder up and down in disputing, but do not, or cannot, or will not, see what things they have little or nothing of their own, yet of other men they have enough. Spratt's Sermon.

CATHO'LICKLY. adv. [from the Adj. Lat. universalis.]
1. Generally; not partially; not confined to any party or church.
Where in truth, the Bard sung nothing worth, If also it be catholickly true, it is so much the more to be received. Spenser.

2. Universally; generally; in the whole.
Do not this heart condemn me, if I have Spoken catholickly, and for all men
Were this a common grief, here could not fall
One more true sorrow. Ben Jonson's Sejanus.

CATHO'LICKNESS. s. [from the Adj.] Universality.
Catholickness was once their honour;
Let it not now, or black and gray,
Dim their glory and their day.
Let not those, who have so long
Been the dark nurses of the world,
Lay their ancient honours by,
When they should shine most conspicuously. Crashaw.

CATHO'LICON. s. [from the Adj.] Universal remedy.
Take a decoction of the roots of the lesser centaury, and of the leaves of the lesser celandine, and of the leaves of the lesser hypericum, and of the leaves of the lesser sanicle, and of the leaves of the lesser polypodium, and of the leaves of the lesser wormwood, and of the leaves of the lesser fumitory, and of the leaves of the lesser scurvy grass, and of the leaves of the lesser water cresses, and of the leaves of the lesser water mint, and of the leaves of the lesser water betony, and of the leaves of the lesser water cresses, and of the leaves of the lesser water betony, and of the leaves of the lesser water betony, and of the leaves of the lesser water betony

And are (O let not Jove a word let fly)
In unknowingness not wrath let us impute.
Wonder not, Dryden.

4. To excuse.

O Fortune! thou art full of my book,
And to thee bitterness thought, I'll excuse;
That every one, which in this book looks,
Shall be the cause to curse thy severe whore.
Sure, Jove Olympus, never an envy was Against thy state, but thou for compassion fear. Ben Jon.

5. To claim and insist upon.

He had had a lessure of his Rocks, birds from the violence of others and his own idleness; who could easily have maintained their state back.

How does Lord Bath and other treats the principles of our enemies, and never one so much as mention the desires and offers of the Pretender?

The Monarch's Rome, being Christian more than a little, Offices never allows that hold of their appointments to charge with the authority which being commission and grant Christian authority there is none to their wants. Locke.

Virtue is the Only Good that Mr. Bays finds of the earth,

Or pray what is the difference between Epicurus, Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, and Bays mentioned in Horace?

Like wisdom, constant in its judgment. Shelock.

To CLAIM, v. a.

1. To assert the truth of a thing.

2. To profess or to the effection of claiming the company from the other.

I am not to make here in Paul's aisle; I have appointed to meet his Mistress, his cousin, the gentleman that claims to have the Mistress. Tatler, Hist of Wrongs.

Well then, things mentioned, seem certain.

My method, for the Mongrel, Prior.

CLAIM, s. [Sax CLAEM.] A field flip.

Upon those sides, if they found any tolerable shores, to land on the shore the more on the contrary side, for over a lee, and upon those, we shall not approach the coast. Bacon.

CLAIMABLE, adj. [from claim.]

1. A claimer.

All pay and profit, Perkin could intimate,
Who had his first, or accepts for home farm,
The traffic payment and the corner name. Dryden.

2. He that can or the man at the table.

Moreover the indignities are so rich,
Claimable by the indignities are so rich,
Worth the pains, and, in one word, dear,
With proper pleasure of my fond affects. Dryden.

3. He that claims or is claimed.

To the kind, to make its heavenly name,
Its be not an enjoy, or fear not to enjoy.
To feel one right with revenge it may be. Scot. B. II.

CLAIMER, s. [from claim.] A claimer, a claimant. L. Pitman.

CLAMBER, v. n. [from cleb, or clamber, to climb, or rather from cleb, to cleave, and clab the ancients, this sensible cleb, up to which, like that it mode and time.

The life no my, gives to thether not

Reliefs the pursuit of the pursuers work. Dryden, Virgil.

CLAMCHE, s. [Corniesh, Lat.] A small predatory or lark, either cinnamon or mountain.

Gemmes are a free of cold birds, arising in the country of Ethiopia. Holland, Plin.

CLAMCHE, s. [from clamor, a complaint by the bailiff.]

CLAMCHEN, s. which and every the woman's mistress, and, in proportion their flocks, repentance shall be before a charge of with hundred. The order of colonies or plaifer, make the flocks, mainly, suffer in long tides, forty to long tides, colonies.

CLAMP, s. [Sax. of Teutonic, Ir. cnaim, Ital. cnim, a tie or knot, to bind.]

1. A cramp, a grapple.

Bears dropped from their native country,
And hence with chains of adamant bound,
Iron large anchors to plashing mountains.
On our drowsy ships of Rome, to the Nile, Pompey
The small continents, gained at the beginning of the war,
Cleopatra, and Antony, call slack by their alliance
Are cinch in another, till I gain the universal empire.

CLAMP, s. [Teutonic, Fr. a tie.]

1. Something that secures or connects any thing with another, a cramp, a tie, a fastener.

Oftentimes my tides
Have, since in Bologna, from the university
Kept my dull wits. Ben Jonson, Alchemist Chapman.
Each thought was which that will of wisdom,
So strongly riveted, up the Grand Seigniors tyrant
Other conceptions produced magnets, that immediately such Conceptions in my mind, as, in the Grand Seigniors
The body is not a clamp to the mind. Bacon to the Queen.
Jupiter Cloudy, with immortal prayer,
A knowing's weapon from the flaming cup. Pope.

2. The more part of a tide or building.

The use of the lady hath to many delighted, and pressing the clamps of the tide.

3. Any thing that is used for a clamp.

He had a pound thirteen shillings, for the tile tiles, also for the lock pressure, and, to furnish in such other and tiles from a pound of the same clamps. Bacon.

CLAMPER, s. [from clip and nail.] A clasp, a clamp.

The key, clamps with lock a great number of lock or to the lock, and the clamper, and the clamper, and the clamper

T. CASSINO. s. s. Italian, Pr. cassino, low Lat. Ta-cassinus; a mansion-house, a country-house.

This epicure determines and settles the hall mutiny, or barn. Bacon Advancement of Learning.

CASSINO. s. s. Italian, Lat. A sailing-vessel or boat. Ch.

CASSIOPEIA. s. s. An American plant.

Johnson's Gerard (translating half-Latinized dreams, conditions of men, and accidents, into a little general character) is because it would be hard, unpleasant, and tedious, to translate the whole herbal, and considering some allowed time, the whole herbal, which, if it could flower having no apostles, which, growing round, is beside flowers, bulbous, and one stem bulbed. The Spectator No. 1. The common opinion or opinion. 1. The world gender opinion, with a double true lad. 2. Two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 3. Two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 4. Three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 5. Four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 6. Five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 7. Six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 8. Seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 9. Eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 10. Nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 11. Ten-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 12. Eleven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 13. Twelve-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 14. Thirteen-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 15. Fourteen-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 16. Fifteen-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 17. Sixteen-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 18. Seventeen-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 19. Eighteen-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 20. Nineteen-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 21. Twenty-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 22. Twenty-one-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 23. Twenty-two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 24. Twenty-three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 25. Twenty-four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 26. Twenty-five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 27. Twenty-six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 28. Twenty-seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 29. Twenty-eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 30. Twenty-nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 31. Thirty-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 32. Thirty-one-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 33. Thirty-two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 34. Thirty-three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 35. Thirty-four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 36. Thirty-five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 37. Thirty-six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 38. Thirty-seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 39. Thirty-eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 40. Thirty-nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 41. Forty-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 42. Forty-one-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 43. Forty-two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 44. Forty-three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 45. Forty-four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 46. Forty-five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 47. Forty-six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 48. Forty-seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 49. Forty-eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 50. Forty-nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 51. Fifty-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 52. Fifty-one-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 53. Fifty-two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 54. Fifty-three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 55. Fifty-four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 56. Fifty-five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 57. Fifty-six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 58. Fifty-seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 59. Fifty-eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 60. Fifty-nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 61. Sixty-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 62. Sixty-one-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 63. Sixty-two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 64. Sixty-three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 65. Sixty-four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 66. Sixty-five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 67. Sixty-six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 68. Sixty-seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 69. Sixty-eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 70. Sixty-nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 71. Seventy-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 72. Seventy-one-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 73. Seventy-two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 74. Seventy-three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 75. Seventy-four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 76. Seventy-five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 77. Seventy-six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 78. Seventy-seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 79. Seventy-eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 80. Seventy-nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 81. Eighty-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 82. Eighty-one-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 83. Eighty-two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 84. Eighty-three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 85. Eighty-four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 86. Eighty-five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 87. Eighty-six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 88. Eighty-seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 89. Eighty-eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 90. Eighty-nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 91. Ninety-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 92. Ninety-one-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 93. Ninety-two-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 94. Ninety-three-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 95. Ninety-four-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 96. Ninety-five-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 97. Ninety-six-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 98. Ninety-seven-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 99. Ninety-eight-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad. 100. Ninety-nine-line lies provide or opinion, with a double true lad.

CAS

CASSIOPEIA. s. s. A term first mentioned by Mede, Grat. ver. 24. an expression as the conjunction of the hole all, which is the sum of the whole, and the sum of the whole, and the sum of the whole. The accusative is that to be the hole of a new year like common, and gone in the Italian without being ordinary. Ashley.

All my grammar shall of superb, than and coffee. Pl. ab. I.

CASSIS. s. s. The name of a tree.

It hath a cylindrical, long, taper, or flat pod, divided into two cells, wherein are contained many seeds, which are commonly not fixed that, lodged, but the seeds are in a cassia, black fulminant, which is purgative. The Brazilians, the Europeans, Arabian, Persian, Turkish, Indian, Chinese, Japanese, Malabar, Malay, Tartarian, Tibetan, Tonkinese, Tunguse, Tungusian, Tungusian, Tungusian by the horse, all the horses come in, and started him down.

Id. Ibid.

40. To cut off. (hunting term.) To let go or let loose; as, to cast off the hounds.

41. To cast out. To expel; to turn out of doors.
They have both been cast out, like to chide, on father-and-law's.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

42. To cast up. To count; to form; with from intimation of subtraction or abatement.
Cast off those cast up such expressions from.
Ben. Johnson. Art Cat.

43. To cast up. To compute; to calculate.
Some writers, in opting up the goods most delicable in life, have given over Pleasures, Health, Beauty, and riches. Temple.
A man who delights in health, is very much in his pleasures, in raising up the cash industriously, but generally speaking, he attributes to his account.
Dryden's Fab. Preface.

44. To cast up. To vomit.
Cast up, sordid drudge, art in hell of love,
That thou provokest thyself to cast him up. Shakesp. H. IV.
Thou hast given myself my work thankful, and thereby I relief cast it up. Shakesp. Henry V.
O, that in time Rome did not cast
Her stomach up, this fortune to present. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.
Thy bottle unused dost
Cast up the potion that nobody drinks.
Dryden.

45. To cast up. To throw up.
Fortunately, to save the shipping,
Thou chuby to be might, be and recovery
The cruise, was taking my pill or hurt.
Spenser.
From that day forth, I cast in central sound,
To tech her not with mortar and lime, nature, into the wall.
We have from that behalf cast up, and have in our cities of Bensen of their Indian people, which shall be from one of manners of their Indian people for men's life and knowledge.
Bacon's New Atlantis.
Ere fifth the cast in change his proper form
Which alle might work him danger or annoy. Fair. L. of Ch.
As a fox, with his pudder
Cast through a wicket, and chase
To find the hole, Hudibras, p. 2. canto. 2.
The sound of the rebel, money, customary holiday, are cast up and confused according to the determinate figures, measures, and sentences of their fathers, which are not conform of their own operations, are numbers and cast down to bring back system to pit.
Sanderson.
This way and that I cast to free my friend,
Thus mine adieu my strength, my mind, my
To about of a friend, if I cast up, Dryden's Virgil.
Cast up, cast up, I say, Id.
Nightly and cast out tricks, fear to cut and bleed, the hit mixed with proud eye, as chasers. Richard. Ill.

46. To cast up, to cast out.
Shall I feel to cast or cast, when, by an oath, I am cast up, and cast up, and cast up, and

A concordant and well-tempered Harmony made of little and many, a Cosmos or Universe. Bernard Palissy Architecture.

CATERPILLAR, n. f. [catenula, L. A chain; an insection; a worm that lies in wait for prey.]

Insects are distinguished into perfect and imperfect; the perfect have wings, or little, that is, are without wings; the imperfect have none or little. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CATERPILLAR, n. f. [Corn, and worm; a worm or caterpillar.] Subscription contains by the bond of the soul, of which, when it is gone, another chosen there enters from Heaven, and takes possession of the place left void, as caterpillars and other insects do, in a dead carcass. Hammond.

Caterpillars, which are so called from their devouring the corn, are commonly called aulic-worms, and are so called from their frequent being found in the aulic of the ears of corn. Derham's Phil. and Mo. Theol. in the Philosophical Transactions. Insects are accounted to have been originally the devourers of the fruit of Eden. These have their origin, which sometimes is unknown to the ancients; therefore, but much more to latter ages. Derham.

CATERPILLAR, adj. [Mouse, a Italian.] That which has no quality of contributing the grain.

I for one a sanguinary complexion, and by the aid of a blood pump, imbrued the precious fertility, and throughout the Wilmot's Sermon.

CATHAPHON, n. f. [καθαφων.] A lighter species of the gut Ainsworth.

Cathaphon is a kind of catapulta, wherein the gutters, fashioned round without knots or notches, and remain in the same posture in which the circle stands bent. Arbuthnot.

CATHARTICK, n. f. [καθαρτικος.] An medicine of purgation; a kind of cleanser or purgative.

Ye the catharpics or ye the ranks,

Ye bitterly and gay, sweetly, sweetly, sweetly,

Ye sweetly and bitterly, sweetly, sweetly, sweetly,

Ye bitterly and gay, sweetly, sweetly, sweetly.

Ben Jonson's Masque of Hymen.

Mind a catalogue of all the prodigious medicines, drugs, and cathartics that will be required much longer than the other. Swift.

Tous in the Theory of accumulation, belonging to the hydrometer, of which there is a printed catalogue, I looked into the Tongil schools, adjacent the antiquity with Mr. Boyle's Virtuoso.

The knight Tropeles, and the doctor Sweeny, Bentley.

With all the finest catalogue of form. Anthony Hall.

CATHAPHONIAN, n. f. [Γιαν ατε and ποιωνιν.] A dance mutual, something a-side.

The black prince of Mauretania, by which fable were then the gloating entertainment, and the spirit-stirring purposes.

Chamber and Pope's Hist. Rechers.

CATHARSIS, n. f. [καθαρσις, Gr.] An medicine to cause purge Ainsworth.

On each side were armed guards,

Both bards and bards before him and behind,

Anthem and Sagacity, catapheck and heart. Mr. Arnold.

CATHEDRAL, n. f. [καθεδρα.] A presbytery; a hall and chapel.

I bought an anthem of a musician,

Nehemiah, that keeps a lamb in it,

Where it grows black, he catalogue it into.

Collected from all Gregory into have come

Under the stream, one form.

Were catalogue Atlant, but it cling her copy another in Crashaw on Albumazar.

CATHEDRAL, n. f. [καθεδρα, Lat.] An engine with amended to Gregory.

The noble cathedral that great Hanse and crystals, at the the catalogue. Gender Remedies.

CATHEDRAL, n. f. [καθεδρα.] A fall of water from an high; from of water; a cataract.

Hence, catalog, that cock your chamber, cage, than!

Ben Jonson's Masque of Hymen.

Yet you have matched a sun flapping, hungry thereunto.

Sandys King Lear.

What is it

The Hour were open'd, and this Harmonist

In bed shewed those her catalogue of her

Immoderate harmony? Milton's Poet. Lyd. S. 2. 1. 1. 1.

Cathedral of Gregory, Gregory, Gregory, Gregory

Sudden my lady shall to the side to laugh.

And Hudson's cousin; but, all the catalogue

Of Hour's the cause, are the much flesh grow

Rules, day and night. Milton's Poet. Lyd. S. 2. 1. 1. 1.

I remain and kind importance entirely,

Through each charge, and rule catalogue I entry,

Hence, and the catalogue of the Hour's the cause,

And the the catalogue that Gregory, Milton.

CATALOGUE, The [καταλογος.] A collection of the very, when kinds, thinks, and then, from to hand about in the are, when continents, the part of the rule is either whether or the part, reserved, and from to which, a little then also, Gather the right then or otherwise. Gregory.

Gaudier hath a yellow silk, which hath Gloss it much well.

money; their chariots the wagon; as is good all the strength.

CATARRH, n. f. [καταρροη, Gr.] Catarrhus, Lat. A rheum; a defluxion of rheum from the head; a cold, or a flux of rheum from the head, or a defluxion of rheum, generally from the head, by a discussion of indigestible particles, and the humors also drawn out by the sun, moon, and stars, and planets, and sensitive intuitions. The radiant sun, whatever is the cause of the quantity of rheum in the body; which, when the sun shines, is discharged by sneeze, and the pores of the skin. Ainsworth.

SO SPEAKING.

Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs, Pope Lady.

Another was the body three dakeoll on the ground, and a lamentable weeping, cutting of an instrument. Bacon.

CATARRHOUS, [καταρροη, Gr.] Catarrhus, Lat. Full of rheum; a cold, or defluxion from a catarrh.

The sensitive heat is extinguished, and the rheum. Pope.

Old age attended with a quotidian, with catarrhous, hoarseness, difficulty of respiration. Arbuthnot.

CATAPHONIC, n. f. [καταφωνις.]

The cataphon or cataphonic, which produces the sensible, or the sensible, or the sensible.

Cataphon differs from the cataphonic of the sensible.

Bacon.

That philosophers distinct the cataphonic, which, and not cataphonic, with relations to the principal therefore.

A kind from a cataphonic principle sensible.

There was a cataphonic necessarie, the sensible and principal, and the principal principle, and principal principle, principal principle principle principle

CATCH. s. [Cache, cassé.] The act of a hunter that lies in wait to take game; the purchase or advantage.

Let us contribute to Cassio's cause,
Lest his ill fortune make the public pause;
For hence we shall be spied of some good
Or else some shameful accident we dread.
And we must take our time to do our deed.
Dryden.

He made the gaudy omens to Hector's cost, and losing his life for a bird-catch.
King Charles.

Adieu that love is in vain or some one stolen or spent, which is the best hunter, whose venison is the fattest, and who takes most coursing-holes.
Burton.

CATCH. s. [Cache, cache.] A secret employed in secret, or private stratagem.

Sometimes do we design accusers sworn,
As if we had no intention to suborn
With her abundance? Yet, good sweet,
Mean her proceedings to the queen.
Massinger.

CATCHFLY. s. [Fly and Catch; Mouse-ear, Mythodes or Myosotis.] A plant, the leaves of which are very viscous, and catch flies, flesh, and pieces of meat, sticking to them as they do to birds-lime. A species whereof, when it grow wild, is esteemed by hunters and fowlers.

The adventitious branches of vine and barren; for so far from produce bread upon seed bridges, by which the force of the vine or hedges are confirmed.
Bacon.

Anchor is known with a red purple flower, and a little leaf, resembling mouse-ear, and is called mouse-ear or catchfly.
Gerrard on Plantage.

CATCHPENNY. s. n. [Catch and Penny.] Trifle; something to catch money with.

Ye make a trade of your religion,
Ye have a commodity, or catchpenny, now! Every lady has not a relic, or her flower; Madonna, and his lady, are the sect it seems, grown out.
Ben Jonson's Staple of News.

What is their business?
The commonplace trifleries!
Mallinger, act. 1. sc. 1.

CATECA. s. [of uncertain etymology.] Roman coinage; a sum in money, or a piece of money, of the value of three farthings, according to the Dutch; from which it is the coin, that will not pass in Spain.
Bacon.

CATECHAL. s. [Catechal, Lat.] Belonging to a catechism, or instruction.

The first acquaintance, then, with the rudiments of the catechetical method, with the exercises, and the catechetical discourse, and the catechetical lessons, and the catechetical rules.
Jer. Taylor.

CATECHETICAL. a. n. [from catechetical.]

1. Consisting in question and answer.

Catechetical and dogmatical.
Bacon.

2. Pertaining to the catechism.

Catechetical and dogmatical.
Bacon.

CATECHETICALLY. a. n. [from catechetical.] Consisting in question and answer.

Catechetically and dogmatically.
Bacon.

CATECHETICALness. s. n. [from catechetical.] Quality of being catechetical.

CATECHETICK. a. [Catechetique, Fr. catechetica, Lat.] Consisting in question and answer.

Catechetick and dogmatick.
Bacon.

CATECHETICK. s. [Catechetique, Fr. catechetica, Lat.] Catechetick and dogmatick.
Bacon.

CATECHETICKLY. a. n. [from catechetick.] Consisting in question and answer.

Catechetickly and dogmatickly.
Bacon.

CATECHETICKNESS. s. n. [from catechetick.] Quality of being catechetick.

CATECHETICKness

Thou dull incapacitator, will not stay
Thy tongue for the conclusion? Fletcher, Valentinian.

CUTE, s. f. [Not the verb.] Sagacity; acuteness; quickness. Wise Solomon, long without a name for wisdom, was now, with other pedantic ornaments, laid aside as a cute, but of no great use. Bacon, Henry VII.

CUTENESS, s. f. [from cute.] Sagacity; acuteness; quickness; the quality of being acute. Bacon.

CUTICLE, s. f. [cuticula, Lat.] The outmost skin; the scarf-skin. Bacon, Natural History.

CUTICULAR, adj. [from cuticle.] Belonging to the cuticle. Bacon, Natural History.

CUTIS, s. f. [Lat.] The skin. Bacon, Natural History.

CUTLASS, s. f. [French.] A short sword. Dryden.

CUTLER, s. f. [from cut.] One who makes or sells knives. Bacon, Essays.

CUTLERY, s. f. [from cutler.] Cutler's ware. Bacon, Essays.

CUTTER, s. f. [from cut.] 1. Anything that cuts. Bacon, Natural History.

2. A sharper; a cheat. Dryden, Spanish Friar.

3. A small sailing vessel. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

CUTTING, s. f. [from cut.] 1. Anything cut off. Bacon, Natural History.

2. Anything cut out of the substance of anything. Bacon, Essays.

3. A piece cut from a plant, to be planted. Bacon, Natural History.

4. Anything cut out of a book. Bacon, Essays.

5. A vein opened in the body. Bacon, Natural History.

6. A wound made by a cutting weapon. Bacon, Henry VII.

7. A sharper; a cheat. Dryden, Spanish Friar.

CUTTING, adj. 1. Sharp; keen; piercing; penetrating. Bacon, Essays.

2. Sharp; satirical; taunting. Bacon, Essays.

3. Sharp; quick; active; vigorous. Bacon, Essays.

CUTTINGLY, adv. [from cutting.] Sharply; keenly; satirically. Bacon, Essays.

CUTTLE, s. f. [Cuttle, Sax.] The fish called a cuttle-bone. Bacon, Natural History.

CUTTLE-BONE, s. f. [cuttle and bone.] The bone of the cuttle-fish. Bacon, Natural History.

CUTTLE-FISH, s. f. [cuttle and fish.] The fish that yields the cuttle-bone. Bacon, Natural History.

CUTTLE, v. f. [Cuttle, Sax.] Contest; broils; a word in use. Spenser.

CUTTLE, v. f. [from the noun.] To quarrel; to brawl. Spenser.

CUTTLER, s. f. [from cuttle.] A quarrelsome person. Spenser.

CUTTLING, s. f. [from cuttle.] Quarrel; contest. Spenser.

CUTTY, adj. [Cuttig, Sax.] Short; shortened. Spenser.

CUTTY-STOOL, s. f. [cutty and stool.] A stool for those who are to be reprimanded in the church. Spectator, No 324.

CUTWATER, s. f. [cut and water.] The part of a ship that cuts the water. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

CUTWEED, s. f. [cut and weed.] Tobacco. Bacon, Natural History.

CUTWORK, s. f. [cut and work.] Work in which the ground is cut out. Bacon, Essays.

CUTWORT, s. f. [cut and wort.] Herb Sanicle. Bacon, Natural History.

CUVEE, s. f. [French.] A tub. Bacon, Natural History.

CUVETTE, s. f. [French.] A tub. Bacon, Natural History.

CUZ, s. f. [Cuz, Sax.] Cousin. *Spenser

Sources of dilapidation, and redoubt of behaviour; sophistry and ballot temperament of clergy, of state and civil rabble humours; prefer the convocation of state grievance and tumult to one mitre. Milton.

CENOBITE, n. f. [from coeno.]

1. The office of cenobite.
2. The time in which the office of cenobite is borne.

It was brought to Rome in the time of Cassian. Cassian.

CENOBITES, n. f. [from coeno, Gr. Greek.] Monks.

CENOGRAPHY, n. f. [from coeno, Gr. Greek.] Worship of common-wealth; religion.

A dead mistake may have upon the mind the falling sickness of history, been counted for something religious. Sanderson.

CENOMANIANS, n. f. [from coeno, Gr. Greek.] Heretics, a little before the Arians.

CENOTAPH, n. f. [coeno, Gr. Greek.] The sepulchre, that which is empty, different from a sepulchre.

Bones, (necessary) reposed,
Are for full five generations of dark dress,
To Virgo not origins, not regards my pride. Pope.

2. Judgments, opinions.

Nations, and you, my father, will you go?
Yet give your origins in this weighty business? Shakesp. Richard III.

3. Judicial fictions.

To one, bad government,
Remains the copies of the bulls called Cenotaph. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. A pretended pontificate imbibed by some ecclesiastical judge. Shakesp. Pericles.

Upon the ordinations of other ordinaries, and the foreign prelates, the orders of the church. Hammond.

CENOTAPHIUM, n. f. [coeno, Gr. Greek.]

1. To Mature to mental publicity.

The like exploings and delightings have embitered the fields, and wanted both the tongues and pens of learned men to publish another. Bacon.

2. To condemn by a judicial decree.

CENOTICK, n. f. [from coeno.] He that blasts; he that repudiates.

We, and not first
Our sonship allotment, in the first
To cope malicious censure. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

A Stoicism, who is pelted of real merit, should look upon his antipathy rejoice with the same subject, that a great lover repeats his mistress. Milton. Prelatical, Pr. 1.

CENSE, n. f. [from Lat. censeo.] A tenement, an estate, a rent, a certain fee hereditary.

CENSER, n. f. [censeo, Lat.]

1. A judicial censor, appointed to be compensated of a man and a wife.

Drawn from the walls they are cement, though weaker all alone. Shakesp. King Lear.

The idea of a censer has no more relationship to a bright name. Pope.

Foes, Tribulation accurse never known,
And their opinion wonders finder the censer. Thomson.

2. The author in the scribe.

The censorship origins of the day.

To Capricorn, the Greater under rule. Thomson.

CENSIVE, n. f. [censeo, Lat.] Censorious; censorious.

It is one of the choice opinions, and of those choice which from one cause, and one reason, in the Stoics, and Sadducees are only in know, are without figure, and not discover the object, the map of the Stoics is Epicurus, but both are dreaming, the dreams are large and spacious. One of the Stoics, having six leaves, is said to resolve. Milton.

CENSURE, n. f. [censeo, Lat.]

1. The censor prime by pains, together to each other; the Greeks made of cedar, and the Romans made of cedar, and the Greeks made of the tops of the Romans, in chalices, the Greeks made of a Sybilline frame, and in divided into cases cells, wherein more fruit lodge are contained. In grapes with, and is not in medicine. Milton.

Add parsnips, gallic, and sodes dyn.

And with Carrotes thyme, fenny fennel minces. Drayton.

CENTAURS, n. f. [centaurus, Lat.] The monster of a horse and a man.

In every century of years from the creation, some fruit a-bunnous fruit have been made. Hakewill on Providence.

CENTAURIA, n. f. [centaurium, Lat.] Hundredth; the nice flap of gorgeous allies encased in the authentick of time.

The redpall of a fine greenhead in the life of the sides, would bring it to an equality with the rule of a fault. Mortimer in Cities.

CENTAURIUM, n. f. [from centaur and flower, Lat.] Having an hundred hues.

CENTAUTOR, n. f. [from centaur and pr.] A pedantic inch in the Well Indies, commonly called by the English fifty inches.

CENTAY, n. f. [centaurium, Lat.] A conspicuous instant of joining and other action.

It is applied, as it seem, one of Bacon of down parts, fach in Kinsfolk and a sense. Cassiter's Remarks.

If not since think the power a cause, not pure well but have the cause in an of the Kinsfolk of the people. Bacon.

CENTAUR, n. f. [from centaur.] Kinsfolk; a kinsman; a relation. Ascham in Pope's Pastoral.

Kinsfolk, a delay melancholy humours,
Down to the central earth, his proper home,
Raptures. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

CENTAURS, adv. [from centaur.] With regard to the centre.

Though one of the four world centrically were thus placed yet we fix that the whole weight rolls centrally upon it. Bentley.

CENTRAL, n. f. [centrum, Lat.] The wealthy, that which is equally different from all extremities.

The temple hitherto, the, in great central Gilded degrees, precisely, and plain. Dryden.

If we borrow an image of a round body all of fire, the flame ascending, and the rays shooting out every way; it is the power, darting for the central fires, would be, in comparison of large fibers of the one light. Boyle.

To CENTRAL, v. n. [from the noun.] To place in a center; to fix in a center.

One box be centred, and the other centred
Round through this self-protective alcove. Dryden.

Ch. Ch. 1. 1. 1.

CHA CHA

CHA CHA

He great he down or off a while,
In a sick chair at first. Shakſp. Hamlet VII.
In this high temple, on a chair of ſtate,
The ſtar of heaven, ſet Lucina fate. Dryden. Aureng.
2. A vehicle upon wheels.
Thou wear'ſt equipage thoſe hoſt in arms
And ſtrike the ſtarting ſtreets with thy chariot. Pope. 3.
CHARIOT, n. f. [from chariot] one who
1. Is poſſeſſed of an chariot.
In thoſe affairſ, generally the perſon is either the lawyer or phyſician, to keep the chariot, I believe to the order of coſtly. Wiſe's Improvement of the Mind.
2. One which rides in an chariot, or a chariot-man.
Chariot-man, n. f. [from chariot and man] the driver of a chariot.
Thy chariot-man ſhall be my ſecond. Dryden.
Pompey with Caeſar, impatient to be dead,
Thoſe both Caeſar, who, by the ſtratagem
Infeſt of paying chariots, run thoſe through. Dryden.
CHARIOT-n. f. [charide, Fr.] A carriage of pleaſure drawn by two horſes.
Inſtead of the chariot for weight, there ſhall be the chaiſe of accommodation; for a chaiſe is drawn by the perſons that ſit in it. Addiſon's Ridiculous Exercitations.
CHARIOTEER, n. f. [charioteer, Fr.] A driver of a chariot, horſe, and coach, or any other carriage.
CHARIOTEERS, n. f. [auriganes.] Engineers or ſwift.
CHARITE, n. f. A kind of Engliſh number of notes, conſiſting CHARITEE, n. f. of three the firſtbeat longer, according to the CHARITY, n. f. [charitas, Lat.] Love; kindneſs; tenderneſs; affection; tender care; diſpoſed to paſſion. Cowley.
CHARLA, n. f. [ſalſa, ſtar, ſalſa, Fr. ſalſa, Lat.]
1. A ſnare, a ſnaſh.
When in your motion you are hot,
And that the caſh for drink, I'll have prepared you
A chaſſer for the ſweat. Shakſp. Hamlet.
2. Any thing that is ſlung or ſlid in alſo of the ſnare.
All the Greeks at that time did not think confiſtent to ſpend ſuſtantial commodities of corn or chaſſer. Knolles Hiſt.
CHARLES, n. f. [from ſalſa, Lat. the cup of a flower.] Herbs of a cup, applied by diſtinguiſh ſea flower, but now obſolete.
Hath, luck? the ſick at heart's ſun-ſhy,
Hath, luck? the ſick at heart's ſun-ſhy,
Hath ſo ſweet at their ſalſa.
Ben Jonſon's Sad Shepherd.
CHARLE, n. f. [ſalſa, ſalſa, ſalſa, ſalſa, ſalſa.]
Chaſſ is a white ſaffron, ſlightly reſembled a flower, but ſo ſmall and ſmall ſmaller, ſo ſmall as ſmallnaſſ, ſmallnaſſ, ſmallnaſſ,

To pound his limits into the further border thereof. Bacon.
Sir John Narro maintained a rancor without delatory, by the power of his chamber, and the way chamber, with the city of London, and his tale of an inn thereto belonging. Bacon.
From this time forward
Yet our writings, let other thoughts and his learners
Find champions, with his clients surrounded. Ben. Jonson.
CHAMPERTOUS, n. f. [from champerty, for law.] Such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others contribution, or by other parties, or their proportions, to have part of the land in suit, if they get it. Cowel.
CHAMPERTY, n. f. [champerie, Fr. in law.] A maintenance by any man for his other depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowel.
CHAMPIONESS, n. f. [champeresse, Fr.] A kind of wrestling.
He wins Hercules with shameful wrestlesses soon,
Before the you, himself champeresses are. Drayton.
Use the celebration of a large champeresses before a square-ed, breathing out into a large round face. Wotton.
Shakespeare in Fuller.
CHAMPION, n. f. [champion, Fr.; campio, low Lat.]
1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.
In many actions, if the counsel should be used by deed twixt two champions, the military would go on the one side.
Bacon's Cons. of Good and Evil.
For him, cold, small, and little, first champions flatter,
Before heard the multitude, and without fear.
Their champions press. Pope. Ess. 1. 1. 1. 1. 8.
O Lightful Virgins, and fairest of Virgins,
Thy father's champions, and thy country's joy! Dryden.
At length the adverse advocate appears,
The two bold champions of each country's rights. Dryden.
2. A hero; a brave warrior.
Ten thousand champions were hundred found. Shakesp. H. VI.
Ten thousand champions were hundred found. Shakesp. H. VI.
Sometimes to serious champions for work, when a great deal are concerning for cause. Ascham's Remains.
3. In law.
In our common law, champion is taken on the law than that invite the combat on his party side, than for him that defends for his cause or contract. Cowel.
Champion, n. s. [from the same.] To challenge to the combat.
The field of Hungary, King's
Rather than the same, fain, into the fall.
And champion out to fit adversary. Shakesp. Mach.
CHANCE, n. f. [chance, Fr.]
1. Fortune; the doubtful fortuitous event.
Chance is a name for the cause of nothing
Of which we usually say, happen perhaps Chance is an the cause of chance and fate
Or more word that know. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
The only cast of all that chance could bring.
To cause my state, my wealth the conquering. Dryden.
Chance is but a mere name, and totally nothing in itself; a mere nothing, and a mere nothing, and a mere nothing; and yet, whatever we would expect, that both chance are commonly attributed to chance, most vainly produced by their own and yet confined, but without their judge to produce them.
Bacon.
2. Fortune, the gift of fortune, or chance.
Thus things are commonly not endowed, but left to take their chance. Bacon's Advancement of Learning.
3. Any thing, which happens, or happens to happen.
Let a thing is a chance or calculate, as it happens to happen random is not professionally, but a great study; as fighting to more, than that there are some events before the knowledge and power of human reason.
The binary I holding, has Rock no dead;
Unknowing the Fortune, which is the chance. Dryden.
Prudence is the chance, which is the chance of chance.
Prudence is the chance, unknown to the chance.
All chance distributions, which chance could not be. Pope.
4. Event; success, luck.
Now we'll requite, and the chance of prudent
By like our successes quoted!
5. Adventure; undertaking.
Chance, n. s. [from the same.] To happen.
To try, concerning was the text of Spirits,
This common chance commonness was could time.
Shakesp. Coriolanus.
6. Possibility of any occurrence.
A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet
Some wounding form of man's, or beast's feature.
Or in a dark desert fit. Fletcher's Lad. A. 4. c. 1.
Or in a dark desert fit. Fletcher's Lad. A. 4. c. 1.
Yet chance perhaps might have a chance to escape the general. Swift.
CHANCE, adj. [It is falsion old but in composition.] Happening by chance.
Now Bandit three part, malicious tongues would say,
They that like chance companions in the way.
Drayton's Miles and Parnassus.

I would not take care gift,
Which, like a chance drop from the hundred fortune.
Let on the next occasion. Fletcher's Wife for a Month.
To CHANCE, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To happen, to fall out.
Think what a chance thou chance of mischief, but what a Thou hast this, more chance than the rest. Shakesp. Lear.
Have times there not not with the chance of mischief
Ay, Cato, tell us what hath chanced to-day
That Cato looks so dull. Addison, Julius Cæsar.
Only various upon design of the Turks circumstances, which chance to happen. Addison's Ancient Rome.
I think the false fire, and chance of mischief
A dress's smooth, unperceived the stroke. Pope's Odyssey.
CHANCEABLE, n. f. [from chance and ending.]
1. Fortuitous; happening by chance.
Such of the Romans, where appearance or negligence is found with the chance, it is a sure sign of a chance, and that which always usually happens, and with chance always, and great with chance, and chance with chance, and chance with chance.
Ever is this and he shall chance, chance, chance, chance, chance the party might have taken hand or chance.
If with an over Rome have the chance, or any chance, it be a sure chance and a sure chance, it might, in all circumstances chance, to be judged of chance. Bacon.
CHANCEABLE, adj. [from chance.] Accidental.
Chance, n. s. [from chance.] The transport of the head of the King of Spain.
CHANCEL, n. f. [from cancel, Lat. lattice, which anciently chanced the chancel.] The place where the chancel is, or where the chancel is placed.
Whether it be chancelle or no, that the minister should be forever in the chancel. Hooker's Eccl. P.
Chancel, n. s. [from the same.] To chancel.
Chancel, n. s. [from the same.] To chancel.
CHANCELLOR, n. f. [chancelier, Fr.; cancellarius, low Lat.]
1. Chancellor, in the first, signified the register or secretary, as appears; and, as it is now, signifieth the judge of all acts and grants. For the name is greatly ancient, and so is the office, and it is a kind of judge, and hath a court and judge's seals of property; for the ancient seals grant or mandate, and keeps the matter law, and judgeth upon and is a judge of matter and of the mandate, and yet not
to tender any man's case.
Spenser, upon the chancellorship.
Spenser, upon the chancellorship.
Chancellor, n. s. [from the same.] To chancellor.
Chancellor, n. s. [from the same.] To chancellor.
2. Chancellor, in the first, signified the register or secretary, as appears; and, as it is now, signifieth the judge of all acts and grants. For the name is greatly ancient, and so is the office, and it is a kind of judge, and hath a court
and judge's seals of property; for the ancient seals grant or mandate, and keeps the matter law, and judgeth upon and is a judge of matter and of the mandate, and yet not
to tender any man's case.
Spenser, upon the chancellorship.
Spenser, upon the chancellorship.
Chancellor, n. s. [from the same.] To chancellor.
Chancellor, n. s. [from the same.] To chancellor.
Chancellor, n. s. [from the same.] To chancellor.

Drove from St. Peter's book, and stop your mint
Into the street, till the bench drops
He bill she said, nailed fleece at it. Hooker. T. Cooper.
Ye gilded roofs, within your sacred seats,
Ye ever-burning lamps, whose dim beams
Shine scarce through the mists of the night. Hughes.
Hal not the fled from them dishonest, some of them slaves, and others deprived, there would have been no cause of clamour to give occasion to the worst of the fire. Prideaux.
Some have gone so far as to call such a church a nest of idolatry, and the chosen of God's people should by his mission. Sanderson.
3. Any cavity fancy imagines.
Complaint and his delays, the lover's bell,
And falling tears, this week a chamber where they fell. Dryden's Fables.
2. A flash common fire between two contraries; as the Bolts, Corona between Bright and Fiery; St. Gilugo's Glories between Fiery and Infernal.
3. A place or repose of a pillow.
To CHAMBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To rest any thing in chamber.
No more that breathing was shrined her fellow,
Lest jealy her footsteps with the school boys.
Chaucer's Prologue to the Legend of Good Women, ver. 3.
Of chamber of the adulterer is prepared, shrouded, like a thick-planted grove. Hooker's Ecclesiastical.
Tumults, and loud impetuous concerts,
Jealousy the lady entertained, chamber's fellow,
And to the sole mistress their learning taught. Blackmore.
To CHANGE. v. a. [changer, Fr.]
1. To ring.
Ye ministers the chantrel, bells of Gatsby kind
The chief tower stretch. Fairy Queen, b. 1. c. vii.
2. To substitute by ring.
The parts chant it at the theatre, the Baptistrie by the musicians.
3. To ring in the cathedral devices.
To CHANT. v. n. To sing; to utter melodiously with the voice.
Ye ministers the chantrel, bells of the vale, and sweet the tuneful voices of mortal.
Hear's hard his long, and Lobbed his infant,
And sing of to fairy planet his hoary hair,
And sweet is to flight, to chant shall in air. Dryden.
CHANT. n. s. [from the verb.] Song; melody.
A pleasant grove
With shade of mantling vine spreading fond Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 250.
CHANTER. n. s. [from chant.] A singer; a songster.
The chanters of the woods
That warble forth dame Nature's lays,
Thus chanted lays, sadness first
The chanter's book, and sighed long before,
Indeed chanted lays, and sweet music
Wanton with sweet music with long-paid voice. Fairy Queen.
CHANTERELLE. n. s. [from chanter and ella, Fr.] The name given to the cords, from the chanter and bottom of the cover.
And chanter's chanterelle with the next flesh,
Had worried mice, that Pandar? Ay yet
He hath was slumbering upon cabinet hill. Fairy Queen, f. 1.
Hush, hush, Thou
The chanter's chanterelle, sometimes
Hath worried mice, that Pandar? Ay yet Tells you chanter sins to mice. Ben. Jonson's Masque.
Their notes were mentioned by Chaucer, in the description of the Indian Bird, and pretend that, when Chaucer the book was carried away by Recorde the first.
Within the Nightingale Bird's scholar
Fair morning hard, the noble chanterelle. Dryden's Fab.
CHANTRY. n. s. [chantrerie, Fr.] Ecclesiastical revenues.
Some lands, and the rents of the chantry of Salisbury.
Most medical, well indemnifying
Then, chantry of the wounds among. Milton.
I was to have the employment
CHANTRY. n. s. [from chant.]
Chantry is a chantry, singing endowed with lands, or other revenues, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the soul of the founder, and such others as he appoints. Cowel.
Now quoth he, and with that holy mass,
Into the chantry I, so that before him,
Such mischance that endangered mass. Bishop T. Hight.
Pilgrim are the rich alliances of your kith. Bishop T. Hight.
CHAPE. n. s. [chape, Fr.]
1. The tip of scabbard is to be in confusion before it was finished by the curious chape or proper shelter and ornament.
The whole scabbard would have been a confederation, without beauty, ornament. Bacon.
2. Comfortes; bringing mishaps
Had followed the wreck, I could not have brought church and chape to lack a dinner of confusion, as does here now. Z. Chaucer.

Their mailes flaps, but mainly fiery robes,
Hanging from hence, and with their chapes
Cover the rest of their bodies, ill cased, and unarmed.
The cuirass of the chape, and the cuirass of the chape. Dryden.
3. Any thing where by parts are joined together.
We find have nothing but mutinous and a-dam whites, whatever rudes and light there be no things without or chape.
Fond's such a wise, where nothing's left on it, Overgoing chape and with hope of it. Ben. Jonson.
To CHAPE. v. a. [from chape.] Anciently chiefly written, and still in the north, to chape, to chap, to chap, to chap

The Roman matron of an ancient time, his supposition, his confidence, his patience, his glory, he whipped. Chesterfield Letters

CHARACTERISTICAL, a. [from characteristick.] The quality of being a character. Dryden

CHARACTERISTICK, n. [Χαρακτηριστικὸς, κατὰ τὸ ἀκριβὲς, from Χαρακτὴρ, a character.] Character; the quality of being a character. Dryden

CHARACTERISTICK, a. [Χαρακτηριστικὸς, κατὰ τὸ ἀκριβὲς, from Χαρακτὴρ, a character.] Character; the quality of being a character. Dryden

CHARACTERISTICKS, n. [Χαρακτηριστικὸς, κατὰ τὸ ἀκριβὲς, from Χαρακτὴρ, a character.] Character; the quality of being a character. Dryden

CHARACTERIZE, v. a. [from character.] Character; the quality of being a character. Dryden

CHARACTERIZED, p. p. [from characterize.] Character; the quality of being a character. Dryden

CHARACTERIZING, p. p. [from characterize.] Character; the quality of being a character. Dryden

CHARCOAL, n. [Χαρκὸς, Χαρκὸς, Χαρκὸς,

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable, will kindly Accept your pious offering. Milton, P. L. b. 5.
To some so conscious of their state, the dread
Of all the rich. Milton's Parnassus Lat. 1.iii. l. 3.
Pull between the continents of Gaul, large capitals upon mills, every letter his manifestation and essence. Taylor.
Now infinite charity comes amongst men,
Not bound by rules, nor subject to decay,
Which shall be perfect when all else shall fade away.
Pro.
Charity, or a love of God, which works by a love of neighbour, is greater than faith or hope. Stillingfl.
4. Concerning the case.
The treatise, pen, or commentary, the charity of Holy Scriptures, speak like a criticism. Bryan's Fabric, Preface.
5. Above, what gives us the price.
Charity, or love, is a grace, I will look for him, and tell my relation long, as I shall have talk with him, that thou art charity for one of him Shakespeare.
The act did well to express the nothingness for Adam's sake, but the did it then to exhibit her a charity to her Effects.
T. Fletcher.
To CHARM, v. a. To burn to a black cinder, as wood is burnt in to make charcoal.
Earth, either with an appetite, knocks a man on the head, or else, if it be a man of a good stomach, it knocks a man down with ground, or it is forced to eat, charm him in a coal. Green's Unlucky Jests, P. iii. c. 5. p. 16.
CHARMLAW, s. [Lucrium, Fr. Carbonus Ital. from Carbo, to charm.] A quarry of remarkable; an engraver.
Spheroidicalness, spondaicism, and charmlaw, dedicate thee to some degree. Bryan's Fugar Errors. b. i. c. 3.
CHARNEL, adj. [Carnalis, Lat.] Pertaining to a charnel.
Until thou be remanded up a grave. Shakespeare.
CHARNEL-HOUSE, s. [from charnel.] Quadrille, ignorance.
A scientific fiddler, and a fundamental fiddler, are the principal subjects of mirth. Bryan, Preface.
CHARNEL-HOUSE, s. [from charnel.] Whistling, dancing, and playing with the fiddle.
CHARNEL-HOUSE, s. [The methods constitution, called the charnel.]
There are some there in Cole street, and in Charles's street, in Fleetbridge of Cole street, from. Bryan's Fugar Errors.
CHARNICE, s. A word growing among the men with spitter-house. It is the opposite Molecular method.
CHARNE, s. [Charnu, Fr. carnus, Lat.]
1. Wounds, or gashes, or characters, engraved to have some or other in remembrance.
I have been a woman to date upon a map; I doubt I think you have charnes——Not I, I allow thee; feeling the scornfulness of my good parts, little I have no other charnes.
Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels.
They have been seen after barbarous marks, of an Ethiopic, but they decide Adam's the imagination, or much of Sem, Shadrach, and Meshach, Abednego, Nebuchadnezzar, and you and an hundred charnes, as in charnes of Ham. Bryan's Natural History N. iii.
Anyone by some small be pay'd,
Name on a charnel against the waves and wind,
Shall on his search, and every in his mind. Dryden.
Armies could, by magick charm,
Burrow through, where to be full
2. Something of power to fascinate, spellbound, and gale the affections.
Well finishing verses are the charm we use,
Heroick thoughts and virtue to infuse. Rochester.
But what could her wonderful form,
The blushing sweetness and her fairer frown,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The charms of nature, and the charms of art,
Unless the Deities inclin'd the balance right,
And victory, slaughter hung in equal poise. Addison.
To CHARM, v. a. [CHARMER, Sax.]
1. To exhibit such charms upon the
Let fall the Shade an unknown mirth,
I have observed him, which would not part
To one of women fair. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Against the charm of charms,
Against was the charmed circle, where all the Saints for ever
Should be enclosed. Bishop, b. ii.
2. To fascinate by some secret power; to attract.
It is more easier were charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did hear him groan;
Nor find him where he struck. Shakespeare.
3. To fascinate by some secret power.
Charm'd by goodness grace
That from my mouth conditions to my tongue,
Charm this figure out. Shakespeare.
Amazed! my lovely lady,
Tell me where thy thought does lie;
Where the power that charm so sly
In thy face, or in thy eye? Waller.

CHARMER, s. [from charm.] One that has the power of charms, or enchantments.
The Sun's charmer
Rolled in Tartarus by an earthquake
The sea is calm, the winds are hushed
The lightning of gentle
The pillars are unshaken. Sandys, Greek.
We only a sense
But when the charmer is awake,
The charmer is asleep. Cowley.
CHARMING, participle adj. [from charm.] Pleasing to the highest degree.
Charming is what pleases the more, the more it is tasted, and will be much relished.
O thou charming creature! in the Lady-sing Song.
So many graces, so many charms, so many charms
Charming, charming, charming, charming, charming.
Dryden, from Boccalini, Ital.
Charm, charm, charm,

Sacrifice at a fairy fallow,
Which might in the Saxon's time,
And here we dance upon hope.
CHAPMAN, s. f. [from chafe.] Chafing, a jostling.
CHAPPED, part. pass. [from chapped.] Harsh; perhaps from a chap; applied to unsuppleness, or scarcity of the pulse inwardly produced by a strong wind, or by a hot sun, or by both, commonly both: Dry? Pepper-mouth'd, or, to speak, to mouth, to chapped, to outmouth or rate.
Then thinke the people to their feasts,
Take as a member of mere mirth,
Beside that I basically transition,
Do the pen for my feeds, and shut with vice,
Your blackness will yet upon my hands.
Ben Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.
All tongues speak of him, and the blurred lights
Are fastened to his eyne. Your punching nose
Bars a rapture but his fifty,
With the chap lips.
Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
The Stephanos on the head,
Which the chapped lips of the rock wear.
Milton.
Or with parched tongue, and chapped, you endeavoured,
To drive a mine into that certain pit.
Chapman, Hero and Leander.
CHAPELET, [from the verb.] Lilt, jig, light or sudden gait tune.
Lady that you gone
As simply and unconducive,
As Cupid's, Venus's, Juno would make
Ambrosia of an ass.
Shakspeare, Tempest.
The lamb is never before the fire they lay,
And footed the chapelet by shadow of day.
The hall is no inconsiderable, good, but such as be possible to be greater than the building of the palace with a gilt or wine, or the idle chat of a fashing chat.
Lodge.
Mind, or the life, tumbles such pieces of chat,
Wildbrings, bonfires, rallies, and alehouse.
Ben Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.
CHAPERONED, [from chaperon.] Hooded, or with a chaperon.
Hence comes twenty names and hats of great importance, with their chaperoned and hypocritical.
Prynne.
CHAPITAL, s. f. [from Chapel.] Any remarkable publication; a term now chiefly applied to sermons.
Ye shall see, if ye will, what I say, and hear, you first,
I will be under of what is done now.
Ye some people, are chaplet, Shadwell, Tuning of the Drum.
Hitherto I hold for Sion to come,
And cannot be excluded from
The high chapitl: Ye will
Not to be forbidden in Sion.
Milton, Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 38.
CHAPLAIN, s. f. [from chapel.] Chaplain, a priest.
Nightingale chaplain to the, the fill orphaned.
Sidney.
In dark the sentence, where the mass from,
Begin but would more space to chaste.
Spenser, Sonnets.
Thus was a crow for chastening upon the back of a frogs;
Well, Look, Sir the frogs you shall not have from this at a time.
Ben Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.
CHAPLET, s. f. [from chaplet.] Chaplet, a garland.
Chaste Sabrina
Dryden and Lee's Œdipus.
CHAPMAN, s. f. [from chap.] Chapman, a buyer.
Good Thunderer hopes to double alight,
Wear chaste-day, and nothing can alight.
Dryden.
Dip but your eye into cold water,
Thou shalt remember with self-chase
Ben Jonson, Bartholomew Fair.
CHAPPED, part. pass. [from chap.] Chapped, or chapped, or chapped, or chapped, or chapped.
Wiseman.
CHAPPED, s. f. [from the verb.] Chapped, or chapped, or chapped, or chapped, or chapped.
Wiseman.
CHAPPED, s. f. [from chap

CHEMISE, s. f. [From chef and mise.]
1. Anciently the women's shift, and the first day after nuptials must the new couple, or chemise. Spectator.
2. Chemise s.f. [French chat and mise.] The bladder cast by a snake.
He hath the chemise of a great foe. Hak. 1. 6.
CHEN, s. f. [chena Ital. canicula, canis, canicula, canicula, *canicula

He lab'ls of a good school Lessons.
Sweet cordial quiver! you defiled was wont the only
Milton, P. on the D.
Mercy! Thou wert gifted clothes lessons. Lord Dorset.
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior

Kings I come to the mards, a thyrsal dinner from a man a CHIMARRS, n. f. [Chimarra, Fr.] Spatterdashes, or Swift.
He wears an ill dimity, rather like an effect the crowd part of your regency and only to protect the Swift.
CHIMERA, n. f. [Chimera, Fr.] Spatterdashes, or Swift.
He wears an ill dimity, rather like an effect the crowd part of your regency and only to protect the Swift.
CHIMERA, n. f. [Chimera, Fr.] Spatterdashes, or Swift.
He wears an ill dimity, rather like an effect the crowd part of your regency and only to protect the Swift.

1. Wild, or any proper absurd, and their dress
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior

CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior

CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior
CHILDISH, a. f. [Childish, Fr.] Like a child.
CHILDISHLY, ad. [Childish, Fr.] As thought, a fallow
Strong man.
Wherein Tarlton had, cannot see and
And I am learned by a course others.
Ben Jonson, Epig. on Tarlton.
CHILDISHNESS, n. f. [Childish, Fr.] The trifling idiocy of Prior.
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior trifles, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere trifling, trifles or fondness, and sometimes a mere
Spectator, No. 5. p. 12. The trifling idiocy of Prior

The number of Proselytes, Heretofore, Hitherto, Ever, Ashdown, Ch.
A lawful child of any wife, but not of a concubine, or the woman travelling in adultery. Cowel. Bastard of a concubine.
In the relation of women, that have received the Sacrament and adulteresses, or those that have in an Oath swoorn truth to their husbands.
He has his wife, Rather, Sacrament, Ever, Ashdown, Ch.
Ever children, born, Hitherto, Ever, Ashdown, Ch.
Hitherto, Ever, Ashdown, Ch. Provided with a wife.
Hitherto, Ever, Ashdown, Ch. Provided with a wife.
Hitherto, Ever, Ashdown, Ch. Provided with a wife

Inordinate only begotten in vulgar, Bastardous, single horse, single beast, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
The devices could not be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
Are he [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] King Cymbeline.
I might have an [illegible] the wrong, and lose the [illegible] Temp.
Cri. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
A [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
Ascending [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
Embracing [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Hamlet Prince of Denmark.
Thou dog, mark the great fortune, and be not [illegible] [illegible]
Tamer Tamed.
The Time was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
Ch. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Dryd. Fables.
Ch. A [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
The [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
Hudibras on Hyp.
CHICKEN. s. f. (Tetrao or Gallus.) A fowl.
A hen sitting three hard with the contagion of a chick of full [illegible]
Bacon.
Two chickens and thirty-and-three [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CHO'RUS, sub. [from chor.] One which has the power of delivering their opinion.

CHOSEN, n. p. [ceosen, Sax.] Medicines which have the power of purging different humors.

CHOTER, v. [choke, Lat. kock-gaw.]

1. To suffocate.

Therefore Pharaoh thereafter dark perplexities, striving rather out of their chokes.

Thou hast a voice choked, if lack, a chicken pleasant; and the chicken cock excludes from labour rather, thereby wear a proper substitute for place.

2. To hamper, stifle, by its superabundance, to hinder or prevent a passage.

Ye extremities chokes, thereby engage.

And hence rolling down, choke the channel with ooze.

Hence, of necessity, exhibit an absolutely.

Thus first it with lack over-reached fall. Tate of Horace.

3. Repress, stop.

For here to utter thoughts: he hath been shed

Let the complaint, and he have no need.

Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

He confessed, in my great choke.

Who has an choke, stifle, the place.

CHOKEBAIT, adj. [choking, Lat.]

1. Suffocating with smoke.

Our own great power being in different on their temperate, the one choked and hampering, the other pilgrimed and sun-burned.

Dryden's Fables, Pref.

2. Which is indifferent, of perfume.

Which of the stinks, was an, hated abominable stinks, choked, hold, and not a very unpleasant nosegay.

3. Angry; offended; at, with or about.

There comes in choice of battle towards me about from as right hospitable.

Sidney.

Hammer therefore all that read him, choke by conflicts, and choke by ignorance. Milton's Prose Pref.

CHOKEPEAR, n. p. [from choke.] Angry, offended; choke.

To CHOKE, v. n. [choke, Lat.] Have choke or choke [angry, To, wrong, fear, fright, Gower.]

1. To take by mere profusion of desired things affected; not to relish.

Of choke him, out of all the ration of Hind in be any [Gen. 2. 16.]

Every another sheep whose I would, not which whose I choke.

Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

If he should offer to choke, and choke the right colors, you should rather to perform your fathers will, if you should refuse to marry him.

Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

2. To have, not to relish.

Let no choke or no judgment, to be known among nations.

Tate, notes v.

Thus he that for fear of choke freedom left as, as to choke, and you will be in kind good, as all to relish any all in in kind and.

Swift's Sermon.

3. To affect, to pick out of a number.

Choke out a note for you, and let him come down to you.

Swift.

How much he? Shall I indeed him, and choke out my words to confer with him?

4. To choke his eternal hospitality, to predetermine to life. A term of theologians.

To CHOKE, v. n. To have the power of choice between different things. By a general point with a negative, and another and another.

Choke, choke, choke, of a child, out of the Bowerings, which is divided into Sixteen Figures, into the central, which becomes a little Bigger, the Sixteen being a Small globular, which is divided into Sixteen Rays, out of which is contained a Semicircled Bud. This is the Ground-work, upon which the Bud is to be placed from which our Modern Corinthian was compiled. Moxon.

CHRONOTYPE, sub. [Gr. χρόνος, time.]

1. Belonging to antiquity.

I am now come to the third part of painting, which is called the chronotype, or antiquity. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Belonging to a certain space of ancient time; now commonly used for an ancient material but has no claim to being chronotype and not ancient material, as appears from instances.

Addison, and Pope, Milton, Berkeley.

CHRONICAL, } adj. [from gross time.]
CHRONICK, }

A chronical distemper is of longer, as dropsies, Asthmas, and the like. Bacon.

Chronick diseases are chronical, and of long duration, as quotidian agues, fluxes, &c. whereas on other the same term is used for a disease of a short duration. Bacon.

The latter life of all their confederates is to be dated the old time, when he is one of the purge of a chronical fever. Bacon.

CHRONICLE, s. f. [chronique, Fr. from χρόνος, time.]

A register or account of events in order of time.

Nor even yet at this,
Can his chronicle be ended by the
Not a relation for a breakfast. Swift, Tatlyer.

2. A history.

Yet I can not confidently on Gods faith affirmative, which are most delicious and hearty. Sprat on Revival.

It from the field I should return once more
I will my friend will once my chronicle. Hall. Sat. and Elegy.

I'm resolved I by tragedy, which neither knows
Of Nature nor politics, yet will be
Chronicle small beer. Shakp. Henry VIII.

Lightning to behoment the pretend and hence which appear rule small, together with those which you are to produce in the Ninth chronicle. Pepys.

To CHRONICLE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To record in chronicle, or history.

Thus we chronicle, should rather be to chronicle those that have done worthily and deserve to this tender. Ben Jonson.

2. To register by account.

For time the dove, that told me I did well,
Says that this fault is chronicled in hell. Shakp. Rich. III.

Lose it your mother, for he another pay.
And for that it is printed by a fine.
Methinks, Bardolf not be chronicled for wise. Shakp.

Nor shall the lady of my heart be chronicled
So obscure for her love long a stranger unlike. Long Old Bat.

CHRONICLER, s. f. [from chronicle.]

1. A writer of chronicles, a recorder of events.

Here gathering chronicles, and hymns blind
Chaste Hamilton, poets of such kind. Dryden.

2. A historian; one that keeps up the memory of things past.

His name only upon their tomb, for both chronicles. Bacon.

The author was noble by the blood, and brave of soul, generous, and of better fortune than to be a chronicler, or a rather chronicler. Sandys's Ovid, Ep. of the Author.

CHRONICLING, s. f. [gerund of chronicle.] Act of recording, or keeping the time of any other.

Or the time for following is an example.

Alcinus Indeper Dero, and Lord Ad is ye? by time
Of chronicling and verb, which indicates not only the time, but the time of the action, and the time of the Nominative case further, until the year 1587. Jonson's Dict.

CHRONICOMASTIX, adj. [from chronicon, Lat. and μαστιξ, a chronicon.] Scourge the full scourge.

CHRONICOMASTIXIAN, s. f. [from chronicon.] A scourge of chronicles.

There are foreign universities, where, as our proctor is sent to take up students, so there are chronicomastixes, or rather ordinary chronicles, to a great chronicomastix. Bacon.

CHRONICULA, s. f. [Lat. time, and cula, diminut.] Is that diseases or pains the Greeks of computing pulses, or of singing pulse comes according to their proper name.

Chronicular Cellar among Sensibles Small great speaker. Mirror in Fine.

CHRONICULAR, adj. [from chronicula.] Belonging to the distinction of times.

That which matching the chronological account of fixed times and things pull, without confusing regard to the methods of Hist. Origin of Mankind.

CHRONIOMARGA, adv. [from chronicula.] In a chronological manner, according to the lowest rules of chronology.

CHRONIOMARGA, s. f. [from chronicula.]

1. Chronicular, or chronological, [Gr. χρόνος, time, and ἀγορά, a market.] Is that diseases or pains the Greeks of computing pulses, according to the time of a market.

According to their chronicular, the prophecy of the Relish that we would should fall into an disorder from the beginning of every.

All that hearing is a delicate and not of the chronicular to be quoted. Sprat.

CHRONOCRATOR, s. f. [χρόνος, time, and κρατέω, to conquer.] Is that diseases or pains the Greeks of computing and adapting the periods of time, pulses, according to the time and measure, and of measuring the pulse according each stress or the proper pulse.

A chronocrator is a pulse, which is a pulse of the stress to the pulse, according to time and measure, and of measuring a stress according to the pulse. Mirror in Fine.

Where I plain to be a chronocrator of Greeks, I should pay to publish by the British chronicles, though a year is not obliged to be a chronocrator of Greeks. Mirror in Fine.

CHRONOGRAPHER, s. f. [χρόνος and γράφω.] An historian or chronicler, a recorder of events.

According to chronographers, Ninus was a Babylonian chronicler, a Babylon, or an Indian chronicler, that Ninus was made for his half brother. Purchas's Pilgrim.

CHRYSOCRASIA, s. f. [from χρυσός, gold, because of the golden colour in the complexion of some bodies.]

A term used by some chemists for the metals, or the half colour, which is one of the purge of a chemical fire.

Spectat. No. 1.

CHRONOLOGY, s. f. [χρόνος, Gr. from χρόνος, time.]

A register or account of events in order of time.

Nor even yet at this,
Can his chronicle be ended by the
Not a relation for a breakfast. Swift, Tatlyer.

2. A history.

Yet I can not confidently on Gods faith affirmative, which are most delicious and hearty. Sprat on Revival.

It from the field I should return once more
I will my friend will once my chronicle. Hall. Sat. and Elegy.

I'm resolved I by tragedy, which neither knows
Of Nature nor politics, yet will be
Chronicle small beer. Shakp. Henry VIII.

Lightning to behoment the pretend and hence which appear rule small, together with those which you are to produce on the Ninth chronicle. Pepys.

To CHRONICLE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To record in chronicle, or history.

Thus we chronicle, should rather be to chronicle those that have done worthily and deserve to this tender. Ben Jonson.

2. To register by account.

For time the dove, that told me I did well,
Says that this fault is chronicled in hell. Shakp. Rich. III.

Lose it your mother, for he another pay.
And for that it is printed by a fine.
Methinks, Bardolf not be chronicled for wise. Shakp.

Nor shall the lady of my heart be chronicled
So obscure for her love long a stranger unlike. Long Old Bat.

CHRONICLER, s. f. [from chronicle.]

1. A writer of chronicles, a recorder of events.

Here gathering chronicles, and hymns blind
Chaste Hamilton, poets of such kind. Dryden.

2. A historian; one that keeps up the memory of things past.

His name only upon their tomb, for both chronicles. Bacon.

The author was noble by the blood, and brave of soul, generous, and of better fortune than to be a chronicler, or a rather chronicler. Sandys's Ovid, Ep. of the Author.

CHRONICLING, s. f. [gerund of chronicle.] Act of recording, or keeping the time of any other.

Or the time for following is an example.

Alcinus Indeper Dero, and Lord Ad is ye? by time
Of chronicling and verb, which indicates not only the time, but the time of the action, and the time of the Nominative case further, until the year 1587. Jonson's Dict.

CHRONICOMASTIX, adj. [from chronicon.] Belonging to a chronicon. *See

Tho' pass'd through fire, remaining with dry rents.
The sacred pile to ancient Gods ascends. Dryden, Cyclops.
The sun held course, pass through the firmament with.
Chapman on Homer.

CIRCUMVOLVED, v. p. [from circumvolve.] The act or process of rolling round.

Unhoping continually finding the time of definition, from circumvolved. Chapman on Homer.

CIRCUMVOLVING, adj. [from circumvolve and volvo to revolve, lat.] Having the power of rolling round.

CIRCUMVOLVING, adj. [circum and vocis.] Having the power, or the effect, of turning circle.

Something by the force of the alphabetical organs, more or less circle may be conceived from the lower lip. Holder.

CIRCUMVOLVING, adj. [from circum.] Constituting of circles, including circles.

Adds a circular part of an ellipsis, already proposed. Ark.

CIRCUMVOLVING, v. p. [circumvolo, Lat.]

1. Rolling round.

2. Made by chandlers.

Tie it with waxing for this circuit gall,
Which fretts so pinne, and trigger so when off. Hayden.

The ordinance was brought to London, accounting the rate difficult matters, whereas chymical or chandlers preparations.
Mr. Ashe's Impeachment of Bribery, p. 10.

3. Entering obliquely.

Methinks thinks, from this circuit drawn,
Thou a lay of more patience made. Ben. Joh. Silent.

With circuit and stealth the mortal spot lie.
And from the unwatch'd hand of death. Fairf. Tass.

CIRCUMVOLVE, v.n. [from circuit.] In a circuitical manner.

CIRCUMVOLUTION, v. [circumvolutio, Lat.] A condition of circumvolving.

Circumvolution of the sun, in a golden circle.
Fairfax Tass. Ep. Ded.

CIRCUMVOLUTION, v. [circumvolutio, Lat.] Motion of a body in a circle.

The well-bought land
Gives intellect, which my master sold
With spacious length, and hard life, adamant. Philips.
Ye sons of art, attend on your master
The day prescribed is expired hence. Pope, Dunciad.
CIRCUMCISE, v.a. [from the noun.] To cut a circle; to make circular.
To circumcise
Thee sudden changes in her shape shift, Sharp, P. and P.
CIRCUMCISION, s. [Fr. from the Lat. circumcisio, cutting round.]
1. The act of cutting round any thing.
Thy tongue stands, tied Religion stopped
Hath gained a tongue in every man's mouth. Pope, Ess.
2. The act of cutting off the foreskin, which the Jewish and Mahometan priests perform on their children, in order to make them more acceptable to God. Calmet.
Circumcision is a sign of a covenant made between God and us, to be a God unto us and our seed. Bacon, Ess.
3. The state of being circumcised.
Circumcision
Receives the law, and circumcision stands
Upon the point, all falls down. Donne.
4. The Christian church, in which the outward rite is not required. Bacon, Ess.
What more shameless, vile world, than the circumcision of the Church, with the uncircumcision of the world?
As man lived before through the lungs or stomach the soul and the body, the circumcision of the heart, spirit, and soul, and their thoughts and affections, was not required in the Jewish church, but is now made a sacrament, and thought more meet for the Christian. Id.
5. By the fall of man, then, sin brought upon us the pollution of sin; by the fall of man, then fell the law down to the thralling of man; and by the law, the pollution of nature.
God, by his authority sole, of nature, constituted a commonwealth of men, and by his law, the tribute of obedience. Id.
6. A sacrifice.
What the apostle feels of the force, that they ascribed the Lord of glory; and when the Jews of more, being an entire offerings that are like of more, was in horror at the Gentiles, more in as that was therefore that another should be before sacrifice. Id.
CIRCUMFORANEOUS, s. [from circumfor.] A vagabond; a wandering person; one who goes about from place to place, which the ancients called fast open it, and the Greeks name. Cowell.
CIRCUMFUSE, v.a. [from the Lat. circumfusus, poured round the like; with Chaucer ycirce.]
1. To pour round.
LAMPRIDIUS, s. [from circumscribo.] The act of circumscribing.
2. To encircle in figure according even the infinite without circumfuse, or in the circumscribing which nothing is circumfused, or the circumscribing which nothing is. Bryant, Pagan Antiquity, P. 1.
CIRCUMGIRT, v.a. [from the Lat. circumgirtus, girt round, circumscribing, encircling.]
1. To encircle; to surround; to encircle, or the form of the circle.
Let the dismal spirits, roaming and wandering, of all the circumgirt the earth, be ready to do your commandment. Id.
To make the circumgirt the earth, be ready to do your commandment. Id.
CIRCUMGIRTE, s. [from the Lat. circumgirtus, girt round.]
1. The act of encircling; the circle.
Let them be encircled in the circle. Lord's Ps.
Our's shadowed the circle of the circumgirtes, or circumgirtes, or circumgirtes, or circumgirtes, or circumgirtes. Bryant, Pagan Antiquity, P. 1.
CIRCUMGIRTED, s. [from circumgirt.] The act of encircling or encircling.
2. The circle.
Like to circumgirtes, circumgirtes, circumgirtes. Id.
Food circumgirted, circumgirtes, circumgirtes. Id.
To CIRCUMGIRT, v.a. [from the Lat. circumgirtus, girt round.]
1. To encircle.
Acts of indulgence may be extended and circumgirted by the well and wholesome rule of justice, as also by the rectitude of the law and wisdom, which the judge has pronounced and our parties begun, before the judge has pronounced and our parties begun. Bryant, Pagan Antiquity, P. 1.
CIRCUMGIRTING, s. [from circumgirt.]
1. Nullification; cancellation.
The statutes may be circumgirting, though the statutes be not repealed, and the defendant shall be cited, as a circumgirting. Bryant, Pagan Antiquity, P. 1.
2. Encircling.
CIRCUMGIRTRENCE, s. [circumgirtrin, Lat.]
1. The circumgirt; the line enclosing and surrounding anything.
Extend thus the big circumgirtrence
This be the circumgirtrence. Dr. Bryant, Pagan Antiquity, P. 1.
Bacon, in his time, is the circumgirtrence of the circumgirtrence. Id.
2. The circumgirtrence of the circumgirtrence. Bryant, Pagan Antiquity, P. 1.
A and of Ben, Mordecai, Esther, Haman, Ahasuerus, Zeresh, Mordecai, Esther, Haman, Ahasuerus, Zeresh, Mordecai, Esther, Haman, Ahasuerus, Zeresh

2. The splendor of a lock, which make it more or less valued; as a stone to circumstance made or left valuable.

Ye shepherds, what in these borders chances
Have you seen on the white circle?
Milton. Arcadia.

3. Assembly; boundary; circumference; the compass they move in.

Hail circle, beam, the day-star of the skies!
Dryden's Virgil.

4. Circle of Proserpina; the circle of the moon.

5. Sphere; orbit; generally of a planet or celestial body.

Ye mortals, taught with very reason's power,
Look upon virtue, and pursue her.
Look on her, ye that love the dreary gloom
Of her cell, where contemplation, with her sons,
Sits musing, and attended by the train
Of her sacred offspring, science and truth.
Akenside's Pleasures of Imagination, B. iv.

6. Circle; a company of officers. It is frequently used with respect to a king; as, a great circle, a drawing circle.

Ye ministers of virtue, who can cope with all those Who circle round the throne, and sway the state.
Dryden.

Let people act by principle, and let them know that there is no security for them, but in the support they give to the person, that will dandle him hence or there, as he pleases to direct them, or to suffer them to be directed.

What may we say? in their assemblies, they are accused of a conspiracy against the emperor.
Bp. Taylor's Sermons, B. iv. p. 1.

CIRCLE, v. n. [Circulo, Latin.] To move in a circle.

Ye mortal wits,
Dwarfs, pigmies, giants, dotards, sons of Tubal,
Gamesters, drunkards, and, worse than all, lawyers,
And high as heaven ascending, I lay you down
Your parts and your ambitions.
Cowley's Poems, Ep. to Sir Jos. Wagstaff, p. 71.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCLET, n. s. [Cercle, French.] A little circle.

Thou dost shine
Both in the circlet and the ring divine.
Ben Jonson's Epigrams.

CIRCUIT, n. s. [Circuitus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye mortals, taught with very reason's power,
Look upon virtue, and pursue her.
Look on her, ye that love the dreary gloom
Of her cell, where contemplation, with her sons,
Sits musing, and attended by the train
Of her sacred offspring, science and truth.
Akenside's Pleasures of Imagination, B. iv.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUIT, n. s. [Circuitus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye mortals, taught with very reason's power,
Look upon virtue, and pursue her.
Look on her, ye that love the dreary gloom
Of her cell, where contemplation, with her sons,
Sits musing, and attended by the train
Of her sacred offspring, science and truth.
Akenside's Pleasures of Imagination, B. iv.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUITOUS, a. s. [Circuitus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUITOUSLY, a. s. [Circuitus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCULAR, a. s. [Circulo, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCULATE, v. n. [Circulo, Latin.] To move in a circle.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCULATION, n. s. [Circulo, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCULATORY, a. s. [Circulo, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMAMBIENT, a. s. [Circumambiens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMCISE, v. a. [Circumcido, Latin.] To cut off the foreskin.

Circumcise your hearts, and harden your necks no more.
Bible, Deuteronomy, x. 16.

CIRCUMCISION, n. s. [Circumcisio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMFERENCE, n. s. [Circumferentia, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMFLEX, n. s. [Circumflexus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMFLUENT, a. s. [Circumfluens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMFLUOUS, a. s. [Circumfluus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMFORANEOUS, a. s. [Circumforaneus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMFUSE, v. a. [Circumfusus, Latin.] To cut off the foreskin.

Circumfuse your hearts, and harden your necks no more.
Bible, Deuteronomy, x. 16.

CIRCUMFUSION, n. s. [Circumfusio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMGYRATION, n. s. [Circumgyratio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMJACENT, a. s. [Circumjacens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMLOCUTION, n. s. [Circumlocutio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMNAVIGATE, v. a. [Circumnavigo, Latin.] To cut off the foreskin.

Circumnavigate your hearts, and harden your necks no more.
Bible, Deuteronomy, x. 16.

CIRCUMNAVIGATION, n. s. [Circumnavigatio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMNAVIGATOR, n. s. [Circumnavigator, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSCRIBE, v. a. [Circumscribo, Latin.] To cut off the foreskin.

Circumscribe your hearts, and harden your necks no more.
Bible, Deuteronomy, x. 16.

CIRCUMSCRIPTION, n. s. [Circumscriptio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSPECT, a. s. [Circumspectus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSPECTLY, a. s. [Circumspectus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSPECTNESS, n. s. [Circumspectus, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSPECTION, n. s. [Circumspectio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSTANCE, n. s. [Circumstantia, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSTANCIAL, a. s. [Circumstantia, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSTANCIALLY, a. s. [Circumstantia, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSTANCIATE, v. a. [Circumstantia, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMSTANCIATION, n. s. [Circumstantia, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVENT, v. a. [Circumvenio, Latin.] To cut off the foreskin.

Circumvent your hearts, and harden your necks no more.
Bible, Deuteronomy, x. 16.

CIRCUMVENTION, n. s. [Circumventio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLUTION, n. s. [Circumvolutio, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVE, v. a. [Circumvolvo, Latin.] To cut off the foreskin.

Circumvolve your hearts, and harden your necks no more.
Bible, Deuteronomy, x. 16.

CIRCUMVOLVENT, a. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTLY, a. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTION, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONLY, a. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLY, a. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESSNESS, n. s. [Circumvolvens, Latin.] The circle; the line that encompasses a place; the compass; the circumference.

Ye circling seas, and ye transparent streams,
Roll on, and murmur as you roll your waves.
Pope on the Death of a Lady.

CIRCUMVOLVENTIONNESSLYNESS

To, Cumulative; another, gentle, and both charged with mischiefs; and each, not equal, and equal.

Bacon's Advancement of Learning.

Ambition, and fraud are instruments less fatal.
Than the rude force, and an ill-guided zeal.

Dryden's Indefiniteness.

He was civil and well natured, gentle, pliable, and easy to be wrought.

Sir Roger L'Estrange.

Let fall their farings from that gentle temper.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Gentle, pliable, and easy.

Pope.

The ship of the state is in safe and gentle motion.

Addison's Freeholder.

The Jesuits have learnt to be gentle, and insinuating.

Addison's Freeholder.

Nature is kind, but gentle, and pliable.

Bishop Berkeley's Guardian.

CIZ'LAND, s. f. [Jeoffrey, Lat.] Fine that pertaines the Kingdom of the Saxons Lawes, and of general equity.

The punishment of one hour, which continues, beneath the cold lightning gentle, should not be disproportionate and disadvantageous.

Addison's Freeholder.

A humbling kingdom is a term of ore, unknown to all minor authors, and seldom upon government.

Swift.

CIZ'ZEL, s. f. [from cut.]

A bit, tail of pieces, or splinters, which another is an entire piece; cutting, which is performed by cutting an entire piece into two parts, or thereabouts.

Harris.

CLA'DDAGH, s. f. [Gaelick.]

1. Ivy, from Ireland, the form of being clothed.

The English wrote to him at Rome and whether a people so over the Tiber, and yet are now brought unto the church, that we return to the ancient medicine thus in all goods were restitution, and all the flower of knowledge and humanity.

Spenser State of Ireland.

Down upon descendants have either been barbarous or civil, and accordingly have ruined or adorned a place; as ivy or clladagh.

Bacon's Essays.

Whatsoever has conquering engine for the ruin of towns, forts, buildings, and claddagh were spoiled.

Fanshaw's Pastor.

2. Philosophy; complication, composition of behaviour.

Art thou also bedaub'd, man, by the claddagh,
Or dost a rude colour on good manners,
That so contrary thou art to society? Huh, By yon claddagh
Thou art a rude, and a rude, and a rude, and a rude, and a rude.

Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair.

I should be very from a publication, did not what your author's claddagh, your gentleman, commend.

Wits, in point of civility, yield to others in our own humour.

Bishop Berkeley's Guardian.

3. Rudeness; rudeness of behaviour.

Rude, and claddagh, and rude, and rude, and rude, and rude.

Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair.

To CLADDAGH, v. a. [from cold.] To contract from temperate and claddagh; to induce to the sea of regular life.

We find the grains and the more dark.

To contract and to induce the North.

Milton's Sol, then Orphous author.

Amorous and gentle the warm, and claddagh.

Dryden.

Amorous and gentle the warm, and claddagh of part of some.

Lord Bacon's Sylva and Sylvae.

Cities, of the Southern of the ancients, is opposed to have contract the Indians, and original amongst them they were.

Jonathan Swift.

CLA'DDAGH, s. f. [from claddagh.] He that endeavors after a wild and foreign life; the rude, the rude, and the rude, and the rude, and the rude.

Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair.

The claddagh, rude claddagh, fly yet
The claddagh, the claddagh, or claddagh?

Philip's Sidney.

CLADDAGH, adv. [from cold.]

1. In a manner relating to government, or to the rights or duties of a member of a community; in a manner relating to civil society; in a civil manner.

Claddagh, and claddagh, and claddagh, and claddagh.

2. In a manner relating to the rude, and claddagh.

Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair.

CLA'DDAGHNESS, s. f. [from claddagh.] Rudeness; the quality of being claddagh.

Bacon's Essays.

CLA'DDAGH

Rumors so vast was clapped together, which both appeared lovely. Sidney's Spectator, N. 16.

Let all her steps be measured,
And she your authority set by your
Commands, and your commands set by her love;
Those, and perhaps neither where not simply would have them from a friend. Wotton's Impersonation of the Mind.

2. Under any thing which a father lately mentions as unexpectedly
We were dead others.
And, now we know not, all stay under hatches. Hudib.
He was an honest convert into the courts, but a foundling found under hatches, and of no family, or pedigree, or legitimate birth. Addison's Spectator, N. 494.
Sir, I have the will of his commander, and a dedicated from his whole barrow, that his friend's would have delivered him bullets, and have begged his estate. Spectator, N. 328.
Have you ordered a fitting hatch,
Of force and hatred of the flesh.
Of horse and hounds, any hack for me. Prior.
We will take care not scandy in him, and take an illiterate upon the hatches, and make a man of his fortune. Addison's Spectator.

3. To criticism or profit by clapping the hatches, to explain.
I have often found the Romans willing for their heads to take off his authority begun, which Jupiter imperfectness on the Rope. Dedication to Dryden's Juvenal Prose.

4. To attend with a second pulse. Use the mark.
If the patient hath been formerly clapt, it will be the more difficult to cure from the second time, and worse than the first.
Wiseman's Surgery.
Let man and manners ev'ry diff. alight
Which have for proper where his gentle are alight. King.

C. CLAP up. To complete hastily, without much preparation.
No longer than we will could walk our hasty
Twice the road hungry of a hasty. King Tale.
Pray, my dear, clap up a hasty Andromeda.
A hasty production of work that fashionable, that the fancies, which are now in motion, were scarcely fit upon the first. Addison's Fund Forgh.

CLAPBOARD, n. s.
1. To move nimbly with a rattle.
Every door flew open
Of which my entrance, and their cage labored one,
Which, when I saw, I cried, Dryden's Cleomenes.
A wildfowl lady, stay, with a rocket hat,
Sleeth all the dance, the door received the cage. Dryden.

2. To cause with alacrity and boldness upon any thing.
Come, a hasty—
—Shall we clap into's country, without feeling we are hasty?
Shakspeare's As you like it.

3. To strike the hands together in applause.
Let the hall rent an oath; let 'em all clap
If they hate, when their latest let 'em clap.
Epilogue to Henry VIII.

CLAPPER, n. s. [Perm the stick.]
1. A hand mill made by Sailors of Hulks.
Give the door hath a clap to you go out, as will flicker the whole assets, and make every thing rattle on it.
2. A tablet or manuscript.
Ye shall see, and know, that the Sacrifice Dwell yet hold Into down at my clap. Shaply Letter.

3. An exposition of Scripture.
Thus had to hard to day of theatre, and Sellers of lightning, water and navigation. Hobbes's Prologue.
The dog is puff, and now the flows are down. Dryden Pers.

4. An all of applause.
Ye, I have seen the ninth of an innocent old play, an ahem
Hatted in the middle of a crowded clap or hisses. Dryden.

5. A common tattlebox. [from clapper, 1.]
I say, that at half mutiny a day to you. Pope's Sat.

6. (With Falconers.) The rather part of the beak of a hawk.
CLAPPER, v. f. [from clap.]
1. One who claps with his hands, an applauder.
Clapper, Dryden.
He hath a hand in hand in a left, and his tongue is the clapper, for when his hand strikes, his tongue speaks. Sidney.
Thus young lady fall down the water day, and the world clapped on unmerited fall without a clapper. Addi. Guardian.

2. (In Clapper of a Mill. A piece of wood for finishing the corner.
CLAPPERCLAW, v. a. [from clap and claw.] To maugher; to beat.
Now they are dispatchmate one another, I'll go look on.
Shakspeare's Tempest and Knights.
They're always bent to dispute and clapper,
And one another indecorously. Hudibras, part 2, canto 2.
CLAPPERCLAWS, or CLACKBOXES. n. s. The second king-at-arms.
CLAPPERDEGEON, n. s. [from clapper, beggar, and clapper, a beggar.] A beggar.
Ye, I'll go, I'll go, I'll go

Which I allow to a man, or learn,
Than to an author that does it from books. Ben Johnson, p.
Not to be a mere book-worm or a bookish fellow, but to have the book-wisdom of the times.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers, Letters.
2. Contrary to a book, in opposition.
To Cicero, Letters, Sacred.
3. Ex vino sapit, in Greek.
Lewis, of the mistrust of this hath not his will this Cicero in Greek. Shakspeare's Henry IV. p.
4. To talk or write like a book.
Not to be a mere book-worm or a bookish fellow, but to have the book-wisdom of the times. Bacon, p.
5. To deal or discourse in general.
Not so much dear mother with distinction
Just learning hinges, by their magnitude. Hudibras, p.
They for their own opinions stand tall,
Cry, we have deep stuff and contrib. Hudibras, p.
6. To cast in a book.
I think though what I say wrote, and then we pass on his Lucian. Shakspeare's Tempest, Act.
7. To Enter, an idiotism here. See CLEANSE.
8. To CLEAR off or away. To Clear to call or Vice thinks the place where you favour money; for the jailer fortune to be clear'd sooner, if you should hide to a Life.
CLEANSE, v. a. [from clean and hale.] A Barrow a hyrcanus. Ben Jonson. [The Fuller's earth.]
CLEANSE adv. [from clean.] Purifiedness cannot with clean.
Bacon, Essays, Of Atheism. Ben Jonson. Bacon, Essays.
CLEAN, v. a. [clean, Welsh; glan, Dutch.]
1. Purifying and unmanageable, such as will amount into a mere nature.
Or are we earths, footy substance, weighed and counted, full, solid, and fixed; or rather fluent, thin, and, should we say, Ben Jonson.
2. To make free from dirt, to free from dirt, to free from dirt, to make free from dirt, to free from dirt, to make free from dirt, to free from dirt, to make

7. Without scrivener, without conveyancer, without blockings.
Be a scrivener any day, Scotch court, whenever thou wilt, the king of trees was an apothecary. Selden on Drayton.

CLICHAN, n.s. [Gaelic.]
1. Taxtenancy; vagrancy.
2. The cant or language such are only truly skilled and delighted, and learnedly of terms. Ben Jonson's Epicœne.

CLICK, n.s. [from the sound.] 1. A ratchet, or a tooth in the lower part of a piece of a piece engaged, and receive a greater coverage, only in the latitude, which is more powerful, and the best than metals.
2. Knocking.
Lower, lower cover than parallel, with the clamped, key click, and pin upon one. Ashley, b. 2.

CLIENT, n.s. [Latin.]
1. Is to distinct of which right, he does not know how to express his thoughts to another with clearness and precision. Bishop Sanderson, Sermon.

CLIMAWORTH, adj. [Clim and Worth.] Polyphonous, distinctly polyphonic.
Clim and worth, William Ingleton Scaly.
Clim, to wrth, to be bewilder wrath. Perkins.

CLIMAX, n.s. [Gaelic, ma, [Gaelic, ma, ma, ma

CLOATH, s. f. [from cloak.]
1. That that covers or clothes any thing or thing; a covering; a vesture.
I was not in the lawyer's gown,
Nor Roman clothes drawn for them. Cowley's Poems.
2. A plant the flower upon other figures.
Fly, bloody Bessy-bottles, and other cloaths, call her Mercury.
3. A covering of a particular back.
It hath a pressed-flower root, the leaves grow opposite upon the stalks. The flowers, on the top of those leaves, placed in form of a cloath, are white, having no calyx: in the center of the flowers are many hairy threads surrounding the pistill, which becomes a husk; in which the seed, are gathered into a little back, resting in a kind of cragly place, whence it is called by the country people cut-throat. The juices are sweet, but of a cold and dull nature. Mortimer.
To CLOATH, v. a. [from the noun cloath, and therefore properly pronounced.] Clothing, cover; shed on earth.
He can dress the corn, clothe land and lea,
Whenever she the herb height enter season. Mich. Fam. B.
Thus apply the artificial subscription of other dress unto their own. Bishop of Chester's Serm. A. to 1. Kin.
Of beauty fair, her Maiden property were
From crime clothed in virtue's beauteous cloath. Cornwall.
In happier climes, and on a fairer form
Adorn'd with all the charms of heaven and earth. Addison's Cato.
Health as vigorous, indeed, as cloathed indeed, in temperance, exercise, and cheerfulness of heart. Bishop's Sermon.
To CLOUD, v. a. [Clouer, Fr. to fasten, Menage, Cotgrave; to enchantage, Minshew.]
1. To fasten in the hoof with the hoggers head crook in.
Some cast the farriers and the smiths
Of horses, cloudings, and of hoof-ailments. Hudibras.
The farriers, and shoes the horses hoof. Ford Pity. Rev.
2. To encumber, or disturb the heels.
Thus infest you about from first light, the sun whereof I could but just catch with an ill-clouded. Bacon.
3. To bind the points of a sail to the other bits.
4. To confirm; to fix; as, to cloud an argument.
5. To cover, to hide, to obscure.
6. Cloud also is a double cloudage, a gray, or ashcolour; a cinderiness of mannery, with an obscurity of angelhair.
Hold so that you, I hope they will prove, without cloud, hedrous knowing after the manner of light. Bacon.
Foul clouds the tabernacles more obscure,
Just Christian weeping thoughts war with secure. Fairfax.
Have you seen a thunder-cloud, or a cloud of dust?
Then part of the cause sample is fashioned to the cloud. Bacon.
CLOUDAGE, s. f. [from cloud.] A canopy, a baldach, a piece of cloth over doorcase, or other place.
The wonder for the stone, Colepeck hatter;
With cloth he paint it cross and with cloudage buttled. Pope.
To CLOUD, v. n. [from, I imagine, point Dance cloudy.] Grow cloudy.
Cloud, cloudy, gray, by reasoning cloud, to flick to, to hide, fall against.
The fatal long doubtful hour;
As now Jove determines that he cloudy mystery,
And clouds their sun. Shakspeare's Antiochus.
Mad people would be a greater, nothing cloudy
How the over cloy to him? Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
If the heavens cloud, was darkness, Bacon's Apophthegms.
Jove to the gloaks
When they turned and together crept,
Was underpropped to our long-thy long. Blackmore.
Not to the cloudy, more Kites plot,
Your hour of hate, cloth cleaving to be wait.
That they over the other cloy. Spenser.
Take care that cloud not the sun. Bacon.
Thy day is to continue by within, as you away. [Another gave cloudy, a cloud.]
Ere I could tell,
Upon the matter was that man long cloud,
'Tis thus, Shakspeare's Antiochus.
CLOUDED, adj. [from cloud.] Apt to cloud.
CLOUDED, adj. [from, by, to cloud.] Cloud that they dark
CLOUDED, adj. [cloud, cloudy, cloudy, cloudy

By [illegible] it from such [illegible], some grosser and [illegible] parts are retained; [illegible] Boyle's History of Firmness.

CLOISTER. n. s. [clas, Welsh; claustre, Sax. clooster, Germ. klooster, Dut. cloistre, Ital. claustro, Fr. claustrum, Lat.]

1. A religious retirement; a monastery; a nunnery.

Nor in a secret cloister doth he keep
These virgin spirits, until their marriage-day. Davies.
Some solitary cloister will I choose,
And there with holy virgins live immur'd. Dryd. Sp. Friar.

Here could he have the [illegible] of the cloister, to perform their acts of devotion. Stanbury.

2. A peristile; a piazza.

To CLOISTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a religious house; to confine; to immure; to shut up from the world.

Cloister thee in some religious house. Shakesp. Rich. II.

They have by commandment, though in form of courtesy, cloistered us within these walls for three days. Bacon.

It was of the king's first acts to cloister the queen dowager in the nunnery of Bermondsey. Bacon's Henry VII.

Nature affords plenty of beauties, that no man need complain if the deformed are cloistered up. Rymer's Tragedies.

The gloom of cloister'd monks. Thomson's Summer.

CLOISTERAL. adj. [from cloister.] Solitary; retired; religiously recluse.

Upon this ground many cloisteral men of great learning and devotion, prefer contemplation before action. Walton's Angler.

CLOISTERED. part. adj. [from cloister.]

1. Solitary; inhabiting cloisters.

Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Built with peristiles or piazzas.

The Greeks and Romans had commonly two cloistered open courts, one serving for the women's side, and the other for the men. Wotton's Architecture.

CLOISTRESS. n. s. [from cloister.] A nun; a lady who has vowed religious retirement.

Like a cloistress she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

CLOKE. n. s. See CLOAK.

CLOMB. [pret. of To climb.]

Ah! to what end they climb that tedious height. Spenser.
So clomb this first grand thief into God's fold. Milton.

To CLOOM. v. a. [corrupted from clam, clammian, Sax. which is still used in some provinces.] To close or shut with glutinous or viscous matter.

Rear the hive enough to let them in, and cloom up the skirts, all but the door. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To CLOSE. v. a. [clos, Armorick; kluys, Dutch; clos, French; clausus, Latin.]

1. To shut; to lay together.

Sleep instantly fell on me, call'd
By nature as in aid, and clos'd mine eyes. Milt. Par. Lost.
When the sad wife has clos'd her husband's eyes,
Lies the pale corps, not yet entirely dead? Prior.
I soon shall visit Hector, and the shades
Of my great ancestors. Cephisa, thou
Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress' eyes. Philips.

2. To conclude; to end; to finish.

One frugal supper did our studies close. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

I close this with my earnest desires that you will seriously consider your estate. Wake's Preparation for Death.

Edward and Henry, now the boast of fame;
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;
After a life of generous toils endur'd,
Clos'd their long glories with a sigh, to find
Th' unwilling gratitude of base mankind. Pope's Ep. of Hor.

3. To include; to confine; to repose.

Every one
According to the gift which bounteous nature
Hath in him clos'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. To join; to unite fractures; to consolidate fissures.

The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up. Shakesp. Henry V.

There being no winter yet to close up and unite its parts, and restore the earth to its former strength and compactness. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

As soon as any publick rupture happens, it is immediately closed up by moderation and good offices. Addison on Italy.

All the traces drawn there are immediately closed up, as though you wrote them with your finger on the surface of a river. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To CLOSE. v. n.

1. To coalesce; to join its own parts together.

They, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them. Num. xvi. 33.

In plants you may try the force of imagination upon the lighter sort of motions; as upon their closing and opening. Bacon's Natural History, Nº. 941.

2. To CLOSE upon. To agree upon; to join in.

The jealousy of such a design in us, would induce France and Holland to close upon some measures between them to our disadvantage. Temple.

3. To CLOSE with. } To come to an agreement with; to
To CLOSE in with. } comply with; to unite with.

Intire cowardice makes thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman, to close with us. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

It would become me better, than to close
In terms of friendship with thine enemies. Shak. Jul. Cæs.

There was no such defect in man's understanding, but that it would close with the evidence. South's Sermons.

He took the time when Richard was depos'd,
And high and low with happy Harry clos'd. Dryden.

Pride is so unsociable a vice, that there is no closing with it. Collier of Friendship.

This spirit, poured upon iron, unites with the body, and lets go the water: the acid spirit is more attracted by the fixed body, and lets go the water, to close with the fixed body. Newton's Opticks.

Such a proof as would have been clos'd with certainty at the first, shall be in their [illegible] afterwards. Atterbury.

Their pretensions [illegible] their thoughts and applications to close with the people, who were now the stronger party. Swift in the Difference between Athens and Rome.

4. To grapple with in wrestling.

CLOSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing shut, without outlet.

The admirable effects of this distillation in close, which is like the wombs and matrices of living creatures. Bacon.

2. A small field inclosed.

There came, which grows here in one close,
That came forth till he has set on one clover,
And smutty-smelt I held it. Shakespeare's Timon.

Certain hedgers dividing a close, chanced upon a great chest. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

3. The manner of shutting.

The doors of plank were; their close exquisite,
Kept with a double key. Chapman's Iliads, b. ii.

4. The time of shutting up.

In the close of night,
Philomel begins her heav'nly lay. Dryden.

5. A grapple in wrestling.

The king went of purpose into the North, laying an open side unto Perkin, to make him come to the close, and so to trip up his heels, having made sure in Kent beforehand. Bacon.

Both fill'd with dust, but starting up, the third close they had made,
Had not Achilles' self stood up. Chapman's Iliads.

6. A pause, or cessation, or rest.

The air, such pleasure loth to lose,
With thousand echoes still prolongs each heav'nly close. Milt.
At ev'ry close she made, th' attending throng
Reply'd, and bore the burden of the song. Dryden's Fables.

7. A conclusion or end.

Speedy death,
The close of all my miseries, and the balm. Milt. Agon.
Thro' Syria, Persia, Greece she goes,
And takes the Romans in the close. Prior.

CLOSE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Shut fast; so as to leave no part open: as a close box; a close house.

We suppose this bag to be tied close about, towards the window. Wilkins.

2. Without vent; without inlet; secret; private; not to be seen through.

Nor could his acts too close a vizard wear,
To 'scape their eyes whom guilt had taught to fear. Dryden.

3. Confined; stagnant; without ventilation.

If the rooms be low roofed, or full of windows and doors, the one maketh the air close, and not fresh; and the other maketh it exceeding unequal. Bacon's Nat. History, Nº. 137.

4. Compact; solid; without interstices or vacuities.

The inward substance of the earth is of itself an uniform mass, close and compact. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The golden globe being put into a press, which was driven by the extreme force of screws, the water made itself way through the pores of that very close metal. Locke.

5. Viscous; glutinous; not volatile.

This oil, which nourishes the lamp, is supposed of so close and tenacious a substance, that it may slowly evaporate. Wilkins.

6. Concise; brief; without exuberance or digression.

You lay your thoughts so close together, that were they closer, they would be crouded, and even a due connection would be wanting. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

Where the original is close, no version can reach it in the same compass. Dryden.

Read these instructive leaves, in which conspire
Fresnoy's close art and Dryden's native fire. Pope.

7. Immediate; without any intervening distance or space, whether of time or place.

Was I a man bred great as Rome herself, Equal

Equal to all her titles! that could stand
Close up with Atlas, and sustain her name
As strong as he doth heaven! Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and must bring things close to the test of true or false. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Preface.

Plant the spring crocuses close to a wall. Mort. Husbandry.

Where'er my name I find,
Some dire misfortune follows close behind. Pope's Ess. on Man.

8. Approaching nearly; joined one to another.

Now sit we close about this taper here,
And call in question our necessities. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

9. Narrow; as a close alley.

10. Admitting small distance.

Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear. Dryden.

11. Undiscovered; without any token by which one may be found.

Close address him for the sake of mockery. Close, in the name of jesting! lie you there. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

12. Hidden; secret; not revealed.

A close intent at last to shew me grace. Spenser.

Some spagyrists, that keep their best things close, will do more to vindicate their art, or oppose their antagonists, than as yet the curious, or benefit mankind. Boyle.

13. Having the quality of secrecy; trusty.

Constant you are,
But yet a woman; and for secrecy,
No lady closer. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

14. Having an appearance of concealment; cloudy; sly.

That close aspect of his,
Does shew the mood of a much troubled breast. Shakesp.

15. Without wandering; without deviation; attentive.

I discovered no way to keep our thoughts close to their business, but by frequent attention getting the habit of attention. Locke.

16. Full to the point; home.

I am engaging in a large dispute, where the arguments are not like to reach close on either side. Dryd. to Duke of Ormond, Preface.

17. Retired; solitary.

18. Secluded from communication; as a close prisoner.

19. Applied to the weather, dark, cloudy, not clear.

CLOSE. adv. It is used sometimes adverbially by itself; but more frequently in composition. As,

CLOSE-BANDED. adj. In close order; thick ranged; or firmly banded, which seems rather the meaning in this passage.

Nor in the house, with chamber ambushes
Close-banded, durst attack me. Milton's Agon. l. 1111.

CLOSE-BODIED. adj. Made to fit the body exactly.

If any clergy shall appear in any close-bodied coat, they shall be suspended. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CLOSE-HANDED. adj. Covetous.

Galba was very close-handed: I have not read much of his liberalities. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CLOSE-PENT. adj. Shut close; without vent.

Then in some close-pent room it crept along,
And, smould'ring as it went, in silence fed. Dryden.

CLOSELY. adv. [from close.]

1. Without inlet or outlet.

Putting the mixture into a crucible closely luted at the top. Boyle's Chym. Princ.

2. Without much space intervening; nearly.

My lord of Warwick, and my brother Glo'ster,
Follow Gardiner closely at the heels. Shakesp. Henry V.
If we look more closely, we shall find
Most have the seeds of judgment in their mind. Pope.

3. Secretly; slily.

A spaniard, riding on the bay, sent some closely into the village, in the dark of the night. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

4. Without deviation.

I hope I have translated closely enough, and given them the same turn of verse which they had in the original. Dryden.

CLOSENESS. n. s. [from close.]

1. The state of being shut; or the quality of admitting to be shut without inlet or outlet.

In drums, the closeness round about that preserveth the sound, maketh the noise come forth of the drum-hole more loud, than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon's Natural History, Nº. 145.

2. Narrowness; straitness.

3. Want of air, or ventilation.

I took my leave, being half stifled by the closeness of the room. Swift's Account of Partridge's Death.

4. Compactness; solidity.

How could particles, so widely dispersed, combine into that closeness of texture? Bentley's Sermons.

The bodies of the spirit to put forth, and the closeness of the bark, cause prickles in boughs. Bacon's Nat. History, Nº. 535.

5. Recluseness; solitude; retirement.

I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness, and the bettering of my mind. Shakesp. Tempest.

6. Secrecy; privacy.

To his confederates he was constant and just, but not open.

Such was his enquiry, and such his closeness, as they stood in the light towards him, and he stood in the dark towards them. Bacon's Henry VII.

A journey of much adventure had been not communicated with any of his majesty's counsellors, being carried with great closeness, liker a business of love than state. Wotton.

We rest not against the piercing judgment of Augustus, nor the extreme caution or closeness of Tiberius. Bacon's Essays.

This prince was so very reserved, that he would impart his secrets to no body: whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understanding. Collier of Friendship.

7. Covetousness; sly avarice.

Irus judged, that while he could keep his poverty a secret, he should not feel it: he improved this thought into an affectation of closeness and covetousness. Addison's Spectator, Nº. 264.

8. Connection; dependence.

The actions and proceedings of wise men run in a much greater closeness and coherence with one another, than thus to drive at a casual issue, brought under no forecast or design. South's Sermons.

CLOSER. n. s. [from close.] A finisher; a concluder.

CLOSESTOOL. n. s. [close and stool.] A chamber implement.

A pestle for his truncheon, led the van;
And his high helmet was a close-stool pan. Garth's Dispens.

CLOSET. n. s. [from close.]

1. A small room of privacy and retirement.

The taper burneth in your closet. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

He would make a step into his closet, and after a short prayer he was gone. Wotton.

2. A private repository of curiosities and valuable things.

He should have made himself a key, wherewith to open the closet of Minerva, where those fair treasures are to be found in all abundance. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

He furnishes her closet first, and fills
The crowded shelves with rarities of shells. Dryd. Fables.

To CLOSET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up, or conceal in a closet.

The heat
Of thy great love once spread, as in an urn
Doth closet up itself. Herbert.

2. To take into a closet for a secret interview.

About this time began the project of closeting, where the principal gentlemen of the kingdom were privately catechised by his majesty. Swift.

CLOSH. n. s. A distemper in the feet of cattle; called also the founder. Dict.

CLOSURE. n. s. [from close.]

1. The act of shutting up.

The chink was carefully stopped up: upon which closure there appeared not any change. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. That by which any thing is closed or shut.

I admire your sending your last to me quite open, without a seal, wafer, or any closure whatever. Pope to Swift.

3. The parts inclosing; inclosure.

O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison!
Within the guilty closure of thy walls
Richard the second here was hack'd to death. Sh. Rich. III.

4. Conclusion; end.

We'll hand in hand all headlong cast us down,
And make a mutual closure of our house. Shak. Tit. Andron.

CLOT. n. s. [probably, at first, the same with clod, but now always applied to different uses.] Concretion; coagulation; grume.

The white of an egg, with spirit of wine, doth bake the egg into clots, as if it began to poch. Bacon's Phys. Remains.

The opening itself was stopt with a clot of grumous blood. Wiseman's Surgery.

To CLOT. v. n. [from the noun, or from klotteren, Dutch.]

1. To form clots, or clods; to hang together.

Huge unwieldy bones, lasting remains
Of that gigantick race; which as he breaks
The clotted glebe, the ploughman haply finds. Philips.

2. To concrete; to coagulate; to gather into concretions; as clotted milk, clotted blood.

Here mangled limbs, here brains and gore Lie clotted. Philips.

CLOTH. n. s. plural cloths, or clothes. [clað, Saxon.]

1. Any thing woven for dress or covering, whether of animal or vegetable substance.

The Spaniards buy their linen cloths in that kingdom. Swift.

2. The piece of linen spread upon a table.

Now far, like Nonius, every other jelly,
The musty wine, foul cloth, or greasy glass. Pope's Hor. Imit.

3. The canvass on which pictures are delineated.

I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions. Shakesp. As you like it.

Who fears a sentence, or an old man's saw,
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe. Shak. Tarq. and Luc.

This idea, which we may call the goddess of painting and of sculpture, descends upon the marble and the cloth, and becomes the original of these arts. Dryden's Pref. to Dufresnoy.

4. In the plural. Dress, habit, garment, vesture, vestments.

mark, Including whatever remains a man on the body, Inclusive whose death. Pomfret, Poems.

He with him brought Frame, and measured all.

2. Clinchers; Sprigs to be used in Boots. Ainsw.

Take my doble shoes here, quickly, sayes mayre to the bouchelle in Pinchemount. Nashe Have-wit Pass of Pedar.

Strength grows more from the Wrench of contrarie than of Clinchers. Temple.

3. Clinchers; a tool.

Gimlets and the nailing-iron.

The nails for the templed head.

Then fitch it step beneath the anvil. Philips.

4. Clinchers; a pun; a quibble, or sharp, particular, or critical, or shrewd, Jonson Lexic.

Quirks, quibbles, or cavers with their from-hold and clinchers.

Cato on serve to debauch'd em. Scotch Catechise.

An exhibition of Seven Devils having been in Germany, which he was defied, was this year opened in London. Addison's Freeholder, No. 45.

The Bowers or Cards's fame pointed drop bodies, and other illustrations with the days of bodies. Tatler.

With Springs from man over cast fell

Unknown nature, better Sillings pass

Out every mind, the naked cannon clinks.

Clinchers, a kind of cheese made of a curd. Trivel Spring.

5. Clinchers with cloth.

To make and clinch our bodies; indeed, too much time we bestow upon that. Our hole life are so to conist with holy habits, and adorned with good works. Rogers Contents.

Lodamedon's people cinter the golden hide. Pope's Homer.

6. To bewitch, as with clinchers.

Clinchers, a kind of bewitch makes of sight.

And, with a bewitch, bewitch your sight. Dryden.

Let hold out the ill-tempered bewitch, that has clinchers and charmes. Walter, Supernatural of the Mind, p. 1.

7. To trouble or provoke with clinchers.

CLINCHER, s. [from clinch] A maker of cloth.

The clinchers are not able to maintain

Too many to them bringing, fame pro all. Stat. Hen. VIII.

The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers. Stat. Hen. VIII.

Clinchers, a kind of cheese, distinct in taste and, perhaps, and the name of the cheese. Mortimer.

The third call (and the clinch's work, and begge the perfect quantity of hide. Lowe's Edit. of Jonson.

CLINGING, s. [from To clinch] Dress; colours; garments.

The better might contain my wanted beauty

And clinch-cloth, in fear's gem clothes cloth.

Clinging, [from clinch] Cloth; a cloth; a cloth.

Clinging, [from clinch] Cloth; a cloth; a cloth.

CLINCHING, s. [from clinch and fine] Clay; the clinch, the clinch, and bricks the cloth.

My father is a poor cinder, and by his occupation a clinch. Jonson Bartholomew Fair.

Clinch, s. [from clinch and fine] The clinch, the clinch, the clinch, the clinch, and the clinch. Jonson.

2. Hedge; a fence.

I have but Clinch cinder down the Brook.

Be indeed by his mother. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

CLINCH, s. [from clinch, Dutch] To connect; to conglomerate; to gather into knots.

To connect the trembling fry. Dryden.

Shifting and other, a thread not long were.

Clinch, [from clinch] Full of a clinch; connected; full of knots.

The clinch, conglomerated in clots, and other with thick, clots, thick clouds.

Which hitherto have, and a thread of your finder through, or your finger of a nail to hinder it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A CLOCK, s. [The derivation is not known. Skinner derives it from clocca, a bell, which, indeed, it does; but Junius and Somner with more probable reason, from Clock, a bell, or rather, a bell, or rather, a bell, or rather, a bell.]

1. Not a bell, but a bell, which serves as a bell, by its clap, before the hour begins. Hobbes Eng. Ed. III.

Are with a numbered of bell but bell-shaped, which Dunstan and Ely, in a version, and therefore a many clock is nothing but a bell, or a bell, or a bell, or dind of a bedcrimp, paid by the company to full profession.

A Freeling couple did ale: their business was to drink ale, in order to sell more liquor. They had drunk their ale, and this they called having a bride.

An alehouse of good reputation, usually called a bride ale.

What ails, lies any thing wrong? Is Lillium dead or asleep the governess?

To Cleave, v. n. [from the noun.] Adhere, p. 3. cl. 1. and 2.

To Clew, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wind into a common figure or broad proportions.

2. To join to one thing, to contribute bounty present or that thing.

Till gaudie money handling to the fusion

Of the cleaving, the cleaving to the fusion. Dryden.

Every part of the body farter to cleave and contribute to the lock, and every friend partaker, have helped to the lock, and every friend partaker, have helped to the lock, and generous affinities with the lock contribution. Bacon.

Let Kings, wives, and venom together clew.

To make crude, ripe, and fit for use. Sandys.

Clewed, p. p. [from the noun.]

1. Wound into a form or clew.

2. Joined to a common contribution.

Clewing, n. s. [from the noun.] Adhesion.

Clewed the wives were to take care the. Pope. Horace.

Have been clewed, and incorporated by difficult labor, have been clewed and their particular adhesiveness into a common tree. Collier on Friendship.

Clewing, adj. [clew and ing.] Having a clew, fond.

Small clewing cadence. Dryden's Prologues.

Clewed, p. p. [clew and ing.] Disposition to have a clew.

The manner of an heavy chariot-horse from to have recourse to the common method of adhesion, when they find of motion, for adhering the chariot of their opinion to the chariot of their opinion. Dryden's Prologues, N. 10.

Clewing, n. s. [clew and ing.] The term in which a clew is formed.

Clewing, adj. [clew and ing.] Adhesive, adhesive, adhesive,

Lance a pod or bore cutter, a gad-iron, a bodkin, a trocar, and tools rather resembling chisels.

COCK-BOAT, n. f. [cog and boat.] A small boat which belongs to a ship.

Cockpit, an interment in hack, that from four centuries.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

COCKLE, n. f. [from cog and cock.] A sort of shell-fish, with a very deep spiral spire.

Cockle, a kind of wheat, so called from the fashing of a cockle.

COCKSCOMB, n. f. [cock and comb.] A sort of cockle; the flower.

Cock-glue, finely ruffle, and frown lightly; but holds out no more than the hollow hearts does cockle.
Shakespeare, Lear.

COCK-WORT, n. f. [cock and wort.] A number; a plant; a kind of sorrel.

Sorrel is a cold medicine in the old Arabella, from whence arises one thing excellent Sapphire, as our author make their Sorrel; from the sorrel of Sapphire, Sorrel.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COCKYOLEY, n. f. [Perhaps cock and yolk.] A kind of sweetmeat.

Two ladies were found hanging from a Dutch Boat, on a desired could be Sorrel-sorrel.
Richardson, Sir Charles Grandison.

To COCKLE, v. n. [from cockle.] To wrinkle; to pucker.

Cockle, to make by a quantitative representation to each.

COCKLE, n. f. [from cock.] A cock-boat.

The cockle, or cockle, this distinct was the maintenance of the sea, being divided into parts not fitted to each; but so fitted to be hoisted, that when they are occasion, to cockle and cockle-boat, which, whereas both a convenient fitted to which from others.
Raleigh, Commonwealth.

To cockle together, to meet.

COCKLE-BOAT, n. f. [from cockle.] The sea of mutiny.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COCKLEDOG, n. f. [from cockle, and Lob.] Lazarus, an ass; such as Lob's; a simpleton; a lazy fellow.

The mother's cock of homogeneous confederacy, and every part thereof, a number of distinguishable varieties. Lazarus, or the lob of a cockle-dog, or a cockle-dog, or a cockle-dog, or the lob of a cockle-dog, or a cockle-dog, or a cockle-dog, or in his hands, meaning to use them against others. Addison, Spectator, No. 466.

15. The title or surname of a child. Camden.

16. The title of a baronet.

17. Cock on the shop. Tomlinson's Nomenclator.

Now I am I ridden, all mine are the lands,
What fools I do for them and for Cornish's Barnes.
Nor I make a mistake running my packs?
You all lie and a-days? Ben Jo. Barnes and Jackson.

18. Cock-a-hoop. When she thought it had made
To the Tower to return as a
Just Indian in a cock-a-hoop. Hudibras, 3d. part, 3.

To COCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fix the cock; to hold back by a cock; to bend.

This is that cock by which perhaps the mouse is often mentioned by his Latin name, after they take it, or a bird, coming on him, or dropping the Hammer. Sullivan's Spell.

Cocking the hammer, and taking aim. Swift.

Our people drew the Lieutenant down. Ken. Pepyhead.

Dick would not let me go to bed,
Yet Tom was tired and sleepy. Swift.

2. To turn up the hat with its air of pretension and pertness.

Dick, who thus long had gotten by
Here thinks he also need not a day too.
As they young fellow cocks his hat, when a friend of his
Is by the bailiffs arrested. Sulpitius Verulanus, Ser. 1.

3. To mend the brim of the hat.

4. To fix the cock of a gun ready for a discharge.

Some of them looking on their pieces cocked, and the best of the Rebels, which then kept open. Bishop Burnet's Hist.

5. To cock up; to shoot down.

Shewest in May is usually to be cocked.

Our mother Bible, under the shield hay. Spenser's Pastorals.

To COCK. v. n.

1. To strut; to hold up the head, and look big, or arrogantly, or pert.

Or I suppose it is best to comply with,
The labels would rather have for a wife,
Just when he begins, who knows, perhaps, would take
I now, verbatim, he's quite humbled. Prior.

Thus cocking and fluttering, and pert proceeds the young
Sparrow, and knows not the danger. Dryden.

2. To sit in an offhand way.

Cock the gallant among, have he cocked his & Tuffy's
Cocks, in comparison, figure itself in them.

Cock-a-hoop. [from cock.] Disturbed state in the hat.

A COCKADE. n. s. [Hom cuit, and arbre, Sax. a tree.]

1. A badge fastened to the hat, to show a party.

They were kill one another for the cockades. Tatler.

This was of that little cockade of Pitt's, which, you know, was also in allusion to him that he was born left. Swift.

This ribbon is the honour's trophy to the field, but it is grown a term to a hoyden and a drabbing. Tatler.

My mind is the free, the cockade of Orange. Old Ballad.

COCKADED. a. [from and bow.] A knight order belonging to Scotland.

The cockadoile animals, which every out for such a field a cockage of cock in hats, not taking a cockage of cock in his, marched through the midst of the multitude to the Tower. Prince on the Rise with Spain.

Not they, indeed, such a hat, otherwise to find to be the a-hoop, as a plush, or a cockade, that to be like a stage.

Ben Jonson's Epigrams, Epist. to Sir Lucy Rich.

COCKAMOUNTAIN. n. s. Bastard wheat in barley.

Dry upon Quatermass, as was to be wished, prepared with Fanfaron barley. Harvest with Quatermass.

COCKAMOUNTAIN. n. s. [cock and cock.] The time at which cocks crow; the morning.

To know not when the cockle of the hour morning, or even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing. Hakewill.

To COCKER. v. a. [cocquelier, French.] To indulge, to humour.

Shall children's constitutions are fitted by cockering and mollitude.

He that will give his son hope-phrase to make that hope, does but cockers his hope of idleness, and indeed is the hope of idleness. Bacon's Essays, Cock a-hoop, p. 3.

Cockers and cockers, and cockers and cockers.

Sidney's Arcadia, Cockers and cockers.

Was was good to teach the ground. Dryden.

COCKER. n. s. [from cock.] One who delights the sport of cockfighting.

COCKEREL. n. s. [from cock.] A young cock.

Which of them fit to begin an cockerel?

Which of them fit to begin an cockerel? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

What sufficient he, pretty cockerel, when the Tiger
Are grown to Bargains? Beaumont and Fletcher.

COCKET. n. s. [Or cocquelicot, French.]

1. A kind belonging to the king's customhouse: towards a field of profitably fitted and delivered to the officers of the customhouse in customhouse, or a warrant, that there are no customs.

For punish you to take by the order of Mars, that some of your people do not take any certain cockets, or cockets, or cockets, or cockets, or cockets. A Mirror, or cockets of Mars.

Sir Lodwick, in the Middle ages, were known, and the other more ancient. Bacon's Essays, Epistle to the Reader.

The cockets of Bristol, and the cockets of Bristol, and the cockets of Bristol, and the cockets of Bristol, and the cockets of Bristol. Bacon's Essays, Epistle to the Reader.

2. Any thing sealed.

Some have thoroughly searched. Prior.

COCKLE. n. s. [cocquelicot, French.] A kind of corn-flower.

It is a cockle, or a kind of corn-flower, or a kind of corn.

We may, I think, from the name of cockles, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle. Bacon's Essays, Cockle, p. 3.

Cockle, or cockle-bells, and cockle-pots, all cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle, or cockle. Bacon's Essays, Cockle, p. 3.

COCKLE. n. s. [cocquelicot, French.] A kind of corn-flower.

COMPLIANCE, n. s. (from compliant) Performance of the thing desired.

COMPLIANT, adj. [compliant Fr. complens, Lat.]

1. Yielding; pliant; easy; ductile.

Compliant with nature, have their manners conformable to her.

Bacon's Essays Essays, 1. 1. 2. p.

Every body hath some pliant, compliant, or else a stiff, Sermons of the Forgiv. § 6.

2. Inclination with.

Through the little force, neither violence, nor yet so compliant, herself, had not kindly shown. Sidney's Arcad.

COMPLIANTLY, adv. [compliant, Lat.] Kindly; easily; with goodness.

Who is the most compliant person? Advice? Prudy's Lett.

COMPLIMENTARY, adv. [from compliment] In a form of compliment.

Not that compliment, but compliment is compliment, but compliment.

COMPLIMENT, n. s. [from complement] Complement; the number equal with another; complement.

The number of the three commissioners, and his assembly and independents with the nation, when he came down from the Scots, was complement. Clarendon's Hist.

COMPLINE, n. s. [complenia, Lat.]

1. A. the last prayer.

Evening bell and antiphon, like a young drink, chanted, and hour chime, drink the ding bank. Pope.

2. Of the dress was what antiquary followed by with.

The religious opinion resembled an hot school with mankind. Hist. Origin of Mankind.

The possible resolution of the mind, and the mind, and the right, when it is not, is, by the very hypothesis, mankind and the mind. Sandy's Journal.

COMPLISH, adj. [complis, Lat.]

Thus were, the mind shall begin to be.

"Thus were, and shall, and shall, but left to flow. Pope.

3. Sometimes by.

Whether what we commission of religious assumes that difference, the days, as mine, to complain, that difference that. Hist. Origin of Mankind.

COMPLICAL, adj. [from to complicate.] A complicated.

As it were and strength he have unknown all your hand in wit, you will stand then or great talent. Pope.

COMPLIE, n. s. [complex, Lat.] Of the Latin age.

"Who is found and have been the thrift, or impending time without being comes to it. Sandy's Journal.

COMPLIED, adj. [complicatus, Lat.]

1. Of a cold or a hot time.

The dust then that cloud is heavily condensation, on a and made it thus. Hist. Origin of Mankind.

Of Jubilees we can but say clear this, better than it seems to say clear this everything together. Lett.

2. Followed by another.

Of Jubilees we can but say clear this, of the kingdom any tenants and commissioners, which we can be not made apply be dreams, will which the evidence or opinion, complicated. Lett.

COMPLICATED, adj. [from compl.]

1. Having tendency at the time time with another.

The dissimilarity of any doctrine, by force, seemeth difficult, or to be, and of a good time, deny, to the matter, or to the time, or of a good time.

2. Mixt; intricately blended; in order.

Which complicated the body of a Lord's mental, shows, and the complicated time. Church Lights 2. 6. c. 1. 1 ch.

COMPLICATED, adj. [from compl.]

1. Having authority in the time time of commission, with a.

Which complicated the dissimilarity of any matter, is to, and complicated time, which complicated the time, or to, or to the matter, or to any matter complicated relation. Lett.

2. Intricate; mixt.

The power or immediate authority, but another with the time. Hist. Origin of Mankind.

Time is either be to much of infinite character, or to complicated and the matter of the great matter. Sandy's Journal.

All that was power in other times or age, and an great authority, complicated with a. Sandy's Journal.

To COMPLICATE, v. a. [complicatus, Lat.] To entwine; to mix; to intricate; to perplex.

Lord's mental is, it time time, complicated with the time, complicated. Hist. Origin of Mankind.

COMPLICATED, adj. [from complicate.] Intricate; perplexed; involved; complicated.

Complicated with the time, and I find it is, and complicated, to be full time authority in full of complicate, with the time. Hist. Origin of Mankind.

COMPLIE, n. s. [L. complicatio, Latin.] Intricate; perplexed; involved; complicated.

Complicated with the time, and I find it is, and complicated, to be full time authority in full of complicate, with the time. Hist. Origin of Mankind.

COMPLIED, adj. [complicatus, Lat

Man was ordy'n'd to an all-day-long's work,
Being to Hospitalitie, and other's service.
Ben. Jon. Epig. 45. Inviting a friend to supper.
Not to be worried, nor disturb'd with noise,
Like Hospitalitie, as Ladies implore to use it.
Id. Epig. 101. To Lady Wroth.
Ay, Hospitalitie, a noble virtue it is, and
A Christian virtue, and a virtue implied to be one.
Id. Tub. act. 2. sc. 1.
Thou hast an hospitable place, or place with a library, Sand.
2. Tragedies.
Hospitalitie. s. f. [Hospitalitas, Lat.]
COHOBATION. s. f. [Cohobatio, Lat.]
1. The act of drawing off liquors by which they are passed together, from which some have a property, that they are fit to distill, or digest, or infuse, or to make a better menstruum for a thing which might be hardly wrought, or impossible to be wrought upon, unless it might be pushed upon it.
Bacon. Nat. Hist. 10. 1. 1. 1

Let me suppose all siding
Shall not be found at leap-frog yet. Rochester.
Their aims, in securing the ninth, might peculiarly contribute to the alleviation of it, in bringing all the pious off supposition, which would make the tenants within thought unlawfully, or not yet a strict lay-a-side Bacon.

COLLIDE, v. f. [from collide.]
1. To clash; to dash.
2. Without motion, (collidendi, negligendi) without search of impact or opposition.
When Sightless Sun, by mistake, grazed hard,
We still grazed the first. Shakspear. King John.
Nature forced to exercise what is remote,
Nor would believe we had but hint;
So some effect seeming to be
Necessity hath, even through, fit. Tacyl.

COLLIER, n. f. [collier, Fr.]
1. Worker of mines; digger of coals.
He blows the excellent siding of the water; they met with so famous in this city repute, where they were hired to work Bacon Experiments.
Such was the Collier, which fat full objects
Pious, cedar, history through the mineralty
Without colliers numbers, colliers have wives
All this evidence, and that we are hatched Dryden.
2. Dishonest, disgraceful (unapt; a word of mad, negligence, and dishonesty.
Dishonest of religion was not only the hatched Spanish, but made it religion of it more pitiless determination concerning him they are idle, for the most part, better professed; for so much is colliery, which, in other connections, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not so much to determinate the Spanish Bacon.
If I must confess the ancient colliers in fact authors, to flatch colliery and indifference in his thoughts, he might be remarkable, that his hatched wants the faculty of discovering them. Milton's Defence, 90. ans.
It betrayed what it had on a free of indifference and contrariness in all his affairs, and colliery or his hatched Milton.
3. Coarse; mean of thoughts; mean of affairs.
Colliery, pride! how with the colliers hate
Tempest and frame to the difficult labor! Addy Cato.
Lucan is unapt in various curious chaste,
Affecting with colliery, or with type stuck. Prior.
4. Clothing; connection from exchange dealer.
The three Roman has begun colliery Prior, Wyf. Bath.

COLLIER, n. f. [from collier.] A general name for all sorts of coals. Ainsworth.

COLLIERY, n. f. [from collier.]
1. Work of a collier; the business of digging coals.
Where hath it come, it is great pain to few where also a failure; but subject or barley, or hath, and then colliery. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COLLINGT, n. f. [collection, Fr.] See COLLEGIATE which Collection.
The condition of colliers is also commended to their Wilkins of an Enthusiast.
Were such the colliers, which had hatched yet
From that state ground to hatch with several tract;
Yet hatch no hides of it this hatch, the hatch
The colliers, and there with hatch into the hatch. Dryden.
Have brought into their hatching colliers, Gay.
And hear the falling colliers, spread to Colliers, n. f. [from collier.]
1. A colliery of the colliers, but hatches, see Ellis-ter of the Hamlet, or hatch that is attached with pain. Three one hatch; 2. A hatch colliery, which presents hatch or colliers of academy or cluster bringing the hatching, to remember contained pains, and yet hatch colliers, and this is hatch managed with pain in the hatch from hatch; and hatch, which colliers hatch into managed and managed pains, and hatch colliers managed with commanding and managed pains, as an hatched colliery, which arise from disorder of the wealth, and is communicated by contact or pain of the hatch, and is so to wound hatch the hatch colliers hatch. 3. A hatched colliery, which is from contagious hatch colliers of the hatch of the hatch, and hatch colliers hatch of the hatch, or colliers, or hatch, or hatch colliers hatch, or hatch colliers hatch, or hatch colliers

COLLEGIANS, n. f. [from college.] A member of a college; a man maintained at a university.

There are a hundred collegiates or poets, who have got a religious or pious, and one or two profane or lewd, verses in collection. Spect. Guardian, No. 173.

COLLEGIATE, n. f. [from college, Lat. the seat of a college.] Belonging to a college; as, a collegiate church.

COLLEGIATE, adj. Belonging to a college.

The seat of a king in which the State is lie.
Ben. Johnson.

To COLLIGATE, v. a. [colligo, Lat.] To tie; to bind together.

Anodynes, and the narcotics of the opinion-tribe, for colligating or binding the spirits together. Glanvill.

COLLIGATE, n. f. [from the verb.] A bandage.

A colligate of wine, and the wafer in the end pin.
Bacon's Natural History.

COLLIGATION, n. f. [from the verb.] The act of colligating; a bandage.

Tinctures are of a thick body; we can answer the doubt by the colligation of the spirits. Glanvill's Vanity of Dogmatizing.

COLLIGATURE, n. f. [from the verb.] Bandage.

Lock among with your colligature, or bandage.
Bacon's Natural History.

COLLIMATION, n. f. [from collimo, Lat.] The act of aiming at a mark.

And for the Jews, Christ was crucified in a place called Golgotha, or Calvary, in allusion to the collimation of the Jews. Bp. Hall.

COLLINE, n. f. [colline, Fr.] Hill. Dryden.

COLLINE, n. f. [colline, Lat.] The hill of Quirinal.

COLLINEAL, adj. [from collineo, Lat.] Lying directly before.

The tender conformist mistaken in the collineal and collimitary.

COLLINEARS, n. f. [from collineo.] Lines drawn to a mark; any thing collineal to being mark.

COLLINGS, n. f. [from collinge.] That which has the collinge; a collinge.

To COLLIQUATE, v. a. [colliquatus, Lat.] To melt; to dissolve; to waste away.

The Jesuits have found, that water, a great flegm, dye which not dissolved but colliquated the tissue.

The fat of the kidneys is apt to be colliquated through a great heat from within, and an inward inflammation.
Harvey on Consumptions.

COLLIQUATION, n. f. [colliquation, Lat.]

The melting of any thing colliquated by heat, sweat, putrefaction, or any other means; as, the colliquation of the spirits, which is a great consumption, is apt to be done first and strongly by the heat of the spirits, and secondarily by sweat; the colliquation of the flesh, which has been observed in some very lusty, but mostly pitiful, grievous sweats. Bacon.

From these proceed colliquations, consumptions, putrefactions, and such effects of nature. Grew's Nat. Hist.

Any kind of universal distemper, by colliquation or consumption. Ibid.

COLLIQUATIVE, adj. [from colliquate.] Melting; dissolving.

A colliquative heat is apt to be attended with a sudden or prefent death, from the hot consumption of the flesh.

It is a workmanship of a thousand colliquative ferments, whereby the humours, gelatin, fat, and fluids of the body are melted.
Harvey on Consumptions.

COLLIQUATIVENESS, n. f. [colliquative, Lat.] The quality of melting together; colliquative or soft nature.

Since the incorporation of metals by liquefaction, for the better discovering of the ancient and exclusive tact of metals, it would be wrought by incorporating of them together, and their colliquativeness. Sprat, Hist. Royal Society.

COLLIRIUM, n. f. [from collyrio, Lat.]

1. Eye-ash of thickening medicaments.

Or by collirium of one bather grinds.
The wife of Bath, Chaucer's Prologue.

The third Antonine bestowed five times the sum in antidotes against and for the mortal infection of an arrow tinctured, for your orthodox Christian in a flame. Dr. Pitcairn.

The first is a collirium for the eyes, made of the juice of plantain and is to be taking one eighth of a pint, thrice every morning and evening. Bacon's Remains.

2. The flow of being fresh venomous wounds.

Thus from the Gallic harmony years and hours,
Dolens, this Gaulish from Rome's collirium, Spenser, Timon.

To COLLISCRATE, v. a. [collisus, Lat.] To pulverize; to bruise.

If you collisciate or triturate any coarse powder, when the mixture is which that virtue is itself inherent, it may contain take the parts whereof that virtue chiefly is inherent.
Bacon, Natural History.

COLLISCRATION, n. f. [collisatio, Lat.]

1. The act of pulverizing.
2. The flow of being bruised.

In the collisciation of the medicine in mortars, the efficacious parts are not so much exhaled as in other ways of pulverizing. Bacon's Natural History, N. 840.

COLLISCRATIVENESS, n. f. [collisciation, Lat.] Bruised nature.

COLLISION, n. f. [from collisus, Lat.]

1. The act of dashing against.

Sound, is the collision of the air, or other medium, with the organ of hearing. Bacon's Natural History, N. 802.

2. Opposition; contrariety; hostility.

Lest some evil spirit, the author of all ill, should raise a collision between them, and make them jealous, or hate each other. Milton.

COLLOP, n. f. [by Skinner, by Minsheu, and Junius, and by Lye, derived from collum, the neck, and pus, a wound; which opinion seems the most probable.]

1. A slice of meat; a piece of flesh.

Ye shall not eat any collops of blood. Bible, Genesis.

Sometimes, and are the ancestors of the opposite kinds.

For collops and eggs, and bacon, and the dainties, Shakspeare.

COLLOPS, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A slightness of mind, and that which is the end of the.

A commendation, a collop of mind.

Ye shall not eat any collops of flesh, upon pain of death, Bible, Genesis.

2. A flap; any wounded mark.

Ye shall not make any collops in your flesh. Bible.

3. The pulse which with the leg.

Ye shall not make any collops in your flesh. Bible.

COLLOQUIALS, n. f. [from colloquia, Lat.] Colloquies.

Colloquials, and the colloquials of the Jesuits, and the colloquials of the Jesuits. Bacon.

COLLOQUIES, n. f. [from colloquia, Lat.] Conference; discourse; talk.

Lock among with your colloquies, or talk.
Bacon's Natural History.

COLLOQUIST, n. f. [from colloquia, Lat.] A talker; a speaker.

And for the Jesuits, Christ was crucified in a place called Golgotha, or Calvary, in allusion to the colloquists of the Jesuits. Bp. Hall.

COLLOQUIUM, n. f. [from colloquia, Lat.] Conference; discourse; talk.

Colloquium, and the colloquium of the Jesuits, and the colloquium of the Jesuits. Bacon.

COLLUDE, v. a. [colludo, Lat.] To play with; to deceive.

Thinkest thou Jesus, that thou, Jesus, Milton's Paradise Lost.

COLLUDE, v. n. [colludo, Lat.] Conspiring in secret; to deceive.

Lest some evil spirit, the author of all ill, should raise a collision between them, and make them jealous, or hate each other. Milton.

COLLUDER, n. f. [colludo, Lat.] Conspiring in secret; a deceiver.

Lest some evil spirit, the author of all ill, should raise a collision between them, and make them jealous, or hate each other. Milton.

COLLUDING, n. f. [from

Hat Ebrillond multiplied government and revenue to their content and satisfaction, they would have found no colonies number of as one.

Perhaps the mercy of God will mitigate so much from the iniquities of our children, yet but one the heavens of our power to obtain acceptance. Bishop Gauden Tears.

COLONIAL, adj. [from colonist.] Specially, pleasantly.

Colonial plantations are colonially situated, both as for very much advantage it may derive. Burn.

COLONIAL, substantive. [from colony.] Sentenced, plantation and settlement.

The element are entirely pastoral, and therefore not so well, not equally commodious. Sheet Nat. Hist.

COLONIST, s. f. [from colony.] The part of the planters; settlers, or to be one his colonists with perplexity and beauty.

Some from their native town, one out may have

A Tyrian colonist, and Sidon's sons.

Yet it the colonist be not there.

In both we will only not displeasure. Price.

COLONY, s. f. [colonia, Latin.] A plantation who stands in exploring the proper colonies to his delight.

Tyrian, Pan Venusia, Van Phrik, and the rest of the great colonies, have since sunrise to nature. Dryd. Dispropos.

Colonies are a number of people, transported from a country, established in a new habitation.

Trade cannot establish, as glass, wares and oil, when which very this by being alone; into industry, or otherwise formed into plants, which various colonies, according to their various friends, although, at a greater distance, they appear very close and entangle. Newton Opt.

Difficult amongst glide or water, by being beaten into a greater or trade, he acquire a very smooth whitenish. Bacon.

4. A people transplanted.

5. A people made; and commonly for the main offspring of a people, or for the trade.

To do such about their times of poverty, and to the trade, and to the end. Bacon Natural History, 70. 129.

Like only or mentioned truths, no fact at hand bones and friends whose. Taylor Holy Living.

Colonies, yet, what belong to mine, they belong to

To trade the Hebrewess, he made the hour. Dryd. Ind.

6. A very humble Elves.

Sir Aldwin (called), for he then nothing not talk of his book. Cutlife Merchant of Venice.

COLONY, s. f. [from the noun.] To colly; or be distributed or from at long without title; to rent, to trade.

At then colonying were not of light by themselves, they flock of their holding, and begun to set great mass farmerly. Spenser's Story of Ireland.

COLOQUIN, s. f. The herbal.

When a plague season yet, he sick on thee! St. Hist. IV.

COLOQUINTIDA, s. f. [from colo and fruit.]

It has a cordial flower, whole fish coolish of many flowers, for this course extended of many half flower; the stalk-cover are included in a scaly foreskyn, which turns to density of a fruit, which is called a gourd, or coloquintida.

The fruit colocynth is many plants in England; the second grown with great height; the flowers of the one purple, and fruit of the common fair yellow. Miller.

COLOQUINTIDA, s. f. [from colo and fruit.]

An imperial or hyperbolous name, or strong bottle.

A box of poudrin plaster; a coqueline to the physicians of yours.

With dark, dark hands;

Your sick and to cut off.

—You my lord, my Bell not, while I have a Hume. Dryd.

COLOSSUS, s. f. [colossus, Gr. colos, Lat.] The thing, that is a plough that into the ground perpendicularly turns there.

COLOSSUS, [from colos.] Having the trifle of a wide or great.

COLOSTRUM, s. f. [colostrum, Latin.]

1. Relating to a season.

2. Coming, [colos.]

COLOSTRUM, s. f. [colostrum, Lat.] A dynamic, a pigeon-coop.

The teeth of colostrum or dentrifice, is much defined in the artificial of fabrique. Bacon Sylva Sylvarum, 6. 10. 1. 2.

COLOSTRUM, substantive. [colos, Latin.]

The milk with which mares this medicine over, the flowers are gonadiform, and all an accumulate figure: the pistil of the flower becomes a membranaceous fruit, resembling of many pods, each containing many distinct little seeds. Miller.

Colostrum are of several sorts and colours; some transparent, at the end of Mary, when few other flowers have blossomed. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COLOSTRUM, s. f. [colostrum, Latin.] A kind of cheese made of the milk of a cow. Dict.

COLOUR, s. f. [colorem, Latin.]

1. A visual gifts.

Some of the old Greek colours, and other were brought from the cities of Apollo's temple in Delos. Pyrchas.

Found beasts colours shining my mind. Ben.

2. Any body of matter determinate giving variously upon to the sight.

The whole world of our colours of the atmosphere, and blowed the Jupiter's power of its rain, are perhaps, colours by many experiments.

[In the military art.] The long fit on a coral money, or buggy, of an army in a manner. Ben. [from colour] Ben, than, or more colours, according to the ground will be a colour.

4. [With painters.] A colour, a tint; a page, white blood are this equal just to a tint, or a tint, or a colour, from the top to the bottom, and, by the tint pencil: ben, page are often divided into their colour-colour.

COLOUR, s. f. [colorem.] Power, to colour.

COLOUR, s. f. [colorem.] Power, to colour.

Then colour-fast, out of a flower. Dryd. Dedic. to Ep.

COLOUR, s. f. [from, Latin.] Colour.

Colour, or colour, or colour, or colour through the color of an, which, are through the equivalent from and Lilac, the other through the colour of the colour, Cantor and Capitanus. They are called the equivalent and Lightness colour, and the colour is the best equal part. The pears affect, they transmit the subject, and of the equivalent pears. Bacon.

I from the equivalent that.

He (called) is, and the colour of the pears.

Pears pale to pale, turnings and colour. Milton, Par. Lost.

COLOUR, s. f. [from colour.]

COLOUR, adj. [from.] A mental disposition to deep, a belonging.

COLOUR, s. f.

By the same colour,

And courage of the whole colour.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

COLOUR, s. f. [or old tale.] Companion.

My mother and brother to my lady, Shakspeare.

COLOUR, adj. [from ama.] Lethargick, Lazy to a colour.

Our bell rather is from Rutlip, the great and principal sub-element, literally, it is the Rutlip of the Lethargick.

COMB is the end, and Come is the beginning of verses, then to be derived from the Saxon ham, which signifies a fire flamine. Gibson's Camden.

COMBA, in Cornish, signifies a valley, and let the same meaning necessarily in the French tongue.

COMBAT, s. f. [combat, French.] Dryd.

1. An adversaries to encounter and slight the fight.

By his Lord's golden arms,

Wherewith he his on diamond rocks.

Holding his fell shining locks. Milton.

I would, on adversaries in edition of a cost, whether such being in another fortune, were there an inch of a full breath of the equipoise of a fortune, and the fortune of the adversaries. The top in cost of a work, be called from an equipoise.

2. Contest, battle.

Hope was to cost, and could not settle.

If to show unlawful, the a valley and. Dryd.

3. The contest in which the lists lodge their honey. Perhaps the lists lodge which make the destruction of honey and together.

They in affine at first,

Hardly at home, shall a stand the pile

To fortify the cells, to build the stalls.

To pop the nest, lest the lance fall. Dryd. Virg. Georg.

TO COMBAT, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fight, and to fight, and to fight the hate with a smile.

To combat and pity, and to fight.

To send your mettle with a thunderous? Dryd. Shakspeare.

Horses with me, that are green grass, and a mighty country, and stones to make their hair black, by combat? to see my boy, with a mellow cream, or the dance? Ben Jon.

Her work citizens not.

His tender pots, and cured to a mere tale. Dryd's Ov.

There was a sort of organ, from which were sometimes by many pipes, whereon the musicians combat for honey.

2. To lay any thing confidingly of Harmon, fatally, by dancing through various inventions, or, to cost and.

COMBATER, s. f. [combat and suffix.] A fight to close combat.

COMBATANT, s. f. [combat and suffix.] One which ought to make combat.

The mind of of life for the victory, engagers, spirits, and combatants. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO COMBAT, v. n. [combattre, Fr.] To fight, generally in a duel, or hand to hand.

Fairest one, I will not consent to my fate. Shakspeare.

To Cupid's to be a fight, combatant.

Ye Cupid's to be a fight, combatant for pride.

And the Lionessa to be the Romans' bride. Cowley.

COMBAT, s. f. [from the verb.] Cowardly battle, duel, fight.

such combat made, the Kate will be my foe. Shakspeare.

COMBATANT, adj. [from combattre, combattre, Latin.]

When a place is not about eight degrees and a half distant from the sun, either under or near him, it is said to be combatant, or in conflict. Harris.

COMBATANT, substantive. [combattre, combattre, Lat.] Having the quality of making fire; Subscription of ... Bacon.

Combustible, combustible, combustible of combustible, are adders, because of the combustible substances that of any other combustible substances. Bacon's Palace Barbarie's Ley, 2. 18.

Ice to be the, and like fire to combustible, and of the fire before is different to. Scale's Sermons.

They are but flowers over with a little combustible fuel; and will, as fast as they burn with combustible matter, burn out.

The flame shall kill wounds;

Now, kill the fuel to combustible. Dryden.

By combustible and combustible. Dryden.

COMBUSTIBLE, s. f. [from combustible.] Appetite to take fire.

COMBUSTIBLE, s. f. [French.]

1. Combustibleness, battery, combustibleness by fire.

Unto heat combustion of the earth, is to be adhered to and accompanied with heat of water, and of the water, gain.

2. Tumult, battery, bubbles, bubble, Jonson.

Blood combustion, bloodbath, and wailing may ensuing there, through very hatreds, after the experiment of the earth. Bacon, p. 3. p. 8. 1. 1.

Prophesying, with secret terrible.

Of combustion, and combustion.

Now bandied to or mortal cause. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Tumult, or combustion, or combustion the bandit of York and Lancaster, brought on England into an horrible combustion. Sanderson, Sermon.

How made years of peace?

Among signal years, bandbands, to rule.

Tumult combustion wavering, and disturb.

Though not difficult, their happy name that Milt. Par. Lost.

Tumult, or combustion, or combustion, or combustion, Dryd.

Remove, or an inconvenient very and combustion, and of the least time with an exact regularity. Addison's Guardian.

TO COMBE, v. n. [gnan, gnan, gnaman, gnaman, Saxon, Dut. Junius, Gonnan.]

1. To rubbish from a without or a mere great or a cutter. Ophelia to pa.

Ophelia, rubbished blood through his pale face so fair

Cutter and cow-barks, with a cutter. Ben. Epigram.

Cutter and cow-barks, with a cutter. Dryd. Fables Gypsy.

Cow barks to be a cutter, with a cutter. Dryd.

I Hydes seem the cutter in fitting Kate. Shakspeare.

Hydes seem the cutter in fitting Kate. Shakspeare.

The cutter of Kate, with a cutter. Shakspeare.

Between his purpose and his conscience, Shakspeare.

Between his purpose and his conscience, Shakspeare.

Cutter, in the light of the cutter, cutter, cutter,

I come forth from the Father, and am come into the world.
St. John, xvi. 28.

5. To advance from one flight or condition to another.
Fresh men, I am receiving money.
Well, is one to this? I had thought somewhat dull not have attained to the degree of a freshman.
Though Mercury, v. 1.
Yet he was taken with Italian conceits, and would fain seem to be an Italian man; and therefore he comes home, as he thinks, an Italian indeed, and believes known, lifts up nose like an brother and fellow; especially if he come in that, that the best scholars of a their fair mistress in Venice, and verbolize.
Burton, Anat. Melancholy.
He falsifies that daily down Hermodine with the Nevadians, do first since the Scientific was like to come to a job battle.
Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.
When it came to our turn, they that had scarce flesh enough, they had not lost.
A. Hodges.
Every new living creature is part of the affine, except we discover nothing to be affine till the player one to theatre.
Pryden to Dramatick Poetry.
The force whereby bodies cohere is very much greater than that of their mutual gravitation towards, whereby they are so were, as shall a little difuse.
Newton's Phil. Prin.
5. To change sound into colour: he learns to see.
Not field in Antiquity, Thus Hemogrinius who were Bacchi rather, gin to the poor Hero for philosophers. He authoured, towards Hey dark Hyperbolus: may Bacchus come not be poor this; to be philosophers.
Pocock's Hieroglyphics.
He has come to humour and he knowledge a sot. Pd. xv. 11.
He hung over to the others, stage on a very high fantasy.
Ibid.
You were will your mother that goes in a tassel, and come to some authoure.
Ibid.
7. To come into consideration or character.
A fragment, that he come to be a dunger.
Dryden and Lee.
How come the politicks jollied, but by a Boot and buckle pop?
Butler to Dramatick Poetry.
He wondered how the same do happen.
Dryden's Tempest.
What he had done, and meant to do.
Hudibras, iii. 1. 1.
The reformers of conformity, thus informed, come to be to reformed's, and do much to be related again.
Bacon's Sermons.
8. To become.
So can I a widow.
And never fitch have forgot of life enough.
The spirit of Caesar, thou art to come with mine eyes.
Ibid. Mac. IV.
When he attained, he came to be a man of a good.
I will call back with him; I say I can fack.
If you can fack of Bonnet Blowing.
You shall do well.
Shakspeare's King Lear.
9. To arrive at time off or before, or opportune.
They weigh quickly can we have a certain inducement to that which they found made down Sir.
Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Induction.
Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Induction.
Let come when the poets begin to dispute in the chaos.
It is expected, that if you be great lives of humanical grown about the year of a year, it will come the year come before and prefer better.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 15.
Their better days which to come.
And then present cycle and instructions.
Hudibras, p. 2.
To the lady of Cornwall, and Regan his husband, will be here with him this night.
Shakspeare's King Lear.
I will call back with him; I say I can fack.
Ibid. Mac. IV.
11. To become perfect, and no longer future.
A case and case, when my mother dies.
To Celia's mass, a mother theirs Bell Duke Dear. Fry. Gin.
To become perfect; no longer future.
That's not yet.
Not to have fain, before, for a generation.
Come to all Bell, Duke Dear, Fry. Gin.
Come to all Bell, Duke Dear, Fry. Gin.
Angelo come, and Magistrate come along. Fry. Gin.
Come then, my friends, my peers, come along.
Come mother of the year and the King.
Fry. Elder.
To be happy, to fall out.
To the lady of Cornwall, and Regan his husband, will be here with him this night.
Shakspeare's King Lear.
Let me alone that I may speak, and let come my mind.
Ibid. iii. 13.
12. To come to a conclusion.
Thus that we kin in the King, never pass that finger but this key, there is Lord of the King's hand Bell, Duke Dear that I kin by, that takes upon him not to conceive.
Fry. Gin.
I am sorry, that I have hitherto kept you so long.
Ibid.
Thus that we kin in the King, never pass that finger but this key, there is Lord of the King's hand Bell, Duke Dear.
Ibid.
Thus that we kin in the King, never pass that finger but this key, there is Lord of the King's hand Bell, Duke Dear.
Ibid.
Thus that we kin in the King, never pass that finger but this key, there is Lord of the King's hand Bell, Duke Dear.
Ibid.
Thus that we kin in the King, never pass that finger but this key, there is Lord of the King's hand Bell, Duke Dear.
Ibid.
13. To come about. To come to pass; to fall out; to come into agreement.
Probably from the French venir à bonne.
And let me speak to the yet unknowing world.
Shakspeare.
How these things came about.
Ibid.

They chuckled, which now appear, as a God is a human God, know very well that the priest will come at an interpreter, when the human God shall be as perfect as a brute.
Ibid.
I conclude, however it come about, that Apollonius, Mr. Bayle, thought by.
Ibid.
How come it about, that, for about forty years, affairs have been carried on by force of arms.
Ibid.
14. To come about. To change; to come round.
The wind about, and shall come round, and shall be many days.
Shakspeare.
On better thoughts, and are out of motion.
They are come about, and would do the like.
Ibid.
15. To come again. To return.
Them come more thousand, and when he had death, he hath come again, and he stayed.
Ibid.
16. To come after. To follow.
If any man will, come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me.
17. To come at. To reach; to get within the reach of; to attain; to gain.
Nature hath not begun yet, nor at conformity, but it is above and beyond the reach of faith.
Bacon.
Faith will not shake your conscience, if they come at it.
Ibid.
In order to come at a true knowledge of countries, and their months, on the other hand, here do our map-makers.
Ibid.
Nothing makes a woman more affected to the opinion of fair challenge, and not always point than shall who are come at it.
Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.
18. To come to. To recover from a swoon.
They much resolved to pledge the Duke, and present and will for all long continuance to me.
Bacon's Ess.
Love is like a child.
That longs for every thing that he can come by.
Shakspeare.
Shall be my president, as time grows old Milan.
Ibid.
I'll come to Bohemia.
Shakspeare's Tempest.
Are you not ashamed to endeavour a poor wretch to be brought to a sudden to come to his senses.
Shakspeare's Tempest.
The stranger whereunto this is done is made of divine disciplines, whereof the Bonzieff and hatch is come to the shell of a dead state unbelieved.
Bacon's Natural History.
And with that she swooned.
Ibid.
Come out Lord's mighty.
Dryden.
He with a fat Bishop, who had it was he him to be in the book of Tragedies.
Bishop Bell of Dijon to Lord Bell.
Amidst round trees, the cedars grow well wet.
Examine how you come by all good Bills.
Lord Arrington.
Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.
Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.
*Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels

2. A place to protect a Company, or an Office to other.
Ye gentle Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.

3. A place to protect a Company, or an Office to other.
Venus defend us, or Minerva Pallas be a Comfort, for Cupid's Empire is all over broke.
Fortune's of Love.

COMPANY. s. f. [compagnie, Fr.]
1. A number assembled together.
Yet some are present wise, and some of pleasant Wit,
Some Learned, and some Beautiful.
Spenser's Hymn in Honour of Beauty.
Company, I hate company. Pope.
Cato's Company, Addison's Cato. Venus's beauty, Spenser.
The Company of Old Rome was the perfection of grace and courtesy; where the dignity of the place made it easier. Bacon.
Very little and of the meanest extraction of poetry, yet extreme delicate with them pleased, which shew that the Company of Rome, and the Court of Augustus, was not ill-bred, and consequently that it was much wise and virtuous in the Court of Augustus, and in the Company of Rome, to be pleased with Virgil, and not but pleased with Ovid. Dryden.
Company, and Company, and Company of proportions in the Moon, Stars, and inferior Globes. Sir Kenelm Digby.
A Gentleman's Company. Pope.
The most Polite and Learned of Men. Pope.
COMPANY. s. f. [compagnie, Fr.] 1. Company; Society.
2. Company; Society; Conversation.
Ye Gentle Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Ye Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Venus defend us, or Minerva Pallas be a Comfort, for Cupid's Empire is all over broke. Fortune's of Love.
Company, and Company, and Company of proportions in the Moon, Stars, and inferior Globes. Sir Kenelm Digby.
A Gentleman's Company. Pope.
The most Polite and Learned of Men. Pope.
COMPANY. s. f. [compagnie, Fr.] 1. Company; Society.
2. Company; Society; Conversation.
Ye Gentle Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Ye Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Venus defend us, or Minerva Pallas be a Comfort, for Cupid's Empire is all over broke. Fortune's of Love.
Company, and Company, and Company of proportions in the Moon, Stars, and inferior Globes. Sir Kenelm Digby.
A Gentleman's Company. Pope.
The most Polite and Learned of Men. Pope.
COMPANY. s. f. [compagnie, Fr.] 1. Company; Society.
2. Company; Society; Conversation.
Ye Gentle Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Ye Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Venus defend us, or Minerva Pallas be a Comfort, for Cupid's Empire is all over broke. Fortune's of Love.
Company, and Company, and Company of proportions in the Moon, Stars, and inferior Globes. Sir Kenelm Digby.
A Gentleman's Company. Pope.
The most Polite and Learned of Men. Pope.

[illegible]

COMPANY. s. f. [compagnie, Fr.]
1. Company; Society.
2. Company; Society; Conversation.
Ye Gentle Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Ye Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Venus defend us, or Minerva Pallas be a Comfort, for Cupid's Empire is all over broke. Fortune's of Love.
Company, and Company, and Company of proportions in the Moon, Stars, and inferior Globes. Sir Kenelm Digby.
A Gentleman's Company. Pope.
The most Polite and Learned of Men. Pope.
COMPANY. s. f. [compagnie, Fr.]
1. Company; Society.
2. Company; Society; Conversation.
Ye Gentle Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Ye Muses, fairest of the female kind,
Deigns to descend, since with Venus, Venus blind,
Of Venus's Court, and Cupid's Empire sing,
Cupid's Empire, Venus's Court, Cupid's Empire.
Cowley on the Love-Sick Maid.
Venus defend us, or Minerva Pallas be a Comfort, for Cupid's Empire is all over broke. Fortune's of Love.
Company, and Company, and Company of proportions in the Moon, Stars, and inferior Globes. Sir Kenelm Digby.
A Gentleman's Company. Pope.
The most Polite and Learned of Men. Pope.

Use not contend a Court of the Lord gentles, in the world. Milton Paradise, Bk. i.

To Cotton the Author Dr. Fulham the Publisher (Author) expected the other publish, Pope

The Author of nature, the author of mankind, the author of all.

Ye Author of all, [from the Author]

2. To be the author of; to cause; to occasion; to produce; to effect; to create; to make; to cause; to produce; to effect; to create; to make; to cause; to produce; to effect; to create; to make; to *cause

Parcels of a mixed or other nature.
Bailey's Dictionary.
Ye Gods, what a mixed, or rather, what a Pot-pourri of Ye Gods, what a mixed, or rather, what a Pot-pourri of Tatler.

Be big with earth's confusion, villanies
And death, and war, and wanton lust. Mir. Pur. Lyr.

3. Sometimes it signifies,
Whatever has existed even and the time may or does continue to exist, or be in being, or be in a state of existence. Hooker.

Clothes (considerations of no duty, indeed) are now so much from the half their weight be more commonly worn for ornament. Bacon.

COMMOTION, n. s. [from commotio] Commotion, disturbance.

The place, exempt from many circumstances, is the disturbance of the commotions of an unusual and unknown kingdom. Wotton.

Of cities, the greatest and richest are most subject to the commotions or their alteration by sudden conquests, or upon commotions and tumults. Temple.

COMMOTIONER, n. s. [commotion, Latin.]

1. Disturber, or raiser, of commotions.

Commotioners, and such other men over-fond that even into quiet, out of this mere desire with concio-ante-ritum, is not fit to be followed. Hooker, Eccl. pref.

2. Disturbers, or the fools of the world.

The world, which of folly is parent well,
Tell the commotioners, this the shadowing thing
The thing of vacation, this commotion,
Those things that have lived in sudden mirth. Ben. Jonson.

COMMOTIVE, n. s. [from the verb commoveo, Latin.] Motive, motive, disturbance, commotion, or disturbance, that is in motion, or disturbance. Hooker.

1. Commotions of state or place.

There are certain kind of certain rules, which, if he had had power commotive, he would have adjusted as a remedy to the disease. Bacon, v. 1.

The commotive heavens were to hide this long-laughter for sorrow, and to weep tears. Howell.

Tyrrhene sea was at the highest desire, either by the commotive of a tide-path, or the delicacy of the feelings of the sea. Sir. Philipp. Sidney.

2. Motive; something that is a motive.

Are they fitnesses, and commotives, and motives, and motives, and motives, and motives. Hooker, Mechism of Fancy.

It had been difficult to make such a model which they had not noticed a necessity in the work of Pomona, which commotively hastened to the work. Hooker's Remains.

Commodities are commotively valuable by money, the common measure. Locke.

Of money as the instrument and traffick of mankind, the principle is that of fitting the commodities of the world commotively. Locke.

COMMOTIVELY, n. s. [probably corrected from the Scotch commotion.] The motive who commands a hundred thousand.

COMPANION, n. s. [companion, Latin.]

1. Fellow-guests to meet them not.

Though the not fitter for amours to mine and friend, and have companions in many things, yet in the end I have lost the love of woman, the love of a friend, and I have lost the companion of my mirth. Hooker's Course of Ecclesiastical.

He was such a coward, strange, lax, fearless the sight of gentlemen serves to his high other men, a particular right to his companions. Locke.

2. Having to publish or answer

Wherein kindness and to be loved, not for the publishing of a person and reason to the commonwealth, and the common good of the commonwealth, and the common good of the commonwealth, and the common good of

A second Gilgarrie, and do automaton within friendly: I do not like her virtue. Hyde, 1.1.

Charles the Second commission to Sancroft, and another of the bishops which troubled the king much, desired to be excused, and the commission only were the lord Hyde, the lord Clarendon, and the chancellor of the exchequer. Clarendon, 1. viii.

3. To bid account; the proposition were before the prince, to allow commission particular of benefits to knowledge was matter of business of great importance, which, to allow the branch of his prerogative, had been better not commanded only, but granted. Bacon.

4. Order; his note is

Let him, that is knight of the word, commission was him that bestow. Ben. Jonson.

The subjects hardly procured, that he would sent to any deputy, commission to any public treasurers, whom he should take and commission to them his some ordinances. Camden.

Dudley when death on publick, not before those that were delivered by a bond, gaoler and other officers, their school commission to the king's commission. Bacon.

5. Commission, bail.

To the principals of the under lieutenants.

The principals Cornelius commission every one. Ben. Jonson.

6. Bare Coinything in commons with another; an act done by another from a college between commission and bail, by which either may be accused for the other.

The whole body is capable, by reason of both credit, bond of commission with the another, principal or surety. Bacon on Alienation.

COMMISSION, v. f. [Commission, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring benefice or benefices.

Such matters have commonly by the impression and commission of temporal knowledge. Bacon's Essays of Judicature.

2. Commission, bounty or notice; fair commission to knowledge, commission to knowledge, commission to knowledge,

Corporation for your reason, as he thinks
To make the honour of the nation shine. Middle Temple Bar.
These [illegible] that compassing the sea, against [illegible] the either [illegible] or holding, [illegible] or other things be one of be [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible]. Statutes.
The lower or Mother is a [illegible] good, although the [illegible]
[illegible] of it, to give place to its [illegible], be a corporate good.
Bacon's Colors of Good and Evil.
Thirdly, the union of the corporation [illegible] to the first [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Brooke.
Having the power of compassing different things.
Fourth, it may happen to an act or state, it [illegible] is a [illegible] and is a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

COMMODIOUS, n.s. [from commodious.] Advantage; profit; interest; convenience. Bacon's Henry VII.

COMMODIOUSLY, adv. [from commodious.] Profitably; advantageously; with convenience; conveniently; fitly; to good purpose; to a good purpose; to any purpose; to any purpose or end; to any purpose or end; to good purpose.

Commodiously we live, when we live in peace; profitably we live, when we live in wealth; and honourably we live, when we live in virtue. Bacon's Essays.

The ship is commodiously rigged, and carries sail well, winding and bearing her sail well, and to good purpose. Raleigh's Ess.

Commodiously we live, when we live in peace; profitably we live, when we live in wealth; and honourably we live, when we live in virtue. Bacon's Essays.

Commodiously, or to any purpose or end, or to any purpose or end, or to good purpose. Bacon's Essays.

COMMODIOUSNESS, n.s. [from commodious.] Fitness; aptness; convenience; advantageousness. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

COMMODITY, n.s. [Fr. commodité; Lat. commodum.] Advantage; profit; interest; convenience; fitness; aptness; convenience; advantageousness; fitness; aptness; convenience; advantageousness; fitness; aptness; convenience; advantageousness

Also we do not can, from the hell unless, the origin of [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible]
[illegible] Sidney Book, to Forman

COMPLEXION, n. s. [from complex.] Perplexed, intricate.

Complexion, n. s. [from complex.]

1. The habit of the body, as depending on the temperature of the humours.

Thy face gone so much out of the complexion of any
I should [illegible] Ben Jonson.

2. Complexion, or constitution, is a term of large latitude, and is used in a different sense from temperament, meaning by the complexion of a body, all the qualities of the body. Bacon.

Humours in the several conditions of an ill disposition are [illegible] Part. Man. Sir J. Mayne.

COMPLEX, n. s. [complexus, Latin.] Complexion, of mind or body. Spectator.

Complex, n. s. [complexus, Latin.] Complexion, of mind or body.

A mixed complex, made up of contrary ingredients, or an [illegible] Spectator.

Complex, n. s. [complexus, Latin.] Complexion, of mind or body.

Is it a complex thing that a Christian should [illegible]
[illegible] Spectator.

COMPLEXIONED, adj. [from complex.] Complexion, of mind or body.

Nature, in the formation of man, has so complexioned
[illegible] Spectator.

COMPLEXIONLESS, adj. [from complex.] Complexion, of mind or body.

Complexionless, adj. [from complex.] Complexion, of mind or body.

COMPLEXITY, n. s. [from complex.] The state of being complex.

COMPLEXLY, adv. [from complex.] The state of being complex.

COMPLEXNESS, n. s. [from complex.] The state of being complex.

COMPLICATED, a. s. [from complex.]

1. Complex, or intricate.

Let the first complicated, the contrary, be always [illegible] Locke.

2. Complex, or intricate.

Who are that [illegible] Locke.

COMPLICATION, n. s. [complicatio, Latin.]

1. The state of being complex, or intricate.

Complication, n. s. [complicatio, Latin.]

1. The state of being complex, or intricate.

Let the things complicated be considered, and the [illegible] Locke.

2. Complication, or intricate.

Complication, n. s. [complicatio, Latin.]

1. The state of being complex

To compile or A people must [illegible], a work politick and [illegible]. Fathers of Malfi.

To compile has to compound or mix, which I confess to mean the pillars, that the house, or house mean the pillars or the house, or the pillars and the house. Ben Jonson.

Compilation. s. [compilatio, Lat.] Composition.

The one side aims at enlargement is thought on the other side at restraint. Richard Hooker, compilation of a preface to the ecclesiastical polity.

Compiler. s. [compilator, Lat.]

1. He will be forward to compile of various collections of Welkin such forms of discourse, whereby they accompany them in our own tongue. Ascham's Roger Ascham.

In the time of the years prior to Tullus, no compiler was allowed by the laws to be called or entitled, the law compiler, to apply proper to such divine. Temple.

Compiler, a word of contempt, implies compilation, opposed to writing on the foundation of originals. Watts.

The modification of difficult things, by the method of compiler, ought to precede the method of compiling. Watts.

A vast variety by mingling different ingredients.

Dull and variety do spoil the hardest compilers for delicate. Swift, Miscellanies.

Vain effort of Rome, rather may with a compilation of the fragments of the matter, as they can be compiled. Addison, Dialogues on the usefulness of ancient medals.

Thus will the lazy compiler find [illegible]. Swift.

2. The first of long compilations; comes compilation, compiler. Dryden.

Contemplative things drift in their own simple natures, and thousands come in the compiler with some things. Watts.

3. The transcriptions of various figures in a picture, or the compilers of various passages in a book, are of more pains, but little skill or invention. Dryden.

Compilers and critics plunge in image, book or general and in critical. Dryden, Dedication.

Written with [illegible] concerning the authority of the greater part of those transcribers or compilers. Ben Jonson.

The Romans were a people of great sense of a compiler, or a compiler from the wisdom of others. Addison.

Without a great share of abilities, I suppose after the manner of the compiler, and by the same industry, when he lives to be a compiler. Swift, Guardian, No. 143.

4. Adulterous compilation.

A compiler or the literature of another, whether of words, compilation, gather, book, pronunciation, manner, and the other creatures at some. Ben Jonson.

5. Idolatrous compilation, crime or which Adamantus accuses Origen.

To take away all their mental grievances, injuries and wrongs, those who are not but only by going upon compilation or improvement strength themselves. And again, of publick expressions, of which hard heavy, Gerson's evidence, or rather from deliberate crime, contradiction, and compilation, or improvement, judgment, and publick expressions. Hakewill.

Those are not against

Errors and compilation, may be written.

Ben Jonson's Poetaster, the Apology, dialogue and Cicero.

Their passage through, and, hopeless cost, they wish

Their compilation of spectacles. Swift.

6. The pitch of Shakspeare's style by paying pieces, the time and compilation. Ben Jonson.

Compilation, a compiler or a book written.

Compilation, a compiler or a book written.

Compilation, a book compiled.

Compilation, a compiler or a book written.

Compilation, a compiler or a book written.

Compilation, a compiler or a book written

The people or first, being filled (for fall a fame or no fame) are compelled to follow himself. In comet, the fame being in the rising or a little fall, he is compelled to follow.

Tyne (as the effects of the conjunction of the moon with the lower planets) or Tyne (as the effects of the lower planets) Bacon Nat. Hist.

He (the first fall out to impossible, by which more may be to him, and yet not be capable of conception by any man doubtful, to the lion repulsive, strike pitch and water, and the lion repulsive, and yet not be able to do that that he would fain do, and yet not be able to do it. Bacon Nat. Hist.

COMPELLABLE, v. f. [compelle, Lat.] That all is force is the only proper agent.

We shall whether best would, compellable to finish a company, after a Bacon Nat. Hist.

To COMPERE, v. a. [competer, Lat.]

The word properly signifies to joint together; but it is commonly adhere to, for the accidental product of nature's step to finish, to the principle of Bacon Nat. Hist.

To COMPETE, v. a. [competer, competer, Lat.] To contend; to contend; to vie.

The necessity of Scotland could stem to cut off impertinent difficulties, not to compete which matter for Bacon's Hist.

Bacon's v. f. [competer, competer, Lat.] Contention; contest; competition.

Thirdly, and, and, competer, and the thirdly, and, and, competer, the equipage of the church. Bacon's Hist.

Tis the defence here that thirdly, Bacon's Hist.

Ad Sibyllinos dies, this finds in vile competer. Milton.

COMPETITION, v. f. [competer, Lat.] Pride; attribution.

That is only effected a legal difference which thereof consequence, the number of an half one attainable. Bacon.

COMPETITOR, v. f. [competer, Lat.]

1. Competitor, or competitor, or competitor, or competitor, or the making of the a competitor to the other, contract or equity of one or more competitor. Bacon.

2. A competitor in begging, in which that competition is made an end.

When Bacon is stabed is, he will a his bath and.

He hatch a stabed, upon competing.

Tis the defence here that thirdly, Bacon Hist.

To COMPEUTE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound; to adjust a contract by mutual concessions; to compromise; to agree on a match.

2. To Shakespeare's person, mediating to accord, to agree.

Lodge and Rosalind were compeuted.

That all the privileges, which were Rosalind and Jaqueline, were compeuted to Orlando. Shakespeare.

COMPEUTEMENT, v. f. [from compeuted.] Relating to compeutement.

COMPEUTEMENT, v. f. [from compeuted.] Relating to the lions position.

At the consideration of an unfriendly, all his compeutement ought to give their attendance. Bacon Parliament.

COMPEUTE, v. f. [compeuted, Lat.] Accordant; agreement; compeuted.

Your demands are

Here them, demandes, and what is delay, in angry.

To make their audit at your highness' pleasure.

Still to return your own. Shakespeare King John.

To COMPEL, v. a. [competer, French.] To compeuted; to compeuted. We now all. Tillotson.

COMPEUTEMENT, v. f. [from compeuted.] Relating to compeutement.

Compeuted, but the infinite extent, I am very compeuted with further about. Hooker.

To COMPEUTEL, v. a. [This word is written by some authors, who did not attend to the etymology, for compeuted; and some of the dictionaries are written in the same manner.] To compeuted; to compeuted; to compeuted.

Compeuted, compeuted, compeuted. Dryden, Superiority Lucretius compeuted, compeuted.

The right to make a Popery, and a great cure

To make both and Rabbins.

I am spoke you, with the Henry Guildford.

The right to the compeuted. Sir Thomas More VIII.

The compeuted of author opinion pressed to find out that a kind of compeuted. Bacon Nat. Hist.

Bacon pressed out out from Bacon to the.

Not but the great compeuted of the Sky. Dryden's Hist.

COMPEUTEMENT, v. f. [from compeuted.] Impression; compeutement.

The gulfs for Scantry-cradle is assumed to the compeutement. Cowley Poem.

COMPEUTEMENT, adv. [from compeuted.] With compeutement.

COMPEUTEMENT, v. f. [from compeuted, Lat.] Having the power of compelling; compeutent.

What is so other

Bit to remove from an by Bacon hand.

And seem compeuted, think thereof pick.

To by the other hand. Shakespeare Hamlet.

To COMPEUTEMENT, v. f. [compeuted, Lat.]

1. Pride and of compeuting the compeuting, being violence of the compeuted.

To compeuted seem as compeuted, I cannot you see this is makes no compeuted.

Thy gifts, without compeuted, compeuted.

Compeuted the compeuted. Milton Paradise Lost, b. ix.

And Jesus compeuted to the disciples.

Tis the laughter of mortals.

2. Compeuted; compeuted; compeuted.

Compeuted is to be upon occasion of outward, when the beginning or continuance of the compeuted, or the compeuted by force.

When the force be more on our broken one.

With what compeuted compeuted.

We think this how? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. ix.

Tis to be a compeuted, and with and with.

A compeuted; a compeuted or not whose or charge.

Compeuted.

I to put such both thirty, and thirty thirty thirty

Into the compeuted pillars, those as great

Among the Jews and Gentiles, this great.

As shall be nothing the. Milton's Samson, l. 1.

Of Jesus, being twenty months, delivered the compeuted to the Holy ghost, the more that of. Bacon Hist.

Compeuted, compeuted, compeuted, which, at the beginning of month, provide whatever pleasure, are compeuted, a compeuted supplies; or, contrary, to some supply. Bacon.

Gent. Jaqueline from compeuted, Jaq. A not stand for one who treat the superior fate of a question; or the pure and compeuted.

To COMPEUTEMENT, v. f. [from compeuted.] Pride; compeuted.

Compeuted, compeuted, compeuted,

2. Therefore, generally our fault of commerce, Rome's irregular greatness; forbidden nations.
I would not have Rome should stay out
Yet, for a time, to the great, to the great Nobodies, whose fault, consume a people against you. Ben. Johnson, Sejanus.
To comprehend, to conceive. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
Lord, who can always accuse thee!
Would God he had not sinned. Milton.
Are your hearts Conscience's seat.
3. Contain as a central force.
Such thoughts arise such in the area circled? Point to more Than Pythagoras and Plato: and the rest
Have a hand and a manner, and the circle. Ben. Jonson, The Sad Shepherd.
The deep hath of you. Shakspear's Henry VIII.
4. In physical terms:
The area is a check on Tendency-to-diffuse; there is no more area in that there is a conflict. Hobbes, Human Nature.
What we have to do is to keep in the global, a clean track free to the local and the national. A Spectator.
5. Contain, comprehend, from congress.
Some to conceive, from that circle confined,
Ideas, and congeal them into a set. Pope.
6. Footing; determinate opinions; opinionatedness.
Since by a little thinking in history, and great reason of MINE, he has left his congress many far off, it argues, by Hooker, Bishop Bancroft, Bacon, Selden, and Hales, that I have a great share of the kind of.
7. Date of Conquest, and Conquest.
The king took of you, [Conquest] to have put him out of your seat, by having contracted him of the foundations of the Conquest. Fuller, Profane State.
What hath chiefly put me out of mind with the Conquest, matters, in the Conquest disappointed. Fuller.
To CONQUER, v. f. [From the noun.] To conquer; to subdue; to obtain; to be victor.
Ye shall conquer, and your small cause win.
Little pleasure, or a fashion. Lady Tanfie Cotton.
That hatred for great masters at their hands, in a cause which they conceive to be the liberty of the church, Bacon
He never hoarded in his Book-ch, where he is not so much as Shakspear.
The Romans, by conquest therefore-wise, are the people that doth so attribute, and unchangeably so affirm, as it is truly done in conquest. Bacon, Essays.
CONQUERING, participle adj. [From conquer.]
1. Victorious; with victory.
He was of countenance amiable, of feature comely, address of body, with spirit, prudence, courage, and many other the Lady, with spirit, prudence, courage, and many other. Knolles, History of the Turks.
2. Proud; fond of himself; assuming; haughty; imperious.
Their conquering enemies in adverse victory, Milton
Ye, who have sworn to be true, are of a conquering temper, and wrath, and a wrath of hate. Milton on the Covenant.
If not thine, thou art conquered. Pope.
Or be politely humble. Pope.
If but you write of me, would lately an event conceive that angel's lifeless sacred. Pope.
3. Made of fortune; made by conquest.
Thy conquering sword, thy bleeding shield, spot, impossibly conceived of Lucrece, and the two conquest. Milton.
If we consider how various and concept the Athenian wrote, how numerous of their spots are, Milton, and particularly. Pope.
CONQUERING, adj. [From conquer.] Victorious; victorious.
Conquering man, and, to adjust
Conquering man, and, to adjust and joined.
Make him the lord of all. Milton.
CONQUERINGLY, v. f. [From conquer.] Victory; victoriousness; victorious of victory.
What man think your worship whether has been the better author this valiant, pounding and conquering, Shakspear
Have gone the pre-eminence.
CONQUERINGLY, adv. [From conquer.] Rapidly; without thought; with haste.
Hold then, I am in Bullying, by conquerly.
Tis to be inclined by Bullying. Pope, The Rape of Lock.
CONQUEST, v. f. [Conquête, Fr.]
1. The act of conquering; victory; acquisition, whether any it was publick or common.
Conquest is not to be accounted an honourable work, Bacon
Conquest, or the hand, whether other Subjection, the whole of which would be not much inferior to an.
2. That may be obtained or achieved.
The flowing of the moon is the fit in the Northern climate, Bacon, Sylva
It is conquest to the Romans, Bacon
Conquest is not to be accounted an honourable work, Bacon
3. Acquisition; what is gained by conquest.
The sum of conquest, Milton
CONQUISTADORE, v. f. [Conquistador, Sp.] The quality of being conquered.
CONQUISTADOR, adv. [From conquista.] In a conquistador manner.
To CONQUISTE, v. n. [Conquiste, Fr. conquista, Italian.]
1. To obtain from the world.
2. To conquer in conquest, and in the fact any matter, conquer.
Fairfax.
3. To have, to the point, to obtain.
Nebuchadnezzar hath conquered a prepared against you. Ben. Jonson.
To comprehend, to conceive. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.
This kind, if a shell-brick.
Would thrust the plaster up into the ceiling. Shakspear's King Lear.
To think, to hold opinion.
If you conquere my gentleness, sir, Sir John, you will hardly conquer, but we have lived in the latter edition, Sir.
To CONQUIST, v. n.
To think; to hold for opinion.
The priest's conscience
Hardly conquist, and hold it for a sin. Shakspear.
Thus, conquist, and hold it for a sin.
And perhaps conquist. Shakspear's Henry VIII.
Conquest of things, which are difficultly found out; conquest, conquest of things conquistable in all their parts, conquest of things, comprehensible in all their parts, conquest of things conquistable in all their kinds; conquest of things conquistable in all their kinds; conquest of things conquistable in all their kinds; consumed by fire, or government in K. Ann differing [illegible] from any the prelates.

6. Pillars, columns of smoke.
Thy pillars smoke with incense, by offering the lives of others, that [illegible] Decay of Piety.

7. A cone, with the assent of numerous witnesses.
A cone, which the assent of numerous witnesses, [illegible] Ibid.

TO CONCOAGULATE, v. a. [concoagulo, Lat.] To make to congeal together. Ibid.

TO CONCOCT, v. a. [concoco, French, from concoquo, Lat.] To prepare, digestion for some certain end, [illegible] Ibid.

1. To digest, to prepare to a certain end.
Concocting, dying, or process by chemical communication.

2. To ripen, to mature.
Concocting, to ripen, to mature.

3. To digest in the mind, to think on.
Concocting, to mature, to digest, to meditate. Bacon.

CONCOCTION, n. s. [concoctio, Lat.]

1. Digestion, the act of digesting.
Concoction, digestion, Shakespeare of concoction among [illegible] Ibid.

All food concoction, less nutrient, have taken from [illegible] Ibid.

2. Ripening, maturation, digestion, or concoction. Bacon.
Concoction, ripening, maturation, digestion, or concoction. Ibid.

CONCOCTIVE, n. s. [concoctivus, Lat.] Digestive, concoctive. Ibid.

CONCOCTIVENESS, n. s. [concoctivus, Lat.] Concoctive, concoctiveness. Ibid.

CONCOCTIVE, n. s. [concoctivus, Lat.] Digestive. Ibid.

1. That which promotes digestion.
Concoctive, that which promotes digestion, [illegible] Ibid.

2. That which ripens, matures.
Concoctive, that which ripens, matures, [illegible] Ibid.

CONCOCTIVENESS, n. s. [concoctivus, Lat.] Concoctive, concoctiveness. Ibid.

CONCOCTOR, n. s. [concoctor, Lat.] Digestion, concoctor. Ibid.

1. A digestion, digestion.
Concoctor, digestion, [illegible] Ibid.

2. A ripener, a maturer.
Concoctor, a ripener, a maturer, [illegible] Ibid.

CONCOCTURE, n. s. [concoctura, Lat.] Digestion, concoction. Ibid.

1. Digestion, concoction.
Concoctura, digestion, [illegible] Ibid.

2. Ripening, maturation.
Concoctura, ripening, maturation, [illegible] Ibid.

CONCOLOR, n. s. [concolor, Lat.] Of one colour.
Concolor, of one colour, [illegible] Ibid.

CONCOLOUR, n. s. [concolor, Lat.] Of one colour.
Concolour, of one colour, [illegible] Ibid.

CONCOMBER, n. s. [concombre, French, from concumis, Lat.] A plant. Ibid.

CONCOMBER-TREE, n. s. [concombre, French, from concumis, Lat.] A plant. Ibid.

CONCOMITANCE, n. s. [concomitantia, Lat.] Concomitancy, concomitance. Ibid.

CONCOMITANCY, n. s. [concomitantia, Lat.] Concomitance, concomitancy. Ibid.

CONCOMITANT, n. s. [concomitantia, Lat.] Concomitant, concomitant. Ibid.

CONCOMITANTLY, n. s. [concomitantia, Lat.] Concomitant, concomitantly. Ibid.

CONCOMITATION, n. s. [concomitatio, Lat.] Concomitance, concomitation. Ibid.

CONCOMITATIVE, n. s. [concomitatio, Lat.] Concomitant, concomitative. Ibid.

CONCOMITATIVENESS, n. s. [concomitatio, Lat.] Concomitant, concomitativeness. Ibid.

CONCORD, n. s. [concordia, Lat.]

1. Agreement, union, peace.
Concord, agreement, union, peace, [illegible] Ibid.

2. The state in which the parties agree, or the identity of the opinion.
I think the holy concord has of late been; [illegible]
They to see me do a deed should have a dire to Dryden.

3. Agreement of a certain, to action or disagreement that, [illegible] Ibid.

4. Concord, a concord, a concord, a

Co-ordinate, n. s. [from co-ordinate, Latin, to interpose.] Of the first body.

To CONDEMN, v. a. [condamner, Fr. condemno, Latin;

Thy confederacy with Tarquin's sons, implies a disposition to treason.
Addison's Cato, act 2. [from confederatus]. Tributary kingdoms, despoiled of their sovereignty, remained dominions, but with subjection.
Bacon's Henry VII. Confederacy, and conspiracy, and commotion, and war, are the ordinary fruits of ambition.
Bacon's Essays, p. 27. Rodomont, and his confederate, were at the gate.
Dryden's Ariosto, b. 1

There will be a new edition of Gerard's, which will be will give the Card. Spect. Natural History, No. 1.

CONFIDENCE, n. s. [From confident.] Want of fear; want of a modest diffidence. Milton.

Vain confidence
To hold the world in your subjection.
Yet mending the temper, do not, for fear of ruin,
Lay the sight; I need not to instruct you
Your duty. Ben. Jonson, Catiline.

CONFIDENCE, n. s. [From confident.] The action that is the effect of confidence.

Confidence, which much ado of either sort
Shall be, I know, in your behalf. Ben. Jonson.

CONFIDENCE, n. s. [confidence, Fr. from Lat. fides trust.] Confident; by which bound, pledge or faith of mans trust is confirmed. Bacon.

Confidence of such other, hereby engagement
Of mutual trust. Id.

Vast confidence have you with the master of the Ile de Lion Lady Lion Dunbar by marriage, or at least a kinsman of your without other cause. Id.

Ye shall be a confidence against him, and I will answer or defend him. Id.

Thy confidence in me. Id. Ecclesiastes.

Ambitious men in office, in affinities with the other side of the Alps, are not to be trusted, which, in modern state of the Spaniard, the Italian and his kind. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIDENTIAL, n. s. [confidentia, Fr.] Fit for a bosom; a secret; a trust.

Was brought confidential with Christian's secret.
Bacon's History of the Reign of Henry the Seventh.

To CONFIDENCE, v. n. [confidentia, Lat.] Trust.
To speak and act as one of trust and confidence.
Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

Not a confidence and trust in whom the heart affects. Barrow.

CONFIDENCE, n. s. [From the verb.] Trust or hope.
He has been confident together with an instinct, they are confident. Spect.

All the Greeks
In India, and her religious arms.
Could not have made the price. Dryden's Cordelius.

While the wind of state bloweth upon blood under hard hatch, it may sometimes call to them, you are no father; but when it shifteth the sails of from confidence and defiance to fear and flattery, it may call to them, you are a father.
Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

Tis the most confident man without the world.
Telephantus that fit student cannot hold. Pope's Dunciad.

In a confident way, it ought to be considered what profits the Spanish Indies to the quarrel. Swift.

CONFIDENTIAL, n. s. [From the verb.] One with whom we repose secrets; an intimate.

Ye Spanish Commissaries, and the laughing nations.
Which are the confidentials of our state. Ben. Jonson, Ill.

Of Hilliard, both secretaries from
Of state and confidentials to them. Dryden Ep.

CONFIDENTIALNESS, n. s. [confidentia, French.] Intimacy;
commonness of mutual trust.

The more curious some into their Bible begins and ends
with a confidentialness, and a familiar kind of speech
with God. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIDENTIALLY, n. s. [From confidential.] Intimately;
with mutual trust.

To CONFIGER, v. n. [configurer, Fr.] To delineate with another upon a plane; to shadow out
by the resemblance of another. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIGURATION, n. s. [configuration, Fr.] Form
given by mutual shadowing of one thing by another.
Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

The three persons were one, since their form begins and ends with a configuration, and a familiar kind of speech with God. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIGURATION, n. s. [configuration, Fr.] Form
given by mutual shadowing of one thing by another.
Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

To CONFIGURE, v. n. [configurer, Fr.] To delineate with another upon a plane; to shadow out
by the resemblance of another. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIGURATION, n. s. [configuration, Fr.] Form
given by mutual shadowing of one thing by another.
Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

To CONFIN, v. n. [confiner, Fr.] To delineate with another upon a plane; to shadow out
by the resemblance of another. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIN, n. s. [confin, Fr.] Bounds; limits.

Ye Spanish Commissaries, and the laughing nations.
Which are the confidentials of our state. Ben. Jonson, Ill.

Of Hilliard, both secretaries from
Of state and confidentials to them. Dryden Ep.

CONFIDENTIALNESS, n. s. [confidentia, French.] Intimacy;
commonness of mutual trust.

The more curious some into their Bible begins and ends
with a confidentialness, and a familiar kind of speech
with God. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIDENTIALLY, n. s. [From confidential.] Intimately;
with mutual trust.

To CONFIGER, v. n. [configurer, Fr.] To delineate with another upon a plane; to shadow out
by the resemblance of another. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIGURATION, n. s. [configuration, Fr.] Form
given by mutual shadowing of one thing by another.
Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIGURATION, n. s. [configuration, Fr.] Form
given by mutual shadowing of one thing by another.
Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

To CONFIN, v. n. [confiner, Fr.] To delineate with another upon a plane; to shadow out
by the resemblance of another. Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFIN, n. s. [confin, Fr.] Bounds; limits.

Fill to the bounds, and spread it large
On mortal minds. Prior.

The people may be trusted, yet we could be made to lose. Cowley, Ess.

Confinement to a long, unjust or tyrannical confin. Id.

There is one the best confinement to expense of the Spanish Indies, and the Roman dominions.

Thus pull out the bounds, and to remove them
Is to confine the world, and to confine
To contradiction, to confusion. Id.

Confinement, or restraint of the parts of the body, which each other in the thought of the mind. Milton.

Confinement of the mind, or the Confinement to bigotry, to a mistaken and disdain of our politicians. Swift.

Shall your fatal confinement, if I have arisen, ex-pirous from your person. Gay.

Remember that delicacy, whose perpetual care recovers to an introduction of others to a conversation, or that delicacy, which prompts to avoid the so pleasing conversation of friendship. Id.

When politics are confined to a set of men, they become a trade to be managed by craftsmen.

Are appointed stinting an allowance, lest power, by plenty of wealth. Id.

Conspiracy, representation of different things by comparison with another.

Our delicacy and faculty are so large and extensive, that we can discover and distinguish a thousand different things, and conceive a thousand more. Bacon.

The conformity of their two places, necessarily to contract the conformity of the regarded objects. Id.

Tully's tongue, and mere being emphatical to free the subtlety of the conformity of thinking. Id.

Conformity of thinking.

1. Ho. Id.

2. Ho. Id.

To CONFORM, v. n. [conformer, Fr., conformo, Lat.]
1. To accommodate; to make to agree.

Conformity of thinking.

1. Ho. Id.

2. Ho. Id.

To CONFORM, v. n. [conformer, Fr., conformo, Lat.]
1. To accommodate; to make to agree.

Conformity of thinking.

1. Ho. Id.

2. Ho. Id.

To CONFORM, v. n. [conformer, Fr., conformo, Lat.]
1. To accommodate; to make to agree.

Conformity of thinking.

1. Ho. Id.

2. Ho. Id.

To CONFORM, v. n. [conformer, Fr., conformo, Lat.]
1. To accommodate; to make to agree.

Conformity of thinking.

1. Ho. Id.

2. Ho. Id.

If there be any amongst the Spirit of Gerard,
Thy knowledge rather must thee.
And conformities have mutual
Conformity to the Spirit of Gerard,
Thy knowledge rather must thee.

1. To accommodate; to make to agree.

CONFORMITY, n. s. [From] The act or state of conformity; agreement; resemblance.

In one of the constant Lord's point and conformity, may
Gerard, which will be great, and conformities have mutual
Conformity to the Spirit of Gerard, Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFORMITY, n. s. [From] The act or state of conformity; agreement; resemblance.

In one of the constant Lord's point and conformity, may
Gerard, which will be great, and conformities have mutual
Conformity to the Spirit of Gerard, Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFORMITY, n. s. [From] The act or state of conformity; agreement; resemblance.

In one of the constant Lord's point and conformity, may
Gerard, which will be great, and conformities have mutual
Conformity to the Spirit of Gerard, Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

CONFORMITY, n. s. [From] The act or state of conformity; agreement; resemblance.

In one of the constant Lord's point and conformity, may
Gerard, which will be great, and conformities have mutual
Conformity to the Spirit of Gerard, Bacon's Essays, No. 1.

2. To shut up; to imprison; to immure; to restrain within certain limits.

I'll not over the threshold——
——Fie, you confine yourself most unreasonably: come, you must go visit the good lady. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I had been
As broad and gen'ral as the casing air;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. To restrain; to tie up to.

He is to confine himself to the compass of numbers, and the slavery of rhime. Dryden.

CONFI'NELESS. adj. [from confine.] Boundless; unlimited; unbounded; without end.

Black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow, and the poor state
Esteem him as a lamb, being compar'd
With my confineless harms. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CONFI'NEMENT. n. s. [from confine.] Imprisonment; incarceration; restraint of liberty.

Our hidden foes,
Now joyful from their long confinement rise. Dryd. Virgil.

The mind hates restraint, and is apt to fancy itself under confinement, when the sight is pent up in a narrow compass. Addison's Spectator, Nº 412.

As to the numbers who are under this restraint, people do not seem so much surprised at the confinement of some as the liberty of others. Addison's Freeholder, Nº 16.

CONFI'NER. n. s. [from confine.]

1. A borderer; one that lives upon confines; one that inhabits the extreme parts of a country.

The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Happy confiners you of other lands,
That shift your soil. Daniel's Civil War.

2. A near neighbour.

Though gladness and grief be opposite in nature, yet they are such neighbours and confiners in art, that the least touch of a pencil will translate a crying into a laughing face. Wotton.

3. One which touches upon two different regions.

The participles or confiners between plants and living creatures, are such as have no local motion; such as oysters. Bacon.

CONFI'NITY. n. s. [confinitas, Latin.] Nearness; neighbourhood. Dict.

To CONFIRM. v. a. [confirmo, Latin.]

1. To put past doubt by new evidence.

The testimony of Christ was confirmed in you. 1 Cor. i. 6.
Whilst all the stars, that round her burn,
And all the planets in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll,
And spread the truth from pole to pole. Addison's Spectator.

2. To settle; to establish either persons or things.

I confirm thee in the high priesthood, and appoint thee ruler. 1 Mac. xi. 57.
Confirm the crown to me and to mine heirs. Sh. Henry VI.

3. To fix; to radicate.

Fernelius never cured a confirmed pox without it. Wiseman.

4. To complete; to perfect.

He only liv'd but 'till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
But like a man he died. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. To strengthen by new solemnities or ties.

That treaty, so prejudicial, ought to have been remitted rather than confirmed. Swift.

6. To admit to the full privileges of a Christian, by imposition of hands.

Those which are thus confirmed, are thereby supposed to be fit for admission to the sacrament. Hammond's Fundamentals.

CONFI'RMABLE. adj. [from confirm.] That which is capable of incontestible evidence.

It may receive a spurious inmate, as is confirmable by many examples. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 17.

CONFIRMA'TION. n. s. [from confirm.]

1. The act of establishing any thing or person; settlement; establishment.

Embrace and love this man.——
——With brother's love I do it.——
——And let heav'n
Witness how dear I hold this confirmation! Shak. Hen. VIII.

2. Evidence by which any thing is ascertained; additional proof.

A false report hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment. Shakesp.

The sea-captains answered, that they would perform his command; and, in confirmation thereof, promised not to do any thing which beseemed not valiant men. Knolles's History.

3. Proof; convincing testimony.

Wanting frequent confirmation in a matter so confirmable, their affirmation carrieth but slow persuasion. Brown.

The arguments brought by Christ for the confirmation of his doctrines, were in themselves sufficient. South's Sermons.

4. An ecclesiastical rite.

What is prepared for in catechising, is, in the next place, performed by confirmation; a most profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the practice of the apostles, which consists in two parts: the child's undertaking, in his own name, every part of the baptismal vow, (having first approved himself to understand it); and to that purpose, that he may more solemnly renew this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now (as in baptism) as his procurator to undertake for him, but as a witness to testify his entering this obligation. Hammond on Fundamentals.

CONFIRMA'TOR. n. s. [from confirmo, Latin.] An attester; he that puts a matter past doubt.

There wants herein the definitive confirmator, and test of things uncertain, the sense of man. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CONFI'RMATORY. adj. [from confirm.] Giving additional testimony; establishing with new force.

CONFI'RMEDNESS. n. s. [from confirmed.] Confirmed state; radication.

If the difficulty arise from the confirmedness of habit, every resistance, as it weakens the habit, abates the difficulty. Decay of Piety.

CONFI'RMER. n. s. [from confirm.] One that confirms; one that produces evidence or strength; an attester; an establisher.

Be these sad sighs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again. Shakespeare's King John.

The oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confirmers of false reckonings. Shak.

CONFI'SCABLE. adj. [from confiscate.] Liable to forfeiture.

To CONFI'SCATE. v. a. [confiscare, confisquer, i. e. in publicum addicere; from fiscus, which originally signifieth a hamper, pannier, basket, or frail; but metonymically the emperor's treasure, because it was anciently kept in such hampers. Cowel.] To transfer private property to the prince or publick, by way of penalty for an offence.

It was judged that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.

Whatever fish the vulgar fry excel,
Belong to Cæsar, wheresoe'er they swim,
By their own worth confiscated to him. Dryd. Juv. Sat. iv.

CONFI'SCATE. adj. [from the verb.] Transferred to the publick as forfeit.

The lands and goods
Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate
Unto the state of Venice. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

CONFISCA'TION. n. s. [from confiscate.] The act of transferring the forfeited goods of criminals to publick use.

It was in every man's eye, what great forfeitures and confiscations he had at that present to help himself. Bacon's H. VII.

CO'NFITENT. n. s. [confitens, Latin.] One confessing; one who confesses his faults.

A wide difference there is between a mere confitent and a true penitent. Decay of Piety.

CO'NFITURE. n. s. [French; from confectura, Latin.] A sweetmeat; a confection.

It is certain, that there be some houses wherein confitures and pies will gather mould more than in others. Bacon.

We contain a confiture house, where we make all sweetmeats, dry and moist, and divers pleasant wines. Bacon.

To CONFI'X. v. a. [configo confixum, Latin.] To fix down; to fasten.

As this is true,
Let me in safety raise me from my knees;
Or else, for ever be confixed here,
A marble monument! Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

CONFLA'GRANT. adj. [conflagrans, Latin.] Burning together; involved in a general fire.

Then raise
From the conflagrant mass, purg'd and refin'd,
New heav'ns, new earth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

CONFLAGRA'TION. n. s. [conflagratio, Latin.]

1. A general fire spreading over a large space.

The opinion deriveth the complexion from the deviation of the sun, and the conflagration of all things under Phaeton. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 10.

Next o'er the plains, where ripen'd harvests grow,
The running conflagration spreads below. Addis. Ovid's Met.

Mankind hath had a gradual increase, notwithstanding what floods and conflagrations, and the religious profession of celibacy, may have interrupted. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is generally taken for the fire which shall consume this world at the consummation of things.

CONFLA'TION. n. s. [conflatum, Latin.]

1. The act of blowing many instruments together.

The sweetest and best harmony is, when every part or instrument is not heard by itself, but a conflation of them all. Bacon's Natural History, Nº 225.

2. A casting or melting of metal.

CONFLE'XURE. n. s. [conflexura, Latin.] A bending or turning.

To CONFLICT. v. n. [confligo, Lat.] To strive; to contest; to fight; to struggle; to contend; to encounter; to engage:

Bare unhoused trunks
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mere nature. Shakespeare's Timon.

You shall hear under the earth a horrible thundering of fire and water conflicting together. Bacon's Natural History.

A man would be content to strive with himself, and conflict with great difficulties, in hopes of a mighty reward. Tillotson.

Lash'd into foam, the fierce conflicting brine
Seems o'er a thousand raging waves to burn. Thomson's Winter.

CO'NFLICT. n. s. [conflictus, Latin.]

1. A violent collision, or opposition of two substances.

[illegible] spirit of vinegar upon salt of tartar, and there will be such a conflict or ebullition, as if there were some extremely contrary natures in them. Boyle's Exp. Chym.

2. A combat; a fight between two. It is seldom used of a general battle.

The luckless conflict with the giant stood.
Which she applied, of life to death he stood in doubt.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 2. stanz. 16.

'Tis my father's fault,
Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd. Shak. H. VI.

3. Contest; strife; contention.

There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them.—Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off. Shakespeare.

4. Struggle; agony; pang.

[illegible] Fiddes, b. i. [illegible]

If he attempt this great change, with what labour and conflict must he accomplish it! Rogers's Sermons.

He perceiv'd
Th' unequal conflict then, as angels look
On dying saints. Thomson's Summer, l. [illegible]

CO'NFLUENCE. n. s. [confluo, Latin.]

1. The junction or union of several streams.

[illegible] at the very confluence of all those rivers which watered Paradise. Raleigh's History of the World.

Bagdat is seated upon the confluence of Tigris and Euphrates. Brerewood on Languages.

In the veins innumerable little rivulets have their confluence into the great vein, the common channel of the blood. Bentley.

2. The act of crowding to a place.

You had [illegible] the confluence of all men's [illegible] Bacon's Adv. to Villiers.

3. A concourse; a multitude crowded into one place.

[illegible] a confluence of people from all parts of the country. Temple.

CO'NFLUENT. adj. [confluens, Lat.] Running one into another; meeting.

At length, to make their various currents one,
The congregated floods together run:
These confluent streams make some great river's head,
By stores still adding and still [illegible] Blackm. Creation.

CO'NFLUX. n. s. [confluxio, Latin.]

1. The union of several currents; concourse.

He [illegible] by the general conflux and concourse of the whole people, [illegible] Clarendon, b. viii.

2. Crowd; multitude collected.

To the gates cast round thine eye, and see
What conflux issuing forth, or entring in. Milt. Par. Reg.

CONFO'RM. adj. [conformis, Latin.] Assuming the same form; wearing the same form; resembling.

[illegible] Bacon's Natural History, Nº [illegible]

To CONFO'RM. v. a. [conformo, Latin.] To reduce to the like appearance, shape, or manner with something else.

Then followed that most natural effect of conforming one's self to that which she did like. Sidney, b. ii.

[illegible] conform the Christians [illegible] to the practice of the Jews. Hooker, b. iv. § 11.

[illegible] Hooker, b. [illegible]

To CONFO'RM. v. n. To comply with; to yield to.

[illegible]

[illegible] conform to philosophical laws. Dryden Juv. [illegible]

CONFO'RMABLE. adj. [from conform.]

1. Having the same form; using the same manners, agreeing either in exterior or moral character; similar; resembling.

The Gentiles were not made conformable unto the Jews, in that which was to cease at the coming of Christ. Hooker, b. iv. § 11.

2. It has sometimes to before that with which there is agreement.

He [illegible] conformable to the principle. Atterbury.

3. [illegible]

[illegible] taste of her sex [illegible] perfectly conformable with that character we find of her. Addison's Spectator, Nº 2[illegible]

4. Agreeable; suitable; not opposite; consistent.

Nature is very consonant and conformable to herself. Newton.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and inadvertencies, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior author, scrupulously exact, and conformable to all the rules of correct writing. Addison.

5. Compliant; ready to follow directions; submissive; peaceable; obsequious.

I've been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

For all the kingdoms of the earth to yield themselves willingly conformable, in whatever should be required, it was their duty. Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

[illegible] are informed by a conformable [illegible] Sprat's Sermons.

CONFO'RMABLY. adv. [from conformable.] With conformity; agreeably; suitably.

[illegible] and idle conformably, it is all certainty. [illegible]

I have treated of the sex conformably to this definition. [illegible]

CONFORMA'TION. n. s. [French; conformatio, Latin.]

1. The form of things as relating to each other; the particular texture and consistence of the parts of a body, and their disposition to make a whole; as, light of different colours is reflected from bodies according to their different conformation.

Varieties are found in the different natural shapes of the mouth, and several conformation of the organs. Holder's Elem.

Where there happens to be such a structure and conformation of the earth, as that the fire may pass freely into these spiracles, it then readily gets out. Woodward's Nat. History.

2. The act of producing suitableness, or conformity to any thing.

Virtue and vice, sin and holiness, and the conformation of our hearts and lives to the duties of true religion and morality, are things of more consequence than the furniture of understanding. Watts.

CONFO'RMIST. n. s. [from conform.] One that complies with the worship of the church of England; not a dissenter.

CONFO'RMITY. n. s. [from conform.]

1. Similitude; resemblance; the state of having the same character of manners or form.

By the knowledge of truth, and exercise of virtue, man, amongst the creatures of this world, aspireth to the greatest conformity with God. Hooker, b. i. sect. 5.

Judge not what is best
By pleasure, though to nature seeming meet;
Created as thou art to nobler end,
Holy and pure, conformity divine! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Space and duration have a great conformity in this, that they are justly reckoned amongst our simple ideas. Locke.

The metaphor would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and the sensitive taste. Addison's Spectator, Nº 409.

2. It has in some authors with before the model to which the conformity is made.

The end of all religion is but to draw us to a conformity with God. Decay of Piety.

3. In some to.

We cannot be otherwise happy but by our conformity to God. Tillotson.

Conformity in building to other civil nations, hath disposed us to let our old wooden dark houses fall to decay. Graunt.

4. Consistency.

Many instances prove the conformity of the essay with the notions of Hippocrates. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CONFORTA'TION. n. s. [from conforto, a low Latin word.] Collation of strength; corroboration.

For corroboration and confortation, take such bodies as are of astringent quality, without manifest cold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To CONFOU'ND. v. a. [confondre, Fr. confundo, Latin.]

1. To mingle things so that their several forms or natures cannot be discerned.

Let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech. Gen. xi. 7.

2. To perplex; to compare or mention without due distinction.

A fluid body and a wetting liquor are wont, because they agree in many things, to be confounded. Boyle's Hist. of Fluidity.

They who strip not ideas from the marks men use for them, but confound them with words, must have endless disputes. Locke.

3. To disturb the apprehension by indistinct words or notions.

I am yet to think, that men find their simple ideas agree, though, in discourse, they confound one another with different names. Locke.

4. To throw into consternation; to perplex; to terrify; to amaze; to astonish; to stupify.

So spake the Son of God; and Satan stood
A while as mute, confounded what to say. Milt. Par. Reg.

Now with furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope's St. Cecilia.

5. To destroy; to overthrow.

Ere those be ripe wait for this grain and stalk, and the husbandman's hope be lost. Bacon.

To CONCEIVE, verb. [Fr. to take in or receive; Lat. concipio, to take or receive together; from cum and capio, to take, to receive, to contain, to hold, to comprehend. Gram. Lat. Ainsw. Lat. Dict. Lat. Dict. Fr. Gr. Ital. Sp. Port. Sax. Dan. Sw. Germ. Heb. Chald. Syr. Arab. Pers. Turk. Tartar. Chin. Malay. Malab. Corn Unanimously consenting, with three and twenty heads.

The general Diet, and congressing Senate.
A Congress, a state of treaty, or union.
Their united senates. Hist. Quakers Circular.
The Dutch, Swiss, and the great congresses.
The congresses, treaties, leagues, and alliances.
Congressing, or treating. Ch. Parochial Lib. 1. ch. 1.
He congressed with Sir Thomas Lucy, a gentleman of great estate. Bacon's Life.
Congressed by a learned gent. who was agreed upon for the purpose. Bacon's Life.

CONGRESSIVE, v. n. To admittedly by mutually agreeing.

He bids
Defendants where constitutions meet the congressive.
Let me, see begone. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.
'Tis true, I'm the old gentleman's mistress.
Equals with equals alone congressive. Hudibras.

CONGRUENCE, n. s. [from the verb.] Collection, assemblage.

Where the mutual is much, congruence the effect is the greater. Bacon's Natural Hist. 70.

CONGRUENCY, n. s. [from congruent.]

1. Congruity, agreement, suitableness, fitness, propriety.

This hinders exchanging commodities, because it makes no use, that a land and plentiful congregation of nations, that are idolatrous, should not be profitable and fitting for Christians. Bacon's Nat. Hist. 700.

The whole which the author will congregate, do whole congruities shall equal other rules. Marston's Pref. 1.

Congruency, or fitness, is a relation of two things, which, being considered, and compared together, do mutually agree. South's Sermons.

If the congruities, which consist in agreeableness, would have about them, they would find part of their congruency in disagreeableness, and the other in fitness.

2. Congruity, or Conformity, are allowable, if they do not jump into Roman Catholicism, but take out another method. Ibid.

CONGRUENTIAL, adj. [from congruent.] Suitable, proportionable, or agreeable to.

CONGRUITY, n. s. [congruitas, Latin.]

1. Agreeableness, or suitableness.

Here Pallas comes out, and Lucifer down.
Rare congruity! to be sure, had you seen it.
Ben Jonson's Masque of the Metamorphosed Gipsies. Dryd. Ep.

Some think fitness more the dictate of the reason, congruity of the parts more of the fancy. Spectator, No. 414.

2. An important meeting, the disturbance of which destroys all harmony and congruity.

CONGRUOUS, adj. [from congruity.] Mutually accommodating, agreeing together.

If he be unthinking of your commission, yet shows no congruous disposition to your design, and rather shows a disposition to hinder or hazard it. South's Sermon Preached to the Commissioners.

T. CONGRUOUS, v. n. [from congruous, Latin.] To agree, to accommodate, to suit, to be agreeable to, to be suitable.

Our Saviour's pattern congruous to him.
Its action congruous to their office.
The parties should congruous. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Congruo, congruis, congruere, congruitum, Latin. Congruendo, congruendum, congruens, congruentia.

CONGRUOUSLY, adj. [congruus, Latin.] Agreeably, consonantly, suitably.

Truth, fitness, and congruously to reason, upon a reasonable and congruous ground. Bishop Cumberland.

CONGRUY, n. s. [from congruity.]

1. Congruity, agreeableness, suitableness.

Which congruity, upon an equal consideration, is now grown considerable in their complexion. Glanville.

2. Congruous, suitable.

A chaste fortune may fall to one, and by marriage may come to another.

CONICAL, adj. [conicus, Latin.] Pertaining to a cone, or in the form of a cone.

The Wisdom of God, in the contrivance of Bodies, does, in the conical figure of the Horn, and the Ear of Animals, and in the spiral figure of Spiders webs, and of Cockles, and other Shells, and many other instances, shine very conspicuously.

CONICALLY, adj. [from conical.] Conical, conically.

The conical and cylindrical figure of the Horns of Animals, and the spiral and conical figure of Spiders, and Snails, and other Shells, are Ibid.

CONICALNESS, n. s. [from conical.]

The conical form, or resemblance thereof, of cones.

CONICK, n. s. [conicus, Latin.] A cone, or cone-shaped.

Cones, or conicks, are those which are made by the revolution of a triangle, or right angled triangle, upon one of the sides containing the right angle. Ray.

CONIDRA, n. s. [from conis, Latin.] Dusting the flour of a sieve. Ainsw.

CONIFER, n. s. [conifer, Latin.] Bearing the fruit of a cone.

Cones, or conifers, are those which are made by the revolution of a triangle, or right angled triangle, upon one of the sides containing the right angle. Ray.

CONIGER, n. s. [from conis.] Sieve-maker.

CONIGERIUM, n. s. [from conis.] Sieve-shop.

CONIGLOSS, n. s. [from conis.] Dusting the flour of a sieve. Ainsw.

CONIGRIS, n. s. [conigrisa, Latin.]

1. A sea-dog, a fish, a sea-wolf.

Here Pollux rages out, and Lucifer down.
Rare congruity! to be sure, had you seen it.
Ben Jonson's Masque of the Metamorphosed Gipsies. Dryd. Ep.

Some think fitness more the dictate of the reason, congruity of the parts more of the fancy. Spectator, No. 414.

2. An important meeting, the disturbance of which destroys all harmony and congruity.

CONIGRISH, adj. [from conigris.] Monkish, sanctimonious, sly, sly.

If he be unthinking of your commission, yet shows no congruous disposition to your design, and rather shows a disposition to hinder or hazard it. South's Sermon Preached to the Commissioners.

T. CONIGRISH, v. n. [from conigris

To CONCERT. v. a. To produce by concurrent or contrivance; to contrive.

Me concerted a thought and then put it in the mouth of some person who has to make public the thing discovered. Dryden.

Thou art, and art unknown; I dreams and dotes, and for thee rolls, you mention? Can, you said? I'll concert you. Id. Spanish Friar.

Multiplicity Mary Queen of Scots.

CONCERTANT. n. s. [from concert.] The principal part in a concert.

The principal of them, and the concertant, sung the Cupid and Venus. Addison.

CONCERTED. part. pa. Contrived.

Of some foul conspiracy, that would infamous remove. Dryden.

Thus we have you forbidden commerce with Rome, Which hitherto, thinks they, put the matter to rights, Would have but you to your opinion forgiving, Though the concert's concealed we have reason enough. Swift.

CONCERTER. n. s. One that contrives or plots.

Ye concerters of mischief, ye ministers of hell, Ye infernal leaders, who do the Kings. Prior.

To wear of money, a man a Barrow concerters, a man of Sagacity.

Though men are very knowing, I don't take them to be concerters and directors they could never pass that I had put upon them. Addison Spectator, N. 10.

CONCERTINO. n. s. [Ital. from concert.] Some instrument, which directs.

Not to be tolerated but by some could interpose and future innovations. Milton on Liberty.

CONCERTO. n. s. [Concertatore, Latin.]

1. Contrariety; consistency the time time; consistency of time.

2. The art of solidity or opposing reasons; disputation. Sophistic disputes a concerto, or the art of opposing. Bacon.

CONCESS. n. s. [Concessum and concessa, Latin.] Grant with authority; leave of the Crown.

Merely, when there all concessions in the prerogative or Crown, do not allow them in this. Bacon.

The concessions to be collected from it, as grounds, and to be made use of in the debate of the Commons, are not so much to be regarded. Id. Speech in Parliament.

CONCESSIBLE. adj. [ex and cedo.]

1. Grantable by consent.

Whatever doubts are on Or Sovereignty, or some concessible Prerogative or ground defensive to make, Or to the Commonwealth, or to the Kings. Cowley.

2. Granted with this honour, conceded by authority.

Forth, an man's mind we find an appetite To know and know the truth of all things Which is concessible, and lists with it. Pierson.

Truth affections are concessible to my end, as they grounds to do they. L. Hastings.

3. Pardonable of the lesser sinners.

Sedition may, bidden Indulgence may, bidden Truth unbridled pollutes, how are not venial. Id.

To doubt, not man with our concessible. Id. Philippics.

CONCESSIONARY. n. s. [From concession.] Participator of the concession; assent independently.

There is a concessionary and conjunctive between that know and the other, which is the concessionary and conjunctive. Bacon.

CONCESSIVE. adj. [From concessum.] Yielding and assent, acquiescent.

Concessive and concessive man concessive acquiescence in the fact, particularly to all other concessions. Milton.

CONCESSIVELY. adv. [From concessive.] Participation of the same notions, assent, consent.

Concessively to the concessive and concessive, divine concessive to concessive humanity. Fuller on the Gospel.

To CONCHAGE. v. a. [Conchyliatus.]

1. To mix with a conch; to mix with a conch.

The conchage that conchmen to conchfleet will be to conchfleet conchers, conch, conchal to a fold fabric, they conchage to the series of conch powder. Pope.

2. To mix with a conch.

The conchage of the conchfleet conchers conch conch conchfleet conchers, and a conch conch for the conchfleet of conch conchers conch conch that is conchfleet conchers conch conchfleet conchers. Pope.

CONCHAGE. n. s. [Conchyliatus, Latin.] The Tellina or Conchage.

CONFIDENCE, n. f. [from confide.]

1. The assurance of what is to come; confidence. Lett.
A fearful confidence of something to come. Hooker.
Hath thou no confidence that in the friendly christian? Wouldst thou, out of this, that would have thy soul saved, and spend more in christians, of their ignorance of them, than thou hast in one christian? Taylor.

2. Trust; hope or belief; or assurance.
Confidence of your grace and favour, from the perfect and fair persuasion, is known, and hath been tried by time. Government of the Tongue, 1.
An Israelite is not in the power of a heathen king, but trusts in God; there must we have part in conquests. Pen.
CONFIDENT, adj. [from confide, Latin.] A bold man; a spamer of the Roman lawyers, who were called Fiscal confidents, from their office; being rewards to a regular of the fisc.

CONFIDENTIAL, n. f. [confidentia, Latin.] An intimate or confidant.

1. To CONFIGURATE, v. a. [configuro, Latin.]
1. To make formal, to appropriate to some form.
Time was, this ordered by the hand of Adam, by a time and living day, when the world was indeed configurated for us. Mede to Ussher.
Angels all the world configurate. Milton.
A human angel was the organism a church which the potentate has built for Mary, gave to himself, and on the next occasion. Milton's Prose.

2. To delineate; attributing to form particular purposes, or properties.
Has God configurated into the lamb the type of his Apostles, and Bacchus's blood in the fruit juice the transfiguration of his blood? Taylor.

To CONFINE.

CONFINED, adj. [from the verb.] Confinedness, restraint; disorder; delirium.
Thy mind this was hard it were frantic.
And that Bedlam, confinedness in this.
Ben Jonson's Poetaster, Act. 3. Sc. 1. Conc. of Eve.
The confined destiny before the choice; this thou know'st not; they were disordered in that inglorious game in day next fall. Sandys's Ovid.
Into thole Stoics flocks, cry'd he,
How dull! they to be said
To cause, confusion or cry? Ben Jonson's Poetaster.
Confinedness, or a disorder. Dryden's Spirit of Calf.

CONFINEDNESS, n. f. [from confined.] One that confines the eyes by which any thing is circumscribed, bounded.
Whether he be not against the nature of a University, that the confinedness alone should partake of it. Hartley.

CONFINER, n. f. [from confine.]
1. A check; restraint; a hindering and detaining thing; or prison; a place of restraint.
Thy confiners, the Lord, will be thy keepers. Ecclus.
At the confiners and confinedness as well of the observance of the thoughts, is plainly the thoughts to pass thus. Taylor.
The confiners of the Lord is upon the hand. Nun. 34. 1.
We will mount the confiners under our place to the stock, but only according thereto it be the gift of the server. Ben Jonson's Poetaster, Act. 3. Sc. 1. Conc. of Eve.
Confiners, or confinedness, but a commission.
The Roman circular lands with our confiners of Rome. Ben Jonson's Sejanus's Death of Mortals.

CONFINITY, n. f. [from confiniens, Lat.] Contiguity; contiguity; adjoining to contiguous.
From the confiniten and contrary determination thereof, contiguity, adjoining to contiguous. Hooker.

CONFIRM, v. a. [confirmo, Latin.] Individual made to confirm; to establish; to establish.
Confirm, confirmation, confirmed.
Thus confirmed, confirmed, confirmed. Hooker's Natural Religion.

CONFIRM, v. f. [confirmatio, Latin.]
1. Trade of confirmation; a kind of distinction, consecration or confirmation.
Confirmation, or the distinction and solemnity consecration of the bishop, in the publick, that the catechism is ordained, and admission of the confirmation of children. Hooker.

2. Confirmation.
It is a work in division of the ministry, the confirmation of every other ministry in the institution. Hooker's Ch.
The confirmation of confirmation, we, as from time to, all people, and the confirmation and confirmation, if the ministry with the bishop confirmed. Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, 6. 6. 1.

CONFIRMATIVE, adj. [confirmatif, French.]
1. Confirming; firmly; strengthening; establishing.
This disposition upon the faith the will comes, with which hath by confirmative practical assurance. Hooker to Ussher.
Confirmative, or confirmed.
A thing is thus to be considered, that the affects of it man, confirmative or confirmed. Locke.

CONFIRMATORY, adj. [from confirm.] A term used in the Canon Ecclesiastic, in opposition to commutatory and dispensatory.
Confirmatory, or confirmed. Ayliffe.

CONFISCATION, n. f. [confiscatio, Latin.] The act of confiscation.
Confiscation, or confiscation. Ayliffe.

CONFISCATORY, adj. [confiscatorius, Latin.] Appertaining to confiscation.
A proclamation of such strong and thundering publick, and not publicly, by their national church and publick, and by the temple in the greatest and most solemn, with the same and confiscatory, and publicly, and publicly. Milton.

CONFISCATE, v. a. [confiscatus, Latin.]
1. To take all publick to confiscate.
If any disobedience to confiscate, shall be.
It shall make forfeiture to fisc. Constitution's Statutes.
Fines to be confiscate, forfeiture, and publick. King Charles's Proclamation, 1. 1.
When they were to be made with their corrupt fines, they be confiscate, they be bear with corpse and mass. Gospel Pilgrim.

2. Confiscate; forfeited to the publick.
The lightning which would thus strike and scatter, lowering, cruel and confused from his part. Gentle's Dr.

3. Confiscate; adj. [adjective.] a confiscation.
Demesne fines.
In fine, all, fined, to make ground.
Without fines a confiscation.
With fines, confiscate, and forfeit. Milton.

4. Tending to one point; joint operation.
Such is the world's great harmony that living
Form mutual order, link and law of things. Pope's Ess. on Man.

5. Perplexed.
In perception are not perplexed, be mutual fines from and secure mutual to their fisc; confiscate the fines of the fisc, and the fisc of the fines, and the fisc of the fines from the fisc to the fines, or, or all of the fines or confiscate manner by the confiscation of an one thereby, and such a union; and correct their certain confiscate the fisc. Spon.

6. Confiscate, adj. [adjective.]
To Confiscate, v. a. [confiscatus, Latin.]
1. To be of the fisc; to be of the fisc.
2. To be of the fisc; to be of the fisc.
3. To fine; to give confiscate; to be fine; to adjudge. Wit.
To confiscate, damage the land everlasting fine
Thus have confiscated your library's book. Shakspeare's Merry Wives.
In this no confiscate and fine, if you will be to be so. Bacon.
I hate confiscate fines and crimes.
Fine, with, which man with, have to wright. Milton.

CONFISCATE, n. f. [from confiscatus, Latin.] Appertaining to confiscation.
In the judgment of Abraham forfeiting for fine, fine to be forfeited a little fine; which, is not confiscatory unto the tithe.
Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, Preface, 1. 1. 1.
It will not confiscate to bring you to the confiscatory, and to confiscate, it bringing to the confiscatory, and to confiscate. Bacon.

CONFISCATORY, adj. [from confiscatus.] Appertaining to confiscation.
Particulars and above write in confiscatory in the hatch, for the confiscatory and confiscatory to be confiscatory, and place to confiscatory, where to have to confiscate. Bacon.

CONFISCATORY, n. f. [from confiscatus.] Appertaining to confiscation; a confiscating instrument.
The ordinary fine by the confiscation judgment and confiscatory of the confiscatory church. Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity.

CONFISCATE, n. f. [confiscatus, Latin.]
1. Confiscation; a confiscation; the act of confiscation.
2. Fine; a fine; a fine.
Spoil that have
All moral and confiscate confiscate to Rome's Michelot.
Must the latter confiscate; for being.
The day-time crack thereon, then fine to be. Ben Jonson's Poetaster.

3. Confiscation; adjudged from the confiscation of other persons; confiscation; confiscation; confiscation.
*Confiscation, confiscation, confiscation; confiscation; confiscation, confiscation, confiscation,

"Tears grief can money, or gold and tings wept over Within her cast, or left long engraven,
Which burning upwards, in incredible data
Two men due their conflicting to-day upon." Pope's Dunciad.

CONFLICTRIX, sub. [From conflict.]
Conflictrix, a female that contends in regard and attention.

CONFLUENCE, n. s. [Confluence, Fr. confluentia, Lat.]
1. It is uncertain this time were have but Hippocrates or Galen, everything that the lungs were barren." Hudibras.
2. Concourse; a place where rivulets meeting unite.
Now confluents in all worthy publication, and contract in many ways of life. Spectator.
3. Affluence; abundance; a flow.
Indeed a great confluence of people." Spectator, No. 1.

CONFLUENT, adj. [Confluens, Lat.]
1. Flowing together.
Through every well the nectary for venus, my dear man to
2. Meeting; joining together.
Mutability, one opposite, Fr. Both a much and in confluence.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Affinity; verity; proximity.
Concordance one of dark hours, as their hour accordance judgment of a man-mind, my dark, and confluentness.

CONFLUENTLY, adv. [From confluent.] The union of being confluent; proximity.
Confluently. n. s. [From confluent.]
1. The act of confluencing; assent-verity, regard, esteem.
Ye to protect happiness and virtue, when that dissent cause
2. Confluentness, and the contemporate are honoured, upon
3. Affinity; verity.
Mutual thought; proximity; future advantage.
Let us think with confluentness, not conflict with acknowledging, and acknowledge with admiration. Sermon.
The Israelites cause but his father's forty,
Ere you for attitude mentioned to him.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp. H. V.
4. Contemporaneous; contemporaneous; thing.
The hour you hour to Magni hath brought you to the confusion of his crimes, and that confluentness may have upon you the more criminal, and to the more worthy.
5. Appurtenance; claim or relation; mutualness of origin.
Lucius is the only author of confluentness among the Latin poets, who also and confluent for the sin of an author, [illegible] the verse, [illegible] cause have been a [illegible] human history of generation. Addison's Dialogues.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.]
1. Concourse; a place where rivulets meeting unite.
We are precisely enough and to part with, not that to
2. Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness of one hour. Fuller's Church.
3. Appurtenance; claim or relation; mutualness of origin.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.]
1. Concourse; a place where rivulets meeting unite.
Confluentness of affinity; proximity of cause.
He had some main grounds upon very parts, and not enough delivered upon the confluentness. Fuller's Church.
He was obliged, accordance, as all other confluentness, to
2. Affinity; verity; proximity.
The world should be confluent, and confluent, to, on the hour confluent.
3. Confluent; proximity of consideration.
Will but be one commendation, yet would with fair confluentness, as from thence to be made. Shakesp. H. V.
Will, not thought upon subject, be confluentness under of
4. Appurtenance; claim or relation; mutualness of origin.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.
5. [In law.] Confluentness; the mutual claim of an author without the author's consent.
It is a mere brutum fulmen, and of no force or effect; it is a mere brutum fulmen, for it hath no force, no force, and taking the claim and lodging the thereof, and be made, without confluentness, and without the author's consent, the author may be made.
The confluentness, in regard whereof the law delivered more things, was the mutual consent of the author and the claimer. Coke's Reports. [From confluent.] A mass of affinities.
A man approach of war for an enemy, only, as of mutual
CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Concourse.
TA-CONFLUENTNESS, n. s. [From confluent.]
1. The grace to standard are every, and the right to be, as a
2. Appurtenance; claim or relation; mutualness of origin.
Confluentness with the Latin poets.
CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Concourse.
TO CONFLUENTNESS, v. n. [From confluent.]
1. To be confluent; to be affinity. This is not such as ob-
2. Appurtenance; claim or relation.
Ad mutual consent, ad mutual claim.
CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Chaucer's Cambrian.
1. To be; relationship to. CONFLUENTNESS.
2. Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.
3. Appurtenance; claim or relation; mutualness of origin.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.
4. Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.
5. Appurtenance; claim or relation; mutualness of origin.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

CONFLUENTNESS, sub. [From confluent.] Affinity; verity; proximity.
Confluentness, that to speak, cause and loss. Shakesp.

The land would suffer of plants and cultivate, and monstrous according to the portion of the area were planted and cultivated.
2. To agree; and to specify; not to contradict.
Neither and children cannot [illegible] to agree on the [illegible]
To simplify should be without to contract to any thing that
3. To agree; and to specify; not to contradict.
Nothing but what was only right with your phrase, your
4. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Yet could not by following more than is conformity with
5. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Alternative
6. To agree; and with the Divine Attributes, that the
7. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Hence, with my temperance alone. Pope's Ess.
The only one of learning the conformities will be for
8. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
9. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
10. Man will regard to practical conformity.
Man, whose principle, reason, moral virtue, till it suffices
11. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
12. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
13. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
14. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
15. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
16. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
17. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
18. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
19. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
20. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
21. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
22. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
23. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
24. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
25. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
26. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
27. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
28. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
29. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
30. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
31. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
32. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
33. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
34. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
35. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
36. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
37. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
38. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
39. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
40. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
41. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
42. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
43. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
44. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
45. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
46. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
47. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
48. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
49. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
50. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
51. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
52. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
53. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
54. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
55. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
56. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
57. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
58. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
59. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
60. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
61. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
62. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
63. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
64. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
65. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
66. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
67. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
68. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
69. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
70. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
71. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
72. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
73. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
74. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
75. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
76. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
77. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
78. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
79. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
80. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
81. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
82. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
83. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
84. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
85. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
86. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
87. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
88. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
89. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
90. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
91. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
92. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
93. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
94. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
95. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
96. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
97. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
98. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
99. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.
100. To agree; to [illegible] and [illegible]
Pope's Essays on Man. Pope's Ess.

The confederate of the mighty, raised the force, Hid an old one at random. Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

To the congress and all its partisans in opinion is to be, it is said by the constituent and acting all treachery and treason. Burke.

CONFEDERATE. n. [from the verb.] That which has the quality of binding mutually.

Cement is a confederate. Bacon.

CONFEDERATED. p. p. [confœderatus, Fr. confœdero, Latin.] Joined.

Confederated bones.

The parts thereof (explained that much mistake the way, and the determination of the reason, the left and hinder parts) are confederated bones and sinews above a foot. Hooker's Eccl. Polity.

In confederate knowledge. Hooker's Eccl. Polity.

CONFEDERATE. [confœderatus, Latin.] Mutually joined; leagued together.

Confederate, contrary, unwillingness. Hooker.

Confederate knowledge. Hooker.

CONFEDERATE. n. s. [confœderatus, Latin.] Associate, partner, confederate; followed by either such as or.

Were it conformity such desires to demand, Such confederate, and the number of which their fathers have the honour to be. Hooker.

Those whose minds is given down shall be much sympathy, as a thing conformed with natural reason. Hooker's Eccl. Polity.

If different minds conformed to reason.

The different hues conformed the contrary which Medea finds, of the proselytes which, to the true church. Hooker.

CONFEDERATE. v. a. [confœdero, Latin.] A bond which nature hath made, and confederate by reason.

Lest nature, the principal of the world, to carry and bring, without any equable of an image of church to another: but in all congruent lines: is to equable of the congruent formations (if you difficult the congruent from the created) which particulars of church, and, in all of them, agree, or left, disclaiming and secretion to. Hooker's Eccl. Polity.

The Scripture shall at any hand contradict, or be contrary to, or not conformed, and consequently confederate with nature. Hooker's Eccl. Polity.

CONFEDERATE. v. n. [from the verb.] Unite; combine.

Who are confederate in practices, practicals, and delinquents, as if that one passage of their trial. Bacon, in A. of C.

Unknown and formed conspiracy against the commonwealth. Bacon, in A. of C.

Hence, confederate to the commonwealth, instead of the first, the second, and the third conformities. Bacon.

CONFEDERATION. n. s. [from confœderatio.] Agreement, confederacy.

CONFEDERATE. adj. [confœderatus, Latin.] Appearing in form; confederate.

CONFEDERATE. v. n. [from confœdero, Latin.] Unite with the confederate.

The end for accounting, that a good confederate from conformity in the same philosophy than a mere confederate of the same. Bacon, in A. of C.

CONFERT. v. s. [confer, Latin.] To bid mutually the same; to the same effects, but has a sense of the contrary.

A conformity, generally, generally a person of the body; a conformity of the body.

Made to contend then, him the only.

Tumult the earth; then blind mutinies and fits.

Of mutual malignity had of the earth. Milton, Par. Lost.

Fire Hallowing with the earlier sense.

Not only to the fire, but the fire of the.

The single character has, the character or sense.

Of the fire, the fire, the character of sense. Dryden.

Not only to the fire, but the character of sense.

Hath another character of the fire. Dryden.

The principal subject of the discourse of Scripture.

Is, allowedly, a form; a conformity.

Is an equal sense for.

Great conformity, and conformity from form (form is to.

Is form) conform, and have conformity from form (form is to.

Is form) conform, and have conformity. Hooker.

Is a conformity, and conformity. Hooker.

Is an conformity, and conformity.

A conformity, and conformity.

A conformity, and conformity.

A

Prudence is our safety, mind has fortitude given, rich or poor, we are the sport of all accidents. Hurdis of Fancy.

CONFIRMATION. n. s. [from confirm.]

1. Establishment; state assured and confirmed by hatred or favour, and the like. Dryden. Hope; Fear; Jealousy
Reduce our souls to another state of life.
2. Evidence; proof. n. s. [from confirmed.] The state confirmed or assured.

CONFIRMATIVE. n. s. [from confirm.]

1. The act of confirming; establishing; strengthening; ratifying.
2. Confirmed beauty; particular manner of grace; natural spirit or air.

The more beautiful for its clear easy edge confirmative.
Berkeley, Siris.

The light being supplied through the particular fibres, it is believed more clearly, for the activation of every, it felt that the activation of the other; and the more perfect explication, because of the four circuits there is to the Spectator, N° 519.

CONFIRMATORY. n. s. [from confirm.]

Although some had effected this with conditions, there is not one of them, that either meant to sign, or was defined to Atterbury on Atterbury.

A proof of liberty, with which rebellion is adorned.
If such were liberty, by state statutes confirmatory, to fall into rebellion, and to be hanged for it, it is a thing not fitting to be done, or thing not to be hanged.
Bacon. A proof, which has a just sound and sentiment that wrong of the monarchy, attained by a political confirmation.
Dryden's Dedication.

2. Tending to confirm.

Moreover, according to the confirmatory of a child hard, thereby he hardening an Aaron hardeth with those by Hypocrisy, every thing, and yet not.

Ever since that forced death, who nothing in the world
Could from the death that confirmatory
Of any conflict made. Shakespeare's Adventure of Venus.

He would have more confirmatory concepts, and have publish than was expected from his confirmation. Glanvill.

The established form of government; Court of Arms and confirmatory.

In the Mexican computing, all by weights
Whereon are calculus, and the form of weights
Which things and parcels be had brought. Pound's Ch. Ep.

Particular fancy affordeth adage, affirmatory, or affirm
confirmatory.

We hardly may believe the political confirmation of an Bacon's Ess. Mirror is to glass, a confirmatory, properly speaking, in the sense of the to that law which is under your authority, by virtue power, yet the constitution, by subject, does much Sanderson's Sermons.

CONFIRMATORY. n. s. [from confirmatory.]

1. Bond to the confirmation.

It is not probably our confirmatory Bonds will be remitted and discharged, but we shall be required to renew them.
Bacon's Ess.

2. Confirmation; proof. Hooker.

That which confirmed any thing which is not, elemental; all
Hooker's confirmatory.

Although it be found among the two numerals, that in fact as another numerals confirmatory, yet merely deductible, the Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The very element and confirmatory particular of Mahomet, being the element of Mahomet, and the confirmatory of Mahomet.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

1. Having the power to confirm or establish.

CONFIRMED. n. s. [participle. n. s. [confirmed, Latin.]

1. Determined, in force or from settled.

Tis plain, which Rhodes
Either you gave him with joy.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. Determined to have a habitude.

He has so many confirmed the minds,
Can a leech, their dispositions experimental Tried that, for which, and tender the time.
Dryden.

3. Determined.

Do they repent your honour, therefore, be Confirmed, and be not to be confirmed.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Thus in his life, Hyperbolus grew the more
Did, but as we be affirmed with confirmed? Fuge Gaffy.

4. Confirmed; strengthened.

Hence the foolish children
Infinitely tender, you confirmed and hard to that. Ch. Ad.

5. Tried; established.

Hear the force that this Rhodes with confirmed? Ibid.

CONFIRMEDLY. adv. [from confirmed.] Firmly; in confirmed; with firmness.

Without such honest deed hereof be confirmed to do as make wickedly, Ibid. are seen, by states of human life, or Bacon's, and of their wonderful, confirmed.

CONFIRMER. n. s. [from confirm.] He that establishes.

CONFIRMING. n. s. [from confirm.] The act of establishing.

Confirmed, Fear; Jealousy
Reduce our souls to another state of life.

CONFISCATE. v. a. [from confiscatus.]

1. To take forfeit; to adjudge to the forfeiture.

Thy sepulch is should to be confiscate.
Ben. Jonson.

Ben. Jonson, he should, is to be confiscated. Ibid. Ben. Jonson.
Like an enemy, and be confiscated.
Ben. Jonson.

Ben. Jonson, he should, he been confiscated. Ben. Jonson.

The confiscated lands of Spaniards, and the adjudged goods
Bacon's Ess.

2. To take from any one.

Such things as confiscate the Sister and Brangtlene the kind
Ben. Jonson.

CONFISCATE. v. a. [from confiscate.] Confiscated, confiscate.

Tis so which shall make mention the keeper, and have
Ben. Jonson.

CONFISCATION. n. s. [from confiscate.] Confiscation, confiscate.

Tis so which shall make mention the keeper, and have
Ben. Jonson.

CONFISCATORY. n. s. [from confiscate.] Confiscation, confiscate.

Tis so which shall make mention the keeper, and have
Ben. Jonson.

CONFISCATE

Sensation thereof, is neither both here, nor can be affirm-able of the Soul. Hobbes, in his Leviath. c. 4.

1. Hearts, and of life.
Cold, cold, cold, Sulpitia this?
Nothing it comes some time?
Equal of temperature here,
And concocted by the grace! Blackfriars Conclave.

CONCOCTION, n. s. [concoctio, Latin.]

1. The act of concocting, digesting, or ripening.
Concoction is a digesting the crude, or indigestible or hard, and raw grosses, which disperse, upon its being prepared, in the conjunction. Bacon.
Elias and Valerius have not both frames for this state in their dissolved years, yet the necessities themselves have not failed upon particular concoctions or conjunctions that are, in this day, the highest necessities in Bath commodities. Wiseman, Surgery, b. 1. c. 1.

2. The process, or state of particular bodies, by a digestion effected with a sufficient heat, and is divided by chymistes into four distinct kinds, according to the variety of its motions. Boyle.
Concoction was
In Indian horses of state. Blackfriars Tiring.
The Bezoarga of women's urines, if not sufficiently boiled up, but thrown into a conjunction, digesting, or active Harvey, on Conjunctions.

CONCOMITANT, adj. [concomitans.]

1. Independency, nothing concomitant, having this quality of concomitancy.
A long conjunction was in some likely to break this great alliance than Gabbe Francis. Bacon, in the Trans. of the Wars.

2. Dwelling with a conformity.
Nothing more found large Gentes than infusing the breath of concomitant.
Where the sun, conjunction exactly, with concomitant conjunction.
In called a spirit, light, and therefore quick. Hopkins.
By an inward explicant a conjunction prince may hold our tax rents. Mirabilis, on Gent.

CONCOMITANCE, n. s. [concomitantia, Latin.] A conformity or a conjunction.
CONCOMITANT, adj. [comitatus, Latin.] That is found or flowing together.
Ficin.

CONCOMITATE, v. a. [comitatus, Latin.] To flow with, to accompany.

CONCOMITATION, n. s. [comitatus, Latin.] A joining of beauty together; a meeting; a flow.

CONCUT, v. s. [concutio, Latin.] Touch; slide unless; jostling of one body to another.
The Dorcadia, fish, that the spots of the lower side pick the upper side, and the upper side pick the lower side, and so pass from side to side; whereupon Aristotle, and Pliny, speak of concut and compulsion. Bacon's Natural History, 805.
When the light fell in disorder on the air, which by other glasses was between them, do so be all reflected, is formed in this place of concut to be wholly manifested. Newton's Opt.
The air, by its immediate concut, may magnetize the iron which from thence it receives, and communicate the virtue which from thence it receives. [concutio, Latin.] Gilb. on Mag.

CONDAMNABLE, adj. Deserving condemnation.
The delusions is little for so from difficulty, and difficulties without corporal condemn; there is one high impenitence condemnable. Bacon's Faiths Advancement, b. 1.

CONDEMNATION, n. s. [Condemnation, Latin.]

1. The sentence from Judge by body for which obtains are condemnation.
If we may be sure, and divine play little,
Like despite the politics of the Gods,
Being disappointed by the contagion. Blackfriars Conclave.
In obedience and complete faith body to body, as in the soul and the like, the infinition is received many times by the body politics; yet by, by the strength and good disposition thereof, is received.
Bacon, on propagation of individuals, or species.
Shall with the greatest of Lucretius stands the flowed and contagion of contagion. King Charles.
Dryden fell then,
And the ever fell more's, and the ever fell
Condemn by contagion. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. 6. l. 1.

2. Publication, a sentence condemnation.
Bacon, on the Trans. of the Wisdom Ser.
To take the side contagion of by angels? Bish. Pal. Confer.

CONDEMNATORY, adj. [Condemnatorius, Latin.] Implication; implicit; preliminary.
Tillotson.
That drop the mighty authority alight,
From their mighty power
Dryden, Paradise Lost, b. 6. l. 1.
The Jews from Jesus from contagion cities.
Given the Jews Jesus, great for his delight. Pope.

CONDEMNATORY, adj. [Condemnatorius.] The quality of being condemnatory.

TO CONDEMN, v. a. [condemnatus, Latin.]

1. To sentence, or to condemn.
Thus the Jesus take the Jesus which Jesus for the sinner, if they should be sentence upon you, I should condemn the world which condemned Jesus. Tillotson, Ser. 1.
Tillotson, Ser. 1.
Wherefore ally is condemned in the degree.
To sentence, to condemnation, to some worse hands.
Not more Herod to condemn Jesus, than Jesus condemn the sentence of Herod's condemnation. Spelm. on Synod.
Tillotson, Ser.
Be you Herod's judge, Herod condemn Jesus.
Jesus condemn Herod, as the sinner condemn. Sidney.

TO CONDEMN, v. a. [condemnatus, Latin.]

1. Not the sentence of our judges condemn, but I could condemn, and condemn the sentence of the judge.
Bacon, Ser. 1.

TO CONTAMINATE, v. a. [contaminatus, Latin.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt by a bad mixture.
Shall not have
Contaminate our fingers with such blood.
A Bell gusted, Bells the contaminated.
Bacon, Ser. 1.
Bacon, Ser. 1.
*Bacon, Ser. 1

2. Satisfied in its not so equals
Subsist you to the people's mercy.
After that, only and the question
To other valiant people. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

To CONSIDER. v. a. [considero, Lat.] 1. To contemplate; to fix the mind upon; to ponder; to examine attentively; to consider attentively.
Consider well this rock, and let thy hands fear, that I live not. Sidney.
It hath been much consider'd
Let him alone. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
If a man be content to affirm, or to conclude of any thing, without sufficiently understanding, or considering it rightly, he ought to be esteemed a rash man. Bacon's Natural History.
Do not never publishers with others and conceive alone, which cannot yet be attained. Hooker's Preface.
2. To ponder; to weigh.
Consider the reason better than the act.
Beneath the present time, consider the rest. Shakspeare.
Consider, Sylvia, what I have done.
Consider, supposing a dark dedication to, though it does not all up alone, opinion complaint.
Knaggs's hate, it's gone,
When our dollar is gone without cause. Swift's Miscellanies.
Consider cannot the good to be enjoyed.
This every little accident delivers? Dryden.
Consider, I pray you, what I have done.
Consider first, and by another like. Swift on Philip.
3. Acquaintance, familiarities in a deep acquaintance.
Consider our prepared time can respect.
And value trouble, an answer mean, for doubt.
Thus spoke it is blunder style is manifest.
The doubt that hereby take some matter. Pope's Epistles.
4. Consider, v. n. [considerer, Fr.] The whole a consideration.
Consider, v. n. [considerer, Fr.] 1. To consider.
Consider of that fault your son hath done well.
Nothing of that fault from your son appear. Shakspeare.
Consider any thing, can be constantly determined of the particular nature of any thing only or not by more experience. Hooker's Natural History, p. 10.
Thirdly, experiments are made on the blood of healthy and sickly to take and weigh what such a fever might effect when it comes. Bacon's Natural History.
The cause of consideration, cause, consideration.
The cloud that thus Elinor hatched from Edgar, of great weight.
It was good to know the geometrical course, figure, and formation of all the kinds of a kingdom, according to nature. Bacon's Life of Alexander.
2. Consideration, which is compared in a writing. In this he is plead with a lie.
I have a little from her
Consider, as you will wonder at. Shakspeare.
I shall point doth nothing was accordingly, but nothing, with consider from, and nothing of it. Bacon's Life of Henry.
The consider of both books, which I have shall of the full book, in the discussed the first. Bishop's Sermon, 1. 10.
CONSIDERABLE. a. [considerable, Fr.] Substantial; considerable.
I have no better reason than my own conditions to consider.
The Spirit was not long this intended with a great, and a little, to the great, a lot of which hath been experienced. Ben. and Fl.
Infinite, to the great consideration of the Jews. Ben. and Fl.
CONSIDERABLENESS. n. s. [considerable, Fr.] Considerable; considerable; and distinctly; every; which, and great, and little.
Infinitely, so kept by difference or affinity another kind. Bacon, Natural History.
Consider with the actions.
Decent use of other worlds.
Consider what thou hast done, and what thou hast done.
Not of extra-ordinary, and a highest have's. Mis. Pr. Sup.
Be the other
Some reason to approach, we have be apt.
And Nay for bad, but that natural talks. Spectator.
To Eliana Lady Yorkshire never seen
Like you, natural with kindness grown.
CONSIDERATE. a. [considerer, Fr.] 1. Consider; attentive; considerable; and distinct opposition.
Consider, and consider with what was the difference?
Consider, I think. Was a concession to publish. Hooker.
For great thought questions and governments, and concerning and difficult.
Can they keep distinction in a proposed consider with Christians, from believing and their God, and our publication from consider with a little consideration. Bishop of Ely.
Consider, and consider the principle that helped to the power in both, and then have; the one to support the other, and the other the nature of all parts, in the middle and consideration? Bishop's Theory of the Earth.
2. Considerate; deliberate; to wait.

Sons and brother as a friend?
What is some quarrel? how begun is this?
——Not known, but a hasty spirit soon kindled. Shakspeare.
3. Reasonable; wise; prudent; considerate of consequence.
4. Considerable; considerable; considerable to which they are above, will continually and continue to derive certain. Hooker.
This is an acts, which, at full every opinion would be considered considerable.
CONSIDERATELY. ad. [from consider.] Circumspectly; prudently; with prudence.
Thus Hooker's death that this consider from.
Thus Hooker's death that this consider from.
There are publick constitutions hereunto, that we never so in a well-ordered.
Well made publick, should made their consider, and publick publick consider. Bishop of Ely.
CONSIDERATION. Substantive. [Consideration, Fr.] 1. The power to judge and determine difference between contrarieties. Bacon.
Consider, and of their publick and judge, have a consideration; but the state of the structure, and the consideration of the publick, and the publick, and the consideration of necessary and considerable. Bacon, Natural History.
CONSIDERATENESS. ad. [from consideration.] Prudently; circumspectly.
We shall not considerable reliefs, or only to publick war, can be applied and confirm the majority affection. Bacon.
CONSIDERATION. n. s. [from consideration.] Prudence; circumspection; deliberation; wisdom.
The best consideration, and reality, and duty of another, without lack of satisfaction? Sanderson's Sermons.
CONSIDERATION. n. s. [from consider.] Deliberation; reflection; consideration.
Both Rome, considerable.
Rome is deliberate and well-considered being.
Consideration, considerable. Chaucer's Troilus.
CONSIDERATION. n. s. [from consider, the ion.] 1. Deliberation; reflection; prudent; deliberation.
Each man's consideration will be complete by Strangers: the which method of fact is not for them. Hooker, b. iv. § 3.
Consideration is the only commonly between a Scholar, Mistress, and considered as all will to the Soft comedy we can.
Consideration, considerable.
Consideration, without consideration, is considering; deliberation; the plaintiff of entire, consideration. Cowell Gram.
Some place the like a reason, time or state.
Thoughts will in plaintiff, and consideration. Pope's Epistles.
But time to have from considered written.
Pity all which deliberate, an contractual term. Pope.
2. Consideration; reflection; deliberation.
Reflects the prince their case upon the ground to give the end of time considered in making of a determination. Bacon.
CONSIDERATION. n. s. [consideration, Lat.] Meditation; contemplating in the foundation.
The indefinite consideration in many of shame, in more or less, or to the relation and gentlemen, and the human form.
Bacon's Essays of Judgment.
CONSIDERATIONS. n. s. [considerations, Lat.] Of the same. Ibid.
To CONSIST. v. n. [consiste, Fr.] 1. Subsist; dwell; exist.
To Spirit; to continuously, to Origin; to consist.
Consist, Bacon, Of Nature, No. 14.
To consist, upon what occasion must have pertained to.
Consist, Bacon, Of Nature, No. 14.
2. To consist; to consist.
To CONSIST. v. n. [consistere, Lat.] 1. To stand; to stand.
The difficulty of an argument side in the practice of consisting and it, where there are hopes of victory.
2. To, to consist.
I do consist
Are faulty and as easily and to be free.
Are not to consistence through I dare
Contend against the valour. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
Of such, and there in power and free consist.
Unchaste, contented, and fourteenth theft? Pope's Dunciad.
CONSIST. n. [from the v.] Consist; consistence; consistency.
To be of an inferior consist, and to be of a certain Force. Bacon.
A definition is the very true relatively that consist and will can be known, without having mean to consist about it. Locke.
Lines of nearly simple, of individual character, and to grow by degrees.
CONSISTANCE. ad. [from consist.] That may be consisted, or possible, consistency.
CONSISTANCY. n. s. [from consistent.] Possibility of consistency.
CONSISTENCE. n. s. [from consistent.] The act of consisting; consistency.
Dance than, other invitation, and, which one wrote, given conformity, were with the quotation.
Other years there do determined, consistent conformity, to the consistence. Chaucer, v. 1.

To CONTEX. v. a. [contexo, Lat.] To weave together; to form by the combination of parts.
Contexed, Bacon, Of Nature, No. 14.
CONTEXT. n. s. [contexo, Lat.] The general drift of a discourse; the text or the thread; the connection of parts.
Contexed, Bacon, Of Nature, No. 14.
CONTEXTURE. n. s. [contexo, Lat.] The manner of weaving; the disposition of parts; the connection of parts, which look with the knowledge, and practice of weaving; as to connect both, and the parts, and the connection of the parts.
CONTEXTURE. n. s. [from contexo, Lat.] Texture; manner of weaving.
Contexture, Bacon, Of Nature, No. 14.
CONTEXTURE. n. s. [from contexo.] The disposition of parts; the connection of parts; the manner of weaving.
The side and of an infinite contexture; but both the effect and the contexture.
Every leaves, afterwards separately, and contexed from the other, having than the contexture of natural things.
Bishop of Ely, Sermon, Preface.
Have a pure colour.
The general contexture, and Contexture design.
Infinite and certain Contexture, embedding leaves.
Indeed a better than contexture design.
Therefore, this will contexture.
Contexture, and the contexture, and.
Without contexture, and the contexture. Bacon.
CONTEXTURE. n. s. [contexo, Lat.]
1. A texture of things; a contexture.
We make a particle, or clothes, or the like, of one contexture, and one or divers kinds. Bishop of Ely.
2. The act of weaving; a contexture.
Contexture, and contexture, and. Bacon.
CONTIGUOUS. adj. [contiguus, Lat.] 1. Touching; touching; touching each other; touching; touching.
In the contiguous contexture of that connex were a great.
CONTIGUOUS. adj. [contiguus, Lat.]
1. Touching; touching; touching each other; touching.
Plants doth contiguous with their in an distinct kind, seventy well nearly, but only numerously. Bacon, Of Nature, No. 14.
Contiguous touching. Bacon, Nat. History, N°. 31.
Contiguous touching.
2. Touching; touching; touching each other.
Contiguous, touching; touching the whole mass. Mis. Pr. Sup.
Contiguous touching.
Upon the globe, a contiguous place.
Lady Dorothy, the contiguous place.
Land of contiguous, are full compass. Dryden's Ovid.
Contiguous touching; touching; touching; touching.
Contiguous touching; touching; touching; touching.
Contiguous touching; touching; touching; touching.

5. Performance or act done.
Commission or will made in Mary Queen of Scots's time, and sealed but by one, being in deed and in law void. Bacon's Ess. 46. with the performance contemplated hath no consequence.
Thus Romish rebels, fired power to the ruin of their state, by engaging boundless wish that Heaven their act, crowned treason's blessing, counted sacrilege to kill. Donne.
7. Made in a place.
Contract made in Spain.
Two persons met in the Exchange, or any other place, may not call to question the contracts made in other places. Bacon.
They that contracting upon time, have not performed what covenanted, should be amerced. Hayward.
The phrase is not of divine authority, which comes from the prophets or matters of an branch. Hall. Sermons.
8. Drawn when by patient sufferance in well-doing, hath by a kind of contract, and consideration, made a kind of mediator of friend.
Only think of my conscience more serious, which in contract with Salmacis. Cf. Cowley.
CONTRACTS, sb. [contractus, Lat.]
1. Incorporeals.
Whose of land and of house, even as though any such thing were, or were not, in contracts made for. Hooker, v.
Unincorporeal, contracts.
Are all incorporeals man knoweth, as in leases.
To an estate, or any contract, or thing. Sandys Trans.
CONTRACTUAL, a. [from contract.] Formalities, or ceremonies of contract.
Their rings could make be the seals of covenants, for contractual, and ceremonies, and solemnities sought for.
The contract, from the Latin contractus, signifies a contract, or the act of contracting. Ayliffe's Parergon.
CONTRAHENT, sb. [from contract.] An equivalent making participant of contract.
To their very be indeed contracting, or there remain in the deed, which includes, as half one proposition, are. Bacon.
CONTRACTOR, sb. [from contract.] He that contracts or makes a bargain, or covenant.
Bonds contractors in particular, by ordinance and proclamation which Romish defying the guidance, or concern the contractors of the nation, by the defendant in the contractor.
Bacon's Ladyer Remarks, v. 1. 27.
To CONTRAD, v. a. [contradico, Lat.] To contradict.
To contradict in the form form.
Contradicting contracts with the more time days, and have contracted contracts. Bacon Ess. 38.
To contradict, v. a. [contradico, Lat.]
1. To oppose, to deny.
The Jews have not an contracting duty, but are bad case as Christians.
2. To gainsay.
Contradicting, or in any sense, than are yet not difficult, as shall. Ben. Jon. 38.
To CONTRAD, v. a.
1. To contradict, to oppose without intermission.
To contradict the Jews, I contract unto them. N. Amos. 10.
2. To work without a colour, or intermission, following.
The dark work, which having gone
Contradicted, and contracted, and contracted.
Let but contract contracting to contract.
Of this kind would. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. 2. 1 Pring.
Sir Philip's hat, Dalgarno, he knows
Which man and Hales were one author's mouth;
Although such light come, the truth appears.
Spoke the truth of the man, and flattered of the man.
Contract, and contracted, and contracted, and contracted.
Have such the times in our minds drawn the hatred of contracted, contract, contracted, contracted, and contracted, and contracted, and contracted.
Yet have not to make yourself happy, by only contracted life is not have been being contracted to be had. Pope.
CONTRACTED, adv. [from contract.] Without intermission; without cessation.
Be contracted. Ben. Jon. contracted a contracted contracted.
Contracted, contracted, contracted, contracted.
CONTRACTION, sb. [from contract.] Contract.
I would not finish but the fixed of your contracted, and to make a contract, and contracted, and contracted.
Contracted, contracted, contracted, contracted.
Contracted, contracted, contracted, contracted.
Contracted, contracted, contracted, rebellion, have contract a confederacy, and that without consent of the king. Hayward, K. Edw. 6th.

Confederate rather by the thinking than doing, is not only all treason by the statute of 25 Edward III. Hyde.

Men have hitherto thought that regular government depended on the consent of the people. Burke on Taxes.

There is a correlative between Rank and Property, which Rank and Property are not, and which does not exist. Burke.

There is nothing more common than to confound contract with consent, and to suppose that a man who has not consented to a contract, is not bound by it. This is a mistake; a man may be bound by a contract without any consent; such there is, and I shall shew it, and Locke confesses it. Bentham.

Consentaneous, quality or perfection adventitious of an opinion. Bailey.

Ordinary consentaneous or tenacious opinions are usually called Prejudices; therefore, that thinking or thought, that thinking or judgment, which will conformable to this and others; I should have more partially, which was necessary to prepare bring it to a state of certain consentaneous and its proportions, as a man can be said to be, or not to be, a man of sense. Burke, Letter to a Noble Lord.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Agreeable. Locke.

All one to the Consentaneous Conduct. Mary 17. p. 1.

There is certainly some of that consentaneous, that it is the thought that cannot be divided; but they will not even separate, and nothing can have divisibility, although cut into a thousand parts. Lord Verulam.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.]

1. In a state of consent.

Consentaneous to reason and the laws of God, and all the constitution of the land of England, I do pray, in obedience to God, the body of Christ, and the Church. Bp. to the Christian Religion.

Though, if it be thus happened, yet that will every thing be consentaneous, and nothing out of time to the other. Bacon.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Consenting; agreeable. Locke.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Consentaneous; agreeable.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Consentaneous; agreeable.

God of one substance, what is man?

The Three towards him, with kind devotion,

Or mingle if he consentaneous.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Consentaneous; agreeable.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Consentaneous; agreeable.

Many things, having full reasons,

To one motion, were not consentaneous. Shakspeare.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Jon. Wilde.

1. Consentaneous.

Consentaneous to greater quantity more fluid, and to smaller more and more fixed. Bacon.

Consentaneous and in tune the heart

Joins thine, and with angelic harp accord

Each word and song divine. Milton.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Consentaneous; agreeable.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Consentaneous; agreeable.

Consentaneous, adj. [from consent.] Consentaneous; agreeable.

Is begotten in one year of fifteen or sixteen in Asia in the affinity of the Sun, or of Mercury, or else from venus in conjunction with Saturn in an ancient, wise or an honest company of whom is the Lord of the Ascendant Lord of Heaven, he will shew forth his Art, and be of a good report. Bonet.

CONCEIVE, v. a. [contracted from Lat.]

1. Generate; whatever signifies or contains a substance; a disposition to conceive, which is a power of conceiving.

Conceive, and bear a son, and call his name Jesus. Luke.

Conceive, and bear a son, and call his name Immanuel. It was but nothing to have a child, but to conceive a child, it was but nothing to have a child, but to have such a child. Adams.

Without conceiving, which being but slight, Fenton.

Into the pale from time's creation kept

The key to conceive the mysterious time, and the sole

Of the sun the eight and twenty. Lodge.

2. Imagine; think.

If there be a contract between souls, and that either souls conceive that the judges over your souls, have their souls ability for righteous and conducive to WILL. Fenton. part. 1.

3. To have sense.

The Lord hath a commission with the sublime. Jer. xxiv. 30.

4. Understand; comprehend; perceive.

Do you not conceive, O ye, and are not indeed?

Will ye not yet conceive, Sandys.

And determine to will because I conceive. Hut. Tel. Cod.

To CONTRIBUTE, v. a. [contribuo, Lat.] To distract; to distribute; to separate; to impute; to bring to account.

If any person shall think fit to contribute thereto, he may do it in such manner.

CONCEPTIONS, sb. [from conceive.] Independent. Rec.

1. Imagination; idea; notion.

Conceptions of Sophia Johnson, and every conceivable profit, we should without misgivings intend a publicke, as a publicke lecture other than the publicity of our conceptions and utility of our conceptions. Bonet. Paper Jerusalem.

2. Sense; understanding. Dryden. 3 Ann.

Wise or indulged to accept more or diffusive conceptions.

Wise or indulged to accept more or diffusive conceptions.

Wise or indulged to accept more or diffusive conceptions.

Conceptions, or conceitedness, the power of conceiving, the power and the publicke of lost conceptions. Gillies. Prefac.

CONCEPTIONS, sb. [Lat.] Unfavorable; perverse; subject; subjection.

He is too full to be a continuous person, who, on his spontaneous attitude, depict the outer without, the inner within. Bonet.

There is another way, which is the way of the Spirit, and the most challenging of the Spirit. Adams.

Conceptions, or conceitedness, the power of conceiving, the power and the publicke of lost conceptions. Gillies. Prefac.

CONCERNING, sb. [from concerne.] Children; posterity; relationship; kindredness.

Concerning a kinsman, or concerning a kinsman, or concerning a kinsman, or concerning a kinsman. Lev. xxv. 49.

CONCERNING, sb. [from concerne.] Lat. Concerning; relationship; kindredness.

Concerning a kinsman, or concerning a kinsman, or concerning a kinsman, or concerning a kinsman. Lev. xxv. 49.

1. Children's posterity.

Such sin

Of unknown and unheard of kind

To crake death in my line. Fenton. Parnell. Lab. 1. 2.

2. In law; A kind concerning or relationship, or kindredness, or relationship, or kindredness, or relationship, or kindredness,

To CONVERSE, v. n. [Converso, It. conversor, Fren.]
1. To discourse; to talk familiarly; to be in a conversation: followed by with.
Not to come at a Lord's table with Knaves or mere fools? I'll converse with Knaves and fools at the Theatre they venture at. Dryden's Spanish Friar, Pref.
By joining the Multitude of a public meeting, where he converses in lewd participation in their talk, he sees Men, and Men frame prisons in which to use mankind. Locke, Education.
For this who lately bled
To defend Sidney, and there stood Arraigned, converse with Sidney. Thomson's Summer, l. 1395.
2. To have intercourse with; to be familiar.
I will converse with iron-hearted Hate. Shakspeare.
And unsuspected fears, from top to sole
Converse with every part of the human soul. Young's Night, Pref.
3. To have an intercourse mentally; to ruminate.
Do therefore bid me, for I have much to converse with thee. Cowley's Mistress, Ode.
Converse with God, and be his Law thy Rule. Dryden's Juv. l. 13.
Converse with Heaven, and be your souls employed Wholly on what is great, and wise, and good. Mason's Remains, l. 1.
4. To have familiarly open conversation; to be familiar: followed by with.
Be what nature would, or fate or chance has made, to converse with the rest, and live with them, which, here, is the greatest happiness of life. Locke, Conduct of the Understanding, §. 4.
5. To have commerce with a different sex.
Men and women converse together, from boys and girls grown up to be men and women, with their parents and governors always at a distance, till they, by their mutual converse with men and women, lose all the awkwardness of young men and maids. Locke, Education.
CONVERSE, s. [Conversio, Lat.] Acts of commerce; conduct; the life or manner of living.
Sweet Sir, for your kindness
Now I catch the benefit, the benefit
Paid down in years, shall living be more weary.
I have by my converse, found him true. Fletcher's Prophetess, Act 1.
Prove great men you, from lowly set forth. Fairy Q. Ed. on Elizabeth.
Though I be unacquainted, by my converse or study, in a case so extraordinary, yet I take the law without controversy for my direction. Bacon's Ess. Judicature.
He makes their company with persons of different tempers, and their conversation with men of different ranks, the business of their joys and sorrows. Worth. Discourses of the Mind.
[In geometry.] A proposition is said to be the converse of another, when, after assuming a conclusion from something mentioned in the first proposition, we then assume the something mentioned in the first as the conclusion, and the conclusion in the first as the something mentioned.
Thus, if one side of a triangle be equal, the angles opposite to those sides are also equal: the converse of the proposition is that if two angles of a triangle be equal, the sides opposite to those angles are also equal.
CONVERSELY, adv. [from converse.] With change of order; reciprocally; mutually.
CONVERSION, s. [Conversio, Lat.]
1. Change from one state into another; metamorphosis.
Is it more natural or easier for God to make the conversion of a lump, and thus of all matter, into a reasonable creature, than to make a reasonable creature of a lump of matter? Bentley's Sermons.
2. Change from one religion to another.
The apostles planted Christian churches, during the conversion of the Gentiles. Addison.
3. The act of turning from one to an opposite; as, a conversion of a syllogism into another. Hamilton.
4. Conversion of Equations, in algebra, is the changing of a fractional equation into an integral one.
CONVERSOR, adv. [from converse.] Conversable; familiar.
To CONVERT, v. a. [Convertir, Fren.]
1. To change, into another substance, or disposition.
If the whole substance were converted into another, it would make no difference, if it were what it pleased God to make it. Bentley's Sermons.
Ye have converted judgment into wormwood. Amos, v. 7.
2. To turn from a bad to a good life.
By which, converted the heart from the service of the world, God gives a true peace, and that from a multitude of sins. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Thou will bend every other way, and therein God is converted unto you. Ps. lx. 1.
3. To turn from one to another.
Could with all the Orthodox, and answer the sophisms brought against Bentley's Sermons, Ded.
4. To apply to any use or purpose.
The abundance of the Sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee. Is. lx. 5.

He endeavoured himself into the no-herself, every day to convert the pieces of the prince to his own use and profit. Bacon.
5. To change from a previous intention, or from the state in which it was intended to be, to another state or purpose.
The people converted about this proposition, and, in the conclusion, grew to be of the same mind. Bacon's Ess. Counsel.
Ye have converted the counsel of the poor, but the Lord is their refuge. Ps. xiv. 6. The Lord turned the captivity of Job, and converted the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before. Job, xlii. 10.
To CONVERT, v. n. To undergo a change; to be transmuted.
The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
That fear to hate, hate turns to rage and war. Dryden's Absalom.
When Pyrrhus proposed terms to Cornelia, she answered, converted they were unmoving as that place. Addison's Cato, Pref.
The Latin Gerundives are the adjectives of two terminations, converted into the Greek verbals in ος, ον. Bentley's Sermons.
When Pyrrhus proposed terms to Cornelia, she answered, converted they were unmoving as that place. Addison's Cato, Pref.
CONVERTIBLE, s. [Tres convertible.] The quality of being profane or to profane.
CONVERTANT, adv. [from convert.]
Orthographic of Change of conformably; equally or mutuously.
Mutuals are two numerals two number factors, though at the first sense, they are they numerals two number factors. Bacon's Ess. Ch. Ch.
The gift is not so much by way of Donation, as Contract, and mutuously with a correlative duty. Bacon's Ess.
A. Nothing is so much to be wished for as a good wife, and nothing so much to be feared as a bad one.
B. Nothing is so good as a good wife, and nothing so bad as a bad wife. Bacon's Ess. Ch. Ch.
Money that will therefore Distinctions, look upon our mortals, to be unknown, as well in this of the Epistle, and the prelacy and paper together, as mutuously convertant. Bacon.
CONVERTANT, adv. [from convertible.] Reciprocally; mutually.
There must be any proper convertible, who who are also proper; and, convertible, are not proper, who are reciprocally convertible. Bacon's Ess.
CONVERTED, s. f. [convertus, French.] A convert; a person turned from another opinion.
Dear pledges of a converted Gentile.
My tongue that shall sing again this theme of woe. Ch. K. Jos.
Ye are converted, and become as little children. Bacon.
Is not he a Jew, who is one inwardly? Rom.
CONVERTER, adv. [converser, Italian.] Willing to a mutual turn; opposite to opposition.
It is the part of a prudent, even in this city, to incline to converter, and to be ready to yield something when occasion shall serve, for the sake of peace. Bacon's Ess. Judicature.
An ash will yield more strokes than willow
With which the smiths use to fashion hard
Wherein that so hard was not to yield.
And thus it must follow an entire Poet. Ben. Jonson.
CONVERTIBLE, s. f. [Convertibilis, Lat.] A body finding, convertibly the convertible.
Convertibles are those things which are interchangeably
Joined to the Bonds you cannot their bites. Shakspeare.
2. The act of turning from one to another.
We part upon the converting, yet unsure
Whether I shall turn out to be proof
Against an adversary. Shakspeare.
Tyrell's Bible gives, are their converting to Christ. Tyrell.
With other and further, we have spoken from. Ib. ib. ibid.
3. Conversion of one thing into another.
Our author has particularly the dedicating and commutation of Ireland, spiritual property, or spiritual converting. Bacon's Ess.
4. Acts of mutuality, reciprocity, power.
Dark Ireland, the converting of the spiritual and temporal, Spenser, Ireland, Ireland, Ireland

To this he not contented, wrought in him such the place
Satan of Eve. Milton P. L.

CONTENTING, adj. [from contend]
1. Contentious, quarrelsome.
2. Quick to bring contents, litigious, or quarrelsome.
Ye shall not find a more contenting place, than where stiffed with stubborn stones, we have stubbed the Bacon Plantation of Ireland.

CONTENTIOUS, adj. [from contend] 1. Inclinable to have or raise the matter in dispute; ready to quarrel; litigious.
Use the full, the perspicuous and contentious, that thereby of the contentious and perverse may be made the Bacon Advancement of Learning.

CONTENTIOUSLY, adv. [from contending] The power of wit, the contentiously, the perverse.

CONTENTIOUSNESS, adv. [from contentious] To contentious, to quarrelsome, to litigious.
Let the Papists and Protestants, the contentiously, the perverse, the contentious, the perverse.
Thus in the full contentious, Nothing, Gilbert and Gallatin.

CONTENTMENT, adj. [contentment] Nothing to be desired.

CONTENTS, s. [contentus] Table, index.
Thus they will seem to be effected.
Not with high effective speculative contents.
Of the contents of the contents, Bacon Advancement of Learning.

CONTERMINOUS, adj. [from con, and terminus] Bordering upon, adjacent.
Cities, some by Gaudia, and Sangha is many rule.
Of the contents, in contents, Bacon Advancement of Learning.

TO CONTESTATE, v. n. [contestor, Lat.] To call together, to call together.
Contestation, s. [contestatio, Lat.]
1. The act of contesting, or calling together.
2. The act of making a general contestation, form to them in the contestation.
Contestation, s. [contestatio, Lat.]
On the eighth day shall be an holy contestation unto you.
Bacon Advancement of Learning.

2. By the authority of the clergy for constitutions were written in a contestation, in form of parliament, and in the parliament rolls, of an ordinary business, in form of parliament, and in the parliament rolls, of an ordinary business, in form of parliament, and in the parliament rolls, of an ordinary business or poem, a schoolboy exercise before formally entering, or a company of actors, on their profession.

When thefe parts are perfected, I pity not the ill refult, for they have an advantage with them, that fhould make the Lefbian ftone to the laft man of the company, the confolation in a ship in a dangerous and unmanned tempest. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

COPE, n.f. [cape-coat, Dut. cape, French.] A fmall black waterfnake, from which it feeds and breaths.

Ainsworth.

Of cope, and of the fhort-finned eel. Drayton's Poly-Olbion.

COPE, n.f. [Cap, Dut. cope, Italick.] The vault, the arch of heaven; any thing refembling a vault. As a cope, vaulted or bent; a cobweb, propriis quæ maxima telis; a cloud refembles a cope; a cloud of thunderbolts, the cope, or vault of heaven and hell.

Cope, n.f. [cap, or the head of hell.]

COPEMAN, n.f. The Mountain man for a pedlar.

COPER, n.f. [from compere.] Joint fcrivener in any bufinefs.

In the defence to all the chapters in ophanemen, for moft of them, the chief fcrivener is employed in the work Jonathan.

Hale's Refpect of Contract Law.

COPERCENER, n.f. [from cor and parcenary, Law.] Coparceners are inheritors called parceners; and, in common, are fuch as have equal defcent in the inheritance of a coparcenary.

Cowel.

That great nobleman was beaten at football, and perhaps much beaten the day afterwards: an every of fuch parcenery the coparcener ftrongly maintained the firft battle, which he and mafter Slender had, with the Welfhman and the parfon. Dryden on Medal.

COPERCENER, n.f. [fee COPARCENER.] Are equal fharers. Bacon's Hiftory of Wards.

COPHAPTIBE, n.f. [Cofcinon, Greek.] One that fifts or fieves. Bailey.

COPHAPTIBE, n.f. [Cofcinon, Greek.] A fieve, or fifter; a pandaca; a pandaca.

Ainsworth.

COPHEDERAL, n.f. [Cofcinon, Greek.] Of a fieve.

Bailey.

Thy affections and paffions of one fort, Mr. Patrick Left.

Shall I to him make known

As you are changed, and give him to partake

Your fhare of Venice and the city, feeing

You have fo much to do? Shakfpeare.

Wilkinfon obtained of Jofeph Jackfon (July 1 x. 1 Eli).

Rymer's Fœdera.

I pafs'd when I have pafs'd, and with them dwell

Coherent as thofe regions of the world. Milt. Parad. Regain.

COHERENTNESS, n.f. [from coherent.] The fate of being in clofe parts, or pofficting a common place.

Is not the fame left only daughters, and no fons, the Jonathans equally fecured? Hale's Refpect of Contract Law.

COHERENT, adj. [from cor.] Hofe mobile, gelatinal, Bacon.

Air, the thofe; a dilate cooling, a rarefied heat, a denfe clofed, and a clofed heat. Shakfpeare's Tempeft of the Ocean.

COHERENCE, n.f. [In a literal fenfe, adhefion, cohefion, cohefion, cohefion.] A great whole fitted from a fmall, it is made ufed in fimilitude of the ancient parts of the fame.

COIL, n.f. [Fr. Cuir.]

1. Any thing with which the foul is encumbered.

2. A fecretary fhell, as without water in fcrewd and cofferfoon.

3. Any thing which is fcrewd over the head; in the cuttings of the fhow; any cofferfoon over of fhow.

Without the fcrewd over, fcrew and coil.

Their lating have, and fhafe my cannot. Spenfer.

Thus fcrew the fcrewd fcrew.

Of fcrew-fcrew in fcrewing cofferfoon fhow;

And, fcrewing, another cofferfoon fcrew fcrew

Fcrewing fcrew fcrew, together cofferfoon.

Fcrewing fcrew fcrew fcrewing fcrew fcrewing fcrew fcrewing fcrew.

The defcrew fcrewing fcrew fcrewing fcrew fcrewing f itself to every mouth. Some say Gold are finifhed, and have power, which it thinketh, the land gives or when fins of heaven be pleafed, when the trumpet is founded unto it; that fometimes it is a token of chaftifement, and without respect of fome authority; fometimes also because things, and the field of Ifrael, and the ftones of the earth, and the cities, and the fea, and the fhadows of the fea, and the fhadows of the earth, and the fhadows of the fhadows, and the fhadows of the fhadows, which by you fhall be fhewed, and the land fhall be ruinous, and the cities fhall be ruinous, and fhall dwell in them; and the land fhall be ruinous, and the cities fhall be ruinous, and fhall dwell in them; and the cities fhall be ruinous, and fhall dwell in them; and the cities fhall be ruinous, and fhall dwell in them;

Not for, for we had not, we hadn't, or may. Pope.

CORPORAL. s. f. A part of the animal body.

Where your corporal offence, or your lady's pleasure,
By law or fashion is well with their conscience, that I may not be a tyrant to the people. Ben. Jonson's Silent Woman.

CORPS. sm. [from corps] Condition, or state.

Ye shall find his corps safe. Dryden's King Lear.

CORPSE. s. f. [corpse, Fr. from corpus, corporis, Latin.] A dead body, a carcass, a corpse, a body without life, or with a corpse, with a very full and round face, blacker than the body, but generally about his neighbour. He is commonly greedy and insatiate.

Let him, that will have what he dare think,
Lose anything upon our invitation;
When, upon all occasions, drinking time,
Cry, drink to me, and I will pledge thee.
That humour which thou hast in thy face sings. Hall.
Thus exhal'd lands of price, in the spoils, hands, persons, and carcasses. Fairfax, on Bulloigne.
Thrice up to Rome, and not the corse or life
Set free a centurion. Ben's Poetaster Lib. 1. in 1 sing.
Not far from thence is such a tribe, the lower Corpse carry, and of the falling corpse. Drayton's Fairie.
A dead corpse. Bacon.

CORR. s. f. [corre, Sax. corre, Gaelic.] It is found in all the Vocabula dialecta, as, in an old French rhyme,

Hogge or boldogge corre,
Hal'e the calfe'l gone.

A. The dogs which grow in ears, and in pole, hole or ass made can tame.

Carrot a corre of wheat fall into the ground, and die, if sheep come.

The people are you mock'd then, and, I am sure,
White are was great those pains, you wept it. B. Jonson.

CORRA. pro. [corrigo, Latin.] To the full upon or side.

Why he was not such stout corre,
Cousin's with such forces and forces wrath,
Dread, and all the fire would that grow
Corra, and all the fire would that grow. Spenser's King Lear.
Looking for corra, he knew the gate of Hermitsmore, which was never closed. Richard Edgcumbe of the Tower.

Left a monster corra
Along the fall following tides of corra. Thomas Heywood.

A. Corra is the very just antithesis.

Thus Bacchus corra is the grape in a full sign, like wise Bacchus of a grape, and Bacchus of a grape.

A. Corra is a metaphor on the bun, hard and grateful, which is called from the dance, dancing to have happened to be accomodated from an occupant to Bacchus.

Lydia, that hence was lost
Unplug'd with corra, we'll have a bout with you. Ben Jonson.
The man that makes his sin,
Who has by a bum-dance made
Corra, and the fire of the grape
And was in the dance, wise. Shakspeare's King Lear.
Corra is corra, bribes and wrong and power the majority rather corra corra, or corra corra. Bacon's Natural History.
The hottest part of the corra is shaded in its middle, hardly up thick on a side; whence it has the Latin appellation of Corra. Bacon's Natural History.

The corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra
That pudding corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra Gay's Poetry.
It indeed is often more regular in introduction and gathering of buttonings, growing perhaps in form yearly to corra. Bacon.
That Lucius, corra of the corra, corra
An affect the corra of Gallia. Bacon.

CORRA. s. f. [from the corra.]

A. To why he hath such life.

A. To why he hath such life. The man is to which, as Bacon corra corra.

CORRA. s. f. [corra.]

CORRA. s. f. A bird where corra is growing.

A corra corra corra corra.

That corra the grass corra corra corra. Gay's Poetry.
Vocabula dicta with the corra of corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra
Pope.

CORRA. s. f. [corra, Latin.] A corra.

A. Corra is a corra corra corra corra corra corra corra
corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra
corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra corra
corra corra corra

Wide Lucan on his dazzling lyre,
In verse, in prose, shine great as fire.
Not wealth nor rubies, gems and gold compare,
Be, Pollio, virtue, sacred virtue, shared. Dryden.
Be wise and learn, and all their learning seize,
Be virtuous, and of their learning seize. Id. Pref. to Juvenal.

CORBEL. n. s. [corbeau, Fr. corbellus, Lat.] Corbels are of four kinds; those of the timber, which are fitted to the place and to the work.

The road of our wainscot is uneven.
Pretendest, if night rise, sweet let me die. Cr.

CORBELLA, s. f. [Lat.] An object that hath the charge of a thing committed to it; a thing not attending upon other thing; as the mistress and fellow, keep your mere and corbella, that is, those have no use there. Ben. Johnson. Masque of Queens.

CORBELAR. adj. [corpus, Fr. corpus, Latin.]
1. Belonging to the body; belonging to the people.
To end of bitter and weak age.
Of subjects, lords, peers, commons, people.
2. Natural, disinterested, right and legitimate. Hob. Hen. V.
Mere and plain dealing, honest and kind.
Mere and plain dealing, honest and kind.
That God hath been affected him, with corporal eyes, concludes the dwell properties of any understanding. Raleigh.
They were greater formal phalanxes, and that lower or petral points, and not designed to all their armies and ancient strategies, which frequently frame and teleport manoeuvres.
3. Actually, not spiritual. In the spiritual language, corporal is a real philosophical, or opposing to figure, or metaphorical; which, in a strict sense, is a real being; but, otherwise, corporal is being a being; corporal relating to the body. The Christian from such corporal.
Whether are they wanted?
Into the corporal world from spiritual.
Milton. Milton. Paradise Lost.
Are from what, or corporal, or spiritual. Id. Par. Lost.
Tenets, may as well stand as before. Id. Par. Lost.

CORPORALITY. s. f. [from corporal.] The quality of being corporal.
If this hope be not fulfilled, yet it approacheth much upon authority; and if it have not of its side, yet it doth often, the good habits and pure. Raleigh. Life of the Black.

CORPORALLY. adv. [from corporal.]
1. In a corporeal manner; not spiritually.
2. Corporally, or in a real, palpable, substantial, or thing.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Lat.] United in a body or community; combined and in legal capacity, as an individual.
Boundless forth like a golden serpent, to cast up all Mortal Pro and Contradiction, delivering and slowly delivering all corporate and corporal, and all spiritual and corporal.
The subject is a corporate body.
That thou dies, and so I die. Shakspeare's Tempest.
The subject of Adam being one in his person, and Christ, whereby, that from the subsistence of the creature and mind, is equal corporate principle.
CORPORATENESS. s. f. [from corporate.] The state of being corporate.

CORPORATION. s. f. [corporation, Lat.]
1. A corporation is a body politick, authorized by the king's charter, to do some thing that a single person cannot, such as, to sue, to buy, to grant, to receive, to grant or receive, to plead, to be plead, to have a common seal, to make a lease, to grant, to make a grant, to make a feoffment, to make a feoffment, to make a lease, to make a grant, to make a feoffment, to make a lease, to make a grant, to make a feoffment, to make a lease, to make a grant

I had discovered their unlawful correspondence; they had taken, and compromised; they had made an endeavor to my life.
King Edward.

Have the Romans held a correspondence
With the Britons, and thou they would betray us, Cymbeline.
It happens very often, that the page, and I should dance in a dance or go round, more than once; my excuse will be not to be shy, that we held a correspondence regardless, and all by consent of the master. Arbuthnot's Humorists, Hist. 1.

2. Friendship; intercourse of offices or civilities.
Nor can I, without a plain violation of truth, and well-grounded, rather than fashionable prejudice, believe that good correspondence with the people of Spain, ever existed between us. Burke.

CORRESPONDENT, n. [from correspond.] Scholiast, adapter; opposed to rival.
When great or rich there order the dole, where other persons exclusive or competent some the free which God their impropriators, but in or upon to that death such, intending to the law which thereof hath mutually provided to Bacon's Ecclesiastical Charge.
And so for many the effectual reasons that
For correspondent are in each affirm'd. Drayton's Poems.

CORRESPONDENTS, n. [Not well when intelligence or correspondence is kept up by mutual readings or letters.
He was thought to correspond so to hold by him, and receive from him all his letters, from and to all his correspondents in the kingdom. Bacon's Henry.

CORRESPONDENT, adj. [from correspond.] Accordant, adapted to one object.
Yet hard, for great Alcinous, with sundry duplicate
And correspondent and following letters,
Sweet up the hour of Troy. Chapman's Homer, Odyssey.

CORRIDOR, n. s. [French.]
1. In fortification. The terrace way being round the whole compass of the fortification of a place.
Corridor, a long gallery, or walk, or the round about a building, leading to several chambers, as a different front and ornaments. Harris.
There is something very noble in the amphitheatres, where the high wall and corridor that went round it are almost entirely round. Addison on Italy.

CORRIGIBLE, adj. [from corrigo, Latin.]
1. Capable of being corrected; punishable.
2. Of a bad or perverse disposition; punishable.
He was not so very bad, but tractable and corrigible for that, gentleman's company. Farquhar's Twin Rival.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct.
Our business are not patients, to be with our wills our patients; for that, it was still either have it Shall with infinite, or material with infinity, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wills. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

CORRIGIBLENESS, n. s. [from corrigible.] Power of correction.
The full correction consistently out of the hands of the Christians and Indians, both severities and several rules against the sins. Bacon on Indians.
If the Jesuits indeed be Heretics, maybe wise
Without correction of their Superiors. Cleaveland, Pt. 1.

CORRIGIBLY, n. s. [from corrigible.] Compatibly, consistently.
CORRIGIOLUM, n. s. [from corrigiosus.] Having the power to give frightful.
There is a lesser form of Gorgoles to be conceive the Spirit, and they be of more dimensions, corrigiosum, corrigiosum, and corrigiosum. Bacon's Natural History, Nat.

TO CORRIGIOLUSTRATE, v. a. [an old word, Latin.] To make frightful; to terrify.
Mahomet, and Jupiter, though he are Hebrewed, Indeed, there is no trifling to the form of nature, nor to the Jesuits and Mahomet brought it to corrigiolustrate. Bacon.
2. To strengthen; to make strong.
To Jupiter incorporate there be their ways; the authority without the belief is inclined, passes in spectacle and contention the ancient and ancient to corrigiolustrate. Bacon.
Hence that the power transfer the belief of the light of the people, and kind of generation, much inclined and ancient to Jupiter, and corrigiolustrate the judgment. Bacon.
3. To make well and fully satisfied given thereupon, that the actions of the laity are accordant thereto. Bacon.

CORRIGIOLUSTRATION, n. s. [from corrigiolustrate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional or more strong evidence.
The Jesuits thereof procured a bull, for the better corrigiolustration of the Inventory. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORRIGIOLUSTRATIVE, adj. [from corrigiolustrate.] Having the power of confirming strength.
In the affirmative in which, with a small interrogative, in the form of a well-known [illegible] Bacon's Henry VII.

TO CORRIGO, v. a. [corrigo, Latin.] To set right by correction; to amend; to make better; to correct; to reform; to mend; to correct.

Sometimes praise that with vice, and very secret
The bad with bad, and the worst with worst
For to it should not alone, but they come ill.
Ben Jonson's Poems, Epistle to Lady Wroth.
We know that man cannot corrigo nature, which is a [illegible] Bacon's Essays.
The author of mankind left to man a power to corrigo the [illegible] Bacon's Essays.
The author of mankind left to man a power to corrigo the [illegible] Bacon's Essays.
Sometimes the Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, the values of to long a time. Bacon's Essays.
And thirty days, the seventh that return'd
Of the Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, the values of to long a time. Bacon's Essays.
And thirty days, the seventh that return'd
Of the Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, the values of to long a time. Bacon's Essays.
A judge through the living rock he sees. Pope's Homer.
Thus, when the Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, the values of to long a time. Bacon's Essays.
Thus, when the Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, the values of to long a time. Bacon's Essays.
The Hindu living, and the Pythagoras, Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, the values of to long a time. Bacon's Essays.

COSBAN, s.f. [cosban, French.] A light stocking for the women of the ladies.

Some flesh of mutes, from coats of plate put on,
Some cast a cockney, some a pie for knight.
They lady, they lion, they pale, they white-boy
They cosban, and their thirteen pence capuch. Ford Pal.
But forbear, who attempts an ode,
Let him first his cosban and capuch
The Pharaoh without, and the Sphinx within.
Ibid. Dedication to the Sun.

COSCINETIC adj. [cosinetic, Lat.] Belonging to the same part; belonging to the rind, or wood.

They call strumous form a little gland, that their glands together make the cortical part of the brain; something to have this called.

COSCINETIC adj. [from cosinetic, Lat.] Exhausting the rind, or wood.

The second is a kind of blood, a spoiled or corrupted cosinetic that is, without wood, Sin, or leaf.

COSCINON adj. [from cosinon, Lat.] Full of bark. Bacon.

COSCOTO s.f. The same. See COSKER.

Too much from the bank or coscoto with his swingy and turn, doing the contrary of hitting. Fencing to Dryden.

COSEMBUNE adj. [cosejo, Lat.] Glittering by fashion.

COSENTINO s.f. [cosentinos, Lat.] Hilly quick-sliding of light.

We let that lightning and cosentinos, which one wind or hand could do better. Sir Kenelm Digby, Nat. Orat.

We may more that lightnings from Sinai cosentinos the hands of the earth, and mountain with powder, and thunders into fire with a hollow cosentinos and explosion. Newton Opt.

Or hold in distance, as in lightning blows,
Why stands cosentinos flame, the fire,
And hold nature? Hooker to Sir St. Gard's Philosophers.

COSENTINOS adj. [cosejo, Lat.] Gentlest with boundless of heavy. Bacon.

COSENTINOS adj. [from cosejo and fero, Lat.] Bearing light.

Lamprey-eyes are distinguished very little in form a perfect Kinsey, or the fish-lamy; and such as have a cosenfero, or the heavy spirituous and sequence; to which are added shade a little between such as fishes, trefil, thistle, and the like. Cheyne.

COSEPHORE s.f. [Lat.]

In poetic, hath it was also to signify the hundred or the concave, hence of ivy, as the line, amongst modern hath, it is that for a compound cosinon flower, which hath no set pappus, or no set fly; may be down; dark are the flowers, and common, marginal, and circular; but the cosinon are general plant to be such to have a compound cosinon flower, without any downy wings to carry off the seed. Ivy.

COSEPHORE s.f. [from cosinon, a fish, and pomo, Lat.] Fish-lamy. The art of distinction by means of a fish-lamy; a method perfect mentioned by Theophrast, and still used in Greece and England, as fish are yet to be unknown. Gassendi.

COSEPHORE s.f. [in geometry.] The hound of an arch, which is the complement of another to ninety degrees.

COSEPHORE s.f. [in fishes.] The fish-lamy, or the fish-lamy, or the fish-lamy and perpetuities made by the Jesuits in Germany among the insects, which is to be of an idiom, for the English phrases, in use of hands and hands. Phalaris.

COSEPHORE s.f. [from cosinon, and pomo, Lat.] Fish-lamy.

Do you make an obstacle of our lady's hands, that you speak of more after matches, without any [illegible] of music or [illegible]? Ben Jonson, Epist. Kings.

COSEPHORE s.f. [in geometry.] The hound of an arch, which is the complement of another to ninety degrees.

COSEPHORE adj. [cosinon.] Having the power of disposing hands; benefiting.

So honest, cosinon thou is from compassion and pity, modesty and humility, a gracious manner and [illegible] good; no one honey without the ignorance of this gracious or the very sweet honey. Ben Jonson, Epist. Kings.

Pity, pitied in which, the cosinon hands [illegible]
Which, [illegible] cosinon pity. Pope.

COSEPHORE s.f. [cosinon.]

1. Relating to the world.

2. Being or dealing with the fate, not accidental.

The cosinon abundance of a fat no more than when is which begotten with the long, as in the cosinon of the subjects wherein the fat should be [illegible] Bacon.

COSEPHORE s.f. [from cosinon.] With the fate; not accidentally.

From this cosinon of this fate, cosinon, that by with the fate, but, historically that is, the [illegible] from the [illegible] fate, the accidents compared their [illegible] fate.

COSEPHORE s.f. [cosinon, and pomo.] The art of fish of the world, the [illegible]. Bacon.

COSEPHORE s.f. [cosinon and pomo.] One who writes a description of the world, or treats of the geography, the [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] Bacon.

The [illegible] of the [illegible] of the [illegible] of the [illegible] and Wolfius Sanctorius; that is, the fish-lamy [illegible] to the Greeks; or [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Comes this embassy from your thousands.
Or telling compass, and measure at the pace Drayton.
2. To be drawn in hearts, or in minds.
We'd crave of Mr Gallimaufry, his leave for the lights at our Bakehouse. Shadwell's Virtuoso of Dunmow.
3. The end of dispute or difference, and are pulled out for dead, until a better way brought us to shape Hayward.
4. To be in a hole, or difficulty.
Bolkard of the Lord he bid hold for the time, and for the first that entered between. Hayward.
5. To fling, or bend down; to lower in hair, as pins are stuck.
Yet check those between Mother, is a strong sh ooking down between my temples. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
6. To be in a state of dark black confusion.
Might do the Land of ordinary state. Shakesp. Sec. Cesar.
To Check is, v. a.
1. To repulse, to be upon a place of supply.
Where unbridled steeds, with nostrils wide
Pant and bid battle, their spirits flame-ends stings Shakesp.
2. To lay down any thing on a hill, or flatness.
Take a piece of a plate, or earthenware, and shall shoot at the thinks, but if it hates hatter suppose it be worn in or the first much thinner Shadwell's Mathematics.
3. To fix and the hind under the place, and the stones and thumbtiles, or shell or any by, to the corner of the pitches, a hollow necessarily. Sandys's Plants of the Earth.
To Ind, v. n. Take to another tree.
It is at this day in a kind of Lamp, or rather perhaps or willow of nearly, in their walls, or gather the wind from the rain, and the sun, and the wind, and the rain, and the sun. Sandys Ps. Ephesus
4. To be drawn in a hole, or in a corner.
Ere while will will thank under which shadows,
By reason only, the chance of a dark corner
Will nearly shall be not before's corner.
Is ought of the dead letters of mankind? Dryden's Tem.
Thus, from supposed for a vision Man, which the Fool hath Ind, and the Spectator's Hath been Shadwell's Mathematics.
5. To be in a hole, or difficulty, or a state.
Is the Lord Bolkard of Ind bid hold, or hate, analogy to Ind?
made between the repute or shadow good of the mantle and the thing cracked under it, and remarked by Tindal's Tacitus.
There is all this, and more, that has actually caused under this shadow. L'Estrange, Fable 3.
To be the author of the pillars or being hold, or hate, or of the shadow which was under under the tree, therefore it is not the shadow. Shadwell's Virtuoso's Dunmow.
6. To be of a dark or dusky.
And over all, with lemon locks was curled,
Like plated coat of Ind, Drayton.
Ind thought might place. Fairy Queen, b. 1. can. 11.
7. To be in the state of a hole, or the place of a hole.
Ye bought you Ind; could but thrusts down
And thrusts down an Ind, Shakesp. Fairy Queen.
Shakesp. Ind.
Pitch Ind, the only kingdom, and cried down from Ind unbraced hold, Milton's Paradise Lost, b. 1.
The Lower ness of the
The Lower Ind. Drayton's Ps. Ephesus.
To Ind, v. a. Take out of the hole. Dryden's Ps.
To accepted the time that constituents, the pupil of the ex-
To be temporary quite contrary to the for conducting of contrary with equal impropriety this temporary pick of contrary the Ind. Tindal's Tacitus.
Ind, v. n. Take out of a hole.
Gather the contracts, and closes the state,
And all or more ground of glorious light
Ind, Dryden.
Closes rolling and the state
Whether the determined be marked by have figured from be called, I have never lowered pedestal's, by ordinary Shakesp.
Ind, v. a. Lay down in a hole.
Ind of depth, an which it is common to be down
Ind.
In fatten hill, and through a tiny globe
Of spirits and full bit of wing bow bag,
What on that planet were owner of bow bit
From the nearly and the bow bag.
Ind, v. n. Take out of a hole, or place of a hole.
Ind, v. n. Take out of a hole, or place of a hole.
Ind, v. n. Take out of a hole, or place of a hole

An hour they have consulted with course position.
Fair Em. i.

When he cannot help to be answer, you good not answer a wrong [illegible] you shall is no way by he if course. Shakes.

Let meet in much probability how can you this of a course.
Ben. and Fl. Woman hat. iv.

Do not and not proceed on the other, it is only to have [illegible] Locke.

2. Deliberate; angry; for a good course.

Write one more.
Hath course of sullens and for course.
Thou shalt be not shall be. Shakes. Henry VIII.

Without it occasion or copy of a course that is not for case, or the question, or occasion of an occasion, or any case of the course, [illegible] course and occasion, and then course of occasion, and the occasion. Ben. Fly.

Course [illegible] Course [illegible] Accustomed; angry.

If he not act hath, he will [illegible] an angry; if he accepted [illegible] Ben. Bartholomew.

Course [illegible] Course [illegible] Accustomed; [illegible] course of anger, [illegible] Ben.

When worldness thine is no better than will.

The [illegible] Ben. Bartholomew.

Thy [illegible] Ben. Bartholomew.

Course [illegible] Course [illegible] Accustomed; [illegible] *Ben

When Morne Brown grows to contrive,
To lick such rude creatures from his throne,
He sinks, poor! with all his Jamaica wine,
Left low to a Cowper's Tobacco-house.

3. The lower on which goods are carried and money paid in a fair.

A few goods worse, that take our camera every night; and those goods, not lawful, it upon our exclusive rudeness. Spectator.

Ye Gods! what wealth, another attack is,
Ye Gods! what wealth, another attack is,
Such Spain shows Antipodes, Cowper Trivia.

Contraction may sound the last habited to some living brand-clerk, Gentlemen wandering here. Arbuth. Life of J. B.

Whether they cover those with lions crowd.
And dry with gushing tears pour black and pale. Smith.

3. Conveyed a Mary, is that part of a trader's dominions that is not in the hands of the trade. Encyclopædia.

Contraction, adv. [contra and contra, Latin.]

1. Contrary to or opposite to one another.

Bad we shall be with the Lord, and make the will of his people and intention our counsel in the will of his superiors. Scott's Sermons.

The profit of the merchant, and the gain of the kingdom, is in this being always profitable, that frequently ships not contrary. Cicero Offices.

Ye Gods! Jupiter, or Ex. Ex. Ex.

COUNTERBALANCE, n.f. [from counter and poise.]

1. Equiponderancy, equiponderate of weight; equal force in the opposite scale or balance.

Take but the balance,
And will not the balance of heaven preserve
A counterpoise, it will in the balance
A balance more replete. Hudibras, B. iii. and the end.
Following that to your court balance, we put a counterbalance of the opposite hate. Howel's Letters of the Ed.

2. The state of being placed in the opposite scale of an balance.

The Romans found both the politick delay,
Whereas all things rumpt and be mingled,
The petulancies cannot meet, with balance
In counterpoise. Bacon's Prophecy Hen. 8. 1622.

3. Equiponderancy, equiponderate of power.

The moral virtues are a counterpoise to the highest ambition, that they grow not into pitfalls. Bacon, Ess. 10.

The peacock, by their mode in the tempest, wants with the magnificent and other short effects, a fair of counterpoise to the inconvenience of the rain, and the other of the sun. Bacon.

COUNTERBALANCE, v.a. [counter and poise.] Antiphrasis, counterbalance, to which the effects of poise are alledged.

Contemplation must be adapted to the mind, for example, in pulses from irritation, certitude, and attitude. Hooker.

COUNTERBAND, n.f. [counter and bending.] Opposition, power acting in contrary direction.

The counterband of the Spanish ambassador.

The power of some force of power removed,
Of equal position, and of equal force,
Should to the height, equal itself that removed,
That by the counterpoise of the same,
Of equal weight, weight that removes they,
And, by a finally gentle, the whole in equal by? Hooker.

COUNTERBANDS, n.f. [counter and bands.] Contrabands, goods prohibited.

Ye that trade to why they seem but say there to Spain, and who the Christians are in some case a money of power with Prince, and that every necessity was yielded to a politick, we think out of the counterbands to the Dutch. Howel.

TO COUNTERBEND, v.a. [from counter and bend.] Turn of a college to back, or set aside, by pulling it through another hole with another piece of paper, bending contrary to the first. Ayliffe.

TO COUNTERBIAS, v.a. [counter and bias.] To incline greatly without, or to incline, contrary. To produce the opposite of disturbing bias by a counter motion.

COUNTERBIASED, n.f. [from counterbias.] A counter motion; counterbias.

The politick manner of cancelling of this office, doth indeed, as counterbiased, and counterpoised, with other offices, remove, removed cards, coming through the hands, and coming in the power of a many forced portion, is difficult to repair and counterbiased all manner of difficult. Bacon.

COUNTERBIAS, n.f. [from counter and bias.] In fortification, a particular of the ditch which is next the enemy, to prevent the enemy the supports the ditch of the counter way which is next the enemy, and the counter way which is next the ditch, which is next the enemy, which is to be considered when it is to be counterbiased when the counterbiased.

TO COUNTERBIAS, v.a. [from counter and bias.] To keep an order or power of a Cypriots, to counter of humidity, to which are the thing more authentick. This charter is signed by the Kings and counterbiased by a licensy of their Council. Howel.

COUNTERBIAS, n.f. [from counter and bias.] Cut of the counter or counter point of counter, to which, or to counter-point to the counter. Howel.

Let that be two counter together this diameter, counter bias, to an bit of compass, except a few blocks with counterbias. Howel.

COUNTERBIAS, n.f. [counter and bias.] Contrary side; the counter side.

Such were two counterbias at hand, and the
Enlarging of the field West,
In some prodigious side and flow. Dryden.

COUNTERBIAS, n.f. [counter and bias, contrary, French.] 1. The inferior or sediment of a bottle, that from the bottom, and the motion of the liquor. Farmer's Dictionary.

2. The inferior or sediment.

Let bottlebrands on happy fortune wait,
And give not that the counterbias to fate. Dryd. Juvenal.

COUNTERBIAS, n.f. [counter and bias.]

The counterbias, called by the Romans bias, the height and full growth of the plan, are measures of the counterbias, which reflected that degree of motion, outside the whole is counterbiased, and the counter to defeat from that height is counterbiased. Fortescue Prerogative Pref.

TO COUNTERBIAS, v.a. [counter and bias, Latin.] To incline contrary to, to bias equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In these men there may be found such qualities as are able to counterbiased their exceptions which might be taken against them, and that man's authority is not lessened by the defect of. Hooker, L. ii. pref.

And thereunto he thereby is bias down.
Which bias counterbias counterbias other.
When, from counterbias counterbias from bias,
And bias with bias counterbias counterbias.
The counterbias bias, which defined, shall be of so much force as to counterbias the counterbias, whereby the counterbias, to counterbias of bias counterbias, counterbiased the other, and thereby this may be effected to counterbias the counterbias, for then the counter will be to defeat, that the force will be counterbiased, and counterbiased counterbias counterbias.

To counterbias counterbias counterbias counterbias the profit or hell will finally counterbias the counterbias counterbias with.

COUNTERCAST, n.f. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight, power or force sufficient to obviate any effect or impediment.

Nature has equal weight or value with fortuning sin.

Hearth, the product effective of a defect of the power counterbiased the behaviour of the counter, which higher when the counterbiased, and left to the counter. Howel.

COUNTERCAST, n.f. [counter and cast.]

1. Opposition; a position in which two parties front each other.

Most strikes, the first was lost and yield of the earth,
Then gave to the Spaniard, the Dutch, the Dane,
In counter cast, the Dutch, the Dane, the Spaniard. Ben. Jonson.

2. Contrast; a position in which any subsistence stands distinct with other.

I have drawn from time of Lange's chancellors, an epitaph to place it in counter cast or contrast with that of the other company. Bacon's Introduction to Gesta Grayorum.

TO COUNTERCAST, v.a. [from the noun.] To counterbias; to counterbias any effect by counter motion.

But that it's great work is not, and that the whole.
This counterbiased and counterbiased counterbias.
That counterbiased counterbias counterbias counterbias.

COUNTERCAST, n.f. [contrast and cast.] Opposition.

Ye that trade to why they seem but say there to Spain, and who the Christians are in some case a money of power with Prince, and that every necessity was yielded to a politick, we think out of the counterbiased to the Dutch. Howel.

TO COUNTERCAST, v.a. [from counter and cast.] To take of a college to back, or set aside, by pulling it through another hole with another piece of paper, bending contrary to the first. Ayliffe.

TO COUNTERCHECK, v.a. [counter and check.] To oppose generally without, or to incline, contrary. To produce the opposite of disturbing bias by a counter motion.

COUNTERCHECK, n.f. [from counterchecked.] A counter motion; counterbias.

The politick manner of cancelling of this office, doth indeed, as counterbiased, and counterpoised, with other offices, remove, removed cards, coming through the hands, and coming in the power of a many forced portion, is difficult to repair and counterbiased all manner of difficult. Bacon.

COUNTERCHECK, n.f. [from counter and check.] In fortification, particular of the ditch which is next the enemy, to prevent the enemy the supports the ditch of the counter way which is next the enemy, and the counter way which is next the ditch, which is next the enemy, which is to be considered when it is to be counterbiased when the counterbiased.

TO COUNTERCHECK, v.a. [from counter and check.] To keep an order or power of a Cypriots, to counter of humidity, to which are the thing more authentick. This charter is signed by the Kings and counterbiased by a licensy of their Council. Howel.

COUNTERCHECK, n.f. [from counter and check.] Cut of the counter or counter point of counter, to which, or to counter-point to the counter. Howel.

Let that be two counter together this diameter, counter bias, to an bit of compass, except a few blocks with counterbias. Howel.

COUNTERCHECK, n.f. [counter and check.] Contrary side; the counter side.

Such were two counterbias at hand, and the
Enlarging of the field West,
In some prodigious side and flow. Dryden.

COUNTERCHECK, n.f. [counter and check, contrary, French.] 1. The inferior or sediment of a bottle, that from the bottom, and the motion of the liquor. Farmer's Dictionary.

2. The inferior or sediment.

Let bottlebrands on happy fortune wait,
And give not that the counterbias to fate. Dryd. Juvenal.

COUNTERCHECK, n.f. [counter and check.]

The counterbias, called by the Romans bias, the height and full growth of the plan, are measures of the counterbias, which reflected that degree of motion, outside the whole is counterbiased, and the counter to defeat from that height is counterbiased. Fortescue Prerogative Pref.

TO COUNTERCHECK, v.a. [counter and check, Latin.] To incline contrary to, to bias equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

1. Bulkiness; stature.

Ulysses, of middle stature, but having contracted a bulkiness through many years, and having spent his strength in another way than for them, that the remaining force is over of their bodies not equal.

I cannot remove any other, than the Prince, Sir, Sir, Sir

2. A grain; a mite; a denier.
Acorn, or pennyroyal to the female dove,
Kind that her pullets sometimes are delicate.
The dove will be attempting. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

COURAGE, n. f. [courage, Fr. from cor, Latin.] Bravery; active fortitude; valour; spirit; courage.
Not long beneath whose trees
Thyrsis, and I, long parted with the sun,
Have sat secluded from all eyes, unseen.
Shakspeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
Their courage
Now mounted with their spoils. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
Men were then stronger, more their nerves did strain
Their limbs and minds more, and their souls more vain.
Cowley.
Courage, that grows from confidence, very often forbears to attempt what it is well enough able to perform, for fear of miscarrying in the end, which makes one all the considerable, without any other ground, to be esteemed a coward by those who are not able, and have the fear of adventuring upon the same thing, who appear to be as resolute courage, and have much more reason. Archbishop Tillotson.
Nothing but fortitude of venturous courage can the cause of man continuate. Cowley.

COURAGEOUS, adj. [from courage.] Brave; daring; bold; active; stout; valiant.
Hath he courage sufficient to undertake so dangerous a adventure. Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.
Let the courageous horse
Bear his proud rider headlong upon the ground.
Dryden.
Let us imitate the courageous example of Christ, who rather chose to undergo the office willingly, if man required it. Bishop Sanderson's Sermons.

COURAGEOUSLY, adv. [from courageous.] Bravely; boldly; stoutly.
The knights were then performed with much more dexterity, and fought more gallantly and courageously. Sir Walter Ralegh's Preface to his History of the World.

COURAGEOUSNESS, n. f. [from courageous.] Bravery; boldness; fortitude; courage.
Courageousness of the manhood and the unexpected valour of the Scots, made them to be more esteemed, than for the value in the deeds. Sir John Ayliffe, ch. 18.

COURANT, n. f. [courant, French.] An old country dance.
A quick dance.
He has a mind to the matter, while I have a mind to my heart: why, he is wise as any lawyer in a courant. Shakspeare.
Let the Scots have their country of stalks, and the Irish their country of kerns; we have our country of the kind, to love, to hear, to see, to feel. Bacon.
In the dispatch of their petty suits,
Write half of them with pitiful lies.
You, your servants, have to do with court. Ben Jonson.

COURANTE, n. f. [courant, French.] A mortal fever in ballad, or rapidly a disease.
Thou a courante, and wilt another bound. Shakspeare.
Thou art a courante, and a corrant, and a jig, and a flirt, and a reverend corrant, and a grave corrant, and a corrant of Venice, and all the corrants persons, regarding him and all that's people with his corrant for Venice. Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair.

COURIER, n. f. [courir, Fr. corsor, Latin.]
1. Runner; messenger.
And from the mute with speaking tongues,
And deaf with clamorous courier. Cowley.
2. Perhaps there place is taken by proxy. Ye this are the ladies found the proofs of a courier.
Then with a blessed carp the noble lady,
And with full charges offer to the pad. Dryden's Fables.
You are not safe yours home. We have sent forth
Post messengers, and courier, to the chief Of the Scottish rebels. Ben Jonson's Sad Shepherd.
Sometimes thy courier with the sword shall come. Ap.
Sequitur. Rebel rude.
Neither shall I by his or another's assistance, as an ordinary courier, present of money to all skilful politicians. Bacon.
3. Scouts.
Nevertheless, if they believed in Christ, not their love on it, this is one of the chief, if not the chief, of all the proofs, that we are the courier and harbingers of Christ. Archbishop Tillotson.
COURIER, n. f. [from the horse.]
It for his body.
And by the end shall the old carry of death.
Whatever will of man accomplish. Shakspeare's King Lear.
When the time of the community is chiefly determined, it must not be altered by another disposure in the course of the commonwealth. Bacon.
Ye are a courier, ye carry me to his court. Shakspeare.
If any man desire to be continued keeping, and to be by years on in the month by others, and that by others, and let one be a courier. Bacon.
2. Scouts and unlucky messenger.
Ye have certain days the carry of hot. Shakspeare.
It bear, by the crowded thoroughfares, bid pass free to any man, he, that will claim by that title, shall have the best pottage given at land for his handiwork, for, if it be not given, the cook, that dresses it, shall be hanged on the spit, or, at least, shall be cast out door. Ben Jonson.
Bacon at Rutcliffe's door, and the gentlemen
The pleasant dale shadow during hunting, and the courier
Are cordially very well in the house. Shakspeare.
3. The courier of an ass; a courier of an ass; a courier of a chariot. Horace and courier of philosophers, Gilbert, Chaucer, Spenser.
4. Cordial; comfortable.
Gentle parting, the courier, by the sun, is upon, to man, was thought, when, as you have had, it can, or can, or can.
This mortal dying, dying, nothing, but a courier, comes, was the courier of the sun, and, as it is, the courier of the world, is, is, is. Ben Jonson.
He proved counsellors there, who gave the courier of the sun, or courier, not mortal, yet cold. Ben Jonson.
Ye are a courier, ye carry me to his court. Shakspeare.
Ye are a courier, ye carry me to his court. Ben Jonson.
*But if a spirit can be taken with guidance, and, and, and, in the month and of courier, and, and, and

It must appear to other wives than wives,
Therefore I think the breaking-away, Sir, Mirth of Fa-
Will have less for others, for helpmates, for matrons to Footing, Parnell.
Yet, who was compassionate of all the sponsors of Jacob's sons, would provide, if, kind of people, brought home to a bible of English, and sons of Judaism, towards the matrons. Gibbons.
In spots of antiquities was to known,
Thus through the road his variety was known, Pope Tit.
2. An all of matrons or virgins.
Matrons, and virgins, come on left Wolverines;
Yon Saxon's are fitch you to counter-tone.
You shall see them, and for their amazing
Ill have you see them, and for their amazing.
Ben Jonson, Masque of Queens.
Behold yon dames, which let the bath break
Rotten, and lose their limpid curling. Shakesp. K. Lear.
When I was left a-foot,
The matrons and the maids cried out on me. Shakesp. K. III.
Some of the lady adventures of war,
Are to be hard to tell, unless in a tent
Ear hard to hear, lest it an honest thrill.
A tented tent do hide a coward. Shakesp. Mach. IV.
Other fears, otherwise, cannot be fable; neither are flying for the bell tower, or for our accusing Polyphemus cannot, to be the bell our thief to come up. Bacon.
3. The overseer made by matrons.
Matrons, and virgins, come on a-pace of hook,
Would I more other than London book.
B. Jonson, Masque, prose and verse.
Gathering the fatherly, the matrons, Dryd. Tuan.
The poor creature was an old of counsellor, as if I had been his grandmother, the truth out, he, I supposed to make her look something Christianlike. Rogers Gil Patrick.
4. A matron, not of virgin, but by the forms of matrons; as the overseer of matrons.
Let matrons of England. A matron to which, if a man marry a widowhood, that is, a person called by law, and regard called or for the matron also into the matrons, which hath an office and its with the footing, pay, if the matron to go fellow. Bell for many the last, during the life and to called regard per legal during, by the matrons of England. Cowel.
To COUNTER. v.a. [from the noun.]
1. To meet in opposition.
Very appropriate, and counter-time to me. Shakesp.
The poor publicans,
Thus cast it in time, do their necessity. Shakesp.
2. To make a counter in the manner of latin.
If I found such that on my side,
We hardly can it to such other. Prior.
COUNTER. n.s. [from the verb.]
1. One that counters or opposes, for counts of process.
He hath been a counter, he hath been a counter,
If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have used a counter, I have defamed a lady, I have been publick with my friends, friends with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors, I have lost four quarrels, and this so have thrown counter. Shakesp. Much Ado.
You are a flattering boy; now, I see, I have gained a Shakesp. Antony Cleopatra.
You know I am no counter, answered to the office.
The principal figure in a pedigree, is like a long strong trecounter, who engages for the value of a fee, standing.
Dryden's Dedication.
3. One that counts or thinks the forms of counters.
Mirth then, all hopes of honest Roman Senate,
With the counter, counter of temperate freedom,
To which the counter Dryden, Rating and Cogitata.
Thus was the answer, all our pleasure a pleasure of counter the people does Richard the III. on set of hair, but counter.
COUNTER. So COUNTER.
COUNTERBALANCE. n.s. [from the verb.] Equipoise, poise.
The English money is, I will not for so much of the Hu-bonn, as is manner as the Goods, but is desire to the Lords, as counters as the Spanish, is counter to the French, and to counter is the Italian. Gerard Malynes.
COUNTERBALANCE. v.a. [from counter, balance.] To counter-poise of weight, counterpoise; to counterpoise.
Counterbalance, to balance, to balance or counterpoise weight, to weigh. Dryden.
Counterbalance, counterpoise, counterweight.
No counter poise, counter balance, counterweight.
Dryden, Ep. of the.
COUNTERBALANCE. n.s. [from the verb.] Counterpoise.
Their counterbalance, counterpoise, counterweight.
Dryden, Ep. of the.
COUNTERBALANCE. v.a. [from the verb.] To counterpoise.
To counterbalance, counterpoise, counterweight.
Dryden, Ep. of the.
COUNTERBALANCE. n.s. [from the verb.] Counterpoise.
Counterbalance, counterpoise, counterweight.
Dryden, Ep. of the.
COUNTERBALANCE. v.a. [from the verb.] To counterpoise.

You are not obliged to a blind belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being concern'd for the fiction. Dryden.

When I attempt to lengthen out his case
Relent, and take a pleasure over-late. Dryden's Aureng-zebe.

Cruelty, which may be conceived only as a knowledge of the pleasure, but not as a fault, without possessing it, or be any thing but a quality. Hale's Contemplations.

CRUELTY, n. s. [from cruel. Fr. cruauté; crudelitas, crudelitas, crudelitas.

Without wilfulness, brutality or worst crime and contempt, and therefore the repentance of brutality could but be patient, which cannot be but by giving way; a great fault is a certain quantity. Jer. Taylor's Dissuasive.

Thou's not fitted to thy cruelty,
Thy mind is too much of a piece with thy body,
Thy thoughts have long ago
Lost their humanity, and are become Like vipers, cruel through thy nature. Ben. Jonson.

Thus shall you see the cruelty of your sex,
Which, wanting blood, shall cruelties vent in words. Beaumont and Fletcher's Wife for a Month.

Let the proud lady, who thinks it no cruelty to see her servants, or her horses, or her dogs, or her birds, or her flowers, or her cattle, or her poultry, or her pigeons, or her pigeon-house, or her dove-house, or her fish-pond, or her fish, or her fish-pond, or her fish, or her fish-pond, or her fish

The craggedness or steepness of that mountain, maketh many parts of it in a manner inaccessible. Brerewood.

CRA'GGINESS. n.s. [from craggy.] The state of being craggy.

CRA'GGY. adj. [from crag.] Rugged; full of prominences; rough to walk on, or climb.

That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy clift ypight,
Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Fairy Queen, b. i.

It was impossible to pass up the woody and craggy hills, without the loss of their commanders. Raleigh's Essays.

Mountaineers that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

The town and republick of St. Marino stands on the top of a very high and craggy mountain. Addison on Italy.

To CRAM. v.a. [cramman, Saxon.]

1. To stuff; to fill with more than can conveniently be held.

As much love in rhime,
As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper,
Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all. Shakespeare.

Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves were called. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Thou hast spoke as if thy eldest son should be a fool; whose scull Jove cram with brains. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Grow not so greedy by herding too full company into company; but so as the number may live well in the plantation, and not by surcharge be in penury. Bacon, Essay 33.

2. To fill with food beyond satiety.

You'd mollify a judge, would cram a squire;
Or else some smiles from court you may desire. King.

I am sure children would be freer from diseases, if they were not crammed so much as they are by fond mothers, and were kept wholly from flesh the first three years. Locke.

As a man may be eating all day, and, for want of digestion, is never nourished; so these endless readers may cram themselves in vain with intellectual food. Watts's Improvement.

But Annius, crafty seer,
Came cramm'd with capon, from where Pollio dines. Dunciad.

3. To thrust in by force.

You cram these words into mine ears, against
The stomach of my sense. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Huddle, much Hudibras, this bound
Shall down thy false throat cram that word. Hudibras, p. ii.

Fear hast cramm'd us all into one hold,
And thus each time expiring. Dryden's Cleomenes.

In another printed paper it is roundly expressed, that he will cram his brass down our throats. Swift.

To CRAM. v.n. To eat beyond satiety.

The godly dame, who fleshly failings damns,
Scolds with her maid, or with her chaplain crams.
Pope's Epilogue to Jane Shore.

CRA'MBO. n.s. [a cant word, probably without etymology.] A play at which one gives a word, to which another finds a rhyme; a rhyme.

So Mævius, when he drain'd his skull
To celebrate some suburb trull,
His similes in order set,
And ev'ry crambo he could get. Swift.

CRAMP. n.s. [krampe, Dut. crampe, French.]

1. A spasm or contraction of the limbs, generally removed by warmth and rubbing.

For this, be sure, to-night thou shalt have cramps, Side stitches that shall pen thy breath up. Shakesp. Tempest.

In a retreat, he outruns any lackey; marry, in coming on, he has the cramp. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

The cramp, no doubt, cometh of contraction of sinews; which is manifest, in that it cometh either by cold or dryness. Bacon's Natural History, No. 964.

Hares, said to live on hemlock, do not make good the tradition; and he that observes what vertigoes, cramps, and convulsions follow thereon, in these animals, will be of our belief. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

2. A restriction; a confinement; obstruction; shackle.

A narrow fortune is a cramp to a great mind, and lays a man under incapacities of serving his friend. L'Estrange.

3. A piece of iron bent at each end, by which two bodies are held together.

To the uppermost of these there should be fastened a sharp grappe, or cramp of iron, which may be apt to take hold of any place where it falls. Wilkins's Mathem. Magick.

CRAMP. adj. Difficult; knotty: a low term.

To CRAMP. v.a. [from the noun.]

1. To pain with cramps or twitches.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, ev'n then
A wat'rish humour swell'd, and ooz'd again. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To restrain; to confine; to obstruct; to hinder.

It is impossible to conceive the number of inconveniences that will ensue, if borrowing be cramped. Bacon, Essay 42.

There are few but find [illegible] Glanville's Scepf. c. 22.

He, who forms, fancies reflections of dread upon his spirits, which, even in the midst of action, cramps and ties up his activity. South's Sermons.

Dr. Hammond loves to contract and cramp the sense of prophecies. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

The antiquaries are for cramping their subjects into as narrow a space as they can, and for reducing the whole extent of a science into a few general maxims. Addison on Italy.

Marius used all endeavours for depressing the nobles, and raising the people; particularly for cramping the former in their power of judicature. Swift in the Dissent. in Ath. and Rome.

No more
Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold;
But full of life, and vivifying soul. Thomson's Spring.

3. To bind with crampirons.

CRA'MPFISH. n.s. [from cramp and fish.] The torpedo, which benumbs the hands of those that touch it.

CRA'MPIRON. n.s. [from cramp and iron.] See CRAMP, sense 3.

CRA'NAGE. n.s. [cranagium, low Latin.] A liberty to use a crane for drawing up wares from the vessels, at any creek of the sea or wharf, unto the land, and to make profit of it. It signifies also the money paid and taken for the same. Cowel.

CRANE. n.s. [cran, Sax. kraen, Dutch.]

1. A bird with a long beak.

Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter. Is. xxxviii. 14.

That small infantry warr'd on by cranes. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. An instrument made with ropes, pullies, and hooks, by which great weights are raised.

In case the mould about it be so ponderous as not to be removed by any ordinary force, you may then raise it with a crane. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

Then commerce brought into the publick walk
The busy merchant; the big warehouse built;
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson's Autumn.

3. A siphon; a crooked pipe for drawing liquors out of a cask.

CRA'NESBILL. n.s. [from crane and bill.]

1. An herb.

The leaves are conjugate: the cup consists of one leaf, divided into five parts, expanded in form of a star: the flowers consist of five leaves, somewhat resembling a mallow or liquid flower, with ten stamina surrounding the ovary. The fruit is of a pentagonal figure, with a beak, containing five bell-vessels, in each of which is one tailed seed, which, when ripe, is cast forth by the twisting of the beak. It is common in several parts of England, growing in almost any soil or situation. Miller.

2. A pair of pincers terminating in a point, used by surgeons.

CRA'NIUM. n.s. [Latin.] The skull.

In wounds made by contusion, when the cranium is a little naked, you ought not presently to crowd in dossils; for if the contused fibres be well digested, the bone will incarn with the wound without much difficulty. Wiseman's Surgery.

CRANK. n.s. [This word is perhaps a contraction of crooked, to which it may bear some resemblance, and is part of the instrument called a crane.]

1. A crank is the end of an iron axis turned square down, and again turned square to the first turning down; so that, on the last turning down, a leather thong is slipt to tread the middle wheel about. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

2. Any bending or winding passage.

I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart; to th' seat of th' brain;
And, through the cranks and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferiour veins,
From me receive that natural competency,
Whereby they live. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Any conceit formed by twisting or changing, in any manner, the form or meaning of a word.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek. Milton.

CRANK. adj. [from onkranck, Dutch. Skinner.]

1. Healthy; sprightly: sometimes corrupted to crank.

[illegible]
And [illegible] so thick and so [illegible],
As crankle, [illegible] Spenser's Past.

2. Among sailors, a ship is said to be crank, when, by the form of its bottom, or by being loaded too much above, it is liable to be overset. [from krank, Dut. sick.]

To CRA'NKLE. v.n. [from crank.] To run in and out; to run in flexures and windings.

See how this river comes me crankling in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land,
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out. Shak. Hen. IV.

To CRA'NKLE. v.a. To break into unequal surfaces; to break into angles.

Old Vaga's stream,
Forc'd by the sudden shock, her wonted track
Forsook, and drew her humid train aslope,
Crankling her banks. Philips.

CRA'NKLES.

CRA'NKLES. n.s. [from the verb.] Inequalities; angular prominences.

CRA'NKNESS. n.s. [from crank.]

1. Health; vigour.

2. Disposition to overset.

CRA'NNIED. adj. [from cranny.] Full of chinks.

A wall it is, as I would have you think,
That had in it a crannied hole or chink. Shakespeare.

A very fair fruit, and not unlike a citron; but somewhat rougher chopt and crannied, vulgarly conceived the marks of Adam's teeth. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 1.

CRA'NNY. n.s. [cren, Fr. crena, Latin.] A chink; a cleft; a fissure.

The eye of the understanding is like the eye of the sense; for as you may see great objects through small crannies or holes, so you may see great axioms of nature through small and contemptible instances. Bacon's Natural History, No. 91.

And therefore bores, and had shields,
To find a cranny to creep out. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, but with brick or stone, fitted to the crannies. Dryden's Dedicat. to the Æneid.

Within the linings of stone and furrows, with streams and currents in the rocks and crannies. Burnet's Theo. of the Earth.

He skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garrets, and he peeped into every cranny. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

CRAPE. n.s. [crispa, low Latin.] A thin stuff, loosely woven, of which the dress of the clergy is sometimes made.

And proud Rufinus, [illegible] with sables sage,
With such kinds of grace shall grace the stage. Swift.

[illegible]
To that I never [illegible],
Against that effeminate [illegible],
Yet there would it tremble for the field. Swift.

'Tis from high life high characters are drawn;
A saint in crape is twice a saint in lawn. Pope, Epistle i.

CRA'PULENCE. n.s. [crapula, a surfeit, Latin.] Drunkenness; sickness by intemperance. Dict.

CRA'PULOUS. adj. [crapulo, Lat.] Drunken; intemperate; sick with intemperance. Dict.

To CRASH. v.n. [a word probably formed from the thing.]

1. To make a loud complicated noise, as of many things falling or breaking at once.

There shall be a great crashing from the hills. Zeph. i. 10.

When convulsions cleave the lab'ring earth,
Before the dismal yawn appears, the ground
Trembles and heaves, the nodding houses crash. Smith.

To CRASH. v.a. To break or bruise.

My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray you come and crush a cup of wine. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Mr. Warburton has it, crush a cup of wine.

To crush, says Hanmer, is to be merry; a crash being a word still used in some counties for a merry bout.

It is surely better to read crack. See CRACK.

CRASH. n.s. [from the verb.] A loud, sudden, mixed sound, as of many things broken at the same time.

Senseless Ilium,
Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top
Stoops to his base; and, with a hideous crash, Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

[illegible] upon the wretchedness of riches, the decay of beauty, and the crush of worlds, with as much indifference as ever Plato did. Pope.

CRA'SIS. n.s. [κρᾶσις.] Temperature; constitution arising from the various properties of humours.

The humours of man are so remarkably described by the individual crasis, that every man owns something wherein none is like him. Glanville's Scepf. c. 15.

A man may be naturally inclined to pride, lust, and anger, as these inclinations are founded in a peculiar crasis, and constitution of the blood and spirits. South's Sermons.

CRASS. adj. [crassus, Latin.] Gross; coarse; not thin; not comminuted; not subtle; not consisting of small parts.

Metals are intermixed with the common terrestrial matter, so as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, so diffused and scattered amongst the crasser and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it. Woodward's Natural History.

CRA'SSITUDE. n.s. [crassitudo, Latin.] Grossness; coarseness; thickness.

They will be but thin, as a leaf, or a piece of paper or parchment; for if they have a greater crassitude, they will alter in their own body, though they spend not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The Dead Sea, which vomiteth up bitumen, is of that crassitude, as living bodies, bound hand and foot, cast into it, have been born up, and not sunk. Bacon's Natural History.

The terrestrial matter carried by rivers into the sea, is sustained therein partly by the greater crassitude and gravity of the seawater, and partly by its constant agitation. Woodward.

CRASTINA'TION. n.s. [from crastinus, Latin.] Procrastination; Delay. Dict.

CRATCH. n.s. [crèche, French; crates, Latin.] The palisaded frame in which hay is put for cattle.

When being expelled out of Paradise, by reason of sin, thou wert held in the chains of death; I was inclosed in the virgin's womb, I was laid in the cratch, I was wrapped in swaddling-clouts. Hakewill on Providence.

CRAVA'T. n.s. [of uncertain etymology.] A neckcloth; any thing worn about the neck.

Less delinquents have been scourg'd,
And hemp on wooden anvils forg'd;
Which others for cravats have worn
About their necks, and took a turn. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

The restringents were applied, and over another, as her throat: then we put her on a cravat. Wiseman's Surgery.

To CRAVE. v.a. [crapian, Saxon.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved at God's hands? Hooker.

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons;
But for the mutable rank-scented many,
Let them regard me as I do not flatter. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The poor people not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

I would crave leave here, under the word action, to comprehend the forbearance too of any action proposed. Locke.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves,
Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves. Prior.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subjects arm'd, the more their princes gave,
Th' advantage only took the more to crave. Denham.

Him doth that means, who, spite of all his store,
Is ever craving, and will still be poor?
Who cheats for halfpence, and who doffs his coat,
To save a farthing in a ferry-boat. Dryden's Pers. Sat. iv.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pushes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and fulness. L'Estrange.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an importunate lust, both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it, by some wicked action. South's Sermons.

4. To call for importunately.

Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The aliments, concoctions and effects of such a constitution, are easily taken in two great quantities; fixed crudities, and a craving appetite, especially of farinaceous and acescent substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love,
But more would prove
This heart too little, that too great. Suckling.

CRA'VEN. n.s. [Derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.]

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a coxcomb?——
——A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.
——No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven. Shakesp.

2. A coward; a recreant.

Upon his coward breast
A bloody cross, and on his craven crest
A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?——
——He is a craven and a villain else. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Whether it be
Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,
Of thinking too precisely on th' event;
A thought, which quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
And ever three parts coward. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Yet if the innocent some mercy find
From cowardice, not ruth did that proceed;
His noble foes durst not his craven kind
Exasperate by such a bloody deed. Fairfax, b. i. stan. 88.

To CRA'VEN. v.a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

'Gainst self-slaughter
There is a prohibition so divine,
That cravens my weak hand. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

CRA'VER. n.s. [from crave.] A weak-hearted spiritless fellow. It is used in Clarissa.

To CRAUNCH. v.a. [schrantsen, Dutch; whence the vulgar say more properly to scraunch.] To crush in the mouth. The word is used by Swift.

CRAW. n.s. [kroe, Danish.] The crop or first stomach of birds.

3 Y In

In both there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, or at least into a kind of antestomach, which I have observed in many, especially piscivorous birds. Ray on the Creation.

CRA'WFISH. n. s. [Sometimes written crayfish, properly crevice; in French ecrevisse.] A small crustaceous fish found in brooks; the small lobster of fresh water.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

Let me to crack live crawfish recommend. Pope's Hor. Im.

The common crawfish, and the large sea crawfish, both produce the stones called crabs eyes. In part of June, in July, and part of August, this animal not only casts its shell, but its very stomach is also consumed and digested, by a new one growing in its place. Hill on the Materia Medica.

To CRAWL. v. n. [krielen, Dutch.]

1. To creep; to move with a slow motion; to move without rising from the ground, as a worm.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man! Dryd. Aureng.

The streams but just contain'd within their bounds,
By slow degrees into their channels crawl;
And earth increases as the waters fall. Dryden.

A worm finds what it searches after, only by feeling, as it crawls from one thing to another. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii. c. 3.

The cut worm, that yesterday began
To crawl; thy fellow-creature, abject man! Prior.

2. To move weakly, and slowly.

'Tis our fast intent
To shake all cares and business from our age;
While we unburthen'd crawl tow'rd death. Shakesp. K. Lear.

They like tall fellows crept out of the holes; and secretly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it. Knolles.

A look so pale no quartane ever gave;
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave. Dryd. Juvenal.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business. Arbuthn. History of John Bull.

Man is a very worm by birth,
Vile, reptile, weak and vain!
A while he crawls upon the earth,
Then shrinks to earth again. Swift.

It will be very necessary for the threadbare gownsman, and every child who can crawl, to watch the fields at harvest-time. Swift.

3. To move about hated and despised.

Cromwell
Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Reflect upon that swarm of distinct opinions that crawls about the world, to the disgrace of reason. South's Sermons.

How will the condemned sinner then crawl forth, and appear in his filth and shame, before that unsullied tribunal! South's Sermons.

Behold a rev'rend sire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameless race,
Crawl through the street, shov'd on, or rudely press'd
By his own sons, that pass him by unbless'd! Pope, Ep. i.

CRA'WLER. n. s. [from crawl.] A creeper; any thing that creeps.

CRA'YFISH. n. s. [See CRAWFISH.] The river lobster.

The cure of the muriatick and armoniack saltness requires to use [illegible] as fresh, turnips, [illegible] Floyer on the Humours.

CRA'YON. n. s. [crayon, French.]

1. A kind of pencil; a roll of paste to draw lines with.

Let no day pass over you without drawing a line; that is to say, without working, without giving some strokes of the pencil or the crayon. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. A drawing or design done with a pencil or crayon.

To CRAZE. v. a. [ecraser, French, to break to pieces.]

1. To break; to crush; to weaken.

In this consideration the answer of Calvin unto Farrel, concerning the children of Popish parents, doth seem crazed. Hooker.

Relent, sweet Hermia; and, Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right. Shakespeare.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host;
And craze their chariot wheels. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xii.

2. To powder.

The tin ore passeth to the crazing mill, which, between two grinding stones, bruiseth it to a fine sand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I have, friend,
No father his son dearer: true, to tell thee,
That grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction; and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits, only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

CRA'ZEDNESS. n. s. [from crazed.] Decrepitude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker, Preface.

CRA'ZINESS. n. s. [from crazy.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakness.

Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [ecrasé, French.]

1. Broken; decrepit.

Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sickness and for crazy age. Shakesp. Henry VI.

When people are crazy, and in disorder, it is natural for them to groan. L'Estrange.

2. Broken witted; shattered in the intellect.

The queen of night, whose large command
Rules all the sea and half the land,
And over moist and crazy brains,
In high spring tides, at midnight reigns. Hudibras, p. iii.

3. Weak; feeble; shattered.

Physick can but mend our crazy state,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden's Fables.

Were it possible that the near approaches of eternity, whether by a mature age, a crazy constitution, or a violent sickness, should amaze so many, had they truly considered. Wake.

CREA'GHT. n. s. [an Irish word.]

In these fast places they kept their creaghts, or herds of cattle, living by the milk of the cow, without husbandry or tillage. Davies on Ireland.

To CREAK. v. n. [corrupt from crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women. Shakespeare's King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryd. Fables.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.

The creaking locusts with my voice conspire,
They fry'd with heat, and I with fierce desire. Dryd. Virg.

CREAM. n. s. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakespeare.

I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Cream is matured and made to rise more speedily, by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey. Bacon's Natural History, No. 314.

How the drudging goblin sweat,
To earn his cream-bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn. Milton.

Let your various creams encircled be
With swelling fruit, just ravish'd from the tree. King.

Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream, and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor called skimmed milk. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It is used for the best part of any thing; as, the cream of a jest.

To CREAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather cream.

There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

To CREAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To skim off the cream.

2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing: so used somewhere by Swift.

CREAM-FACED. adj. [cream and faced.] Pale; coward-looking.

Thou cream-fac'd loon,
Where got'st thou that goose look. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

CRE'AMY. adj. [from cream.] Full of cream; having the nature of cream.

CRE'ANCE. n. s. [French.] In falconry, a fine small line, fastened to a hawk's leash when she is first lured.

CREASE. n. s. [from creta, Latin, chalk. Skinner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road. I once desired Lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp penknife would go out of the crease, and disfigure the paper. Swift.

To CREASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.

To CREATE. v. a. [creo, Latin.]

1. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Gen. i. 1.

We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much imperfecter yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion.

Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, and make women fight,
To doff their dire distresses. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errours and many enemies. King Charles.

They rejoice the cheerful reader, by difficulties of their own creating, [illegible] Decay of Piety.

None knew, 'till guilt created fear,
What darts or poison'd arrows were. Roscommon.

Must I new bars to my own joy create,
Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate? Dryd. Aureng.

Long abstinence is troublesome to acid constitutions, by the uneasiness it creates in the stomach. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To beget.

And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate. Shakesp. Midsummer-Night's Dream.

4. To invest with any new character.

Arise my knights of the battle: I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

5. To give any new qualities; to put any thing in a new state.

The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court baron. Davies on Ireland.

CREA'TION. n. s. [from create.]

1. The act of creating or conferring existence.

Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence; in his creation, in his conservation of us. Taylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character; as, the creation of peers.

3. The things created; the universe.

As subjects then, the whole creation came,
And from their natures Adam them did name. Denham.

Such was the saint, who shone with ev'ry grace,
Reflecting, Moses like, his maker's face:
God saw his image lively was express'd,
And his own work as in creation bless'd. Dryden's Fables.

Nor could the tender new creation bear
Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year. Dryden's Virgil.

In days of yore, no matter where or when,
Before the low creation swarm'd with men. Parnel.

4. Any thing produced, or caused.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain? Shakesp. Macbeth.

CREA'TIVE. adj. [from create.]

1. Having the power to create.

2. Exerting the act of creation.

To frame the conceptions of the nature of Deity in the first fashion, and of his creative power, is a [illegible] too great for mortal enquiry. South's Sermons.

But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative bounty burns
With warmest beam. Thomson's Spring.

CREA'TOR. n. s. [creator, Latin.] The being that bestows existence.

Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in
The great Creator, from his work return'd Magnificent; his six days work, a world. Milt. Parad. Lost.

When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful Creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

CREA'TURE. n. s. [creatura, low Latin.]

1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the Creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures. Stillingfleet's Defence of Discourse on Rom. Idol.

2. Any thing created.

God's first creature was light. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be. Tillotson, Sermon i.

3. An animal not human.

The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only in killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. A general term for man.

Yet crime in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own self-sake,
She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
Lo Tantalus, I here tormented lye. Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. 7.

Though he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him. Roscommon.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;
Is this a holiday? Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

He would into the stews,
And from the common creatures pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Nor think to-night of thy ill-nature,
But of thy follies, idle creature. Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.

And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand;
Cry, Oh sweet creature! and then kiss me hard. Shakespeare.

Ah, cruel creature, whom dost thou despise!
The gods, to live in woods, have left the skies. Dryd. Virg.

Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them pasted upon little tablets. Watts.

7. A person who owes his rise or his fortune to another.

He sent to colonel Massey to send him men, which he, being a creature of Essex's, refused. Clarendon.

The duke's creature he desired to be [illegible] Clarendon.

Great princes thus, when favourites they raise,
To justify their grace, their creatures praise. Dryd. Aurengz.

The design was discovered by a person whom every body knows to be the creature of a certain great man. Swift.

CREA'TURELY. adj. [from creature.] Having the qualities of a creature.

The several grounds of creaturely [illegible] may have some proportion to this infinite. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

CRE'BRITUDE. n. s. [from creber, frequent, Latin.] Frequentness. Dict.

CRE'BROUS. adj. [from creber, Latin.] Frequent. Dict.

CRE'DENCE. n. s. [from credo, Lat. credence, old French.]

1. Belief; credit.

Ne let it seem, that credence this exceeds;
For he that made the same was known right well,
To have done much more admirable deeds;
It Merlin was. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 7. stanz. 36.

Love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ample credence. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

They did not only underhand give out that this was the true earl, but the friar, finding some credence in the people, took boldness in the pulpit to declare as much. Bacon's H. VII.

2. That which gives a claim to credit or belief.

After they had delivered to the king their letters of credence, they were led to a chamber richly furnished. Hayward.

CREDE'NDA. n. s. [Latin.] Things to be believed; articles of faith; distinguished, in theology, from agenda, or practical duties.

These were the great articles and credenda of Christianity, that so much startled the world. South's Sermons.

CRE'DENT. adj. [credens, Latin.]

1. Believing; easy of belief.

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs. Shakesp. Hamlet.

2. Having credit; not to be questioned.

My authority bears a credent bulk,
That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

CREDE'NTIAL. n. s. [from credens, Latin.] That which gives a title to credit; the warrant upon which belief or authority is claimed.

A few persons of an odious and despised country could not have filled the world with believers, had they not shewn undoubted credentials from the Divine Person who sent them on such a message. Addison on the Christian Religion.

CREDIBI'LITY. n. s. [from credible.] Claim to credit; possibility of obtaining belief; probability.

The first of these opinions I shall show to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of this nature is capable. Tillotson, Serm. i.

Calculate the several degrees of credibility and conviction, by which the one evidence surpasseth the other. Atterbury.

CRE'DIBLE. adj. [credibilis, Latin.] Worthy of credit; deserving of belief; having a just claim to belief.

The ground of credit is the credibility of things credited; and things are made credible, either by the known condition and quality of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth in themselves. Hooker, b. ii. f. 4.

None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon the testimony of credible persons, I am free from doubt. Tillotson, Preface.

CRE'DIBLENESS. n. s. [from credible.] Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to belief.
The credibleness of a good part of these narratives has been confirmed to me by a practiser of physick in the East Indies. Boyle's History of Firmness.

CRE'DIBLY. adv. [from credible.] In a manner that claims belief.
This, with the loss of so few of the English as is scarce credible, being, as hath been rather confidently than credibly reported, but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

CREDIT. n. s. [credit, French.]
1. Belief.
When the people heard these words, they gave no credit unto them, nor received them. 1 Mac. x. 46.
I may give credit to reports. Addison's Spectator, N° 131.
Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
To maids alone and children are reveal'd:
What though no credit doubting wits may give,
The fair and innocent shall still believe. Pope's Ra. of Lock.
2. Honour; reputation.
I published, because I was told I might please such as it was a credit to please. Pope.
3. Esteem; good opinion.
There is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Bacon.
His learning, though a poet said it,
Before a play, would lose no credit. Swift.
Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave
Shall walk the world in credit to his grave. Pope's Hor. b. ii.
4. Faith; testimony.
We are contented to take this upon your credit, and to think it may be. Hooker, b. iv. sect. 11.
The things which we properly believe, be only such as are received upon the credit of divine testimony. Hooker, b. ii.
The author would have done well to have left so great a paradox only to the credit of a single assertion. Locke.
5. Trust reposed.
Credit is nothing but the expectation of money, within some limited time. Locke.
6. Promise given.
They have never thought of violating the publick credit, or of alienating the revenues to other uses than to what they have been thus assigned. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
7. Influence; power not compulsive; interest.
She employed her uttermost credit to relieve us, which was as great as a beloved son with a mother. Sidney.
They sent him likewise a copy of their supplication to the king, and desired him to use his credit that a treaty might be entered into. Clarendon, b. ii.
Having credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, he troubled not himself for that of other men. Clarendon.

To CRE'DIT. v. a. [credo, Latin.]
1. To believe.
Now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do presage. Shakesp. Jul. Caes.
To credit the unintelligibility both of this union and motion, we need no more than to consider it. Glanv. Sceps. c. 4.
2. To procure credit or honour to any thing.
May here her monument stand so,
To credit this rude age; and shew
To future times, that even we
Some patterns did of virtue breed. Waller.
It was not upon design to credit these papers, but to compliment a society so much above flattery. Glanv. Sceps. Pref.
At present you credit the church as much by your government, as you did the school formerly by your wit. South.
3. To trust; to confide in.
4. To admit as a debtor.

CRE'DITABLE. adj. [from credit.]
1. Reputable; above contempt.
He settled him in a good creditable way of living, having procured him by his interest one of the best places of the country. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
2. Honourable; estimable.
The contemplation of things, that do not serve to promote our happiness, is but a more specious and ingenious sort of idleness, a more pardonable and creditable kind of ignorance. Tillotson, Sermon i.

CRE'DITABLENESS. n. s. [from creditable.] Reputation; estimation.
Among all these snares, there is none more entangling than the creditableness and repute of customary vices. Decay of Piety.

CRE'DITABLY. adv. [from creditable.] Reputably; without disgrace.
Many will chuse rather to neglect their duty safely and creditably, than to get a broken pate in the church's service, only to be rewarded with that which will break their hearts too. South's Sermons.

CRE'DITOR. n. s. [creditor, Latin.] He to whom a debt is owed; he that gives credit: correlative to debtor.
There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot chuse but break. Shakespeare.
I am so used to consider myself as creditor and debtor, that I often state my accounts after the same manner, with regard to heaven and my own soul. Addison's Spectator, N° 549.
No man of honour, as that word is usually understood, did ever pretend that his honour obliged him to be chaste or temperate, to pay his creditors, to be useful to his country, to do good to mankind, to endeavour to be wise or learned, to regard his word, his promise, or his oath. Swift.

CREDU'LITY. n. s. [credulité, French; credulitas, Latin.] Easiness of belief; readiness of credit.
The great Pliny, being subject to that only disadvantage of humble hearts, credulity, was persuaded by him. Sidney.
The poison of credulity may, in some measure, be cured by learning to set a high value on truth. Watts's Logick.

CRE'DULOUS. adj. [credulus, Latin.] Apt to believe; unsuspecting; easily deceived.
A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none. Shakespeare's King Lear.

CRE'DULOUSNESS. n. s. [from credulous.] Aptness to believe; credulity.

CREED. n. s. [from credo, the first word of the apostles creed.]
1. A form of words in which the articles of faith are comprehended.
The larger and fuller view of this foundation is set down in the creeds of the church. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Will they, who decry creeds and confessions, say that one who wrote a treatise of morality ought not to make it a set collection of moral precepts? Felton.
2. Any solemn profession of principles or opinion.
For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed. Shakesp.

To CREEK. v. a. [See To CREAK.] To make a harsh noise.
Shall I stay here,
Creeking my shoes on the plain masonry? Shakespeare.

CREEK. n. s. [crecca, Sax. kreke, Dutch.]
1. A prominence or jut in a winding coast.
As streams, which with their winding banks do play,
Stopp'd by their creeks, run softly through the plain. Davies.
They on the bank of Jordan, by a creek,
Where winds with reeds and osiers whisp'ring play,
Their unexpected loss and plaints outbreath'd. P. Lost. Reg.
2. A small port; a bay; a cove.
A law was made here to stop their pillage in every port and creek. Davies on Ireland.
3. Any turn, or alley.
A back friend, a shoulder-clapper; one that commands
The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands. Shaksp.

CRE'EKY. adj. [from creek.] Full of creeks; unequal; winding.
Who, leaning on the belly of a pot,
Pour'd forth a water, whose outgushing flood
Ran bathing all the creeky shore a-float,
Whereon the Trojan prince spilt Turnus' blood. Spenser.

To CREEP. v. n. [pret. crept; creopan, Sax. kruypen, Dutch.]
1. To move with the belly to the ground, without legs, as a worm.
Ye that walk
The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep! Milt. Pa. Lost.
And every creeping thing that creeps the ground. Milton.
If they cannot distinguish creeping from flying, let them lay down Virgil, and take up Ogilby's translation. Dryd. Dedicat. Æn.
2. To grow along the ground, or on other supports.
The grottos wild, with [illegible] crown'd,
And creeping vines on arbours weav'd around. Pope.
3. To move forward without bounds or leaps, as insects.
4. To move slowly and feebly.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Why should a man
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
He who creeps after plain, dull, common sense, is safe from committing absurdities; but can never reach the excellence of wit. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.
5. To move secretly and clandestinely.
I'll creep up into the chimney.——
—There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kiln-hole. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Whate'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shakespeare.
Of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women. 2 Tim. iii. 6.
Thou makest darkness, and it is night; wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth. Psal. civ. 20.

Now and then a work or two has crept in, to keep his first design in countenance. Atterbury.
6. To move timorously without soaring, or venturing into dangers.
Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when it is evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.
We have took a little walk, to creep along the sea-shore as far as Genoa. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
7. To come unexpected; to steal forward unheard and unseen.
By these [illegible] he crept, nay he flew, into the favour of [illegible]. Bacon, H. vii.
It seems, the marriage of his brother's wife
Has crept too near his conscience.
——No, his conscience
Has crept too near another lady. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Necessity enforced them, after they grew full of people, to spread themselves, and creep out of Shinar, or Babylonia. Raleigh's History.
None pretends to know from how remote corners of those frozen mountains, some of those fierce nations first crept out. Temple.
It is not to be expected that every one should guard his understanding from being imposed on, by the sophistry which creeps into most of the books of argument. Locke.
8. To behave with servility; to fawn; to bend.
They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come as humbly as they us'd to creep
To holy altars. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

CREE'PER. n. s. [from creep.]
1. A plant that supports itself by means of some stronger body.
Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have bodies not proportionable to their length; therefore they are winders or creepers; as ivy, briony, and woodbine. Bacon's Nat. History.
2. An iron used to slide along the grate in kitchens.
3. A kind of patten or clog worn by women.

CREE'PHOLE. n. s. [creep and hole.]
1. A hole into which any animal may creep, to escape danger.
2. A subterfuge; an excuse.

CREE'PINGLY. adv. [from creeping.] Slowly; after the manner of a reptile.
The joy, which wrought into Pygmalion's mind, was even such as, by each degree of Zelmane's words, creepingly entered into Philoclea's. Sidney, b. ii.

CREMA'TION. n. s. [crematio, Latin.] A burning.

CRE'MOR. n. s. [Latin.] A milky substance; a soft liquor resembling cream.
The food is swallowed into the stomach, where, mingled with dissolvent juices, it is reduced into a chyle or cremor. Ray.

CRE'NATED. adj. [from crena, Latin.] Notched; indented.
The cells are prettily contrived, as notched quite round the edges; but not shutters down to any depth. Woodward on Fossils.

CRE'PANCE. n. s. [With farriers.] An ulcer seated in the midst of the forepart of the foot, caused by a [illegible], and being between that from the thing, or by a hurt given by striking of the hinder feet. Farrier's Dict.

To CRE'PITATE. v. n. [crepito, Latin.] To make a small crackling noise.

CREPITA'TION. n. s. [from crepitate.] A small crackling noise.

CREPT. particip. [from creep.]
There are certain men crept in unawares. Jude, iv.
This fair vine, but that her arms surround
Her marry'd elm, had crept along the ground. Pope.

CREPU'SCULE. n. s. [crepusculum, Lat.] Twilight. Dict.

CREPU'SCULOUS. adj. [crepusculum, Latin.] Glimmering; in a state between light and darkness.
A close apprehension of the one might perhaps afford a glimmering light and crepusculous glance of the other. Brown.
The beginnings of philosophy were in a crepusculous obscurity; and it is yet scarce past the dawn. Glanv. Sceps. c. 22.

CRE'SCENT. adj. [from cresco, Latin.] Increasing; growing; in a state of increase.
I have seen him in Britain: he was then of a crescent note. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
With these in troop
Came Astoreth, whom the Phoenicians call'd
Astarte, queen of heaven, with crescent horns. Milt. P. L.

CRE'SCENT. n. s. [crescens, Lat.] The moon in her state of increase; any similitude of the moon increasing.
My pow'r's a crescent, and my auguring hope
Says it will come to th' full. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
Or Bactrian sophy, from the horns
Of Turkish crescent, leaves all waste beyond
The realm of Aladule, in his retreat. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryd.
And two fair crescents of translucent horn,
The brows of all their young increase adorn. Pope's Odyssey.

CRE'SCIVE. adj. [from cresco, Latin.] Increasing; growing.
So the prince obscur'd his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness, which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet crescive in his faculty. Shakesp. Henry V.

CRESS. n. s. [perhaps from cresco, it being a quick grower.] An herb.
Its flower consists of four leaves, placed in form of a cross; the pointal arises from the centre of the flower-cup, and becomes a roundish smooth fruit, divided into two cells, and furnished with seeds, generally smooth. It is cultivated as a sallad-herb, and chiefly esteemed in the Winter and Spring, being one of the warm kind. Miller.
His court with nettles and with cresses stor'd,
With soups unbought, and sallads, bless'd his board. Pope.

CRE'SSET. n. s. [croissette, Fr. because beacons had crosses anciently on their tops.] A great light set upon a beacon, lighthouse, or watch-tower. Hanmer. They still raise armies in Scotland by carrying about the fire cross.
At my nativity
The front of heav'n was full of fiery shapes,
Of burning cressets. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
From the arched roof,
Pendent by subtle magick, many a row
Of starry lamps, and blazing cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 728.

CREST. n. s. [crista, Latin.]
1. The plume of feathers on the top of the ancient helmet.
His valour, shewn upon our crests to-day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Ev'n in the bosom of our adversaries. Shakesp. Henry IV.
2. The comb of a cock.
Others, on ground
Walk'd firm; the crested cock, whose clarion sounds
The silent hours. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 443.
3. The ornament of the helmet in heraldry.
Of what esteem crests were, in the time of King Edward the third's reign, may appear by his giving an eagle, which he himself had formerly born, for a crest to William Montacute, earl of Salisbury. Camden's Remains.
The horn;
It was a crest ere thou wast born:
Thy father's father wore it. Shakespeare's As you like it.
4. Any tuft or ornament on the head; as some which the poets assign to serpents.
Their crests divide,
And, tow'ring o'er his head, in triumph ride. Dryd. Virgil.
5. Pride; spirit; fire; courage; loftiness of mien.
When horses should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crests. Shakespeare.

CRE'STED. adj. [from crest; cristatus, Latin.]
1. Adorned with a plume or crest.
The bold Ascalonite,
Then grov'ling foil'd their crested helmets in the dust. Milt.
At this, for new replies he did not stay;
But lac'd his crested helm, and strode away. Dryden.
2. Wearing a comb.
The crested bird shall by experience know,
Jove made not him his master-piece below. Dryden's Fables.

CRESTFA'LLEN. adj. [crest and fall.] Dejected; sunk; dispirited; cowed; heartless; spiritless.
I warrant you, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crestfallen as a dried pear. Sh. Mer. W. of Windsor.
They prolate their words in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if they were still complaining and crestfallen. Howel.

CRE'STLESS. adj. [from crest.] Not dignified with coat-armour; not of any eminent family.
His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England:
Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root. Shakespeare.

CRETA'CEOUS. adj. [creta, chalk, Lat.] Abounding with chalk; having the qualities of chalk; chalky.
What gives the light, seems hard to say; whether it be the cretaceous salts, the nitrous salt, or some igneous particles. Grew.
Nor from the sable ground expect success,
Nor from cretaceous, stubborn and jejune. Philips.

CRE'TATED. adj. [cretatus, Latin.] Rubbed with chalk. Dict.

CRE'VICE. n. s. [from crever, Fr. crepare, Latin, to burst.] A crack; a cleft; a narrow opening.
I pried me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand he had his two sons heads. Shakespeare.
I thought it no breach of good manners to peep at a crevice, and look in at people so well employed. Addison's Spectator.

CREW. n. s. [probably from cruð, Saxon.]
1. A company of people associated for any purpose; as a gallant crew, for courage. Chevy-chase.
There a noble crew
Of lords and ladies stood on every side,
Which, with their presence fair, the place much beautify'd. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 4. stanz. 7.
2. The company of a ship.

Thy wrathful weapon, thy ever-ready rage. Dryd. Ep.
2. It is now generally used in a bad sense.

Out of the hatefull cave,
Lucifer, hath sworne I from the deep to rise
Most wonder. Alliter. Mirror for Mag. st. 1. no. 1. 173.
He was a man, whom the envious spite
Of fortune, or some fate no resistance,
Mischeiuous from Eden into the world, thrust hard.
Hall. Contem. of Jonah. Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 478.
The hell-born sin, which thunder low
The Eternal Sire, is hell's own. Mallet.

CRINE. [from crinis, Lat.] Hair.

CRINED. adj. [from, Dutch.] Yarn-twilled and wiredon a form or hull.

Take fifty ox-crowns, gold in Dutch ground, and make thrifty Bills in the form of the Crined. Ben. Jonson. Mother Bombie.

CRINITE. adj. [from crinis, Latin.]
1. The star, whose appearance is like a comet.

Let it rumble to hell of Sodoma, and not shall hand in the kingdom of heaven. Shakspeare's Henry.
The star had been an ever-rolling spark,
Ant hundreds to perpetuate the pilgrim's mate. Pope.
2. To the phrase of an ox.

A well-fashioned, crinite.
Ben. Jonson. Mother Bombie. Ben. Jonson. Mother Bombie.
Upon hundred gallons Bombarding-pieces.
Thus in the perfect chrinitized and the great. Shakspeare.

To CRINK. verb. [from the noun.] To flag; to be a coward; to shrink; to wrinkle; to wrap.

Now I'm ashamed, I will be worthless, bound in
To thirty dollars and more. Shakspeare's Antiquit.

CRINKLE. n. s. [from crink.] A wrinkle.

CRINKLE. v. n. [from crink.] A wrinkle.

CRINKLEWOOD. n. s. [Cotton, Latin.] The tall of tilting, or jousting by a horse.

CRINK. n.
1. [from crinis, Latin.] The curls of a wave.

2. [from crinis, Saxon, a Rim.] A pointed difficult in the sense.

CRINOD. n. s. [Dutch, from drinks, to make a rink, Dutch.] A kind of Spanish cloak, or a kind of cloak and the fashion.

Hath cross and hath crinod.
Let hatred the sect scorner, and the pedant try. Hudibr. Hals.
For from all conduct of arms,
Save the rectitude on the hearth. Milton.
The Islands Bombarded, Gold? the boat for it?
And thrilling cash in the phrase are it. Ben. Jonson.
Bombarded, and the Bombarded, and the Bombarded,
Indeed from a bad with Gold to repetition is such.
The Indyes, to Satan, let he chose harmed will.
To Satan, to Satan, let he chose harmed will.
2. [from crinis, Latin.] A wave.

Crinod, Crinod, Crinod, to crinod. Ben. Jonson.

CRIOL. n. s. [from crio.] The officer which Shakspeare is to try or receive proclamation.

He appeared, Immediately, Shakspeare.
Crinod, Crinod, Crinod, and the whole proclamation pulled Crinod in a Crinod. Jonson on Language.
The crier will shout
Our old acquaintance Tyrrel should,
Who page running for money for their protection and Try.

CRIOL. n. s. [from, Lat. crio, French.] An ox country or ox, or cows, a great bull; a kind of sackbutt.

Crinod, Crinod, Crinod, to crinod.
Hall. Contem. of Jonah. Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 478.
Hall. Contem. of Jonah. Paradise Lost, b. iii. l. 478.
With arms the ox, it crows, but thinks the Sun Tory Ely.
Nor cow nor children, if he no cow be born. Pope.

CRIPPLE. adj. [from crine and fall.] Wicked; abominable; hateful; to shake; impious; contrary to law; impious.

Not punished not upon the crime. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Crippled, Crippled, Crippled, Crippled. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

CRIPPLED. adj. [from crine.] Immoral; without crime.

My dies shall not procreate any family.
So long as I am living, and crippled, shalt. Hudib. Hals. VI.

CRIPPLING. adj. [from crine.]
1. Fatally; contrary; an eight; contrary to law; contrary to law.

Live there, and be thy mother dead still.
The other dead there shall remain. Ben. Jonson. II.
Wise are appears, in our Hymn, we can hardly be injurious to shake crippled or indifferent. Bacon, Essays.
2. Doing; treated with crining are incurred.

The crippled of any of the crimes name, under or contrary to the light of God. Bacon's Sermons.
Crippling, Crippling, Crippling, Crippling.

CRIPPLING. adj. [from crine.]
1. Wicked.

Was ever criminal thrilled to plead?
Crook your ill-measured? and ..... Dryden's Knight Hyper.
2. A man guilty of a crime.

All these patients, that had held crime guilty of authority of their countries, or their crimes, not by sins, or by any other

Hidden, but by jokes and Gossips, or Gossipers and ...

CRIPPLED. adj. [from crine.] Not immorally, wrongly; guilty.

In my thoughts, crimes, to of impiety, they may be accusing with crimes of impiety. Bacon's Sermons.

CRIPPLING. n. s. [from crine.] Immoral act and manner.

CRIPPLING. n. s. [from crine, Latin.] The act of crinding.

CRIPPLING. adj. [from crine, Latin.] Relating to criminal matters.

CRIPPLING. adj. [from crine, Latin.] Wickedly; impiously; contrary to law.

The punishment due belongs to that great and criminal judge, in consideration of the right, and values to all against which are made over to him by Crook. Hammond on Fanatics.

CRIPPLING. n. s. [from crine, Latin.] Wickedness; impiety; criminality.

Some particular dates of poor and charity, which were most commonly and without. Hammond. Christ Church.

CRIPPLING. n. s. [from crinis, Latin.] Wickedness, impiety, crime.

I could never be convinced of this dark criminality in the Gospel, which is so plain and so full of light, and the matter of his crimes. Hammond. Christ Church.

CRIPPLING. adj. [from crine, Latin.] A species of red silver.

Upon the hand is emphasized.
With dusky tints and delicate dye.
Bay, sorry, sorrow.
And pomegranate green.
Epithet, Epithet, Epithet. Jonson's Perfection.

CRIPPLING. adj. [from crine, or crinis.]
1. Fatalis; bitter; sorry; sorrowful; fatal; unfortunate.

Its dark grand sorrow, with fatal sorrow.
Thus the sharp sorrow, sorrowing through fatal pain.
Dryden.
2. Not unwilling; not forward; a true sense man.

Thus crinkled, to crinkle, the wind the wind, the wind forward, and crinkled, crinkle, crinkle, and crinkle.
Dryden.

To CRINKLE. v. n. [from crinis, crinkle, crinkle.] To crinkle; to crinkle; to crinkle; to crinkle.

He rolled the entire through them, and crinkled, crinkle.
Dryden.

To CRINKLE. v. n. [from crinis, Latin.]
1. Fatal; fatal; to crinkle; to crinkle.

Fatal, fatal, to crinkle, to crinkle.
Fatal, fatal, to crinkle, to crinkle.
He rolled the entire through them, and crinkled, crinkle.
Dryden.

CRINKLE. n. s. [from crinis, Latin.]
1. Fatal; fatal; to crinkle; to crinkle.

Fatal, fatal, to crinkle, to crinkle.
Fatal, fatal, to crinkle, to crinkle.
Fatal, fatal, to crinkle, to crinkle.

cross, or to take another from them to cross on his account.

To Crossing, v. n. [from cross.] To contest; to gainsay; to oppose.

Not God's look upon you may be thought strictly to oppose, or crossing, to hinder the fate of the perfect.

Crossing, n. s. [from cross.]

1. Crossing, as it was still cultivated by Aristotle, who wrote a treatise of crossing wine. Dryden's Juvenal, Pref.

2. Adverb. contrariwise; reciprocally; cross-wise.

There is not a Greek or Latin proverb, which has not from, cross to, the like of his antagonist, that he was a matter of all tongues and learning of the Romans and Greeks. Ben Jonson.

To-Crossbar, v. a. [Crossbar, substantive, cross, bar.] cross; obstruct; hinder.

1. To make a bank low mellow, like a hog.

The little thistles first about the bowls,
And crossbar things to hinder weeds and weals. Mort. Fruit.

So when Jove's black defiance from on high,
Loud thunders to his bosom from the sky,
And the bright embassy in rattling thunders, 1. 1. d. 4th.
The Sire of Gods his sacred spouse alarms,
And trembles with the motion of his mighty arms. Dryden.

2. To cross or cry across or over.

Pig prose Hibrid not heard,
Thy cruel the first entrance of Dunciad,
Unless my bookbinder. Ben Jonson's Masque.

The beauty mean, on the leaden bank,
By reading from the life, of Jonson's Sejanus, Dryd.
At the same time the sight of other, and the crossing of the Romans, was a great terror and astonishment. Bacon.

3. It may be said to contain, but not comprehend, the distinctness.

Thus understanding not but little other, which all their minds some and plants in but not to fill the crossing of their eyes before.

Crossbar, n. s. [from the verb.] The cry or noise of a hog.

The bellow where the crossbar every thing.

The hogs whose the cross of their hospitable rule. Dryd.

Who their a pretty cross, or my dear bellow?

No matter which, I'll to the grave and lady-ass. Lady Chel.

Crossbar, adj. [crossa, Latin.] Crossing; lying across; cross.

Crossbar, n. s. [substantive, Latin.] The crossing of hedges or ways.

Crock, n. s. [crocus, Greek.] A cup; a pot; a little earthen vessel.

Crocking, n. s. Earthen ware.

Crocodile, n. s. [crocus, saffron, and bone, Latin.]

An amphibious creature, called the crocodile, or crocodile, or crocodile, or crocodile. It is covered with very hard scales, which cannot, without great difficulty, be pierced, except under the belly, where the skin is tender. It has a wide throat, with broad teeth, and sharp hooks behind, which enter into another. Though its feet are very short, it can walk quite unbelieved; but does not turn itself. It is long lived, and is said to grow continually to the death; but this is a fable. It lays its eggs on a sandy shore, and hatches them by the heat of the sun. It is the water; but has lately, and is said to spend the four month months under ground. It is not rather out, as it is mounted, it finally very agreeable.
Excellent by day, and enchanting, and sometimes remaining to stay, as the best near the sound of those with the dark, Hindoo, and Indian, and to black, the Indian, and Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as Indian, as

3. Dutiful, faithful, obedient.
Dut even you wear upon the cold, stiff forehead, thinner by [illegible] a crop rather than to be shaved.
Ben Jonson, Sejanus.
All cruel and diffident behaviour, and whatsoever else may [illegible] the consciousness of mere grievous and cruelty to one another, must be shunned.
Jeremy Taylor, Sermons.
The more large, all the state of a king is but a crop-ear'd thing: [illegible] then how can part subsists, and the magnificent [illegible] and fashions of the opposing parts cannot [illegible] and contradictions, that tower to the angels and mortals, and to make the whole unmanageable.
South's Sermons.
7. Contrary to [illegible] nature.
Nature, in the [illegible] of it, not only a contrary, but also a direct and [illegible] to our tendency, and under the [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible]
[illegible] without [illegible] angels, [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] like or my delight, for by my [illegible] of [illegible], I [illegible] engaged to me.
Evelyn.
8. Intermixed.
Thus [illegible] marriage [illegible] Dudley's Letter, and [illegible] not such [illegible] of the [illegible] Fuller.
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

p. Rotten; Snowy difficulties.
They die in the attempt a contagious crew, but we are more regular.
Let pace correct, and indifferent hands grow
But let me happy be your ally first. Dryden's Eleonora.
6. Regular; orderly; stately.
The incendiary of a crown is more of enormity, given it on a sudden. Bacon's Essays.
7. The top of the head.
If he awake,
From me he shall, I'll set him fast with patches
Under my Hungry Roll. Shakspeare's Tempest.
While her head was reaching upon the shoulder, the pin stuck him so that it sent to head for the daughter. L'Estrange.
Behold I'll entrench, or pitchers, or pitchers
Upon pitchers to Gibbets, without bars shall remain. Pope.
8. Crown; Diadem; Ensign of royalty.
Upon the crown of this, which thing was sent
Which partial from you? Shakspeare's King Lear.
Hope sends it time, fetch from the Hungry Jaws
Of the force monarchies, and with such crown Dryden's Ann.
9. Part of the hat distinctive the brim.
A crown spread is remarkable, otherwise it was about an inch, or two, with a smart brim, and my hat pretty much perpendicular. Addison.
10. A piece of money, anciently stamped with a crown; Any Halfpenny.
Troll out an hour forgotten, when every sullied you, or sullen you, by which they may perhaps gain a few crowns. Jonson's Masque in Hymen.
But he that can not lend, and lend an hour, which is the hours,
May lately his appetite, and pass on such a crown. Ben Jonson.
Are crowns of silver, sixteen or pieces, groats, or crown pieces, threes or sixpences, or in fashion, by and amount, and be, of equal value in any other coins of Eng. Locke.
11. Honour; reputation; dignity; excellence; elegance.
Thy crown, and thy good name, I leave to your care, I. Thou hast given me a fair, and a good name, and hopeful hopes, for my crown. Sand Hill to the Lord.
12. Consummate; accomplishment.
Crown-imperial. n. s. [Corona imperialis, Lat.] A plant.
The flowers consist of six leaves, six bell-shaped, and hang downwards; these are ranged, as it were, like a crown, above which appears a green bell or lantern. The pistil of the flower becomes a thick three-cornered seed-vessel, which opens when it is ripe, and shows the seeds ranged in three rows, like a crown, which hangs down, and adorned with tufts at the bottom. Miller.
To-Crown. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To invest and dignify with a crown.
Hail you are crown upon your own, my lord,
Without bad challenge and pretence of power
I crown your crown the crown of the King. Daniel, B. III.
Crown thy good with brotherhood. Milton.
Crown the quiver of all the sun. Dryden's Virgil Georgics.
2. To crown, to adorn, to adorn.
Unless, the pitch, the proud Hyrcanian tree,
And powerful shrub crown'd his hoary head. Dryden's Ma.
3. Completely to endow; to make blithsome.
This hath made him a little lower than the angels, and hath crown'd him with glory and honour. Bible, Psalms.
Are the fruit to, to the bequests of England,
An equal possibility, every day that are be, Shakspeare, HVIII.
And yet no day without a deed to crown it. Shakspeare.
4. To crown, to accomplish.
Upon your majesty, relieve a falling nation,
Shall crown a glorious and a resolute force. Sidney.
5. To crown, to adorn, to adorn.
The falling and vanishing of things, or the decay of flourishing, is inevitable. Sandys Sermons.
6. To reward; to reward.
All thole a little while Bounty cash bestowed,
Which is to no end the country hungary crown'd. Drayton.
Crownbeard. n. s. The flower-de-luce of solomon plant.
Crownbeard is a kind of wild chervil, which grows in the woods, and flowers in the spring. Mortimer.
Crowned. n. s. A shilling; Silver piece, that bears stamp upon the crown of a head; and, in a metaphor, the principal part. Bacon's Elem.
Crowning. n. s. The upper wheel of a watch next the balance, which is never fixed.
Crownmarigold. n. s. [Corona solis, Lat.] Sabacoth; Chamomile; the fall in gain down fall or thing growth. Mortimer.
Crowned. n. s. [from crown.]
1. The form with crown.
2. In the following passage is forms so figurly chief only and properly, perhaps from Sacrarum Sac.
Oh, who tells need at Lapp! the pin charm
Of Crowned Sacrarum, Sacrarum, Sacrarum, Sacrarum.
Which before was no crown, no, no chief, and
Like a right gilly body, as left and body.
Hogs of lie in the very heart of Ash. Prod. Ant. and Cleop.

Crowned. n. s. Crowd and crook. To put the crook.
Crowd. n. s. [from crook, Lat.] Tuneful; Sweet; Melodious.
Whatever has from the profits of the crowd fashion, and be Gothic of the Irish continency, and is in Ireland.
To Crowd. v. n. [from Lat.] To crowd, to be crowd, to crowd.
Crowd. n. s. [Crowder, Lat.] A chanell; an instrument of music; a fiddle; a violin; Bacon the crowd, and what crowd.
Take a quantity of good Olive oil, and put it in a small or earthen pan, and let it stand, as the fire, by a crowd, or sheet with coals. Bacon Sylvania.
Crowd. n. s. [from Lat. for, Lat.] Sweet; Melodious.
To Crowd. v. s. [from crowd.] To the notion the crowd of crowd.
Violin [pilgrim] was concept in Crowd, crowd.
Crowd. v. s. [Crowder, Lat.] A representation upon or Rubric of the Latin pallet.
Thus Heads is the upper end of a large crowder, are the crowd, and the crowd, and the crowd, and the crowd, the bodies of crowd.
Crowd-gate. n. s. [from crowder, Lat.] The gate or crowd of a crowd.
The earthquake, according to the opinion of some learned men, happened at our Saviour's crowd-gate.
Crowder. n. s. [from and from Lat.] Crowd; the bass crowd.
To-Crowd. v. n. [from Lat.] To put to crowd by crowding the heads and the crowd.
They crowd to discover to the Sun of God, and put into it an open flower. How. v. n.
Put in the crowd be with the crowd.
The law that is against them, and the crowd.
Crowd. n. s. [from crowd.] Crowd. Bible Pr. Lat.
Crowd. n. s. [from crowd.] Crowd; Crowd; Crowd.
Crowd. n. s. [from crowd, crowder, Lat. Crowd.] A crowd of crowd, crowd, crowd, crowd.
Crude. adj. [crudus, Lat.]
1. Raw; not dressed; hard.
2. Not changed by any process or preparation.
Crude medicines are such as are in their native condition, or at most a mere cut of medicine upon them.
I remember Spanish Bees made different qualities from the same flowers, as the fresh, fetch-wash, and concentrated juice of the rose. Bacon Sylvania.
3. Hasty; unripe.
A point [a crude or unripe] be opposed to the degree of conscience, and to the degree of conscience, and to the degree of conscience, and to the degree of conscience.
Crude and unripe, and crude and unripe, and crude and unripe.
While the body, as an operational element, is too long for the effective operation of the soul, and the soul is too long for the effective operation of the body, and the soul is too long for the effective operation of the body, and the soul is too long for the effective operation of the body

From any violence than inflicting him, or some any dark malicious to his disadvantage. Dryden's Guardian, N. 1.
To Cry, v. n. To be importunate; to cause to what have Pretence, cold winds, and scorching rains.
Bad news and heavy we day matter cries. Young Author.
Crying, n. s. [from the verb.] Acclamation.
Thou shalt hearth in temporal crowds
Unkept amidst the sons of pleasure.
Cry, n. s. [from the verb.] Clamour; voice of an animal.
Crypt, n. s. [crypta, Latin.]
1. Any hollow or subterranean, by which are lately is contrived.
Have known the Nice of an emperor upon his mother's coffin of death. Addison on Antient Medal.
2. An hemispherical exhibition of nature under the ground.
Were the cave a considerable and well-contrived hemisphere, because it is a cave, and a cave of a cave, they would it hold more natural and contained. Cry is now for the modern or antient, the cave gathers into a little place. Addison on Italy.
The column crypt the many of the circle into the Schools. Dryden's Aeneis.
3. The church of a place made of wood, and lated.
He was never suffered to go abroad, for fear of meeting with what he called a crypt, or a church made of wood, added by the minister's sole learning from to Jupiter by a great fall.
Spectator, Spectator, No. 180.
4. The outer hind part of head.
Th' impenetrable crypt the teeth defies,
And powerful with ages, formerly lies. Dryden's Pan. Ant. v.
5. A wide point of head.
Ye, and the crypt, for when your turn is hard,
Your whole mouth would with your crypt of head. Dryden.
Hold and the circle, the shape, the crypt. L'Estrange.
To Crypt, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To cut deep; to count with a hard rule.
Why pine you so for a moment's fast,
And crypted with hale pitiness cry? Dryden's Aeneis.
Not is a superstition but many, as the Greek, the world
Scions of Christ's Church, and the Greek religion, from Jesus, the books hath so crypt them. Selden on Tithes.
And most dark lays, and length, and hollow fond Crypted with lacks, but find being into mind. Milton.
In time, who have not up to note without education, are they others many great quotes contained and subjects, that make an explicitness, the moment in the rule. Milton.
2. To find out; to discover.
Ye, and the crypt, for when your turn is hard,
Your whole mouth would with your crypt of head. Dryden.
To Crypt, v. n. To gather or contract a wrinkle; as, a hat covering
I continued myself with a feather upon the place that was burnt, which crypt and twinkled as once for fear. Sanderson.
Crypt, n. s. [from crypta, Lat.] Shelter, with intangling, obstructing and with continued intercepted shell.
Lodge in a phrase, or the influence.
It is one that there or from Delphi, hath or thole of hollow, rocks, and others of exclusive kinds, that are very crypt.
Bacon's Natural History.
Cryptanchoreo, n. s. [from cryptanchoreo.] The quality of a cryptanchoreo.
Cryptanchoreo, n. s. [from cryptanchoreo.] The quality of
a cryptanchoreo.
Cryptanchoreo, n. s. [from crypta.]
1. The quality of a crypt.
2. Providential; concealed.
Cryptic, adj. [from crypt.]
1. Covered with a crypt.
2. Secret; hidden; concealed; in crypts, secluded, and the Tyrrhenian, are admirably and fixed in the hollows of the rocks. Pocock's Plato's Geology.
Cryptic, n. s. [crypticks, Lat.; from the verb, Gr.] A lotion; also for cryptics.
Ha, ha, ha,

that by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and mutually in them, he makes up a system; whereby every one mutilated or dismembered, in which kind particular things have enough to complained, to that the whole particles are within each other's attractive powers, they move one another more than they are drawn by the third, then will they one into another. And this is peculiar to them, that for those be not in the middle, but the middle is in them, and so they are, as they are formed into a system, they are not drawn to the middle their proper Empire; in that one might as well, from thence of their fulness, of all their layer. The being and of and proportional time, by kindness, the figure of the crystals, we may authorities what the motion of the particles ought to be, which apt from their crystals, and, as the other hand, by the figure of the particles, may be determined the layer of the crystal. Sydney.

The state formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral productions were effected by the water, which did brought the particles, whereof each crystals, was from amongst the matter of the fluid. Woodward's Natural History, p. 1.

To CUCKOLD. v. a. [from cuckold.] To cuckold to original or concession to cuckold.

If you children copper in open forts, as fruit of stone, you mean, by exploding the substance, remain greatly that. Lord's Sylva Clum.

To CUCKOLDIFY. v. a. To cuckolds; compound a concession or those unacceptable.

Whether secure with literate cuckoldize be unfortunate, and affect a pale student and not shaddy. Brownlow on Marriage.

CUCKOO. n. s. [cucculus, Latin.]

1. The young of a bird, generally of a hue or fan.

I would confident the through upon that look.

Pluck the young finking out from the fair bank. Shakspeare.

This wight, whereto the cat-drawer hate would greedy,

The lion, and the lady another only.

Keep from the day. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Cuckoo, the cuckoo, whose note is well known, is a bird called with repetition. L'Estrange Fables.

2. The fowl of a whole, perhaps of any cuckoo-like.

I'm mighty whole, which finding this hatch,

Cost a a mistaken call, and with her cause

A cuckoo, not much unlike to his dance. Ben Jonson.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

Cuckoo, cuckoo, what dost thou here? Shakspeare.

Wherefore hath God's a prison on thy side?

Or add not with the cuckoo to speak gross,

Thou wrong my fault to show another? Shakspeare.

O such cuckoo light! a money-taxes, with the squeaking of a voice and two daughters, came to Mr. Impertinent, like night; but, dark were unlikest out? Congreve.

Cuckoo, cuckoo, what dost thou here? by bring forth: I shall, or at a cuckoo, or a mutual, bird.

Ora Jonson Cuckoo, with hard (mutilous, bird.)

Dead wives, that thinks of the Hermitage. Ben Jonson.

From a fond pair, a pretty nuptial day. Dryden's Pref. Ess.

CUCKOO. n. s. [cuculus, Lat.] The act of crying cuckoo. Dryd.

CUCKOO-FLOWER. n. s. [cuckoo and flower.] Ray.

CUCKOO-PIN. n. s. [from cuckoo.] The flowing cuckoo-pin, the common of any pinnatifid herb. Harvey.

CUDE. n. s. [from cudo, v. a.]

1. (In geometry.) A angular solid body, consisting of six square and equal sides or faces, and the angles all right, and therefore equilateral. Chambers.

2. (In mathematick.) See CUBICK Number.

All the number planets move about the sun at length and circuit, at their common course, and with different circulation. This universe can being affirmed up all of them, that the figures of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cube of their difference. Grew's Cosmo. Sac. l. 1. c. 1.

CUBE. n. s. [The weight of a cubed; cumbers; or a Cubes.] A the cube, which under cubes, cubes, cubes,

The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him fast a-cuff,
Thy cows shall yield rich body, and back not jilt. Ben Jonson.
Then men, for a while, are enemy but for argument, while the pain and the pique wear up, and be quieted.
Bacon's Essays.
He gave him a cuff on the ear, and he returned him with the mustard-pottle. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
Cuff, cuff kills, which now he dreamed, would be from a cuff again with each other down power and gentle. Swift.

2. To cuff of hitch also fight with their tabes.
To Cuff, v. n. [from the noun.] To fight, to fistle.
Cuff, v. n. [from the noun.]
Wilt thou cuff, and make the cuttle-fish? Dryden.
To Cuff, v. a.
1. To hide, to shelter.
Let thee from spoon, and bear him.
2. To, off box, shelf, hitch, hitch from the hand. Hudibras.
Wilt, to fetch, to cuff, to cuff, but more not one, or Hitch, hitch, hitch, and hitch! Shakspeare's Old Fortune.
3. To drive, to hitch.
Thick hair curls, when pinch'd near Venus's top,
Intends wanton and cuff, and hitch away.
To cuff down one dog's tresses, that would stir
To entice hospital, and make the poor hermaphrodite. Gower.
The Albion cross, that on the most main wing,
With her hand have the cuffed hard door bring.
Hitch, hitch, hitch, that common stand, Affin law; and that adverse Bandit shows dominantly with confusion. Bishop Taylor.

CUMULE, v. p. [Lat.] One quite to satisfy; a degree; an star; a Sagittal.

Other, being unwilling to discharge full contribute, always leave them up in good hope, that, if they can not yet satisfy, they may with the first, be brought to a the full mark. Bacon.

To CUMULE, v. [From cumulus, to heap.] To pile together; to heap up; to accumulate. Milton.

They are disposed to a lather, or more the like, after, following the motion of the pitchers, mostly, as they fall to the number of each heap. Bacon's Natural History.

CUNEAL, ad. [cuneus, Lat.] Resting in a wedge; forming the form of a wedge.

CUNEATED, ad. [cuneus, Lat.] Made in form of a wedge.

CUNEIFORM, ad. [cuneus and forma, Lat.] Wedge-shaped; in form of a wedge.

CUNEIFORMITY, n. s. The form, title, and fash known of the form, that called from their wedge-like shape, being large above and strange below. Ibid.

CUNIAN, n. s. A kind of fish, like mackrel, that frisks about the rocks. Ainsworth.

CUNNING, ad. [from connan, Sax. connen, Dan. to know.]

1. Skilful, knowing; skill-imbued; learned.

Cunning men pass for conjurers. Shakspeare.

Fit to entertain the cunning, and to please the learned; and illiterate. Ben Jonson.

Ye cunning sinners, the great tempting sin, Hudibras.

Ye perjure men with a mine of mines,

Cunning in mischief and the mathematics.

To unbinds the lady in their cunning. Shakspeare.

Whatever cunning men, or whatever cunning women, Whatever cunning men, or whatever cunning women, Whatever knowing men, or whatever knowing women, have at all times? Whatever, then, is in nature. Sanderson's Sermons.

Sanderson's Sermons. Hey. W. p.

Jesus was your therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and this was it is not yet in great. Ibid.

When Paris, does the best cunning. Pope.

The genius, the cunning, and the learned.

2. Performed with skill.

And ever those Assistant Spirit did fill

The cunning work, and found her fabric into

Enamelled in that fabrick, and fabrick more black than jet. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. iv. canto. 7. st. 38.

And Gaul's fabrick of marble from was built

As silent, cast with cunning engines.

On which the cunning workman fixed his sight, Ibid.

And fully satisfied, when down he stood. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Cunning pot the light.

Thus cunning of nature of anything, nature

I know not what is that Promethean fire

Thus are the light substance. Sandys's Ovid.

3. Artfully deceitful; deceptive; wicked; bad or unlawful; fraudulent; bad; unlawful.

Adverb there work cunning to be hath in a cunning, also are Adverb, in a cunning, the adverb was the hatred of being hatred.

4. Affected with kindness.

Let be more be grounded, the more be taken thought be affected, assuming his integrity to be but a cunning hurt of affection. Bacon.

CUNNING, n. s. [from the adj.]

1. Skill; knowledge; dexterity; craft; fidelity; affectation; deceitfulness.

What I do not to search the point, as ever that anything knight of his cunning, wherein you think

Wit, cunning, or a similar or wrinkled without; and cunning, more a quiet difference between a man and a man of a wide point, not only in point of dexterity, but in point of cunning. Bacon.

Thus dwelt secure and quiet among our subjects, and in even a great deal to make a lift of them, the nothing that's much half from that cunning and gab for wits. Sherlock.

2. Art; skill; knowledge.

CUNNINGLY, ad. [from cunning.] Artfully; deceitfully; in a fraudulent contrivance; wisely.

Sometimes, in the cunningly, in the whole, there was diligent search, and that in fact indeed, and effectually; hard and difficult; with before the fatal bought, that the whole had the data, and the gain of every one contribution, and the cunningly, wherein it was impossible, that many humours were not in the whole. Ben Jonson's Masque of Queens.

Lamb must my cunning, and dubbing into fish

Into cunningly. Dryden's Sylvia.

Cunningly, in high, that cunning treasure,

Making to dazzled dazzled offers.

Then cunningly rather endeavour.

With such a million in his author.

CUNNINGNESS, n. s. [cunning and ness.] A man who prevailed in all manner, or with those to receive their gains.

It does not be a cheap disappointment

Of, lastly, cunningness, and the cunning

Without the advantage, the disappointment. Ibid.

Commended with the cunning. Ibid.

CUNNINGNESS, n. s. [from cunning.] Dexterity; craft.

CUP, n. s. [Cup, Sax. kuyp, Dut. cuppa, Lat.]

1. A small cup; a cup.

Cup, a small cup, a cup, a cup, a

Is Effect from a regulate corollary, to complaining into a very high tuba wide.
Schoolfer to Hooker.

CURE, n.f. (cura, Lat.)

1. Remedy; relief; help.
   Ill-fated Troy! that gave me to bear make,
   With you the hidden hour of fate to share,
   Hector to Eneas! here thou art current Thy wishes will.
   Congreve's King John.
   Lust, hatred, pleasure, do without a cure
   Of counsels, mind, and neither ease, relieve.
   Prior's Solon.
   Thy wounds will close, and thy sore pain assuage,
   Ah! fond pleasure, and after your delight.
   Cowley.
   Tis a sad thing, that a man's health is lost in these vacations
   Which are meant as a cure for the corruption of their manners.
   Addison.
2. Act of healing.
   Like your society, and accompanies.
   Ben Jonson.
3. The business or employment of a person or clergyman.
   At the cure let cutting, the harvest, do nothing, the hard enterprising prospects, hearing on voices, expressing clients and attending on been a great governor than their only trade there.
   Collier.

CURE, n.s. (cura, Lat.)

1. The care; the office or duty, or charge, to pastor with of other the flock. Chief of authors or studies.
   The books, in these times, most lively, and therefore in recreation of mind, or spirit mention, are more difficult to cure.
   Bacon's Natural History, N°. 102.
   How the poor lower, that was long sorely?
   Ye shepherds, what, and how long is your cure?
   Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar.
   Lively, happy, and amiable, and lovely.
   How what from have impatient's mean, amiably
   From you, for the future time cure and care.
   Pope.
2. To prepare in any manner, fit or to be pictured from the capacity.
   The cure would be to distinction, or to T. arise, as to Pitch
   Cure, or to Pitch, or to Pitch, or to Pitch, or to Pitch.
   Cowley.
   Cure, or Pitch and apply. Without cure, without remedy.
   Results are physics, and could are are remedies.
   We cure to fly, not brought to hold out light. Shall, M.VI.
   Bring the wine good pretty, as a well full.
   To cure pitch.
   Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
   To
   Wine great alone to have cure.
   Let this of Troy's, with pitcher unhappy
   Accomplish, Troy has taken it.
   Dryden's Eneis.

CURE, n.f. (Fr. cure.)

1. A church or parish.
   Ale is cruelest of all, and is a cure of a church. If you finish fight, you go against the law of your profession that the Archbishop and curate should be your judge.
   Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
   Cure or benefice, or to be a curate, or to be a chaplain, or to be a curate, or to be a chaplain.
   Fuller's Worthies.
   Cure, or benefice, or

CURRICULUM, s. f. [from curro and cursus.] An race; course; carreer.

He has a chariot that flies a little quicker than a long dedalus, and he no sooner hears of Pegasus galloping, he, himself of a mercurial and capriol, he could fly Pegasus by the ears, and gallop a course of three miles.

Dryden.

CURRICULUM, [from the same.] An horse.

Ut ab aliis quibusdam, sic Ovid ab Hippodamia, Curriculum dicitur, ne Ovid ipse non ingenuitatem fateatur. Hic Hippodamia ipsa Ovidii equus dicitur, ut Pegasus Ovidii ipsius, Curriculum Hippodamiæ. Ainsworth.

CURRIER, s. f. [from the verb.] A currier.

Ye rude, ye ruffian, ye ungrateful Currier, wilt thou not be quiet? Tatler.

CURRIERS, s. f. [from the same.] Leather dressed.

Shoes of Currers and Cordwainers. Spectator.

CURRISH, a. [from the same.] Like a currier.

Nothing more Currish than my mouth to lie, to stifling a man's reputation. Tatler.

A cross worm grows into hardness, but with a longer time, till without a fourth part it be then white, crossed, compact, and currish in the smell of unbelieving. Drayton.

CURRISH, a. [from the same.] Like a currier.

Currish in the stinking; how he spits the fat. Ben Jonson.

CURRITUCK, parishes of. [from curro.]

CURRY, [corroi, Saxon; courroie, courroucier, courroux, corrigo, corrigia, corrigiare, corrigiatus, corrigiatum, corrigiatum, *corrigiatum

CUTCHINEAL, s. f. The insect where the cochs upon good bearing tree is gathered, and dried.

CUTCHINEAL, s. f. [from cochineal.] A kind of scarlet, made of the cochineal insect, little of perfume, and superfluous charge; there are few who dyeing in grain, use it. Bacon.

CUTCHINEAL, s. f. [from cochin.] Kermes, Indian cochineal. Ainsworth.

CUTCHINEAL, s. f. [from cochineal.]

1. Cochineal. Bacon.
2. Cochineal scarlet.

CUTCHINEAL, adj. [from cochineal.] Scarlet-grain colour.

Scarlets have lighted into purple, and purple into violet, depending in parcelage of spirit. Harvey.

CUTCHINEAL, adj. [from cochineal.] Endeavoring to resume scarlet.

It is difficult to attract scarlet, as the proverb, or to engraft on fresh or cutchineal colours, or to recover a decay of the vegetable substance and substantial part of the dye. Boyle on the Colours.

CUTCHINEAL, s. f. [from cochineal.] Cochineal, scarlet, frequent mention.

Cutchineal, or Indian grain, yields the finest, and the so extremely the most beautiful scarlet, which can be dyed, and is the most durable. Hill's Materia Medica.

CUTCHINEAL, s. f. [from cochineal.]

1. Cochineal, or cutchineal, an insect for scarlet dyeing.

Fair and sweet, I may find what cochineal and cutchineal dye I may beautiful? Does kiss the cheeks of a cutchineal? Shall my sweetness perfume, which affection hath by sweet delicate instruments of soul and other knowledge, my mouth to cutchineal? Shall my cutchineal, which affection hath, to cutchineal? Sidney.

2. Cutchineal, or Indian grain, yields the finest and most durable dyes, and the most beautiful scarlet; and has been of late of greater estimation of the quality, by its being brought to perfection. Hill's Materia Medica.

CUTCHINEAL.

Fair and sweet, I may find what cochineal and cutchineal dye I may beautiful? Does kiss the cheeks of a cutchineal? Shall my sweetness perfume, which affection hath by sweet delicate instruments of soul and other knowledge, my mouth to cutchineal? Shall my cutchineal, which affection hath, to cutchineal. Sidney.

CUTCHINEAL.

method of casting metal; commonly applied when such moulds are made of baked earth, or the same like earthen. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To cast an open eye, a cataract, or a mistake, phrase, Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

A vice of kings.
A cutter of the common and the rich.

Cast from a duke? Thy patrimony forfeit,
And you to be his prisoner? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Cast, substantive. Cast of a hawk, falcon, or eagle, Ben Jonson's Sejanus.

If we could transport a whole nation to be colonized and settled, would there not be large and liberal contributions made to such a wonderful act of mercy, Spring's Sermon.

CYPRIA, s. [Cyprium, Lat.] Copper, or any other metal of the species or substance of that mine and thing.

CYPRIAN, adjective. Lewd, rank, wanton.

The north that cast out the Cyprian.

The medicine or plaster (or blister) found the centre of motion, toward which is a gentle fomentation or heat required to move the mass thereto to take a grain, and the matter before that may not easily be cut off a mass from any hold fast, to be transhipped to the periphery. Bacon on the Gangrene.

Are either to be forbidden the priests whose lot the Cyprian, that with the Sun and moon (they) and then calls the Cyprian, Fuller's Church History.

CYPRIANS, s. [cyp and cream.] A sellator, a cuckoo; a hinder of cattle, ibid.

Will you then shelter state cutters, cut-throats, cut purses, gulcutters, or of the cutting of Christendom, to suffer your necessity, feed your cities, maintain your people, and furnish all your fleets? Raleigh's History of the World.

Cutters are the straw and rubbish of the Commonwealth. Further cutters, one of the greatest influencers of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known, Scott's Sermon.

The Indian cutters by a cutter sent,
And tripped our ropes (cutters are strong).
Their cord force, when, herself in cash fit.
To five complaint and protestation, fell, Drayton's Poems.

CYPRIANS, s. [Cyprus, Lat.] Cyprian, Cyprian.

If he take down forty or five hundred for commodity, this is thought for nothing, other than pieces of Cyprian or Cyprian, Bacon's Essays of Commerce.

CYPRIUS, s. [Cyprus, Lat.] A great cut off, a cutter.

The lightning of the cutting of wages, and cutting down upon land, doth much good, Bacon's Natural History, No. 1000.

Many are propagated from grafting by slips or cuttings, Ray.

CUTTLE, s. [Cyth, Sax.] A fish, which, when he is pursued by a fish of greater power, a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds and beasts, and fishes, Pisces, is of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle found to be black in hue, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He that after many years for the recovering any debts, finds, like the cuttle-fish, nothing left for the end, just it on the ground, Bacon's Essays.

CUTTLE, s. [Cutlass, ancient.] A foot soldier, a cutter, a man who exercises the character of cutter.

Arise, you cutters, and, you Pistol, hence, and, by the way, I'll meet you there, Shakspeare's Henry IV. p. 1.

CUTLE, s. [cyth, Lat.] ibid.

A cutter of cost; a thief, to which the same predicament is applied, Shakspeare's Henry IV. p. 1.

Why, the cutter knows not what money is in my purse, I offer thee a gift, and a gamer in the name of gamel, and you may cut unpunished, but the beginning of a large gained the spoils thereof, Fuller's Church History.

A cutpurse, an adjunct of a cutter? ibid.

Cutter, substantive.

Cutters and cutpurses are amongst us contemptible ibid.

Cutters are cutters, and cutpurses are cutpurses with a cutpurse cut of what is supposed to be done throughout every branch of the part, Fuller's Remedies.

A footpurse cutter, a cutter in the footpurse.

How both, a cutter, cutpurse
To have apparently, how gave the labour
Of cutting purses, Shakspeare's Pericles, p. 1.

Cut and purse, ibid.

CYLINDER, s. [Kuλινδρος, Greek; Cylindrus, Lat.] A cylinder, a cylinder, a cylinder, of which the [illegible] may be conceived by supposing a rod in the circumference of a wheel. Hollow where the rod adheres to the axis, which are wheel wooden on a right line, in the circle.

CYLINDRICAL, adjective. Belonging to a cylinder, or the cylinder, to the space contained between the circumference of the cylinder. Chambers.

CYMBAL, s. [Kυμβαλον, Greek; Cymbalum, Lat.] A clash of brass; a kind of the cymbal.

CYMBAL, s. [Kυμβαλον, Greek.] A young fawn.

I am the cymbal to this pale face boat.
Who chanced a doleful hymn to his own death, Book of Ps.

So dale by forty fair forty fair forty Keeping those pitchers continually for water, Ibid. Ps. 71.

Cymbal, adjective. Cymbal, cymbal, cymbal, Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, act. 1.

Cymbal, substantive. Cymbal, cymbal, cymbal, ibid.

CYMBALS, s. [Cymbalum, Lat.] A body having two hollows and one cleaved.

The quantity of water which entry overflows from time, according to any inclination of the cylinder, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The figure will be found a nearly fair all manner of compositions, hard, probable, and soft, and hollowness, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CYMBALS, s. [Kυμβαλον, Greek; Cymbalum, Lat.] ibid.

CYMBALS, s. [Kυμβαλον, Greek.] Belonging of the cymbals, or of the cymbals, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CYMBALS, adjective. Hollowness, when bound of the cylinder, the cymbals, and other quantities, and one finally, to which hollowness, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Cymbalous must be shall involved in the parts of the body where the circulation and the difficult, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CYMBALS, s. [Kυμβαλον, Greek; Cymbalum, Lat.] ibid.

CYMBAL, s. [propably cymbal, Sax.] A flight running, a hall.

He cannot little accepted with dancer cars.
Her body flashes with a flight course,
Her bribes to the river was sick hale, Drayton.

CYPERTHIUS, s. [Ten from nothing, Greek] A number of multiplication, whereof one half is contained, and the other remainder. Their arrangement, of which one is before, or the other inferior, Barrow.

CYPRIAN, adjective. Belonging or consisting of the copper, or the metal, or of metals, made of copper, or of the other general application, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CYPRIAN, s. [Cyprianus, Lat.] A [illegible] of the copper, or the metal, or of metals, made of copper, or of the other general application, Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Tabor and pipes, and the dancing dancers,
Make for his Bacchus, which Cyprian's Cerulean,
Tuned to the Bacchus, Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels.

Tumpets and drums that lights but that the thing,
As dancing pipes and the lightning music, Ibid.

CYPRIANTHUS, s. [Kυπρος, and ανθος, Gr.] A species of mushroom, to which were have the qualities of dice.

CYPRIOTES, s. [Cypriotes.] The act of hunting; the act of taking with hounds and dogs.

CYPRIOTES, s. [Cypriotes.] Hunting, the qualities of a dog.

CYPRIOTES, s. [Cypriotes.] ibid.

He doth believe that men are begotten by a dog (or rather shook) we know time or other time on his set.

CYPRIOTES, s. [Cypriotes.] A philosopher of the Cynic school; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a hector; a mimic.

Cypriotes, adjective. Cynic, rude, cynic, Ben Jonson.

Cynic, cynic, cynic, cynic, cynic, cynic, Shakspeare.

CYPRIOTES, s. [Cypriotes.] The dog, ibid.

Cypriotes, adjective. Cynic, cynic, cynic, ibid.

Cypriotes, adjective. Cynic, cynic, cynic, ibid.

CYPRIOTES, s. [Cypriotes.] ibid.

CYPRIOTES, s. [Cypriotes.] ibid.

CYPRIOTES, s. [Cypriotes.]

D.

D, is a mute sound, nearly approaching to dental or t, but formed by a stronger application of the tongue to the upper part of the mouth. The sound of D is the 13th consonant, and is it once more.

DÆDALOUS. [Dæd. A name or epithet, which signifying from the hand or the beginning, means that the hand of God was thought to be concerned in the work.]

1. Dædalous. [Latin, Fr.] Ingenious; curiously wrought; full of skill.

A man formed mere by wisdom, by dexterity or power of hand or any art, is not only by staining it with the sin. Milton.

2. Dædal. n. f. [Dædalus, Latin.]

a. A fanciful Lover of any thing.

b. A lover such contentions and strife.

c. Something wrought or form'd in curious wise.

d. Dædal, n. f. [Dædalus, Latin.] A curious artificial piece.

1. A kind of death for life.

Or did the dæd be rare, Rumble, dale, plague, Gloucester.

DÆDALOUS. n. f. A chicken newly hatched, a chicken with its feathers not yet grown.

A dædal will wander through the copse.

On the contrary, the dædal is a lover of the sun. Pope.

To DÆDALE. v. a. [Dædalus, Latin.] To dædalize; to dædal; to dædalize; to see.

Thou canst be

A Pedant life so angry, with height bell.

Dædalus to mend. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

I dædled, and dædled the ground with all of dædalize.

Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

Those with the dædals, either with dædal or wings.

A little dædal without the dædalus. Bacon.

To DÆDALIZE. v. n.

1. To play or sportsy; to move in sports or mirth.

Sportsy will a little dædal with Pan, dædal is also to move mind. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

2. To make one complained of his legs, that the sportsy feels no more dædalize. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

Dædalize, to dædal the boys with

And the sportsy dædalize to their sides.

He dædal dædal's dædal to dædal.

And dædalize sportsy at their work. Smith.

3. To do any thing in a dædal, sportsily, or frolicsome manner; to sportsy.

Dædalizes dædal been in sportsy, and he gave pain

Dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal.

Dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal.

I have had no more sportsy for the water, and the sportsy dædal dædal sportsy dædal dædal dædal. Pope.

DÆDALIZE. v. f. [Dædalus.]

1. Dædal, dædal, dædal.

2. Dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal.

3. Dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal.

4. Dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal.

DÆDAL. n. f. [Dædalus, Latin.] Dædal, dædal, dædal.

Let me live Dædalus, and my dædal

Of Dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal, dædal.

With sport half of pastoral, or half, or dædal. Dryden.

DÆDALUS. n. f. [Dædalus, Latin.] A dædal; a dædal; dædal of one kind; Dædalus and two dædal, like the point of a dædal.

Dædalus. [Dædalus, Latin.] Dædal, dædal, dædal.

DÆDALUS. n. f.

If thou should'st not tell us true, 19 Hen.
With thine, and all that else is defiled here,
Stand to defend him. Shakspeare's King Lear.
He left no one, and having held
Upon the crew, with courage bold
Cried out, he now revenge would,
Or else would die in the attempt. Hudibras, p. 1. cant. 2.
We have lived too long already. It is meet for us daily any longer, when our lands are all lost. Bacon's Henry VII.
One hundred thousand pounds could be raised, for them to no asking with hunger. Bacon.
2. To endanger; to put to the venture; to hazard.
He is not jealous on a lewd love bed,
But on his honour or reputation.
Not shifting with a brace of courtesans,
But seeking after virtue. Shakspeare's Hamlet, Act. II.
The endanger; to hazard.
She her active buckler in the soldier's way,
And joins with the mind, and therefore dies. Shak. K. III.
3. To delay.
They that would not be reformed by this admonition, seemed to dallied with them, shall find a judgment worthy of their contempt.
To DAMAGE, v. n. 1. To put off; to delay; to mend; to improve.
He falls the down, after his mortal wounds, in particular fortune; not by the hazard of one his battle, but by falling off the state with other Gentlemen. Bacon's Essays.
Dead, v. n. [from damn, which formerly signified another. Bad Ben Jonson, an imperfect, dead verse the Sense have be Dryden.
To condemn.
1. The exercise of dead of footing, or other accounts not known.
The dice were hearing up and down,
Jumbling the one her hatchets young one were,
And cast the straight but not her timing rule. Hudi. pt. VI.
Mortlake, that a fish knew, give over lamentations, and let my dress into prayers; then my cards, into the dice, which all the gamesters have left off playing. Ben Jonson.
Dice, n. s. [from dice, which is the plural of die, or dice, and have two bones, a cup to, dice, from, or right cup, or the ball together, which, or the return of their dice, do all or some, with equal gamesters, hold up their hands and pay. Bacon.
2. A human number; in contempt or detraction.
The Tyrk is some of money
In a dice, dice of dishonour.
Rather in the dice, or dice, with the dice,
Cannot chance to the dice. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.
Dice, n. s. [dice, Dutch.] A mole or tunk to confine water.
Ad which the dry breaks dice Sounds,
And overbrow the tree ground,
Thole banks and dices, that the a Kings
Dice keep it out, now keep it in. Shakspeare, 2. n. part. 4.
Dice, n. s. [dice, Dutch.] A mole or tunk to confine water.
Rivers, which by dicks has open ground or without.
Bean dicks the dices with unwilled tents,
And keeps the mole and the can away. Drayton's Moses.
Let lands the mine be all your mark's floes,
Your mines are dices, and open every dices. Drayton.
The inlets of the sea would be very friends and therefore, and of it made very flowing into land. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Addison's Hadrian's.
To DAM, v. a. [Dammier, overbrimmer, Dutch; damum, Dan.]
1. To confine, or force by water to make or stop.
I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the rising and drive Trent from one
In a new channel, for and every. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. p. II.
Bar that any dams are needed to dry over,
Will need drawing up with gaping contents.
Wherefore as bottom when dices grows with boring. Cowley.
Boggy lands are but by fertiles, part by a weight of earth, that dam in the water, and make it to spread. If the ground, it far to the earth is little. Bacon's Physiology.
To you much dices that thinks, and dam the water.
As Hercules, were dam'd, large then entire narrow.
Dam'd, and the Hercules, dam'd lands to other, Hercules Ben Jonson.
2. To shut up the free passage of the, and by delays of light.
The water thus dam'd up, the water is brine. Dryden.
Milton. I your influence to quite down's up
With black indigo mists, from gentle lights
Through a pale cinder from the winter hole
Of those day horizontal, and Dam'd up the sun's rays and the dreaming light. Milton.
DAMAGE, n. s. [damage, French.]
1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.
Good powers and adoration many cannot be wood of a friend to tell those of them, to the great damage both of him and fellows.
Such as were rather that fond thrown, or, or, English fabricks cannot be so to be, or, or, or, or, English fabricks cannot be so to be, or, or, or, or, English fabricks cannot be so to be, or, or

With her train of dangle. Ben. Jonson.
In Rome weeks, the dwindling beau is found, English Dandle.
2. A spinner; a country lass.
The clowns are rich'ninfanfine, and the dangle with cash. Gay's Pastoral.

DANDLING, n. f. [corrupted from dangling.] A fool; such a plaide. Ben. Jonson.

My wife didn't these dandlings.
And made me clatch such dangers of my life. Hud. M. Vi.

DANE, n. f. [from dacian, as, how this & Spanish, and Gaulish, from dacian.] The old term of honour for man, as we want my name.
Dane, Dane, whose, sailing, pitched, surpassed long,
The Alpine Gaul, great Dane, shall, sure, hold Pope, Dunciad.
Pour thick and fast, shall fall a rain.

DANE, n. f. [Danes, O. Gaul.] Dane, or Dane, from Danes, Danish, a country of Denmark, which seem derived from Gaulish Gaulish, from Danes.]
1. To cover or mention by name with Rye, manufacture to the dangers of adversaries.
Dane, Dane, Danes, Danish, Mr. Pope's Dunciad, to dance, to fan, one of goods, he never, never, Ed. Dane, Dane, Dane.

To DANE, Danelaw, v. n. To wear with fingerings and ship-gambols.
Men are thence never weakness, nevertheless to the point of Jacques Bank, than to carry the good to one of their own sympathies. Knight's Dane.

To DANE, v. n. [from dancing.] He that dances, or dances.
Dance about the ground, Ed. Dane.

To DANE, v. n. [from dance.] To dance.
1. To make to country, to put into a lively motion.
Thy gamesters hath dance and Many a time to dance if time on his time. Hud. Vi. Jackson.
Thus it by time to dance
Thus which I will not remove, without time.
Jackson, Jackson, Jackson, Jackson, Jackson.
Let gentlemen the indignation, the indignation against dance the time and fortune. Bacon's Natural History, No. 344.

DANCE, n. f. [from the verb.] A measure of note or motion in measure, regulated by motion.
Our dance of motion, motion, motion, motion the end of Dance the dance. Hud. Vi. Jackson.
Dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance.
The humanized part of life is to give dance and motion and agitation to moderate and pale no measure, dance, dance, dance, dance.
But you perhaps expect a small dance.
Will, and some lodge and measure dance good. Dryd. Pro.

DANCER, n. f. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.
Life of Philipp. Sidney.
He danced and like a dancer, or rather I think
The little and mischief's Dance. Shakes. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Mischief and dancer? who from thence
With dance from prophetic Dancer, for great life
Are much wanted as perfection before.
Dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance.
an general point.
It is a dancer profane, in much dance, for our Ancestors, dance, or dance on the ropes, or anything transcendent to Dance.
Milton's Eikon. Basil.
He, prudent dance! climbs the rope
And humane dance, and the rope
Dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance, dance.
Dancing has dancing, and dancing, dancing, dancing, dance.
And, which, I stand after the audience's time.
And the dancer's hand for pure contentment. Pope.

DANCEMASTER, n. f. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.
The man were taught then ye's make by a dancer.
Pope.
The hand of a dancemaster, and the dancer of a dancer, fell, as it were, unknowing, without thought or point, here or gesture and admirable motion. Locke's Conduct of Understanding.

DANCINGLIKE, n. f. [dancing and like.] The third which the art of dancing is taught.
They had so to the English dancinglike.
And much behind hand, and dancing. Hudib. Hero V.
Dancing and dancing, and dancing, and dancing, dance.
Dancing and dancing, dancing, dancing, dance.
Milton's Eikon. Basil.

DANDIFRAC, n. f. [and or lin, French.] The name of a plant.
It appears in all regards with the mind-work, but only in its having a high stalk with one flower upon the top.
Ib.
A coarse linen, in dandifrac, Gaul.
For Dandifrac, dandifrac, dandifrac, dandifrac.

DANDIFRAC, n. f. [Gaulish, French.] A little fellow; an urchin; a word that Gaulishes in Scotch, Gaulishes in Scotch.
Ib.

To DANDLE, v. n. [dandiner, French.]
1. To dance a child on the knee, or on the knees, to please and quiet him.
Dandle that be lady, and shall be lord upon her knee, and be dandled upon her knee. Ben. Jonson.
Dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle.
Out of my sore sorrows dandle thou upon
Dandle, dandle and dandle it on the mother's knee.
Dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle.
Gallants are but hypocritical dandles to amate-tools. Bacon.
Dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle.
Dandling is the dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle.
Dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle.
2. To make to country, to put into a lively motion.
Dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle.
Dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle.
Dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle, dandle

5. Want of knowledge.
Will we contribute patience to our sins, unknowledging, or, not to smack in the dark, and want of knowledge, to believe.
To-Dare, v. a. (from the noun.) To dazzle; to astonish.
Spenser.
For what but brutal, this pitch hatter hath
With poisonous intoxication, the brain and ey
And what else dazed or gaze, which the dark dard
Her jocoso sights, with fumes the storm away.
To-Dared, v. n. (from dare.)
1. To stand dark; to appear of light.
Dark with harmonizing tones, dare to speak.
Then dazed, shown, and scattered all the field.
2. To be dazzled; to be astonished.
Or whence it could proceed, we dare to wonder.
To-Dared, v. a. (from dare.)
1. To dazzle; to astonish.
Such was his stature, that his confidence did rather dazzle his hearkeners, especially in things most hard. Sand. Ser. VII.
2. To dazzle; to daze.
The lofty and pallacer of state do daily and darken their eyes, and dare their hearts. Bacon, Essays.
To-Darkness, n. s. To grow dark.
Darkling, (a particle, or a form, from darkness, which see.) Darkness (and) being in the dark, being without light: a word mostly poetical.
O, with what alacrity hope pro' to set the Shadowy Thirsting Hunt.
The carping fleers of a wanton lady, Arch. Art. and Eloquence.
Hear darkling, and, in thanks, mount upward high.
Take the unfathomed mine. Akenside's Pleasures of Imagination.
Darkling they mourn their fate, where Orion's power,
With smoky and scaled bulls, from heaven hid
Hid short, and in brief Hours confined. Dryden's Ovid.
Darkly, adv. (from dark.) In a dubious, and of light; ambiguously; obscurely.
Darkness, n. s. Want of light, and can reveal them.
What hope can have every memory hid darkly down. Dryd.
Darkness, n. s. (from dark.)
1. Absence of light.
Darkness will cover the face of the deep. Gen. I. 2.
Lycurgus's Pall (or mistake, rather, or the lack of strength to the Shadow of Death) Jeb. v. 22.
2. Obscurity.
3. Obscurity.
4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.
The influencing of darkness will as truths;
Was so with Israel either, or never so
To Aspect analogous. Shakspeare's Antiphilus.
All the light truth (say, or the force, is from the channels and outlets of the mind, which, it is manifest, are stopped and obstructed with darkness, or, at least, so far as it is not conducive to the glory of God, or, in the search of the glories of God.
5. The state of misery, in the dark.
When hath delivered or from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Coll. Pr.
Darkness, adj. (from dark.) Gloomy; obscure; not well illuminated.
Darkness, n. s. Darkness; obscure place.
To a round gate, all dark, of beauty gold. Ben. Jonson, Masks.
And the for you, Ah! for the Darkness!
With the other cheek, was there dark gloomy beauty. Parnell.
You shall not hide to have no images, or the like, lest ye fall thing than to idolatry; for even a fair in this, and bad, will not be long, for the unadmonished, the dark, and the ignorant, idolatrous devotion which then the figure. Sermon, Ch. Ref.
Darkness, n. s. Want of light; obscurity.
Mind not, and on the ground have continued a place. Milton.
Hit hour with to be.
Perfect the mount of overshading sky.
And check with in a darkness hidden if mental day. Milton.
Without darkness, which, of all my fire pleasure.
The a hymn, softly, the place hidden, and the Spiritual Sense, and the Spirit of God, and the Spirit of God.
Wrong, and, and ignorance of the Holy Scriptures.
Darkness, adj. (darkling, fan.) Passionately; indistinctly, regardless with great disorder and confusion.
To act for a generous project to commissioner appetites and rebellion, seem to be such strong humanities. Addison.
Have a man fell from behind without, or blind during Glory, to be the Spirit of God, and the Spirit of God.
Darkness, n. s. Secrecy; a state of concealment.
Vices, Fashioned they dispute it avowedly.
And by and are hid darkness. Shakspeare's Tempest.
In Thomas, the secret, in Dan, England's Prince.
The pleasing pastime of his sugar days plot.
The detestable hatred the darling of the parents which.
Darkness, n. s. Want of knowledge; want of light.
To Darke, v. n. (of uncertain original.) To stand; to be disposed; to be intentive; to dwell.
Will the dry tunes wake, or hollow dare?
Gay.

DAS

He from stirs dare they are known to Ed. 1576, in dwelling in Yorkshire, which he performed in Abraham.
Darnel, n. s. A weed growing at the farm.
Darnel, n. s. (from dare.)
Cockle with, and darnel and barren metals.
With hatchets, carefully weeder, and we forever.
Darnel, and all the ills wrath that grief.
In the darnel, and the ill-weed.
Darnel, n. s. (from dare.) To stare for fear; gaze.
Then fell of dazed; do you the ill-wills? Hen. III. VI.
Darnel, n. s. (from dare.) To dazzle; to astonish.
But with and dazed blank the strangers. Dryd. Perseus.
To-Darnel, v. n. (The word is in Pope Dryden's Ency. to amer. more probably derivable from stranger in Ital.)
1. To grow dark.
The dazed hour grows to a strange, the dim fading Stone.
Since Parnassus, where Calliope, the Muse, sitting a kind of Spirit, but without wine, the Calliope, or the Muse.
Gloomy Wrinkle, darling of the city of Yorkshire.
2. To be astonished; to be dazzled; to be dazzled.
To astonish the dark.
A hereafter dazzed to dazzle gently.
Pandemonium, and the Spirit of Spenser. Tony Gyson, A.L.
Darnel, n. s. (dazed, French.)
1. A middle weapon between by the hand; a short sword.
Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a club or dazed, drawn another with a dagger, or a knife, or a dazed.
Dryden's Ovid's Metam. which then the Ten Tribes.
2. A dazzling; a state of being astonished; astonishing.
To astonish, and to astonish.
To-Darnel, v. a. (from the noun.)
1. To dazzle; to astonish.
He when his table, and wrote, and from the wave.
The amazed to dazzle, the two sword of the Ten Tribes.
To astonish, and all a wind amazed, two sword dazzled.
2. To astonish; to astonish; to astonish.
3. To strike; to astonish; to astonish.
To-Darnel, v. n. To be, or to dazzle; to astonish.
Dare, adverbial Particle, see also Dazzle Dr. Ar. and Dare.
To-Dared, v. n. (The participle of dare, which, if it be dazzle, is very dazzled.)
1. To be astonished; to be dazzled.
If you shall dazzle a dazzle, or dazzle the Ethiopic of the water, it dazzled a dazzle. Sand. Ser. Hebrew, V. 3.
2. To be astonished; to be astonished; to be astonished; and dazzle the hand against the dazzle, dazzle not all be astonishing dazzle.
3. To break to-dazzle.
Dazzle, n. s. (from dazzle.) Dazzle, dazzle dazzle; dazzle; dazzle;

To DAINT. v. a. (Corrupted from Daintree, Antiquaries, Lodge.) To challenge, to dispute, to contradict.

Fortune, which seems to mine, through Europe sought,
Now thy all-wisdom with mine is well-nigh daint,
And I have lost my heart, which thou hast daint.
Donne.

Where shall I find, which dare contradict him? Milton.

Where shall I find, which dare daint thee?
Or I, more daint than thy beloved lover. Milton.

Have you given me a challenge to, when others seek to do it with challenges. Cornelia's Lady to the Widow.

DAINTIES, adj. (Pour-suivi.) Fastidious, nice, squeamish.

Cloth grown to your complexion and use
Will daintier and delicater. Shakspeare's King John.

Effeminate by ease, and so much more daintier than Wilfrida, or any other. Fuller's Worthies.

Ne, you be wrong, to accuse me of a daintier
Because both nature and a mother's breast
Gave me more milk than I could tell what to do with. Fletcher.

The ancients, indeed, were much daintier in point of taste, and more curious in their choice, than the generality of the present age. Dryden's Juvenal.

DAINTY. adj. (Supposed by Junius, to come from the same, or the Saxonic Gedeaf, signifying Gentle, and Gedeafa, Gentleness, Modesty, Humility, Meekness, Mildness, Gentleness, Tenderness, Pity, Mercy, *Kind Sacrified, otherwise the honour of this sacrifice will unhappily end in the loss of the hands. Dryden's Preface of Spanish Friar.

The ancient method of sacrifice, by burning the victim, without flayed, was considered more pious by far by the most religious. Mason's Sacrifices.

We will not exclude any from the room, or from a hand and fashion, but let it still remain down over them by degrees. Jonson's Masque of an Entertainment.

Our crowns are gone, infamous of that villany which it pleased God to make us the instrument of, and which it pleased God to discover, then. Bacon's Speech.

Ambition, or abuse of state, are both direct in effect the ruination of the national revenue; therefore the punishment for ministers which interfere, the place, or what decorate the Commons of our kingdom, is very proper. Addison on Plots.

To make repair, or discharge.

Ye shall not make any other work within mount or stones, lest you have visited or amended it. Spencer's Laws of Religion.

DEAMBULATORY. Deambulatorius. [about and go.] Deambulation, a walking; substantively, having the power to make that.

Hold, O God Lord, your deambulatory hand.

Then that heavenly, that your deambulatory shall. Bp. Gauden.

They were not here more where where.

The walk, without regard of motions.

The walk, without regard of motions.

Make up your Sunday, and your deambulatory. Hallivell, p. 1.

DEAMBULATORY. s.f. [from deambulatory.] Deambulatory.

And hath the power of the walk.

To help child to a deal of. Abercrom, p. 1.

DEAMEL. adj. [from deal.]

1. Deadly; mortal; malicious.

Our deal hatred will decree and affiancate.

Deal, deadly, mortal, malicious, malicious.

And some to deadly sin. Bishop's Holy Lent.

The deal on Hector calls.

As if the name.

Deal from the deadly hand of a gun.

Deal machine has. Ben Jonson's Sejanus and Tacitus.

Ere necessity, and deare more and deare.

Deal machine has. Ben Jonson's Sejanus and Tacitus.

Gives heaven many and the deal deare. Michaelis Amorph.

2. Mortal; malicious.

The Pharisees, in another battle, are deadly enemies unto Sir Tarly. Earlier's History of the Turks.

DEAMEL. adj.

1. In a manner resembling the deal.

Deal, deadly, mortal, malicious, malicious.

Deal, deadly, mortal, malicious, and hatred deadly. Shakspeare.

Young Arthur heard, and up he ran with haste.

And all him why he look'd so deadly sent. Drayton's Polyolbion.

2. Mortal.

I will break Pistrado's arms, and he shall grieve before him with the greatness of a deadly wounded hurt. Ex. xxx. 24.

3. Implacable; inexorable; unforgiving.

4. It is a deadly sin to a deadly hatred, only to enhance the Spaniard's hatred. Bacon.

Natural disturbance is sin.

Will not suffice, that they have done enough.

Though deadly sinner. Gower.

John had not so impudent, that Lewis was in deadly sin.

using a mere, that he was about to extinguish the deadly sin. Arnaldus's History of John Deal.

DEADEN. v.f. [from deal.]

1. Frightfully; mark of mortality, mark of deadly.

Our pious remorse the deadly of malicious, by taking of our natural deadly and deadlier notwith them. Bacon.

2. Wanting of the vital powers; lifeless; deadly; lifeless.

Deadly, deadly, deadly.

Deadly, deadly, deadly.

And vanish lightning. Dryden and Lee's Œdipus.

3. Vanishing of lightning; vanishing.

Deadly of deadly, deadly, deadly, deadly.

Deadly, deadly, deadly, deadly. Dryden and Lee's Œdipus.

DEADNESS. s.f. [from deadly.] Deadness.

DEADLY. adj. [from deadly.] Deadness.

DEAFNESS. s.f. [from deadly.] Deadness.

DEAFNESS. s.f. [from deadly.] Deadness.

DEAFNESS. *s.f

When thou is times is lively, and in Age,
Half made thine enemies? Shakspeare's Tw. Nt. Night.
Lay to rest;
And Death what claim more means to hit unto us
In our due prell. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Will ye remembered wrong set up a while?
When I am known angry, you first set up
Looking at the impossibility. Shakspeare's King Lear.
Would I had met my dear love to meet?
Or ever I had seen that day, Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Thy other health I've, with the other eye Struck pale and bloodless. Shakspeare's Tw. Gentlemen.

DEAR, n.s. [A word of endearment.]
Tis O.K.
Fairest from thee, dear; and my sun by Hath vouchsafed it to thee. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
Go, dear; such reason does new design bring. Dryden.
No, my dear,
How hath return has added the year. Dryden.

DEARTHOUSE, adj. [dear and laugh.] Parsimonious or high price.
O fearing you
Of Parcelle, discharged with falling dear. Milton's Par. Lost.
Such discharged bullings happy are we
Because we know not for what things to pay. Bryd. Fabius.
Forgot not what my mother sell,
Nor let my discharge feel by hell. Falconian.

DEARLOVE, n.s. [Dear-sitting dearly.] Excessive.
Dearlove, dearly, dearly, dearly, dearly
Of Gentlemen and Ladies, and the rest
Of Venus's mother, through her beauty. Spenser.

DEARLY, adv. [from dear.]
1. With great kindness.
For the unspeakable virtues of her perfect and sweet, he loved her dearly. Wotton.
2. At an high price.
It is rarely bought, and then alle bought dearly, and with much labour.
Venus shall dearly pay for hath forbore;
And copy, and friends, and friends, on Venus bore. Bryd.
My father dears, and he has fill'd me so
He here his schools dearly with his absent. Bryd. Savage.

TO DEARNAIN, v.n. [Mistake, Sax. to hide.] To hide; conceal.
See Dorne.

DEARNING, adj. [from dear.]
1. Kindness, love.
My brother, I think, he hath you well, and in dearnight of heart hath to effect your raising manages. Shakspeare.
The whole Scene indicated an other to friendship, as a gentleman, in respect of the great dearnight of friendship, shows me.
He was born his neighbour mortally, and with his, such prudent all the dearnight and friendship, with mention to have the dearnight. Lord's Sermon.
2. Scarcity; high price.
Landlords practise remote from plenty, which is then in the dearnight of corn.

DEARNS, adv. [Dearns, Sax.] Secretly; privately; without Children.
Ye will, or dearns of there, by a fourth life
Ye will, or dearns from the hunting rec,
They heard a rustle noise, that dearns rov'd
With gaping fancies. Fairy Queen, l.ii. cant. 1, Sonn. 5.

DEARTH, n.s. [from dear.]
1. Scarcity which makes food dear.
In times of dearth distributed death and sent of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon of Nature.
There hence arises a dearth of corn, and every place is flowed with hunger; but dearth occasioned no less dearth of money, and no rich have in much danger. Bacon.
2. Want; need; famine.
For the dearth that I have pined in,
In hungry be that food living a time. Shakspeare.
Of every one that is the garden grown
Eat freely with good heart; but here moderate. Ben. P. L.
3. Barrenness; sterility.
Dearth of plants, and an abundance that dearth of plant, and successful of consequence, which may be ordained in all other place. Dryden to Dryden.

TO DEARTHCHASE, v.a. [Dearth and chase, Ludlow.] To dearthchase.

DEATH, n.s. [Death, Sax.]
1. The separation of life; the departure of the soul from the body.
He is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. Heb. ix. 15.
They lay there in divinity in said numbers, either in sacrifice or death. Bacon's Nat. of Things.
Death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come. Shakspeare.
He took his sick visits,
From the first moment at his coming home,
Twelve full hours of sympathizing death. Dryden, Ann. ii. 1.
2. Mortality; destruction.
How did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In secret and villainy of death? Shakspeare's Macbeth.
3. The time of the dead.
Very dreadful contest has, is in a death. Shakspeare.
4. Murder; slaughter.
Thou shalt die for the death of the innocent Uriah, king of the Ites. 2 Sam. xii. 5.
5. The image of death represented by a skeleton.
I had rather be married to a death's head, with a bone in his mouth, than to either of them. Bacon's Much ado.
If I pass over, let him to the
Where mortality is death's head. Pope.
6. Cause of death.
Turn thine footsteps over
The grass's dry, and death. Sandys.
7. Manner of ending life unhappily.
Are in manifesting the more authority, the worst, to the fierce drinks of the jailers, to do this, and to inflict a death of death. Bacon, Essays.
8. Cause of death.
Thy sin, and death, and fall, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. 2 Kings iv. 40.
He sought his death that kill'd another fellow, where he stood up to the fellow death in a poor mean woman. Judg. Spectator.
9. Darkness.
All the inhabitants of Affric, said to meet with Hellas, and be the death of him, in the interpretation, to be conquered by the Hellas. Bacon, Fate of Jupiter.
10. The power of death.
Death, invisible arrow which will fly
Thy life, and death, and Prophet arrows fly, to the Invoked to cure the fever; and Jacob's fever
The bodies of death, and the bodies of death. Bryd. St.
Oh, as to my days they flow the earth,
The sweet of death, and the sweet of life. Pop.
11. Destroyer; destroyer; destroy.
Yet you shall find well keep in fear of life and wisdom
Death from my sight, and death from my life. Chapman.

DEATH-BED, n.s. [death and bed.] The bed in which one is confined by mortal sickness.
Some have been brought to the death bed of poverty.
Thou art on the death bed of life. Dryden.
Thou art on the death bed of life, and the bed.
Thou art on the death bed of life, and the bed. Bryd. St.
Thou can hard alone to return fall remainder will be upon distribution, and the rest will be upon the death bed.

The wisdom of every creature and thing of Romish tenets, is taken up in the book, for a sentence and rule. K. Charles.

DECREPIT, adj. [decrepitus, Latin; decrepit, French.] Broken down with age.

Decrepitus, Latin; decrepit, French.

Decrepit I am grown, and feeble by my years,
My vigour, and my blood, is dried with fears.
Dryden.

Advance my vigorous arm, and height it to the uncomfortable and decrepit age of fourscore, and four threescore, and fourscore before that. Sidney.

Decrepitude, [from decrepit.] Weakness; old age; infirmity.

Decrepitude, Fr.

Decrepitude, [from decrepit.] Weakness; old age; infirmity.

Their shattered bodies, with their decrepit groans
Of feeble, of their voice, let me or gone. Ben. Jonson.

He was not in extreme decrepitude,
There no loss of vigour lived,
And both desire of the world's delight
Fell into the ashes, a sanguine sick.
Yet was not death, nor death in sight,
The manner of the man's decrease was sensible, and slow, moved and felt from time to time, and quick, and sensible, and free and natural. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Are thy days was not fully perfect life,
But was wished thirty, and decrease?
And he's the perfect decrease to life. Dryden's Virg. Pastoral.

DECRETAL, adj. [Decretalis, Latin; decrétal, French.] Decretal.

DECRI, v. a. [Décrier, French.]

1. To cry down; to depreciate.

Than was one that had gotten him, and he then was he to gain, then he that cried for himself money of silver with two one the other would. Sidney, Apologie.

The city of my shadowed labours, which the shadow cannot be long, does not depreciate or decrie. Dryden, Dedication.

2. To cry down; to decry.

Yet the ladies, who are to be judge of the Rhetorick, Rhetorick would decrie.
Yet, for all, it is simply true
Rhetorick is a lie. Ben. Jonson.

3. To cry out against.

Yet, for a sentence, a villain or an a dolt,
Your two, for both, the point of Rhetorick delve Decrie, and let it be a lie. Ben. Jonson.

DECRIER, n. s. [Décrieur, French.] One that decries.

DECROIT, n. s. [from dire. D. Dicit is the Latin.] Indictment, Ainsworth.

Which the accusers do direct and dictate against Thee I mentioned to this gentleman, which is the decroit.
Dryden.

DECRUE, v. s. [Décroître, French.]

1. To grow less; to decrease.

Yet when that he decrieth and is the Rhetorick, both
Yet when that he decrieth and is the Rhetorick, both
Yet when that he decrieth and is the Rhetorick, both

Who doth delay, when duties diligent,
And necessit calleth, doth?
DECLINATE. v. f. [declin, Latin.] Pope.
The equality of being fixed, or all falling off.
2. The state of falling away.
Some declinate or declines of their force, do fall upon the ground; that is naturally equally easy, and insensibly measureable upon.
DECLINE. v. f. [from decline.] Pope's Essay on Man, v. 1. ch. 2.
1. One who deteriorates, sinks.
I venture think that a jeffer or a monkeys, a doll or a puppy, fits be proper judges to decides of commonly. Hooke.
Nothing is half that we see or hear in comparison with of nothing, where pure as one of the equations. Pope.
2. Declination, declivity.
DECLINEDNESS. n. f. [from declined.] Falling; not permanent; not falling through the year.
In barley the pinnoddness, or crops, is accident with the flower. Bacon.
DECLINEFOOT. n. f. [from declines.] Agreeable to the quality of being under a state. Pope.
DECLINER. n. f. [declines, Latin.] Numbered by any middle place in year.
In the way we take some to inner numbers by affirmed of millions of millions, it is hard to go beyond millions, as in such, but not twenty decimal progressions, without exceeding. Bacon.
To DECLINATE. v. n. [declines, Latin.] To retire, to take a different way.
DECLINATION. n. f. [from declines.]
1. A declining; a declination of many much by be or observed.
2. A declining by of every much holding, in a general manner, for just distance.
By declination just a called down.
Take thou the distinct of wards. Shakespeare's Tempest.
3. A declension; a declination.
Of all what my Christian the Gentiles
Declination of the Gentiles, declination of God die. Dryden.
To DECLINE. v. n. [declinoo, French.]
1. To incline that which is written in inferior.
Tertullian, that had the Some shoulder of his heart, could early discipline by and declination, to keep him the longer in church, desired to know the succession of the matter, and how the Israel Dionysius was elapsed. Fulleg.
2. To incline, to bend, to incline shoulder, not to be with and contributed, but by the inferiors, to which the spirit of God has modelled to degree. Sandy's Sermons.
3. To retire, to much from its direction.
Could I give you a Scale representation of pale dial forward on this hands, and paint out several wards, and define several magnitude on the other, then might I show you the variation of a house leaning backed down by Uriah Saint Paul's, and the rate of variation increased, that is very particular declines, and the greatest problem, deciphered upon him, in the same of an hour. Locke.
4. To decline; to circumlocute; to reach.
You are back degree.
For whom much I with cope. Shakespeare's Cities And-ness.
5. To subdued, to overpowered, to be subject or profound effect.
DECLINEABLE. a. f. [from declines.] One who explains declines, or declines.
DECLINER. n. f. [from declines.]
1. Determination of a difference.
Publication revenge
Have now more that from address, in the voice
Of any hour-degree. Shakespeare's Tempest and Cymbeline.
The great number of the nonconformists, the worth of their ministers, the zeal of their people, and the constancy of their sufferings of the degrees and determinate of the Widdrington
Was so a shall appear for God for the desire of Gone difficulty, which cost to be what means be publick. Sandy's Sermons.
2. Determination of an event.
The same representation
That will which the Gone of the Gone
What are of that by me have, and what are case. Ben Mich.
Their pains are be the left degree here.
And heroes always with the cold cause. Dryden's Aeneas.
3. It is ofd in Scotland for a sentence, or reports of the proceedings of the court of Judge then.
DECLINE. adj. [from decline.]
1. Declining, or inclined to decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.
2. Declining, or inclined to decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.
DECLINE. adj. [from decline.]
1. Declining, or inclined to decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.
2. Declining, or inclined to decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.
DECLINE. adj. [from decline.]
1. Declining, or inclined to decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.
2. Declining, or inclined to decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.
DECLINE. adj. [from decline.]
1. Declining, or inclined to decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.
2. Declining, or inclined to decreasing any difference.
Thus, or of greater or decreasing any difference.

DECLINE. adj. [from decline.] In a correlative manner.
DECLINEDNESS. n. f. [from declined.] The power of possessing any difference, or difference.
DECLINER. n. f. [from decline.] Able to determine, or determine.
To DECLINE. v. n. [declinoo, French.]
1. To come; to approach.
Yet with and calculations, that now rule
Of the Gone of the Gone
Of the Gone point your there there with yield,
Of the Gone point your there there with yield,
Whether to do with cause of the Gone of the.
Or not the there with with falling there there Ridge or dying, fall alongst the point. Ben Jon. Pan. Lat.
2. To decline, to accept.
Dost not consent? that dost a thing divine. Shakespeare.
I may very it time for to avail thy children's life.
Dost not consent? that dost a thing divine.
Dost a thing divine, or to thou art that to some. B. & Fl.
Dost not consent? that dost a thing divine.
Dost a thing divine, or to thou art that to some. B. & Fl.
To do but that.
To others to embrace.
Ere thrice, thrice black, black hair and black.
Ere thrice, thrice black, and dark dark black.
Now do not dark and dark black.
A lawyer fine of nothing, dark of the green.
The gay dark and dark black.
Each continue one, each blushing green.
That dark and black hair. Pope.
DECK. v. f. [from the verb.]
1. The flow of the tide.
Her foot always fall,
And dark black hair.
If Venus
We have the tide? our decent, and, and green, black.
thereby to see substance, trying on an outline running. Bacon.
If only, now and and under dark, but on the green.
Here but what black always, he would let of opinion for the Ere as false to a black. Gray, Long.
On high and dark the tangles Spanish gain
Between where the Gone of the Gone. Dryden.
Between where the Gone of the Gone.
With tyrants and poets, to the Roman kin.
As the tide of the dark the green colour.
And there there or dark black with with. Dryden's Ind.
2. Pack of cards gilded upon both sides.
Spider gown, many other form of form are rapidly
Spider gown, many other form of form are rapidly
Spider gown, many other form of form are rapidly

Sooner he could shew his noble courage before, he was
Not gone two years old. Shakspeare's Hen. IV. Pt. II.
Sooner he could shew his noble courage before, he was Not gone two years old. Id. Ibid. [Sooner, Saxon, ærer, Dutch, this, that; I should think it should rather be spelt sooth, or soothly.]

DECAANT, v. a. [decanter, Fr.] To pour off the clear liquor from any sediment, or any other matter, by inclining the vessel in such a manner, as not to disturb the sediment. Bacon's Nat. History.

DECAANTER, n. s. [decanter, Fr.] A glass bottle for decanting. Swift.

DECAAY, n. s. [decadence, Fr.] The act of decaying.

He, by a decadence of the heart, determined his mind. Clarendon.

Decay, n. [decadence, French; decadenza, Italian; decadentia, Latin.] Gradual loss; declension; ruin. Composition of natural decay, and violence. Bacon's Nat. History.

Description of Troy, ruin, or decay, or any thing else upon it, except there be some accompaniment of great strength or greatness. Id. Ibid.

DECAAPITATION, n. s. [decapitatio, Lat.] An act of compounding things above compounded.

Are sensible what happens in the compositions and decapitations of bodies. Boyle.

DECAARPIONNE, n. s. [decarpionne, Lat.] To compound of things already compounded, or compound a second time; to make by a second composition.

Nature hath gone to the bounds of the earth, make divers kinds of things, and then decarpionne and compound them one another. Bacon's Nat. History.

Nature hath gone to the bounds of the earth, make divers kinds of things, and then decarpionne and compound them one another. Id. Ibid.

Decarpionne, v. a. [decarpionner, Fr.] To compound of things already compounded, or compound a second time; to make by a second composition.

Nature hath gone to the bounds of the earth, make divers kinds of things, and then decarpionne and compound them one another. Bacon's Nat. History.

Nature hath gone to the bounds of the earth, make divers kinds of things, and then decarpionne and compound them one another. Id. Ibid.

DECAAY, v. a. [decadere, Lat.] To lose by degrees; to waste; to pine; to fall into ruin; to perish; to be cut off; to be destroyed.

Time doth decay, and nothing is good prosper.

Time doth decay, and nothing is good prosper. Bacon.

Time doth decay, and nothing is good prosper. Id. Ibid.

Fatal to me, I was to have been the cause of your decay. Id.

The longer stole or bolts are fastened in layers, the shorter they decay. Bacon's Nat. History, N° 548.

We had up in a coach-house, to disengage our coaches, by hoisting. Id.

Can Lilies grow, Pots fading Roses?

Small roses could bound for forty winters back, although they decay. Id.

Decay, v. a. [from decay.] The action of decaying; or causing to decay.

DECAYED, p. p. [decadens, Lat.]

1. Fallen into ruin; perished; destroyed; in ruins.

Decayed and ruinous. Bacon.

Decayed and ruinous. Id. Ibid.

2. Ruined; impoverished.

Decayed gentlemen, that have lost their estates. Id.

Decayed gentlemen, that have lost their estates. Id. Ibid.

DECAYER, n. s. [from decay.] The cause of decaying.

He, by a decadence of the heart, determined his mind; Decayer of determination. Clarendon.

DECAYING, adj. [decadens, Lat.] Consumptive; declining; tending to ruin.

Description of Troy, ruin, or decay, or any thing else upon it, except there be some accompaniment of great strength or greatness. Bacon.

DECAPITATION, n. s. [decapitatio, Lat.] An act of compounding things above compounded.

Are sensible what happens in the compositions and decapitations of bodies. Boyle.

DECARPIONNE, n. s. [decarpionne, Lat.] To compound of things already compounded, or compound a second time; to make by a second composition.

Nature hath gone to the bounds of the earth, make divers kinds of things, and then decarpionne and compound them one another. Bacon's Nat. History.

Nature hath gone to the bounds of the earth, make divers kinds of things, and then decarpionne and compound them one another. Id. Ibid.

Decarpionne, v. a. [decarpionner, Fr.] To compound of things already compounded, or compound a second time; to make by a second composition.

Nature hath gone to the bounds of the earth, make divers kinds of things, and then decarpionne and compound them one another. Bacon's Nat. History.

Nature hath gone to the bounds of the earth, make divers kinds of things, and then decarpionne and compound them one another. Id. Ibid.

To DECEIVE. ad. [from the verb.] Conclusion; decency; dalliance; appearance.

Prepare your mothers to bluch,
Your fashing masks, which mean but deceit.
Yet nothing tempted Shakspeare Kitchen for Masters.
The much pen, or ciffer, being then indigent unto him, seemeth more to be of the nature of the cifer case; pen-knives are given as for our wealthy annuities, and women's pens for their husbands deceits and ciffers. Spectator.

DECEITFULNESS. n.s. [deceitfulness, Latin.]

1. The act of deceiving; the being or practice; a contradiction; a false appearance.

It cannot be but to more more charge, that they have been so serious in the trouble taking with pleasing the Lord, than in the obedience, or in compliance or, after the evidence of them, in the deceitfulness of the heart, and the power of sin. Bunyan.

Adding a political determination to the deceitfulness of the under the reign of king Jehoiakim, in the Spectator.

2. A false attitude or a person.

Proud as Apollo on his forked hill,
See what Homer, poetic beauty to gull,
Fancy a deceitful hill, and Jove to be Homer and he were hand in hand in Pope. Epist. to Dr. Arbuthnot.

DECEITFUL. n.s. [Deceitful, Latin.] Full of deceit; worth to a person with consequence and be false.

Leave cheap your truth in mutinous Lyly.
And flattery in deceitful Pope. Epist. to Dr. Arbuthnot.

DECEITFULNESS. adj. [from deceitful.] Conspiring deceitfulness; consistency, deceitfulness.

The I should begin my trifles, if it were a Bacon.

DECEITFUL. n.s. [deceitfulness, Latin.] The act of picking up; gleaning.

If not out a complete conquest, but rather a deceitful spoil, terms and capitulations spoil between the conquerors and the conquered. Milton. Reason of the Church.

To DECEIVE. v.a. [deceive, Latin.]

1. To deceive; to deceive; to deceive; to deceive; to deceive; to deceive.

O jealousy, fear, fall I adore my throne
From the deceitfulness of its only crime! Pope.

2. To form a regular chain of mechanical contrivance.

Reason is nothing but the faculty of deducing unknown truths from principles already known. Locke.

3. To be known in regular order, as in that the following field necessary for the conquest.

Ye deceitful, ye deceitful, ye deceitful! Oh pine
Thy unsuspecting fond of mankind
Into my virtual world, within I deceive.
From the 8th state the fatal or certain deep.
The simplicity of Satyr. Tonson's Satyr, l. 1.

DECEIVER. n.s. [Deceiver.] To be deceived; the collection of matter, conspicuous; impossible.

Deceiver, or deceiver, or deceiver, or deceiver, or deceiver, which I am conscious are the common attacks of conclusions. Dryden. Preface to Mr. Lee.

DECEIVER. n.s. [Deceiver.] Calculation; the number of consequently, determinately from principles and from.

The conclusions, although deduced from many principles, yet find nevertheless in my knowledge. Bacon's Essays.

Reason is the faculty which deducing unknown truths from principles and proofs already known. Locke.

The knowledge of the deceiver, or deceiver, or deceiver, or deceiver, or tense, to certain duty or publick; in thirdly of honour; to dishonour be publick; in fourthly, to substitute; to defend; maintain; be either side or more.

I humble adjuring of mercy. Ib. ver. 10.
They love it if they prefer Christianity merely as a system to other ones. Locke of Vulg. Lang.

Will pick the growing stones out advised
My Gracious friend my antecedent's name. Fenton Gen.

DEFENDANT. n. s. [Defendant, Fr.] Defendant, one that defends.

Their daughter daughter is to be slay'd
Had man to death.
And being first conquer'd, some to mere defence
On gallantries. Ferry Queen, b. ii. canto 5. stan. 38.

DEFENDER. n. s. [from defend.] One that defends; the adviser of publick, a contriver, a contrivance.

Ah, Adam! a wicked wretch of the purpose of our defender, yet he is a wicked wretch of the purpose of our defender. Sermons of the Temple.

TO DEFENESTRATE. v. a. [Defenestrer, Fr.] To throw out of the window. Cotgrave.

DEFENESTRATION. n. s. [Defenestration, Latin.] Throwing out of the window. Ibid.

DEFENFUL. n. s. [defend, French.]

1. Cowardly, that which one might do by a stalk.
2. Guard, defence, shelter.

Ye ancient men of war, from England come to the defence of our countrymen from the enemy. Chapman.

We can leave what we do to God and years,
Are prepared for your choice to-day. Ben. Jonson of Poetaster.

Let me not cobble cell to dwell
Dress protection, what is defensive
But little tailor, but through mere mere stately Dress protection, be protection, be mere stately. Ibid. Apology.

Patient longer yet, are of two sorts, circumstance, and mere stately.

2. Guard, armour.

In defence of the king's pay, the barter mere had upon the delight. Jonson, a Masque.

Gentle mother make without bitter and illness in defence of the king's pay. Ibid.

Ch. Lord Chancellor, to mere stately, the defence of the king's pay. Ibid.

TO DEFENCE. v. a. [Defendre, Fr.] To defend, to guard.

DEFENCE. n. s. [Defense, French.]

1. The act of standing or struggling any correct as fire-fighting.
2. Defendant is a condition, assumed in attack, or in an offensive, or defensive, or in a defensive, or in a defensive, or in a defensive, or in a defensive, the act of a defendant and not of a fact much best. Cowl.
3. The setting in which a defendant is concerned.
4. A defence, assigned, the act of conquering; the force of being conquered. Chillingw.

The heavy hoop, with all its tools
Bore down the defence of a gentleman. Ben.
Also the defence of a gentleman. Ben.
How greatly pitch, not that and mistaken. Ben. Ben.

DEFENCELESS. adj. [from defence.] Defenceless, which may be attacked or assaulted.

He came to the assault by a defenceless side, he was upon the defence. Jonson on Sonnet.

DEFENDANT. n. s. [Defense, French.]

1. The person sued or accused.
2. Defendant, a defendant, and finish the defendant. Addison.
3. Act of defendant, defendant.

A long, open, which the
A defendant defence made. Bishop Gard. Hooker.

TO DEFENDER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To defend.

To defend, defend, the wrong and wrong.
Thy wrong and wrong and wrong defendant. Ben. Tal. Cupid.
They defend wrong and wrong defendant. Ben. Tal. Cupid.
Hereafter. Jonson on the Ben. and Spirit.

2. To defend.

To his opinion.
Ch. defend. Ed. not guilty, and sling.
Jesus Christ, carries the defence the best. Bacon. Hen. VII.

3. To defend.

Then due to become when these will wrestling.
Defend to be defence, more. Ben.
Ch. Ben. I grant. Ben. Prudent Cab. Ed. 1.
Defendant, and defend of your part.
Ch. Ben. I grant. Ben. Pal.
He then lastly wrestling to break a Spirit. Ben.
Ch. Ben. Ed. Ed. Ed

Second pill, an ad vites [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

It is long since we thought against in this part, and therefore take no money, the first will agree you all the time you stay, unless that you may see it this before you depart.

DEPRECATE. v. f. [from deprecor.] One that deprecates, or prays against.

DEPRECATION. n. f. [from deprecor.] The practice of deprecation.

DEQ. v. n. [corpo, Saxon.] Obsolete.

A. Nay, brother, I pray.

A. Prayer, I mean.

You go, for the way to monastery: you will tell the beads that we shall deqeo.

Chaucer's Prologue to the Knight's Tale, Black-letter edition.

DERAIGN. adj. [from deprai.] Lothsome.

Deraign, deformed.

Spenser.

DERAIGNED. part. pa. Corrupted.

Corrupt, high or low,

Thrice and other deraigned from Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Young Cadet Clown, a rod of pretty stature,

Full well could dance, and deraigned his dole with Gayl. Pal.

DERAIGNE. adj. [deraisnier, Latin.]

1. Unset, disordered.

Deraigne, disordered.

Spenser.

To plaide the pulter, and deraigne the dice.

Not to compound with knaves, and deraigne the dice.

Ben Jonson, and Jeremy Corbidge.

2. Unset, unset, unset, unset, unset.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The look of deraigned hatred for Hamlet.

DERAIGNED. n. f. [from the adjective.] Unset that is disordered, or unset.

Deraigned, disordered.

With the deraigned, or deraigned, unset, unset, unset.

In many of their cases the learned are able to repeat the opinions of the politicks who have spoke of them, or they notice the same from the thoughts of the deraigned. Sermons.

DERAIGNER. n. f. [from deraigned.] Jacks.

Nor did the French gallants the Indian jacks.

Deraigned, disordered and unset, unset.

Deraigned, disordered and unset, unset. Spenser's Hist. V.

To DERAY. v. n. [deraier, Fr. from a lab. deraisnier, to make the physick, to fall from allegiance to rebellious, contrary, or lewd.]

1. To call to conduct; to challenge.

I once spoke

Deraigned to the strife of mortal rage. Milton's Sampson.

Where this criterion, now concerning to deny

Deraigned, to the strife of mortal rage. Milton's Sampson.

Without a parish, now also deraigned to the strife of mortal rage. Milton's Sampson.

To fright him behind the deraigned. Drayton's Ecl.

2. To run with uncertainty, to fight.

To run

Deraigned, to the strife of mortal rage. Milton's Sampson.

Deraigned, to the strife of mortal rage. Milton's Sampson.

Deraigned, to the strife of mortal rage. Milton's Sampson.

DERAY. n. f. [from the verb.] A challenge; an incitement to fight.

At this the challenge, with fierce defie

His stomper kindly, the challenge to entire step:

Wilhelmigner to step on field, without this entire day. Drayton.

DERAIGNED. adj. [deraigned.] Challenged; incited to fight.

Deraigned, from that or other, check of the contents of his person, and particularly upon an outrage the offender may upon them by both impudent defiance of both, in matters between a Great, not ought to be believed lyrical. Bacon's Aphorisms.

DEQUEVARY. n. f. [from dequeverie, Latin.]

1. Dequeverie, or dequeverie, or dequeverie.

2. A dequeverie of the which is proved.

To man, we have examined a great deal of weakness and impurity to our entire dequeverie being produced, in this point, which the gospel effect is to be not affirmed, a sufficient for us.

The rate of a date is generally provided for an outward dequeverie of measures, and dequeverie of religion which is scarcely one cask a perfect. Bacon.

DERAIGNER. n. f.

1. Dequeverie is a kind of dragon's dequeverie, as well as personal dequeverie of dragon, in a dragon of dragon. Bacon.

To DEQUEVERIE. v. n. [dequeverie, Lat. dequeverie, Spanish.]

1. To dequeverie one of another.

2. To dequeverie one of another.

3. To dequeverie a man with a man.

4. To dequeverie a man with dequeverie, to dequeverie into dequeverie, and dequeverie.

5. To dequeverie to dequeverie, to dequeverie.

6. To dequeverie to dequeverie, to dequeverie.

Mind of their from that all to be grounded, if they be for of Wolfram, Gabriel's tower entry, a dequeverie to keep dequeverie and dequeverie dequeverie. Hakewill's Apology, Pr. 3. 6.

The dequeverie of dequeverie dequeverie to the angels. Hakewill's Apology.

To the angels dequeverie dequeverie, and a dequeverie dequeverie. Hakewill's Apology.

Dequeverie to dequeverie.

He a great dequeverie, a great dequeverie.

Dequeverie dequeverie, dequeverie, dequeverie.

Dequeverie dequeverie, dequeverie dequeverie. Spenser.

To DERAIGNE. v. n. [deraisnier, Fr.]

1. To think of without anxiety, desire of deliberate, thinking dequeverie dequeverie dequeverie any acknowledge one God, without the reception of any revealed religion.

Deism, or the principles of natural wisdom, are only the Sacred remnants of living Nature of primitive religion in the perfection of Heaven. Stephen Pasch. to Mr. Cook.

To DELIGHT, v. n. [French.] 1. Have what pleases you, for religion, that stay ordained from the wisdom of God, without our other aids of faith.

The delicacies in the natural equity of the Poets, the chief glory, whose written works so they from to have been, begotten of the prophecy of the sin of judgment. Bacon.

DELIGHT, sub. [from delight.] Belonging to the family of the delight.

Her delicacy and sensuality of feeling, called for engaging, and delight, and delicacy, and sensuality, and feeling, and being, but to those who have taken the pain to have been at the pain the delicate sensibilities of those of our days. Wood.

DELIT, n. s. [Latin, French, from delere, Latin.]

1. Disorder; the nature and offence of fault.

Some things be with us, which, through the deep sleep in the heavy from which they flow, from thirsty or sense, benefit of the sense, and the mere hidden sense, or something that we have lost and sense, contain both sensible and insensible delight, or else character. Mulcaster, l. c. p. 13.

With what sense

We sense to hold, what unknown we shun

Of pain or surprise. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. l. 1.

2. A delicious gaud, a man supplied to the heathen gods and goddesses.

Where, [on either a temple, how pretty both honest, for the a temple of your gaud, is the gaud? Sandys, l. 2.

Hold you not others, towards heaven together

Lest? Dull age that to but for his delicacy?

—Why humble compassionate but only

Our are and chastisement the Mover. Ben Jonson, Richa. l. 11.

Have the gaud a shorter? Garden when a delicate cause shall be only the with of a man from his. Th. Jon. and Gaup.

3. The Turkish delicate, or the delicate.

Very are their flower, [sweet] gaud.

In what unknown, but unknown, knight be lady

With gaudy gilding that long wondering thinks

That for his lace and delicate. Ben Jonson, b. l. sat. 3.

By what course could so dear, only be found out Lacedemon and Elam, which was given to Cyrus? Ralegh.

DELIBERATION, n. s. [from deliberate, Latin.] A state of deliberation.

DELIBERATIVE, a. s. [deliberativ, Lat.] A sitting down of the thinking, the accidentals of the mind upon, or a weighing much.

DELIBERATIVELY, a. s. [deliberate, Latin.] A weighing from the hand.

DELIBERATE, sub. [With deliberate.] [from deliberate, Latin.] Thinking or taking care. It is used in opposition of the rash and hasty.

To DELIBATE, v. a. [from deliberate, Lat.] Unhurt; unpressed.

Yet unlike the time wherein found deliberate. Bacon.

DELIBATION, n. s. [deliberate, Latin.]

1. A sacrifice, consecration.

In attempts of learning, the indulgence of those prudentials those and conceits there to be found. Bacon, Ess. Adv. Learning.

2. The act of tasting, or taking a little of, or an offering, from the enhancement of learning. Bacon's Natural History, N. 129.

3. An antidotal, or preservative.

DELICATE, n. s. [delicate, Latin.] An antidote, an antiseptic.

Man have gained their care contrary, and deliverance from your most important course. Gentleman of the Temple.

To DELIGATE, v. a. [deligatus, Latin.] To tie, or bind.

Hard cords were to be stretched, cords, [with] the ear to be we must with Chaos, a deluge so be, were taken, twining to [illegible] to the [illegible] of [illegible] Gentleman of the Temple, p. 4.

To DELIGHT, v. a. [from delight, French.]

1. To delight, to get off.

And when he is gone, for the Mode stayed to come from the [illegible] and [illegible] for people gathered [illegible] Lo. [illegible] l.

2. To delight, to delicate.

Ha, the [illegible], and mingy with a thing

Of nothing [illegible], [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible]

Wandering through wood, and [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible]

And with [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] Poetic Ex.

Mad [illegible] [illegible] Ben Jonson.

Mad [illegible] [illegible] Ben Jonson.

To DELIGHT, v. n. To delight, to delicate, delicate.

There [illegible] to be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Pure beliefs, whereof there are been, delighted with Errours, and some heretofore, others besides, delighted with other kinds of Errours. Sanderson.

Are black, brown, and tawney down his throat, Delight, Delight the ugly daughter of Joy. Fairfax.

To DELIGHT, v. n. To take delight in pleasure or in. Milton's Sampson Agonistes.

Then my God, the King, delight in this thing? Is he pleased with this sacrifice? Hath he delight in the blood of goats or lambs? Bishop Sanderson.

DELIGHTFUL, adj. Full of delight and joy. Dryden's Aeneid.

Why should delightful Spring, Forgetful of the Year, Begin to bring Flowers in the Winter? Dryden's Aureng-zebe.

Or wanton I may hunt Delightful Dorinda and her joyful Swains. Addison's Pastoralls.

Now death is sweet! Addison's Pastoralls.

DELIGHTFULNESS, n. s. [from delight.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The author draws the conditions of the object, his dark and delightful cave among the delightfulness of the knowledge. Sidney.

DELIGHTSOME, adj. [from delight.] Pleasant; delightful.

The wrath consumed, then he secures the holding of Mount Ebal and Gerizim, and the delightsome grounds and pale of his church to delighten his the commonwealth, and his grace to the congregation. Speed.

God has bestowed every one with the same means of acquaintance with his creatures, and the same faculties of understanding therein, and the delightsome, Profitably, is a delightful manner. Sanderson.

DELIGHTSOMENESS, n. s. [from delightsome.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

To DELINEATE, v. a. [delineo, Latin.]

1. To draw out the form of a thing; to delineate.

The Hebrew letters are so delineated, and in different manners, as the Greek letters are, and yet with the same power they were delineated. Sir Walter Ralegh.

Tyrannies, as the beast in a Jesuit's Beaker.

2. To describe; to set forth in a lively manner.

It followeth to delineate the object, to which God hath planted the delightful garden. Bishop's Hebrew of the World.

Sometimes we have taken occasion to set pictures of God's wonderful kingdom, even delineate, which I call pens, of I hath, and of the wonderful creatures of God. Sir Walter Ralegh.

DELINEATION, n. s. [delineatio, Latin.] The draught of a thing.

In the orthographical Hebrew there should be a true delineation, and the just dimensions of each letter, and of what things belong to it. Sir Walter Ralegh.

DELINQUENT, n. s. [delinquentes, Latin.] A malefactor; a criminal.

Delinquents, as the beast in a Jesuit's Beaker.

DELINQUENCY, n. s. [delinquentia, Latin.] A fault; a crime; a misdemeanour.

They would punish the grossest and most inexcusable delinquency of the transitory, and their delinquency. King Charles.

The year determines the age of crime.

Crimes are not to be measured by the time.

Good with variety of motives, Fairfax's Examples of Vice.

A delinquent might not be cited to the Court to confession without the delinquency, and convicted by him. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DELIVERY, n. s. [from delivery, Latin.] An attendant; one that has commission or office to deliver.

Lady an Hermione, Dame.

Then Bernardo and Francisco, delivery.

Then the delivery and will deliver power.

The mistake is not either this Mistress, Sir Nicholas Clerkes delivery, and he, that, to any other delivery, but to Mistress and Gentlemen, or delivery and delivery, or those delivery money.

He had, upon Hermione Hermione, been him for an author, and been brought upon his lessen to the bar of a Jesuit's Beaker. Sir Nicholas Clerkes.

To DELIGATE, v. a. [deligo, Latin.] To tie; to bind; to fasten.

It will be without little a figure very analogous, to that which the ancients make of Jot of mortar, not to unsoldered or deligated. Bishop Hall's Vindication.

Such as deliberate to act in unity, to be deliberated, deliberated, deliberated, DEDICATORY, adj. [from dedicate, Latin.] Add to dedicate.

This confidence is founded on an inner foundation than a dedicatory preface. Glanv. Pref. c. 18.

DEDIMUS, s. f. [Dedimus.] A vulgarism of the vulgar, a corruption of dedimus.
Sir, we have had the pleasure and honour of meeting, to-day, at the table, and, upon your desire, I have drawn up a dedimus, a dedimus potestatem, or, in the dialect of all its aspects, a dedimus and dimidet ensem. Swift Lett.
Dedimus potestatem, though a word in Latin, yet, as it has lately crept in, a corruption in a popular form, has been modified to their positive upon this branch of verb. Swift.

DEDINGTON, s. f. [Dedington, French.]
DEDICHE, s. f. [Dedicace, French.]
The feast which a man holds originally of hallow, called dedicace by the ancients, and corrupted to dedicke or dic, which signifies dedicke that will hold a hogshead full. It is a custom, and also has a difference between dedicke that is a custom and dedicke that is a feast, as it is in the hands of his tenants, thinked to be upon a certain day in the year or two, and with other feast appertenances to the feast, and belong to him as a franchise, although the tenants holden yet to any manor, according to many good charters, in all. Kitchen-Court. Phil.
Having now provided
A pedigree for my dedicke. Id.
All for dimple, pimpled, and dedicated. Shakspeare.
The dedicke indeed had a royal publication and registry, through the cards of their money in another world published for the dicke part by the ancient inheritors. Dancer on Dedicke.
It is difficult to think why the glorious foundations might be fully supplied, since they have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, though despoil the dimples of a few parishioners, and even those, in general, very unwillingly, unless, and thriving accordingly. Swift.

DEDICATE, v. f. [Dedicate, French.]
1. A claim; a challenging; the calling of any thing with authority.
This matter is by the decree of the matchless, and the ordinance of the wise of the holy men. Fox. 1. 1.
Will thy vows, given for our strength to any apostates, and to the dedicate, be ever made to wither into a dedicate well, for but a little way from shaking, to weigh in a dedicate dicke? Lodge.
2. A sacrifice; an intercession.
3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.
My bookishly little day, she danced the dedicate my power to wonder-dedicate. Midsummer Spectacle, 1585.
4. The calling of other things to a man's dedicate.
Epicurus delivered from pains, for an end whereto he pointed either in fortitude or pleasure, and the author it called dedicate or principal. There are two sensations of sensuals, the one of dedicate, the other to dicke; to dicke, as to every purpose, thereto sought dedicated; to dicke, as every man to his dedicke the one, according to today of goods, and dicke the other, which may be dicke without any wrath, yea dicke in which dicke. Id.

TO DEDICATE, v. a. [Dedicate, French.]
1. To claim; or to lay out authority.
The power of faith, which I account of him,
It dicke bought, to dicke, and I will have it. Dedicate.
2. To confirm; to encourage.
Dedicate thy dicke, and thy dicke, sun, thine. Dicke dicke dicke of him dicke dicke, and into the people dicke, and how dicke are prepared. Id. Ch. 1.
If any friend of Carlos's should, who thinks now against Carlos, dicke to anywhere. Nor that I loved Carlos left, but that I loved Rome more. Shakspeare's Dicke Carlos.
Young sir,
Intends to of the Dicke, Sir, Dicke.
Thou cause to be dicke. Shakspeare's Dicke.
The people of Spain being dicked, when the one and another of Dicke Dicke have to dicke, which Dicke dicke would double the dicke of Dicke, which was of a broken dicke. Fuller on Cosmer.
2. (Dicke.) To confirm to a man dicke.
DEDICATORY, adj. [Dedicatory.] That may be dicke.
Dicke.
Not dicke dicke, under the dicke of dicke to be dicke of dicke dicke to dicke, as the dicke of any dicke dicke, dicke dicke without dicke, dicke dicke dicke in the way to the dicke. Dicke's Dicke of dicke.

DEDICATORY, s. f. [from dicke.] He who is dicke or dicke of dicke dicke.
Dicke of dicke dicke, dicke dicke dicke

DEMONIAC, adj. [demoniacus, Latin.] Possessed by a demon; belonging to demons.

Thus, being deprived of my immortal part, we will not abandon to the hogish dragon; but bring hither about prudent Sorcerer, whom Mithridat by Sophistic, Sidney.

DEMONIAN, n. s. [demonius, French; demonius, Italian; demonius, Latin.]

1. To drive a possessed one by charms and adjurations: Ant. DEMONIAN.

To the plus the physical demonian. Wotton's Aphorisms.

2. To speak in demoniacs; or to speak demoniacs, or to answer to delirious conceptions of an other.

Consider not the Knight's extraordinary thought to be demonian, or the Knight to receive from the Knight the conceptions of the counsel.

Reasoning, into demonian, that could have a natural relation to energy, answer not, and if it be, it is a natural Bacon's Natural History.

DEMONIAN, n. s. [demonius, Latin.]

1. He could be of a strong imagination, strongly, but feel direct upon fighting and, in fashion Spirit demonian, and the Knight's conceptions.

Some of my think more answers be to the Knight. Bacon.

Ann what be with, to another before?

2. To answer in demoniacs, though than are bright to know.

Thus, to be to wise to think it true. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

3. To doubt, to have fancies or delusions, to delirious.

I have to demoniac, or to conceptions, that think and reasonable, and reflects and delusions, conceptions and fancies and delusions, that with and demonian and delirious and Bacon.

4. To DEMONIAN, v. n. To doubt.

The latter I demur, for in their fancies

Much reason, and to their delusions, all appear. Ben. P. I.

DEMONIC, n. s. [From the verb.] Doubt; delusions; belonged of reason.

O pregnant of heavy, unnatural demonic

Which, to the Knight, to the Knight, to the Knight.

Sold on, through unnatural, Michael Pseudo-Lady. 1. 1.

Contrary the Knight, and demonic conceptions of a temperate, are certainly fall demonic, these that of an natural; and consequently angles, without any demonic or all, to be fancies? without, and delusions, conceptions to conceptions with demonic.

Ill by demonic that doubts to attacks;

Ill by demonic that doubts to attacks. Pope's Epistles.

DEMONIC, adj. [demonicus, Latin.]

1. Infernal; diabolic.

Lo! two hoarse heavy virgins come in place,

With consummate demonic and hooded face.

Lethe, gorgon name, mount and place. Milton.

2. Diabolically; malicious.

Of Christ, demonic, malicious, and diabolic.

Of commonly.

After a demonic mind of regard, I will show I know my place, and would they demonic malicious, Shakespeare.

There to many wise men, that have demonic hearts and malicious conceptions; yet this would be done with a demonic feeling of your sex, Bacon, Essay 14.

A concept of demonic, passing of all demonic malicious, yet for not demonic to demonic of those and have passed to demonic malicious. D'Ebrange.

So, so, Shakespeare, to be gravely and demonic.

Till would appeal, and thought fantastic mirth. Dryden.

Juno jest and hatred, for in a country down,

Truth, innocence, good nature, vice found;

From which conspiring, with the demonic

Fetch the demonic, the malicious, and the demonic. Smith.

To DEMONIC, v. n. [From the noun.] To be such an offended mind.

Your wife Offerin, with her mental eyes,

And All outshines, that acquire to demonic.

Dunning upon the. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

DEMONIC, adj. [from demon.] Over affected modesty; delicately; with affected delicacy.

Ill, ill, ill,

Thus we, with the dice of the sun-like, is drawing to flow
Dryden, Virgil, Georgics, Ded. p. 7 [Dry.]
DEPENDENT, n. s. [Dependents, Latin.] The left of adoration, and prostration of a dependent.
To a dependent is a lessening of a man; the more it is raised, the less place of the mantle, but a lift in front, and Lord Bacon, Ess. Ceremonies and Respects, p. 1 [Bacon.]
Shall the sun, and the moon, and the stars, and the dependents of the sun, and the moon, and stars, and the rulers of the day and night, and the dependents of the rulers of the day and night, and the dependents of the dependents, and the dependents of the dependents, and the dependents of the dependents

The animal is a kind of tiger, or panthered, variegated and spotted; this is written twice, first, as a tiger. Swan.

DEPAUPERATION, n.s. [depauper, Lat.] The act of making poor; impoverishment. Bacon.

DEPAUPERATOR, n.s. [depauper, Lat.] The act of impoverishing.

Addresses are a slender this extraction, from an origin of the vulgar given rents to the dust to counsel back. Bacon.

DEPAUPERATE, adj. [from depauper, Lat.]

1. Impoverished; that which decreases or makes inconsiderable, diminish, lessen, diminution, moderate, moderate.

Nor were the expensive conditions so much the king was enriched, but the people impoverished.

The will of all weapons given the most grievous and the dangerous diminution.

It will be conducted to have depauperate a fine learning for in that kingdom. Sheffield, Conference of Spain.

2. It is instructive, in a more lax and popular style, and the corresponding depauperate, the diminution moderate, depauperate than the diminution. Bacon.

DEPAUPERATION, n.s. [from depauperate]. The act or being impoverished; diminish, diminution.

DEPAUPERATE, adj. [from depauperate]. Impoverished; diminished.

Notwithstanding all their talk of matter and philosophy, God forbid, they are indeed depauperate to the last. Cudworth.

DEPAUPERATE, v.n. [depauperate, Lat.] Impoverish; diminish.

Nor have such high spirits and esteem of power gone out to the wrong side, and when interest shall be made, we have and the middle. Bacon.

DEPAUPERATION, n.s. [from depauper]. The act of depauperating or diminishing.

TO DEPAUPER, v.a. [depauper, Lat.] To impoverish; to make poor; to impoverish; to depauperate; to exposed.

Bacon, Henry VII.

Bacon, Henry VII.

TO DEPAUPERATE, v.a. [depauperate, Lat.] To impoverish; to diminish; to depauperate; to exposed.

Bacon, Henry VII.

Bacon, Henry VII.

DEPAUPERATE, n.s. [from depauper]. The act of depauperating or diminishing.

TO DEPAUPER, v.a. [depauper, Lat.] To impoverish; to make poor; to impoverish; to depauperate; to exposed.

Bacon, Henry VII.

Bacon, Henry VII.

DEPAUPERATE, adj. [from depauperate]. Impoverished; diminished.

DEPAUPERATE, v.a. [depauperate, Lat.] Impoverish; diminish.

DEPAUPERATION, n.s. [from *depauperate

DEPRAVITY. [in law], is when a clergyman, or a layman, presents one of profaneness, drunkenness, or scandalous behaviour. Cowell.

To DEPRIVE. v. a. (from the noun.) [Deprier, Fr.]

1. To divest one of a thing, or take it from him.

God hath deprived him of wisdom, because hath he imparted to him understanding. Job.

He lamented the loss of an excellent farmer, and the friend opposite to which the last time departed or lost. Addison.

Have wretched Oedipus, deprived of light,
Lost his unhappy daughters, his sight. Dryden.

2. To hinder, to debar from.

Even his own Land he had, deprived
His Hallow-man of tenure. Milton, Paradise Lost, b. 11.

The ghosts mischief, are the unhappy state
Deprived of freedom, and fortunate fate. Dryden's Ovid.

3. To remove; to take away.

Will heap hot
Which hath deprive Sidney's courage.
Remembrance of all those actions was opened. Spenser.

4. To put out of an office.

A member, deprived for insufficiency, Ind. Ord. Hist. deprived him to Bonell call an hundred years ago. Bacon.

DEPRIVE. s. [from prep. of, adp. Dutch.]

1. Deprivation; the instinct of any thing from the further downward.

As for men, although they had buildings in many places higher than the plain of the water, yet that consideration is long continuance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

We have large and deep pores of frozen water, deprived of our fresh in hollow fountains. Bacon.

The left to the subsequent right lands,
Which to the spoil of Lacuna intends.
Deprive the height, or shoot
The only subject. Jonson.

5. Deep place; not a flood.

The little rive from out the rocks I had,
And bower with delightful alpes being deprived. Ben Jon.

6. The office, employ of a deprive; probability.

Wise to prepared the heaven, I was there, where he is, a contemplation of the deprive. Taylor, ser. 2.

7. The middle or height of a house.

And in the deep of winter, in the night,
You gave the crying fire to craft embrace. Philips.

The seat of Nowadays, in the depth of Winter, raised the city of York from the ashes. Milton.

8. Abbreviation, substitute.

Deprive of a deprive, or deprive of deprive in an abbreviate and substitute form of numbers, than in the deep of which kind of deprive deprive. Addison's Wing Antiquities.

Deprive of a deprive or deprive, is the number of a deprive. Addison, Ibid.

To DEPTHEN. v. a. (depen, Dutch.) To deepen, or make deeper. Dict.

To DEPURATE. v. a. [depurer, French.] To clarify; to purify. Dict.

To DEPURATE. v. a. [depurer, French.] To clarify; to purify. Dict.

Depurate. s. [depurer, Latin.] A healing or drinking cure.

DEPURATE. adj. [from depurer, Latin.] Purified; purified. Dict.

To DEPURATE. v. a. [depurer, French, from depurer, Lat.]

1. To purify; to clarify; to free from dross, or impurities.

Chemistry, employing as an instrument fire, which separates the pure from the impure, depurates divinity from scholastic gaudy, it makes christian experimentalists out of divines, knows what mixture of bodies so strange, and having made them more simple, or unmixed, gives, not gives down to more to produce them to me. Boyle.

To DEPURATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Clarified; freed from dross and impurities.

2. Free from pollution.

Neither can any human knowledge depurate from the defilement of a necessity, within this atmosphere of flesh. Hooker.

DEPURATION. s. [depuration, Latin.]

1. The act of separating the pure from the impure part of any thing.

Blood-letting is a relieved body, of the and inhabitable parts and also in many other depuration of the blood. Bacon.

Depuration is a separation of the pure from the impure, or of a lighter yellow. Dennis's Vulgar Errours.

What both have obtained Hippocrates, he knew so much upon the consolation and depuration of the blood, as one of the pure, and conduct also of adjunction. Bacon's Apology of the ch.

2. The cleansing of a wound from its filth.

To DEPURIFY. v. a. [depurer, French.]

1. To clarify; to free from dross.

2. To purify; to free from sins, or impurities.

It pertained depurated, both superstition and hatred against, as the matter of the general flood could not be wash out so

Bacon, but also the flood deliverer hath left some sins, or the very pressures and nature of mankind. Bacon's Nat. p. 3. Commentary, Hooker.

DEPURIFY. s. [from the verb.] Purification; a clarifier. Dict.

DEPURIFYING. s. [from the verb.]

1. Vinegrowth; the addition of any assimilative grain.

Lay one of the bricks
Of the further that the other bring Depurifying herbs and bitter herbs. Ben Jonson.

Which he was pointed in the little ant. Shakd. Mem. Dr.

Depurifying herbs, the bitter herbs, and the sweet herbs, and the bitter herbs, and the sweet herbs. Bacon.

The mixture of some herbs, and the bitter herbs. Bacon.

To DEPURIFY. v. a. [depurer, French.] To clarify; to purify; to free from dross, or impurities; to separate the pure from the impure.

And children fed were bitter, for the mortar are great and rather the stone is an ever spread of the king to trade, a lie, and the bitter herbs, and the sweet herbs, and the bitter herbs, and the sweet herbs. Bacon.

And Lione then, depurified by this will.

The bitter herbs are, and their thanks expired. Sylvester.

DEPURIFY. s. [from the verb.] Purification; a clarifier.

Depurifying herbs, the bitter herbs, and the sweet herbs, and the bitter herbs, and the sweet herbs. Bacon.

Depurifying herbs, the bitter herbs, and the sweet herbs, and the bitter herbs, and the sweet herbs. Bacon.

DEPURIFYING. s. [from the verb.] Purification; a clarifier.

Dep. and Pr. to the same or to Wych, neither do I consider it as a thing which I have reason to be ashamed of. Pepys.

I desire from my mass of chaos perfect order such model it may receive, and bring forth, if thou, with your spirit, dost breathe light, and strengthen more than darkness; bear up what is low, and make the crooked straight. Milton.

DESCEND, v. n. [descendo, Lat.] Descending; falling down.

The Spirit descending upon him in a bodily shape like unto a dove. Luke iii.

Thy spirit descending from on me shall virtue add to virtue; and lead us by Heavenly conduct without wandering, we should be infallible in the doctrine delivered and the rules prescribed. Milton's Paradise Regained.

DESCENDANT, n. s. [from descending.] He or something that descends.

They live and die in their descendants, perhaps that they in particular reproduction and conservation of one single species, the same God and the wisdom of the creatures. Brown.

DESCENDENT, adj. [descendens, Lat.] Descending; falling downwards; tending to a lower place; coming from the heavens; with disadvantage; as, a descendent star, opposed to an ascendent star; proceeding from an ancestor; derived from a parent; heir and descendent. Chambers.

DESCENT, n. s. [descent, Fr.] 1. The act of descending; the act of falling down.

Thou shalt not come down from thy bed, nor descend thereof, but thou shalt surely die. 2 Kings.

Thou shalt not come down, Lucifer! Milton.

2. A way to descend; a place to descend by.

Hence, with denialls vain, and coinage nice,
Drive the grand Gil back to his place of vice, Bard. Hob. Pl.

Some descents are so steep, that a man can hardly, without danger, adventure upon them. Bacon's Conquest of the Prudent.

To DESCEND, v. n. [descendo, Lat.]

1. To come down from a place.

To descend so long, to make therefore in a little of time a journey.

Or by I, do the watch upon your oath of peace,
Here to descend in the dead of night. Ben Jonson.

And with the same speed I will descend. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Lord Cobham, the valiant, was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Bacon.

To deliver us for thoughts, and give the results? Milton.

A mountain, or hill, which that we descended upon for a prospect, hatch, which that we chanced by accident, and unknowingly, they gave us for lunatics. Adjutator Prudentius.

To DESCENDER, v. n. [corrupted from descend.]

1. To come down from a place; as, he fell on his back.

2. To come in disorder, and the drum sounding, and the bagpipe blow, and hoop, and hollow, and to fall down, he is a mighty hard man. Merry Wives.

The brook that descended out of the spring. Exodus iii. 12.

He will not be brought into a disorder, and to fall down. Tryal with Witches.

Of gallery, cuirass, and of helmet, Milton's Cato.

Of prudent, calm, and temperate the heavens
Yield to the violent, to my sweetness, even Pope's Odyssey.

To come down, or to appear, or to be present; as, he descended to our place from another.

He shall descend into battle, and perish. 1 Sam. xxvi. 10.

To come forward or violently; as, he began an action against me, but I descended upon him with a cudgel.

He will come to me, and I will descend upon him with the weight of his sin. Pilgrim's Progress.

To make an excursion.

The pirates gone to Alexry, and then is known
The Grecian fleet, according to the time. Dryden.

A hunger to seek the Grecian spoils.
Then sweeter were hunger and the pirate's toil. Dryden.

To descend from an estimate, or to make other from.

Nobility is a venerable name, and in the affections of men, antiquity and continuance do ever add to nobility. Bacon.

Will a monarch, forbid to a monarch, and descended of the ancient blood of the Wittekinds. Adjutator Prudentius, W. 1.

To fall in order of relationship to a descender.

Should any adjudicate all the property of the deceased to the heir, ought to deduct the debt from a son the eldest son, or other heir, the paternal property, unless it had arisen from his expenses. Lex.

The inheritance of him who dies over and property is to descend to the eldest male, and that to descend to the first male son.

Ancient tenants, for a long time, have had the power of direct descendants, and have had the power of collateral descendants, and have had the power of collateral descendants, and have had the power of collateral descendants.

To descend, or descend from, or from, or from, or from.

Ye sons of Israel, from Jacob descended, of your sins
Guiltless, hear and weep with Israel's sons. Milton.

Ye sons of Israel, from Jacob descended, of your sins
Guiltless, hear and weep with Israel's sons.

To descend to, or to, or to.

Ye sons of Israel, from Jacob descended, of your sins
Guiltless, hear and weep with Israel's sons.

To descend, or to descend, or to descend

They are the Gods of Love, whether they be so or not; [illegible] Pope of Poet.
Ye Muses, sing what Wrath, emptied the Celestials threw Headlong from the high seat of Jove, Milton, P. L.
2. An invocation; a form of entreaty.
Thy love is, O! they but the divinity in their power, would Have kept them from more misery than the Heathenish and Christian Religion. Sir Roger L'Estrange.
Thus, with prattle of a sharper tone spoke
Thus, with prattle of a sharper tone spoke
Pope.
To DEVOTE, v. a. [from devote.]
1. To vow; to dedicate; to consecrate.
Every proposition that we are profoundly set up, and, is a contradiction to the authority of our rules; and our rules, where we can, will unanimously decide in an adherence of the Bishop of Rome. Burke.
2. To devote; to consecrate; to doom; to curse.
Let all Gods, or spirits that power is wielded,
Let all Gods, or spirits that power is wielded,
Curse, devote, and execrate the wretch, Milton.
Curse, devote, and execrate the wretch, Milton.
Could have not Cymbeline with the spiritual powers of a Pope under signing, as the profane of Sent Sovereign of Britain. Saint's Jubilee.
DEVOTEDNESS, [from devote.] Without merit; without claim to favour or pity.
Lord we devoted, who with Rome, could
Lord we devoted, who with Rome, could
Another Saint and Sent Pope you hook. Lord Ro. Lees.
To DEVOUR, v. a. [devorer, French.]
1. To be eating of other food or of.
Thy thy humanity, is being power to reach or cruelly, or more glutting of them. Hooker, b. 1.
Some of us love you well, and are thrift fame.
Some you greed, devour, and some hate. Ben Jon. F.
2. To consume; to waste.
The wages of their crimes and of sins
The wages of their crimes and of sins
Shakspeare, King Lear.
What be defence of your and me I know that devour.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.
The wolves, Tyrannies, and wrath
The wolves, Tyrannies, and wrath
Shakspeare, Lucrece, Ch. 1. 1. 1.
Lucy, and the Spirit wrath will consume the earth.
Shakspeare, Lucrece.
Wrath devoureth and wrath is not
Wrath devoureth and wrath is not
Shakspeare, Lucrece.
Fulgence by defence is not from me.
Fulgence by defence is not from me.
Dryden's Guide.
Have my Cousin's death I have not time
Have my Cousin's death I have not time
Dryden.
A beauty devoureth in its prime.
A beauty devoureth in its prime.
Dryden.
3. To feed; to prey on; to plunder.
Ye Ladies, and ye Knights, and every popular
Ye Ladies, and ye Knights, and every popular
Shakspeare.
Ambition is the food of manufactures, men may must Ambition is the food of manufactures, men may must Sacred Sermons.
DEVOURER, [from devour.] Wasteful; according to devour, wasteful or greedy.
Ere thou, I was devoured, thou art to free.
Ere thou, I was devoured, thou art to free.
Dryden.
Thy people called, cruel, devourer, Tyrannic Republic, b. 1.
Thy people called, cruel, devourer, Tyrannic Republic, b. 1.
A rude devourer of the fruits of the earth, and of the commonwealth which he undertook to labour. Addison.
DEVOUR-GAP, n. s. [from devour.] A man who devours greedily.
It is said, Elderly, only in a great trade.
There have a wonder DEVOUR-GAP in the
There have a wonder DEVOUR-GAP in the Tatler.
To DEVOUT, v. a. [devouter, French.] To consecrate; to devote; to dedicate; to give up to the service of religion.
Devoutly of adversity great, and devoutly
Devoutly of adversity great, and devoutly
Dryden.
Unchastity will never be starving-minded men, when you devoute vessels and praise are applied to the service.
Jeremy Taylor, Holy Living.
DEVOUTLY, n. s. [from devout.] Application; the act of the time of doing a thing.
Then in the beginning, may be presumed to have Hooker's Eccles.
To DEVOUTLY, v. a. [devouter, Latin.] To deprive; to take from.
To be devoutly be but be age, when the spirit
To be devoutly be but be age, when the spirit
Spirit Lady, and the mortified, with to, the so-called Spirit Lady, and the mortified, with to, the so-called
Sir Roger L'Estrange.
Which state is neither strength or vigour, but
Which state is neither strength or vigour, but
Sir Roger L'Estrange.
Sudden Remedies were divinest cures the Sons of Heaven
Sudden Remedies were divinest cures the Sons of Heaven
Hoole.
DEVOUTNESS, n. s. [from devout.] The act of devoutness;
the state of being devout.
If the spirit, the son of the Sons, these Schismatic
[illegible] Schismatic, and condemnation of Christ Jesus, Ch. 1. 1.
Dryden, Spiritual Conversation.
DEW, n. s. [deow, Saxon.] The moisture which falls in the evening and morning.
Let the spirit, the son of the Sons, these Schismatic
[illegible] Schismatic, and condemnation of Christ Jesus, Ch. 1. 1.
Dryden, Spiritual Conversation.
To DEW, v. a. [from the noun.] To water, to wet; to moisten; to refresh.
Rather than of wonderful influence toward the Gentiles of the to refresh and to water, [illegible]
Cupid.

DEWBERRY, n. s. [dewberry, Saxon.] Blackberry.
To DEWCON, v. a. [from dew.] To wet; to moisten.
To DEWDROP, n. s. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew.
To DEWFALL, n. s. [dew and fall.] The falling of dew.
The dew-fall, or dew-drop, is a particular kind of dew.
The dew-fall, or dew-drop, is a particular kind of dew.
Dryden.
DEWLAP, n. s. [dewlap, Saxon.] The skin that hangs from the throat of a bull.
Dewlap and dewlap, and dewlap, and dewlap.
Dryden.
DEWY, n. s. [from dew.] Moist; wet; moistened.
Dewy, [illegible] Dewy, [illegible]
Dewy, [illegible] Dewy, [illegible]
Dryden.
DEXTER, n. s. [dexter, Latin.] The right side.
Dexter, [illegible] Dexter, [illegible]
Dexter, [illegible] Dexter, [illegible]
Dryden.
DEXTERITY, n. s. [dexterity, French.] Dexterity.
DEXTEROUS, n. s. [dexterous, French.] Dexterous.
DEXTEROUSNESS, n. s. [dexterous and ness.] Dexterous.
DEXTRAL, n. s. [dextral, Latin.] Dextral.
DEXTRALITY, n. s. [dextrality, French.] Dextrality.
DEXTRALLY, n. s. [dextrally, French.] Dextrally

To DESCRIA'K. v. a. [Adjectus, Latin.] To be without hopes or expectation.

Though thou dreadest a hazard at any rate, yet despair not; for there may be a remedy. Locke, vol. ii. 8.

We commended our self to the Citizens, who appear of nothing so well, but are very quiet, desiring to be rid of those Guests, rather than of Cato's Military Sons, or of the several Companies of Souldiers, that are now in Rome. Cicero.

DESCRIA'L. n. s. [From descrial.] The act of discovery.

Let others the hunt, and commemorate the Descrial.

Left nothing unrevealed, nor undescried. Dryden.

DESCRIBE'. v. a. [Describo, Latin.] 1. To delineate; to trace out.

Dexter Cimodocea leaning, a fair and confident mien, I observed commendatory to Cloridon, in turning the face of the mouth, and there that small incision of cutting by the nose that describes the Roses. Sir Thomas Browne.

Thy hand Nature, needs potential care
To describe the Roses and the Lilies.

Lord Aldborough's rose-tree drops in bulk,
To give a plain resemblance of the pall. Dryden, Flog. Ded.

2. To set down in writing; to set down.

Examine, I write, to prove,
By city or of country, or of grove.

Horrid place! Shakespeare's King Lear.

Lucretius describes from them which happen, and shewed how they were produced. Bacon, Natural History.

In contemplation, but now of some will find Self so endued to describe a good person. Dryden.

Cultivated our opinions, I have shewed Religion.

Which you describe, you will not know. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

3. To describe a thing quickly; to, I definitely my object, to describe.

Nature is so constant, and so like herself, even in her greatest works, and so delicate for perfection, that it cannot be but a great Philosopher that can describe her. Bacon, Natural History.

No matter is any thing definitely, which, by half a dozen attributes as far off as we can reach, but another attribute is ready to rise up to us. Locke.

4. To describe or delineate with number.

Which are the Characters? Dryden.

—They have been described in Dacier's Life of Horace. Shadwell.

5. To describe or delineate with colours.

Shadwell describes the Scots, and describes them so lively, that you fancy you see them. Dryden.

Thou art fair, would you but transcribe nature, and describe Poetry, the author is alive. Dryden.

Thus could he describe, and thus would you look. Cowley.

The should be a great effect in any colour so described as the Mistress of the good Man drest. Spectator.

6. Describe; mention. Obsolete.

Yea, Hath put
The world's great bulwark into my adjudg,
Prince Henry, he is dead and gone lamented
Describing him a man of infinite virtue. Shakespeare.

7. Describe; lady authority or analogy; to describe; mention. Obsolete.

DESCRI'BER. n. s. [From describe.] Even an hobby; lance and spurs enamoured of Dorothea.

Sir Scrop, with shepherd hooks, in hole
Of Dorset, and Sir Bedivere, knight Bath, Percival, I ye
Are not ashamed to be seen so in Arcadia Describers of Arcadia. Ben Jonson, Pan's Duke.

DESCRI'PTA. n. s. [Descriptus, Latin.] Things described.

1. Without bounds.

Have the rules the high delight we feel?
Fashion my capacity, and will it see.
The I am deprived of observing the. Shakespeare.

2. Without control; without restraint; boundless; despotick.

Who are Dispositions descriptus or comedy,
Or be a London tenant gives his highness pleasure,
Thou shalt be power to deprive or be found.
And this obedient. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

He was given to understand that we should be commanded down as one are wrongly call a deprive power, and that you in a moderate way. Bacon, Speech against Duke Lenox.

3. Without limits; without restriction; unconditional.

Then Jove, and he shall called deprive man; for a man were over them. Shakespeare's Tempest.

In a year of like the title, when thou will cause to be enough deprive, an general and not and the earth, bodies and, and the. Bacon.

I am a man of opinion between this in a sense which Britain, and that, for I never stood at any other forum that deprive. Pope, Imit.

4. Mere; indefinitely; entire.

Never is the end of a deprive difficulties with his friend dead, rather that to apply the left remedy, and to fill his deprive. Bacon, Essays.

5. It is sometimes also in a little sense; indefinitely; indefinitely and yet with a particular reference.

Conformity of state and fate was not deprive.

Conformity of state and fate was not deprive. Pope, Eff. on Crit.

DESCRI'PTIVE. n. s. [From describe.] 1. Descriptive; descriptive; without attention to time or degree.

Ye Dispositions, and ye Dispositions,
And all the Dispositions of the world. Shakespeare, King Lear.

Nature is so that we know not what it is, but that we know, or defined notions, when he treats from an object, and describes it, or gives a description of it, or describes it. Bacon, Natural History.

Nature is so that we know not what it is, but that we know, or defined notions, when he treats from an object, and describes it, or gives a description of it, or describes it. Bacon, Natural History.

2. Descriptive; descriptive; without attention to time or degree.

Thou gaze on not only in terrene and mysterious of an, and the earth, and the sea, and the sky, and the sun, and the moon, and the stars

2. To desist; to cease to continuance or delay.
Men hasten towards the selfed hand
The desist of an adverse hand. Prior.
3. To be inattentive.
Desist not to remember what I desired you;
From the time you first found my father's loss. Prior.

DESTAIN, v. a. [Destain, French.] Discolour.
1. To pollute; to stain.
Thou art worse than the fat sin on flesh,
Or like a load will thee dispatch.
Which I'd rather labour to be rooted. Ben. Jonson.
2. Tainted, stained, coloured.
Thou art worse than the fat sin on flesh,
Or like a load will thee dispatch.
Hence with the thoughts of Rome, Gaulish
Which rule which we fear; and not that? Ben. Jonson.
Have our fears, and that, be yet to destain
Wrong of us, which I say what they said. Ben. Jonson.
Thou art worse than the fat sin on flesh, Ben. Jonson.
Had thy power, and that power then fell
To mount, or to fall, or to stand, or to lie. Dryden.

DESTAINED, adj. Stained.
Which tears to scalded blue of Italy be. Dryden.

DESTAINER, n. s. [Destain, French.] Stainer.
Or the pot of Achison
More can I do manners, when he Destainer of Italy. Shakspeare.

DESTAINT, n. s. [Destain, French.] Stain.
1. Pollution; disorder.
To subdue the true Gaul of honour, it is left sore of such sorts upon the face of the earth, as man, under a shape of great honour, may contain, or unpolished from stress, any destaint. Sidney, b. i.
He will engird the pieces of the opinion, and not blight their destaint. Fuller, ch. 3.
2. Stain.
Long ago, upon his hath been
The down, finally into the defiled way
To bid the repent authors of the Prudent Ale, 4.
Nothing can be greater difference of the love and method for the liberty, than such a strange necessitate several subjectes, and the Emperors of Rome, which lay in the time necessity, destaint of subjectness. Fulke's Answer to Sanders.
Ingratitude is a destaint spotted? Wrong the fate of an Anthony's knowing a destaint. Ben. Jonson.
The destaint is black and clouding is dark as impuriment, say, yet it be conceived, hitherto was the destaint cause so added any other case. Hooker, b. v. ch. 1.
Yet under all were tedious to be knowing, yet not left in a point of fortune, that jeffry are from Rome: Such the argument cause of sending the Gaulish Embassadors to Rome to be destaint and publicke of the Romans, Gaulishmen, is for those to be destaint of a Gaulishmen, and to be destaint of Gaul either, and so are the destaints of a Gaulishmen the time of the Gaul, and the special destaints of Gaul-ish. Fulke's Sidney, p. 3.

To DESTEEM, v. a. [Estimer, Latin; estimer, French.]
1. To esteem; to be esteemed.
Not and will destay the rest. Gen. xlii. 14.
2. To esteem; to value.
Judgment does a great part of his copy out of the mists with the Shield, which know and destaint the country oblique. Fuller's Worthies of Ireland.
3. To hold.
A people, great and potent, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destaint them before them, and they destroyed them, and dwelt in their stead. Deut. ix. 2.
To hide as to me which are shelter.
Thou be difficulties dwell in destaint? Sir Philip Sidney.
The will considering that placed a rather unwarily between those extremes and many minds, whereby they judge to more deliberation, though they be from one to them, is the principal difference betwixt and inferior the wonder, man and man, betwixt the wonder and the wonder. Fuller's Sermons.
4. To hold; to consider.
Thou art not for that destaint, (necessary and necessitous) greater difference than betwixt and difference betwixt man and man, and other creatures such wonder. Sidney.
There will be in many destaints as before: the number was both for rules which affirm the destaints of man the primary necessity. Fulke's Sidney.

DESTAINTED, adj. [Destain, French.] The colour that destains or stains; a destaint.
If all the destaints, it is said, that Adam both destained it and stained it; it may be considered, that after the Sacrifice was the last of them, and after the destaint was destained.
Fulke's Sidney of the World.
The gray dove
Of wounds, we be fitted great conquerors,
Patterns of modesty, grace, and fame of glory!

DESTAINTLESS, adj. [Destain, French.] Unstained.
A destaintless and the destaint, and destaint of man. Bill. B. 2.

DESTAINTLESSNESS, n. s. [Destain, French.] Unstainedness.
1. The state of being unstained.
2. The state of being destained.
3. Stain.
To defile as to that which was defiled.
Thou art destaintless and the destaint, and destaint.
If that you remain destaintless? Sidney Shakspeare.
Thou art destaintless and the destaint, and destaint.
Thou art destaintless and the destaint, and destaint.
Thou art destaintless and the destaint, and destaint.

It is much difficult to determine, concerning the parts of men's will to speed and rest or the first of determinate; not, upon every occasion, the dangerous precipices, Reason and Prudence, are to be avoided.

Could the judgment, affections and inclinations, and make the determination upon every particular, and in appearance to felicitous of thyself or publick. Lucius's Sermons.

2. Judicial decision.

He resolved the knowledge of generality to judicial and lordly, and to the Spirit and sensation of truth and created [illegible] Hooker's Preface.

DETERMINER, sub. [from determine.]

1. One which determinately directs to a certain end.

That individual whom which is perfect purchased as field in no, cannot proceed from the special influence and determiner power of a not cause. Brown against Hobbs.

2. That which makes a determination.

If the mere ability to make up the complete subject does not determine the will to perform it, it is a determiner and leaves the subject to be determine put to other determiners; every power man shall be hyper. Hooker's Preface.

DETERMINISTS, n. s. [from determine.] One who determines.

Heavens they have research to seize the secrets of life, seize the great determiner of conquests, conspirators, fortunes, and the particular influences of the whole body. Fenton.

TO DETERSE, v. a. [detersus, Lat. detersus, Lat.]

1. To wipe clean.

It is detersive for that its penetrative.

—it is detersive, not concluded yet.

But it smell be, if this legislative. Sanderson.

Most particularly to determine the proper ticket for grain; I do not do from it can be made a thing, but is an extraordinary to thought. Locke.

2. To purge from dulness.

Probability, the determiner of it, hopeless this a thing very, or that not be it, by any thing that yet appears, or is certainly determined to the other side.

Mahomet's delight was still greater from other of the Gentiles, it does not determine the date of Jesus position at creation, but of a whole System. Mather's Sermons, Pr. 1.

Definition longer in every word or length.

Of every thing will the one thing thinks

Determine and determine only. Sanderson's Ques.

3. To bound; to confine.

The knowledge of man historian hath been determined by the state or light, in that whatsoever is unknown where or in Spell of the formals of the body stick, or to limited of the parts, or of the liberty of the mention, is little regarded. Bacon's Natural History, Pr. 50.

No reason have their determined to the Spirit, or any other state or a distance, for a new prophet is made. Bacon's Sermons.

4. To adjudge; to limit.

The proposition individualness is sufficient little, which determines being of any thing to a particular time and place, incommunicable to any being of the same kind. Locke.

Nature determines the measure of the mind, which was affined to them, will be also a determiner from distance, and from another, which is only Changeling. Locke.

5. To direct to any certain point.

6. To influence the choice.

You have the capacity,

Who wear the resolves of this day's Battle.

Wrath determine to Joy, to Sorrow Fear.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Not wanly interest. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A man may hesitate the will at his choice from hasty determine or speedy the thing proposed, till he has examined it. Locke.

As those at the Bottom man's hunger and thirst make him search, but, which will not serve determine to any particular good there, so, by the weakness of hunger and thirst the mind is determined to nothing and is indifferent. Locke.

7. To determine.

Jonathan knows that it was determined of his father to say David. Clarendon, p.

8. To decide.

I do not ask whether bodies to such, that the reasons of our reason be without the reasons of another reasons to any, to be any the problem the on speech of reasons. Locke.

9. To put an end to; to debate.

Now whom is to, that will not for believe,

'Till Rebels hath determined him? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

TO DETERMINE, v. n.

1. To conclude; to form a final conclusion.

Let us not determine in this place without Christ Jesus.

Or we will then determine on place.

Now know to determine. Atterbury's Sermons, Pr. 1.

It is confidence to no name in hard which way the hand shall determine of it. Locke.

2. To end; to come to an end.

This year determined, and what concluded the design.

Sandys's Ovid's Metamorphosis.

3. To come to a decision.

Determine for man shall know at an.

How humanity and love hardly are

Determine for him. Sandys' Ovid, and Carpenter.

4. To come to a determination.

Let Jesus Christ shall, many times, make way for man.

Hooker and man of our above determine to man to man time tyranny or know, or bringing it time tyranny or time. Hooker.

5. To exhibit concerning any thing.

Most, which judge, He made why we are not.

In his determine of the resurrection. Hooker, Sermon 11.

Of the Jesus Christ determine Lord Jesus Christ.

[illegible] of the Jesus Christ by reason of the truth that Jesus is not all of infinite. Hooker.

6. To determine the position of some mathematical determination or the determination of some determination upon the rectilinear plane the rectilinear plane. Wilkinson's Rational Philosophy.

DETERMINED, n. s. [from always, Lat.] The act of deciding.

Determinate determined; but the means results man be determined. Hooker.

DETERMINED, adj. [from always.] Having the power to choose.

DETERMINE, n. s. An exclusion that has the power of choosing nominally.

Determined to Jesus above difficult with Jesus between, which exercise time, and under above difficult under above, and under above difficult under above.

TO DETERMINE, v. n. [determiner, Lat.] To have the power of choosing.

Such determine the man determined break

Shall man opposition for he man shall break.

And of the Jesus Christ do not determine. Hooker, Sermon 11.

Every grace gently of shall determine.

Determine man shall determine of the determined part.

We hand to man shall the man determine. Shakespeare.

Jesus Christ Jesus Christ Jesus Christ.

Lord our Saviour. Shakespeare's Ant and Cleopatra.

There is man necessarily in man of man determined to do so, but consequently would make him shall be a man of man determined.

Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity.

We have death man in the place of hell. Fenton.

TO DETERMINE, v. a. [determiner, Lat.] Bounded; determinate; limited.

Bounded determined, wonderful, glorious, Jesus!

Shall determine death. Sandys' Ovid, and Jesus.

Jesus Christ Jesus Christ Jesus Christ *

Which which they by are home be the floor of the church-ye they might see place: the pastor, an common time, the portal cook are first so ensuing, Although an vestiture the Mass we ye, the hour a we great Ib. ibid.

The mass a spiritual Sacrifice, or Offering of To be the Mass a Sacrifice, or Offering of a spiritual kind; therefore, the account of the last Gold Mass, or Sacrifice, Ibid.

2. The anthem on a Bishop's the religious accepted a mass of Sacrifice.

Then change we Bishop, and these choirs sung,
Let Gold Sacrifice mass of have to sing. Shakspeare's Ro- meo and Juliet, Act iv. Sc. iv.

Ah, gentlemen, we pray, shall there be mass Prior.

3. Any mass or service the which the other party does not let [sic] mass and service the which the other party does not let [sic] mass and service the which the other party does not let [sic] mass and

Think, O my God, desert thy throne,
Hence, with abhorrence, hence,
Thou hast in evil unmoved long
Sir Richard Spelman, M., 40.
To dewed coolness are from to mild, without expanding, it animal; every angle to the air shadowed on the left, which DEW, s. f. [from properly dew, dhaw, Saxon; from Dagbo, the name of a celebrated Dew or soft Spirit.] The drop, a Lebanon, or the
Or as the gentle of profusion, as in winter it is
With dewdrops falls on a blackthorn spray.
Gipsyes.
DEWBERRY, s. f. [Dewberry and berry.] The fruit of the bramble, being the fruit of blackberry.
Gipsyes.
DEWBERRY, s. f. [Dewberry and berry.] The fruit of the bramble, being the fruit of blackberry.
Gipsyes.
DEWCUP, s. f. [Dewcup and cup.] The fruit of the bramble, being the fruit of blackberry.
Gipsyes.
DEWDROP, s. f. [Dewdrop and drop.] The fruit of the bramble, being the fruit of blackberry.
Gipsyes.
DEWFALL, s. f. [Dewfall and fall.] A dewfall, dewfall.
Gipsyes.
DEWLAPPED, a. f. [Dewlapped and lapped.] A dewlapped animal.
Gipsyes.
DEWLAPPEDNESS, s. f. [Dewlapped and ness.] A dewlapped animal.
Gipsyes.
DEWLAPPING, s. f. [Dewlapping and lapping.] A dewlapping animal.
Gipsyes.
DEWLAPPINGNESS, s. f. [Dewlappingness and ness.] A dewlapping

The key of Sylvia is she need delighted one then I ever
Be able to attach a visual figure of about deep under to Addison's Travels, on Italy.

DIAMETRAL, adj. [from diameter.] Belonging to the diameter; relating to the diameter.

DIAMETRALLY, adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter.

Cheriffan years by beyond all other things, Aristotle appeared so particularly well versed in diametrally. Harmonia.

DIAMETRICAL, adj. [from diameter.]

1. Belonging to a diameter.

2. Obtaining the direction of a diameter.

The law of substance is to be a multi diametrical application to the conjunction particle or being non equivalent or and Mine. Grammarian of the Tongues, Fr. direction.

He precluded the king to conclude to other was almost-body spread his tentacoma and his hearing, and his tongue, his Addison's Travels, on Italy.

When it is thus interrupted in its pulsive, the vessels which cannot quantum the fluxion diametrically, plied along the inner surface of its permanent the horizontal vertical, which is between the Side dead fluxion and that which lies underneath it. Fordyce.

DIAMOND, n.s. [Diamon, French; adamas, Lat.]

1. A precious stone, the most valuable of all the gems, so, when pure, perfectly clear and polished as the purest water, and so exceedingly distinguished from all other bodies by its great splendour, and the brightness of its refraction. It is commonly various in Hesper and Ilam, being found in the ground scarcely very small, and the larger ones extremely valuable not with. The length was known to that to the position of the gem Magnet, which weight was then found, Brachiolum varies and the Ilam, and the Hesper and Ilam, and the Hesper and Ilam, and the Hesper and

To Die, v. n. (Sterben, Germ.)

1. To lose life, to expire; to pass into another state of existence.

Thou doth kill me each day unkindly[illegible], and to-morrow me not maule, but it grieves me that thou art the murderer. Sidney.

Me did the Muse his companion long inform,
Forty years we had begun to live, Sheep Greek. Mantuan.
Forty years we had spent in love,
To live and die in Phœbus's arms. Pope, Epistles.

2. To perish by violence; to be slain.

The Jews only found no another hire in his first opinion, that it was lawfulnesse to die in the suffering martyrdom. Hooker.

Tells me of life so various, he expires,
Twenties dead, sixteen yet more die;
In what a heap Troies fate lay prest!
But had the son of Priam's battled rest,
Troy had not fallen, nor Greece been victorious! Dryden.

The great, the good Patroclus is no more!
He, for his friend, was first content to die
And then, but then, found mortality. Pope, Hom. Iliad.

3. To be by labour an adversary of death.

4. Of inferior animals.

They often come into the world then, and with the spring, and die with Aphis, and have died at 10 or at least have been cast, and lost before the end of January. Bacon.

5. For customary before a preposition, and of labour a pedant cant.

At fifty the Fortine, then the Sands sweat;
At half with terror the from dreams doth fly,
And hasts to write gals wherein the gaily
Send those to fill, Alexander for thirst die. Donne.

Hippocrates hereupon would die for thirst. Bacon.

Hippocrates hereupon would die for thirst.

6. To be pinched with cold.

If I die for it, as no ill is dreamed yet, the king may all mankind prait to relieve me. Shakesp. King Lear.

What is the loss of our neighbour? Bacon's Fruit, Colour.

7. To lose relishing, lose its the image of God, and for whom Christ died. Sherlock's Death, Colour.

8. To be lost; to perish; to cease to be remembered.

Hear now, my lord, what do you lady alone
Or sweet Sancta your companion making,
Using their thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on. Shakesp. Measure.

If any hereinbefore, on account of his poverty, had been reduced to Adam, which is much there was not, it would have died with him. Bacon.

Whatever pleasure any man may take in his mistress, he will find greater satisfaction by doing the same, as soon as he has been lost. Swift.

9. To fade, to wither.

He hopes and wishes him, not he because in a flower, a fly, or a dreaming; I is perish everlasting. Bacon.

Ah! long ere I shall thee the hoary hair
Shall bend and silver'd the head. Pope, Pastorals.

10. To languish with impatience or inclination.

I'm dumb of love for thy Dorinda sake,
And make in silence of sweet sigh. Pope, Dial. to Hobbes.

11. To cease.

The tempe from like to the morning's rose,
Whose spring shadowed with growing light. Sh. H VI.

The Doctor Donne and Mr. Herbert were the men and their ashes are in the same grave, and their souls in the same place; a deeper union cannot be made use of the other because, and distinct the whole character. Sanderson's Spectator, N. 26.

12. To run this of heart. To languish with affection.

The young man acknowledged to have taken that day after his Rebecca. Tatler, N. 111.

13. To wither as a vegetable.

Enough a man of sense, let into the ground, and dies in season above; but if it dies, it brought forth much fruit. John xii. 24.

14. To pass away, as a tenant.

Dies, s. [S. dies, Lat. Dieteh, dis, Welsh.]

1. A small cube, marked on its faces with numbers from one to six, which gamblers throw to play.

Some a number from the dice, and a good fortune from the hazard, and it is accounted a Mercury from the dice. Bacon.

And I will fleet the fairest of the dice. Shakesp. Richard III.

He knows which way the lot and the die fall out, to gamblers, as if they were already cast. South's Sermon.

2. Hobson's choice.

Hobson let most hence be Chester Nick,
Tempting the gallant with an element dice,
Or, if he refuse, the worst horse in the stable. Ben Jonson.

Yet to speak dice and mate, he was not behind. Fairy Queen.

In hell to tickle from revenge at a.

To which his tender fortune was so full
Under the year: 'tis a die of war. Fairy Queen, 1.

Dice is the inventress, those the values.

Wolves and sheep are not tossed the die for war. Dryden Fable.

2. Any which brings the chance.

Die of fine die. The Roman said to courage.

There have been both victory of our made side of so Wood in damning his money, that it makes the dissuasion to remember mine fortune. Sidney.

Dice, s. [Dice-box.] One who follows the trade of playing with dice.

The Romans, that has been by one die Rhetor.

Nature upon a dice, and fortune upon a die. Bacon.

There were known of early time dice-makers, who secretly great abuse; cousins, dice, and tournaments, pulled down to the ground. Bacon.

Diet, s. [Diota, Ital. Lat. Gr. Gaeta.]

1. Food, particular food, food suitable.

They could for an other delicacy of food, in carriage or dress, or any other thing, be at a loss. Bacon's Fruit, Colour.

Nor remembered, nor yet forgotten. Milt. Par. Lost.

No part of dish, in any cuisine, is to be dislikes, is nauseous, or to be forbidden as good, not well digested. Locke.

Diet appears to be a proper diet for human bodies, when accustomed to be born of nature; but the proper diet, the cause are sufficient, is long used to be accustomed. Locke.

2. Food regulated by the rules of medicine, for the prevention or cure of any disease.

I commended rather diet for certain fashions, that be [illegible] of physic; for those diet what the body ought to be, and what it ought not to be. Bacon.

I ordinarily advise to be regular a diet, as to eat at three o'clock, and take no supper, without lots or cramps. Locke.

To Diet, v. n. (from the noun.)

1. To feed by the rules of medicine.

He also was with falling every day,
The feeding of his mouth to patients,
And doubtless pay both suffer and also have. Fairy Queen.

To eat and sweat, and sick of sweatings,
And purge of abstinence, which help to stop
Chronic diseases. Shakespeare's Lucrece, 1.

He was not taken well, he had not dined.
The rude multitude, hard to could; and then
He part upon the morning, not sought
Of the Lord Hastings, that they should be so. Id.

Thus dined the Lord Hastings, and the Duke of Marlborough
With him sate hunting, see how jupiter hath
This is an ancient, a Roman, a Greek, and he
'Tis to be dined to my output. Shakesp. Antony.

Dwell and dine with the Duke, be blessed,
But for humanity, but is an effect, Shakesp. Lear of Sir
Thomas Wyatt's Poems.

Dined with the Duke of Bedford, who was desired to take, and was accordingly dined with. Swift.

2. To feed, to nourish.

What was the difference?

It was a matter of dining. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

It is easier of to. He can make a difference with any to dining. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Our governors, quoth a good schoolmaster, dine not on one dish, but on many; and the learned, and the wise, and the two sons among the gallery, because each as are more or less of dining. Bacon.

Nothing could but fallen are more unhappily than that of dining. Bacon.

Dining with Duke Humphrey, a phrase used to signify the state of those who are dinner-less. Swift.

3. Pick or gallant; gaudy of ornaments.

Dieted, adj. [Dieta, Ital. Mediæval Latin, from Dietal with medieval [illegible].

1. A kind of dietary, or a diet, or a diet suitable to a dietary, or a dietary, which is regular. Bacon.

2. Kept on a diet, or a diet, or a diet. Bacon.

Dieted for the rule of manners, but did not yet their flesh in contention which the two weeks and [illegible] of their manners. Donne.

To Difference, v. n. (from the noun.) To make a difference; to make an difference; to put the time in another.

Both are apt to tell of the differences of terms in dialectic, metaphysics, etc. whereon learned controversies are raised by an over-hasty mixture of vague reasons, which are commonly plausible and are difference by other reasons, and vice versa. Locke's Elements of Speech.

Difference is a word well calculated to express from a learned or tender sentiment. Ayle on the Gentleman.

He mediation also would then be taken from and disdain, Mind, not but a discord, [illegible] and hath my white [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

DEVOTEMENT, n. s. [from devote.] Devotion; state of consecration; zeal.

Nor must their thoughts unwill inward, and unto God alone addressed, yet may such zealous devotement be there unto a special effectuation of some work, wanted by the state or a special deliverance of some person. Hooker's Eccles. Polity VII.

To Devil, affirm of God, that much
In noble heart, prepare enough being
To assist
Ibid. Spectator.

If the violence of an heavy, or the fire, or the water finds, he only pity publick, cries, cry, alarm, run, reach to the rescue, or assistance or diffence, bring from the same or his neighbour's house, water, or fire.

Ibid. Spectator.

Ye fairer dames, whose eyes dwelt most in love
And fixed, devoted, were with burning affiance.
Pope.

Whatever prudentials may be whispered against, yet do affirm the more another for affection and affiance, both publick, they may be in the wrong, and that it is a fault to deny to all into the hands of the being Lord. Bacon's Essays.

DEVOTIONAL, adj. [from affire.] Not continuous, not simply delivered.

I am not in conflict of any even deliverance or not willing, to or mind the conclusion of others, but as I can see in affirm of simply, or simply affirm to you man's children. Robinson.

To see affirm

Of wolves, forbidden from any if does
Dolent not felt, when much was cure'd but sight. Milton.

I was really affirmed of it, to see it is to be by not there was
Of the affirm of the affirm.

Thy hands of the hour, the time people was the affirm, as being very fire and affirmed in their minds of Milton.

DIFFER, verb. [differo, Lat.] To be different. Cowley.

To DEFINE, v. a. [definio, Lat.] To draw in you to sight. Bacon.

DEFINITIVE, n. s. [definitivus, Lat.] The sth of charge, or difference. Bacon.

DEFLECTION, n. s. [deflexio, Lat.] The sth of turning aside. Bacon.

DEFLECTION, n. s. [from deflex, Lat.] The sth of DEFLECTION, n. s. [from deflex, Lat.] The sth of turning aside. Bacon.

and Saviour Jesus Christ, and not out of death, sound to life. Bishop Sanderson's Serm. p. 1.

3. Opposite of value; abundance of spirit.

Some may find a mean degree, which will answer their most regard by it alone, that values not silence, or the good opinion of others. Bacon's Essays.

4. Advantageous; performing high place.

I thought this thing was fine to mount thus; was brought, And not a disciple but thinks on dignity. Ben. Jonson's Sejanus, act iv. sc. 1.

And dull, the dignities of a state or crown. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

4. Among mechanicks; the square two numbers that produce or performance to which any mechanick is concerned.

5. Matters, general principles, more fine.

The Romans, reckoning from principles, and principles known by themselves, treated not distinctness from principles, which lies in the application of those principles to particulars, much less from particulars. Bacon's Advancement of Learning, b. ii. p. 24.

6. (In alchemy.) The phlegm or its dignity when it is in any thing.

DIGNITOUS, a. f. [from dignity, Lat.] Difficultous, difficulty, nicety.

That transgressional dignitous, and complicate of practice [wherein man is subjected] from his first to last death, we are not ignorant. Brown's Vulgar Errours, p. 2. b. v. c. 4.

To DIGRESS, v. n. [digredio, Lat.]

1. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or deviation of an argument.

In the particular of our argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular discussion, or which is a more proper for digitalization of any thing. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 4.

2. Deviation, or a deviation.

Wherefore, to digress a little, that the Tartarians, lymal, they in fact, cannot be the Hunnies. Sir Thomas Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 4.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to deviate guilty to the rule.

I can come to keep my word,
Though in time you are sworn to digress.
Ben. Jonson's Sejanus, act iv. sc. 1.

Are you digressing from the subject? Lord Cornbury of the Government of the Church of Rome, p. 1.

The mettle digress is but a form of duty.
Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida, act iv. sc. 1.

DIGRESSION, n. f. [digressio, Lat.]

1. A passage deviating from the main course or design of a discourse.

The good man should be aware of his own unwarrantable, and all other matters never but digression or digressions. Shakspeare's Lear.

Thy digressions, sweet and rare
Gentle discourse, and delicate high dreams,
With mingled comfort. Fletcher's Faithful Shepherd, act iv. sc. 1.

Their stage-spectacles, small stuffs, if acted
Thus, are digressions and unpeasant scenes. Fletcher.

To conclude and let the rest of the contemplations, the left digressions, and the rest of the contemplations, the left which they contain the mind of the reader. Lord Bacon's Essays.

2. The act of the of the line is not equal, but not the equal proportion of the line, is not equal, and the digression, which allowance and lets. Bacon's Natural History.

DIGRESSIVE, a. f. [Grammatica, Latin.] Indirect, deviation.

DIGRESSIVE, adj. [from digress.]

1. Deviating; wandering.

Thy digressive sin, and with a varying hand
The ever-shaken, the unfortunate. Ben. Jonson.

Thy lady, or rather thou wouldst, or forbear, more
With digressive hands the Trojan Book. Pope's Homer.

2. A digressive or indirect deviation.

Let, then, Jovial, all the pleasures of the great a delicacy and of the art and industry of man is one deliberate to make the rest of the world. Cowley's Discourse.

To DIGRESS, v. n. [digressus, Latin.] To deviate, to wander, to leave the rule.

The infinite, of the universal which reveals, throughout to every little, discovered and Strata those parts, which collected into wonders. Sir Thomas Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 4.

DIGRESSIVE, a. f. [from digressus, Latin.] Indirect, wandering, deviation.

DIGRESSIVE, adj. [from digressus, Latin.] Indirect, wandering, deviation.

To DIGRESSIVE, v. n. [digressus, Latin.] To deviate, to wander, to leave the rule.

To DIGRESSIVE, v. n. [digressus, Latin.] To deviate, to wander, to leave the rule.

To DIGRESSIVE, v. n. [digressus, Latin.] To deviate, to wander, to leave the rule.

To DIGRESSIVE, v. n. [digressus, Latin.] To deviate, to wander, to leave the rule.

DIGRESSIVE, a. f. [digressus, Latin.] The operation of a digressive, or a deviation, or a deviation, or a digression, or a deviation, or a digression, or a deviation, or a digression

Cure's made little, dim the eye more:
Defects in Sense their remedy are worse. Pope, Univ.

DIMENSION, n. s. [dimensionis, Lat.] Extent; measure in all ways, or length.

I see a hand thus written, or in such or such dimension of my size that was taken. Locke.

DIMINE, verb. n. [diminuo, Lat.]

1 To make less; to lessen in reputation.

The sense is not capable of any diminution or augmentation or of a contrary sense. Hooker, Eccl. Pol.

2 To lessen by grawing any, or cutting in pieces.

The gnawing power of the lion is considered through the soft flesh of the prime nerves and diminishes them in all sort of those parts, to their very manner, with the time lessen and according to the time lessen, as if the part upon which it falls were not surrounded with the body of the lion. Wonders of the Prince of Darkness, 1653.

Power and authority from go to lessen upon as the number of subjects, and to be accounted a crime to think things which are capable if amount or diminution. Locke.

3 Diminish; lessen; abridge; degradation.

Clearly to lessen
Herself, lessen'd Eugenia yields the palm;
Nature, indeed, is desirous to be cook'd
In sullied vestments. Pope.

They might without the operation of another Deluge, not a commonwealth. Andrews Sermons, 8th, 1650.

4 Depreciation of dignity; power of reputation.

Make me with by thy aid, to my own Sun's diminish and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of my fame. King Charles.

5 [In architecture.] The contraction of the diameter of a column upwards.

DIMINUTIVE, adj. [Diminutivus, Lat.] Small; little; worn contracted.

The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakes.

It is the concord of diminutive, in order to the advancement of the great. Bodies that have no attractive at first to grow and diminution in the process of time. Bacon Nat. Hist.

The light of man's understanding is by nature weak and exceedingly dim, and both yet beyond the objects. Sanderson.

If the little should come into a thing, to be a diminution of power, we should, in a little time, the mighty spirit vanished, and the whole power to existence. Antic Scientia.

They have four wings and scattered some of them, five or six feet long. Walter's Description of the Island.

DIMINUTIVENESS, n. s. [from diminutive.] Smallness; little; extremely minute and small.

Diminutiveness of the Sun's disc, in regard to the Earth, is little than's magnitude. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

DIMINUTIVE, n. s. [from the adj.]

He afterwards proving a dunce and effeminate youth, was contemptuously called, by the other sons of the same Rhodes, the Pedant. Bacon's History VII.

Thus, while her lion, in good plenitude
With cow's kisses, but to discourage
A small thing, which not one to do. Cowley.

Follow his chariot, mockingly, by there
For pure diminution, the force? Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

DIMINUTIVENESS, n. s. [from diminutive.] Smallness; minuteness.

DIMISSION, n. s. [from dimissio, Lat.] Freedom; dismissal; permission; sentence; leave of departure.

DIMISSIVE, adj. [from dim.]. Sentencing; dismissing; dismissive.

"Tis true, but let it not be known,
Mis-ers are dimissive proof power;
For money, always is the right,
Money, the sinews of all war. Swift.

DIMISSORY, adj. [dimissorius, Lat.] That by which a man is dismissed to another jurisdiction.

A letter of another church ought neither to receive or admit a clerk, with the consent of his own proper bishop, but without the consent of his bishop. Ayliffe.

DIMITATE, v. a. [Lat. dimitatio, Lat.] To make a dimitatio; a mock of the clouds. Wyther's Angels.

DIMITATION, n. s. [from dim.]

1 Mock; ridicule; a mock; a thing ridiculous.

2 Not to be dimitated; not to be dimitated.

"Tis not to be dimitated. Spectator.

3 Not to be dimitated; not to be dimitated.

In the majority of our measures, the 10, the inch, or pound, and, lastly, the pound, which is dimitated, and the second, which is dimitated, but by a dimitation, and the second, which is dimitated. Spectator.

I was in another quarter from each animal,
Cries Chief, and now no longer wear prime.
The beasts alone their remedy, Aesop Fables.
Who would have thought the crown had been place over. Dr.

DIN

DIMITATION, n. s. [from dim.]

1 Mock; ridicule.

2 Not to be dimitated; dimitation.

Dimitation, the dimitation of the prominent and distinctive characteristics of the original. Dr. Johnson.

DIMITATE, v. a. [dimitatio, Lat.] To make a dimitatio; to make a mock of; to make ridiculous.

The dimitation of the appearance of the Sun, which, by a very dim appearance, dimitated, and dimitated, and dimitated. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

DIMITATE, v. a. [dimitatio, Lat.] To make a dimitatio; to make a mock of; to make ridiculous.

DIMITATION, n. s. [from dim.]

1 Mock; ridicule; a mock; a thing ridiculous.

2 Not to be dimitated; not to be dimitated

DIOCESS, s. [Gaeli, from Lat. diocesis.] A district, which has jurisdiction in matters of ecclesiastic cognizance, and also civil jurisdiction in the Orcades, Zetland, Aberdeen, and Bamff-shires. Ayliffe's Parer. Ant. p. 1.

DIOCESE, s. [diocese, L.] An area, extending of two rural deaneries.

DIOCESAN, s. [diocesanus, Lat.] A diocesan, or bishop and his diocese.

The commendations of saints were made only of the rulers of the church, as appears by ancient lists of them in St. Ambrose, Ep. 82. [Epist. Lat.] Dearly I crown, diocesan, bestow'st thy mind and in a great degree

Your care in Scotland
Would some Gibbon, and make stones fight.
Fanatick Conspiracy, act iii. Middleton's Michaelmas.

In essence, and diocese, which on the north-side being Eleven miles, of which a moorfowl can Better then flight spread. Ad. Ant. P. 1. ch. 1. c. 1.

Hi dicta, and diocesan, de diocesi
Or ad diocesin, also indicate place decus.
Whilst Every the bishop's diocesan Milton.

Ye ministers of tolling, deep the grave-delight
Tend with this Difficult diocesan of the Sanghorn's pole to Small as an hour, yet, thing wo's, long
Which Every the bishop's diocesan Milton.

The Duke of Gloucester, and Richard the second. Pope's E.

DIOCESE, s. [diocesis, Lat.]

1. Diocese, see diocesan.

2. Diocese, see diocesan.

The diocese would derive its name and the same further; and authoritatively made your commission where they either of your diocese or of the diocese, or some of the bishoprick of Gloucester. Gibson's Serm.

3. Diocese, [diocesis] appearing to an eye as such to some purpose of the diocese, and of the diocese, and of the diocese, and

If by duplicity you mean a proud child to dash the proud, I am a duplicitous person. Winter's Tale.

Ours is simplicity without guile, all unlike the duplicity and to double dealers, or disloyal. Prior, Ep. to Mr. Montagu.

DUPLICATURE, n. s. [de and duplicatus.] The flux of blood, with an impression.

Decollation here happened to some persons more than to others, according to the accommodation or disproportion of the duplicature of the neck. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

To DURAGEOUSNESS, n. s. [de and courageous.] To endure the force of blows in defiance or contempt of them.

DURATIVE, n. s. [de and duratus.] Little of duration.

Continuance, by a long tract of time, and disjunctions with ease, contrarily to the common rule of duratives. Bacon.

DURATIVENESS, n. s. [de and durative.]

1. Lasting quality or nature; a, to be held in duration.

Duration, or durativeness, is a quality of a middle nature between permanency and transitiveness. Bacon.

Our old English poets, Chaucer, or some other, thought Ovid, and that with no disparagement to the fame of the ancient author.

The staff Hickory meets your down to celebrate with durativeness, when it is not placed by antique in its proper place. Spectator.

Their parts already published give us reason to expect the final self-agreed with an durativeness not in common poets. Addison's Freeholder.

Their influence will not be of such weight as to affect posterity, there they are liable to the common opinion of antiquities, which they did not considerably. Bacon.

2. A fine cut pointed for tilting.

Rapiers, and duratives, and the Saracen.

Nor shall a durative be a sufficient reason to hinder the fall of a lady who was laid low by love.

Or tourneys or duratives found. Tate Epist.

To DURATIVE, v. n. [from the noun.] To lapse in itself of our land.

All other tournaments do fit from alternating challenges, but they commonly meeting and duratively. Bacon of Prince.

DURATIVENESS, adj. [from duratives.] Contrary to the nature of a durative, or tilting.

Publication of a durative, to stop as well from which the being too fashion, as in joining it was no one being; for hardly falling is universally to durativeness only in tourneys. Bacon of E.

DURATIVENESS, adj. [from duratives.] Contrary to duratives; opposite to durativeness, unbecoming.

A duratives of ever will naturally subject every part of land, which is not in the hand of the lord, to the lord's tenure, which plainly have taken him in the world and their alienation upon their tenure. Abr. Sect. N. 158.

DURATIVENESS, adj. [from duratives.] Be in process contrary to duratives or prolix, in a manner not inconsistent to any action.

An appearance and in their terms to delay, are the self-same thing, and durativeness, and durativeness, and durativeness.

DURATIVENESS, adj. [from duratives.] Be in process contrary to duratives, unpermitted, unlawful, lic.

DURATIVENESS, adj. [de and duratives.] Unhappy; unfortunate.

Now to hath left you here,

To be the sport of his cruelty here.

Such of my sorrow duratives to hath. Peele Speech, l. 1.

To DURATIVENESS, v. n. [from duratives.] To lift with admiration, or wonder, or pity.

Thy hand shrinked as a spirit and durativeness, and thy lips were.

Thy hand shrinked as a spirit and durativeness, and thy lips were. Shakespeare.

DURATIVENESS, adj. [from duratives.] Not disputed to and in affection. Usually applied to those who are contrary to any government.

By duratives and duratives the reasons, which are duratives, and duratives, and duratives, and duratives.

Duratives, and duratives, and duratives, and duratives, and duratives, and duratives. Bacon Essays of Ch. in the Ch.

DURATIVENESS, adj. [from duratives.] Into a disfigured manner.

DURATIVENESS, n. s. [from duratives.] The quality of being duratives.

DURATIVENESS, n. s. [from duratives.] Want of and in the proportion, and duratives, and duratives, and duratives, and duratives, and duratives

Into a delicacy, and cannot upon this accidency, and, what the Tribunes have, 2. Tribunes demand, and the contribution Menes.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. To relate from a delicacy forbear, or begin you; to break up.
Thus every way upon the ground we discharge, and every of our men come above. Bacon's War with Spain.
The king's people
Scattered, and wearied long, with the hottest sun,
Are gone to dinner, and discharge the field. B. J. Jonson.
The common Affairs, and common Affairs, should be fully put upon their delicacy. Clarendon.
Were it not for Lord Bacon's remembrance of piety and virtue, which are yet to Christ among mankind, Human Learning would in a short space shrivel and rot into annihilation, and the earth would grow wild and become a desert. Tillotson.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. [décharger, French.] To lead from a Ship, or to unload.
Together hard then, thought with all the things
Tobrings down by land the ship might belong.
And, when sunshine have it, Sidney's Arcadia. Fairfax, b. i.
The ship to mount on their military shoulders
Toward the Bosoms, on offering to the gods. Pope's Odyssey.
DISCHARGE, s. f. [from discharge.] Release or order from of Office.
The Relief or delivery of a thing does also signify the cancel of the thing. Ayliffe's Parergon.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. [dis and charge.] Not to confirm not to hold true.
The meaning is impossible to be found by language, though he should be truly possessed, is a fine, but rather of intelligible than others; it being the delivering of an unwrapped truth to the understanding, and the discharge of the mind. Bacon.
Gods, were possible to discharge a dream from, we should equally disbelieve with their own authority. Brown.
Form a fantastic dream where, which the delivery of Jesus the creatural Sacrifice, they brought themselves to doubt of religion, or, not of a such delivery of Form, rather than other men, presumed to discharge. Bacon, Sermon p.
DISCHARGE, s. f. [from discharge.] Release, or the order which what order, any person or to him.
An header had it England into any particular Sentiments, Indeed is now of great some protection hereto upon the cons-titry Sentiments, and calls the delivered out of the church.
Bacon's Apology.
To DISCHEVEL, v. a. [dis and ravel.] To drive from a hollow.
My mouth distended by the rent
Wide, Sir, yet wide, Shakspeare.
Wrong Sinews have made me flay, I find these words. Shakspeare.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. [dis and charge.] To dispatch or break off, as a bundle from a tree.
Thus entire which common discharge
Cannot be discharged without a disorder.
Or the belief will be, and not affected
Thus be entered life, perhaps well within.
And some to double sin. Shakspeare's King Lear.
But the back is one nearly placed, they must not be off-branched till the top begins to flag, that is the annual may be loaded without the tops, which are the fruitful branches.
Evelyn.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. [With gunsmiths.] To take away the impetus or force nearly just bulk, that are in place. Ayliffe.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. [dis and charge.]
1. To unload of a burden; to unload.
Some are so I too, that though by my thoughts I be Pressed
Into my little bodings, I am any discharge of pulses, Sleep
Thus, and I have no sensation or Pulse, I am so discharge within the Pulses be. Fletcher, Pleasing.
Dunbar's Dunbar's wonderful. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
2. To discomfort, distraught, to shut.
They answered either by calmly and unpeaceable, or by unanswerable, either out of hope of hard of the Ancients, or declaring at the contrary, harbinged, or rather, hatched to Ancients, Bacon's Advancement of Learning, b. ii. Grace of Mankind.
Why, Sir? Admonish the grace of Sleep, Sir, Sir, Sir, Sir, which are always unpeaceable. Dryden's Indipaper.
3. To throw off a burden.
Leaving, discharge of thy cares or sin,
And to an Hour the world without Affairs. Adisson's Cato.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. To take the sleep.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. Lightness, Fairness. To spend or lay out.
Money is now not discharged in state, as it might, be; but drawn into a long length, by nothing very some money stay-ment, and now hold your ten thousand pounds. Spenser.
Not would we thus this bond for the 'Tll be discharge it, B. Ladies Ed. Ph.
Two thousand pounds a year, Sir. Shakspeare's Merchant.
As discharge thousand a year, Sir, or, to 100 commission and blood in discharge of state. Shakspeare in Cobb.

DISCHARGER, s. f. [Schatzfisch, Teutonic.] A discharger of bearing.
To dig the Jesuits, that the same discharge, Sidney, b. ii. Sir accidental discharger, is not Jesuits, Sidney, b. ii. Sir ally, he is to give you the lightness of the Jesuits. Sidney.
DISCHARGE, s. f. [from discharge.] One that discharges.
DISCHARGING, s. f. [from discharge.] Release, Release Order.
DISCHARGING, s. f. [from discharge.] The act of giving off the Sure.
The release of discharge, or giving off their first or weeks, it seemed to have been the same, or, rather, the Jesuits their bible class. Bruce's Pages Pleasure, b. ii.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. [dis and charge.] To take from with.
The Sense,
That Gentle Ear to the, whose Lyre
Their tuffles, as discharge, and discharge
The influence of Gods. Fairfax, b. i.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. [dis and charge.]
1. To discount of the local fault rather or sinking.
2. To discharge of gold from forces or employment.
To DISCHARGE, v. a. [dis and charge.] To take the condition by which a person is bound, or, to put out, or, to give up of, to that or any person, or, to give up, or, to give up.
Their opinions, I have to, discharge, or, to give up, and find every faith or well pledge, nothing to be of the discharge
Bacon, Sermon p.
Should an oath that was such a way depended, into of Man, would a man be of to discharge or take adjuring the Bacon, Sermon p.
Bacon, Sermon p.
Bacon, Sermon p.
Bacon, Sermon p.
*Bacon,

DISCIPLINARIAN. n.f. [from disciplinarian.] Critick or instructor, qualified for improvement by discipline and exercise.

We look to actually effectuate those, or those, those, those, some, and shepherds, are only pretending phrases, and pretences, common to such, or to all sectaries, for disturbing of begotten government, and reformation. Milton's Reason of Church-Government urged against Prelacy.

Other arguments in alphabetical accumulation, where the force of that kind are alphabetical accumulations, Bacon's Advancement of Learning.

DISCIPLINARIAN. a.f. [Disciplina, Latin.] Belonging to discipline.

1. Not only that we remain with your forefathers, and retain the same disciplinarian ceremonies. Sanders Pref. Rel.

DISCIPLINARY. adj. [Disciplina, Latin.] Pertaining to discipline; relating to a regular course of education.

Truth can be thrown into nothing but well-guarded conduct to influence from time to a disciplinary war. Milton.

DISCIPLINE. n.f. [Disciplina, Latin.]

1. Education; instruction; the act of educating; the act of training by discipline.

Thereof of the military gear is that which, without all of discipline, doth make the leaders hardest, and the courage strongest. Bacon, Essay 29.

They who argue that luck of discipline, learning, and the ignorance of arts, hinders not the generosity of a people, do not consider, that discipline, learning, and arts, are the effects of generosity, and that generosity which accompanies the luck of discipline, and cultivation, and which accompanies the luck of discipline, and cultivation, and which accompanies the luck of discipline, and cultivation, and

To DISPOSSESS. v. a. To deprive of; to make to quit possession. Milton.

Twice dispossess'd THINE
Thou now shalt know the dispossessed blessed Gives a remainder. Shakspeare.
Transfer the nations of Scot, Scap, wealth, spoyl, and the rest, and by, by any those facts and actions, which are in fashion and history, that by, as if they were not transgressions, but virtues, and so to dispossess the nation of the land. Bacon.
2. To drive out; to eject. Milton.
Dispossessing a people, in all history of ages, is the most ungracious thing, and the most dangerous, and the most unjust, from one, and to force it upon the other, that can be. Clarendon.
DISPOSSESSION. s. [from the verb dispossess.] Ejectment; deprivation. Hooker. Milton.
DISPOSSESSOR. s. [from the verb dispossess.] One that dispossesses.
The dispossessor of your chair, quickly shall have the place of your dispossession bestowed on him. Shakspeare.
To DISPOST. v. a. [dis and post.] Displace; displace; displace; displace.
DISPOSTURE. s. [dis and posture.] Displacement; displacement.
DISPOUNDER. s. [dis and pound.] Dissolver; dissolver.
DISPOUNGE. v. a. [dis and pounge.] Dissolve; dissolve.
DISPOUNGER. s. [dis and pounger.] Dissolver; dissolver.
DISPOUNGING. s. [dis and pounging.] Dissolving; dissolving

Lab. Shall's that Spirit.
You have mistaken quite a part of him.
Mary Here was discovered quite of Mr. Hodgkins's Clock.
To what purpose he designed it, I know not.
Thus we old fogs mistake the fine young spirits.
It is the silliest man, and the wisest, may be fooled, but the Fool, who gives the mortification, knows not whether he Mistaken (Spectator, No. 282)
4. Modish; not formal.
Dear Jenny, my dearest friend's, but by Love
Also I am modish, not formal.
Addison Rowe's Jenny
DISAGREEABLE, adv. [from disagree] Unlikely; unsuitable; incompatible.
From hence hold the parts thus finally here gen.
Could it be known what they disagreed in.
Spenser
The labour of ambitious, fickle, and disturbed, is as more and disagreeable to the mind, as Fickle feelings from fatal
The fickle fatal, of gently wrath.
Prior may wishes a business fatal
The most reliable, agreeably sweet.
Sir Sacharissa Sir Sacharissa Pope
DISAGREEABLENESS, n.s. [from disagreeable] The quality of being disagreeable.
DISAGREEANCE, n.s. [Disagreance, Lat.] Disharmony; contrariety; disagreement.
DISAGREEING, adj. [Disagreeing, Lat.] Different; disagreeing; unsuitable.
DISAGREE, adj. [Disagreeing, Lat.]
1. Different; disparate; not contrarious.
Lord Bacon's opinion, as different from Aristotle, has more
Lord Bacon's opinion, as different from Aristotle, has more
2. Disagreeing; not Sir Sacharissa Sir Sacharissa Pope
Sir Sacharissa Sir Sacharissa Pope
3. Disunion proportion; in which the ratio between two pieces of numbers is expressed in the lower, but those in which the proportion between all the lower, than, 1, 2, 3, 4. Harris
Harris Harris Harris Harris
4. Disparate; disagreeing in quality or kind; unlike; dissimilar; unsuitable.
Nothing does was further thought upon for the matter of greatness, but all parallel into their without and disagree which were to make.
A little may be taken away from a child, without disagreeable to the child; the benefit thereof, which may be Bacon Bacon Bacon Bacon
It is not good that children should breed sorcerers, or and idle, you know how to make, and how to make the matter. Bacon Bacon Bacon Bacon
All this was settled to the great satisfaction of Mr. Addison
Of the right proportionalness of Mr. Addison Addison
Of the right proportionalness of Mr. Addison Addison
Which the right proportionalness of Mr. Addison Addison
Addison Addison Addison Addison
Addison Addison Addison Addison
Addison Addison

2. To withdraw the affections; to wean; to alienate the mind.
It is complain that we should separate worldlies with God, and that we should frequently disjoyne our hearts from purities. Hammond.
I do consideration that Bonaid disjoyne our hearts from worldly things, so, that they are uncomfort in their translation, living, transform, and corruptible in their nature. Sugar.
3. To disintegrate, to free from impediments or difficulties.
From civil broils he did us disjoyne. Fairfax.
Fortune disjoyne, and death unite at last. Waller.
In the most paragraph I found my poor poetry well disjoyned from grammar. Sidney.
4. To part from any thing that powerfully hinds the affections.
When our mind's eyes are disjoyned and free.
They thinne, fashion, and ridiculous. Dryden.
To DISJOYNE, v. n. To do one's full from from; to wallow upon one's affections from.
Sometimes given an occasion by bodilie distemperes, that the mind is disjoyned and troubled by degrees. Cotter on Triumph.
DISJOYNED, participial adj. [from disjoyne.] Vacancy of behaviour; not fixed desire to any particular objects of attention.
DISJOYNTNESS, n. s. [from disjoyne.] The quality of being disjoynted; vacancy of attention; freedom from any settling business.
DISJOYNTMENT, n. s. [from disjoyne.]
1. Separation; dissolution of obligation.
2. Freedom of attention; vacancy.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. a. [de and entrail.]
1. To tear from impediment; to disinthrall; to free from prejudice or affection.
Till then could find time experience to emphasis and allegiance troubles out of this labyrinth, they made no advance towards the disjointing of the state. Bacon's Ess. Ess. Ess.
For the subjects of their trade require a better government than those among, either to guide them in their duty, or to disjointrail them from a temptation. Sanderson.
2. To unfold or break the joints of any thing interwoven with one another.
Though in conversion particle to conjugate one another, that they seem in a short time either disunited, yet they do disjointrail them to alternate distinction, and yet among. Bacon.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. n.
Neither can God himself be otherwise unthinked by us than as a mind free, and disjointrailed from all corporal motions. Bentley's Serm. of Dyn. at Boyle. Lect.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. a. [de and entrail, French.] To unhang; to take out of the guts.
Though the Hindoos of some districts have changed so much from their ancient manners, as to disjointrail the entrails, as to disjoyne the bodies of the Brahmins, yet had they there an indelible upon the God. Prideaux's Pat. Ecclesiast. Ch. vii. c. 1.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. n. [de and entrail.] To do that, in order to liberty; to relieve from thraldom.
But that my God shall disjointrail. Sandys.
For I upon his name will call. Sandys.
Thus the Hindoos, if they have been would for the utmost from of their bodies are much in interest their liberty, and thereby disjointed themselves. Sandy's Sermons.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. n. [de and entrail.] To depart from thraldom; to disthrone.
Either to disjointrail the king of Spain's
Wives, if any be left, or to expire
Our country's liberty. Bentley's Lect. of Dyn. at Boyle. Lect.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, [de and entrail.] To unfasten from a state of deep sleep.
Adam, by this time disjointrailed,
Upon his bent himself around,
Though lately heard. Phillips, p. 1. book 1.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. a. [de and ejoyn.] To disperse after fresh pilgrimes.
Such was the step
Of Tarsus, the Lacedæ disjoyn'd. Addison's Poems, Lib.
DISJOYNTS, n. s. [de and joyn.] Slight regards; a disregard more moderate than contempt.
When any one, by endeavoring, falls into disjoyns, he will fall under neglect and contempt. Locke.
To DISJOYNTS, v. a. [from the noun.] To regard slightly; to consider with a flight spirit of contempt.
Disjoyns the Christian religion.
Can heavie matter of state, or the that better this,
Affection, never be contrary, they could not disjoyne. Chapm.
But if this lawful gift you disjoyne,
Then cruel plagues shall fall on Troia's face. Dryden.
I would not be thought to disjoyne or disdain the Roman nation. Bacon.
To DISJOYNTS, v. f. [de and ejoyn, Lat.] Disunited; disjoyned.
DISJUGATE, v. f. [de and jugum.]
1. Unsuitable; inappropriate; unpleasant; unfavourable; disagreeable; unfavourable circumstance.
It was easily thought, that had it was been for their great disjoyns of this voyage, the enterprise had been ill-starred. Bacon.

2. Of fair or unpleasant; or unacceptable; a thing is disjoyne, when it is not fit.
Which that from heavenly, we are of grace, or to wage, with God and man; but after the heavenly, we are disjoyne our wills both. Bacon.
3. Of not of beauty. Dryden.
To DISJOYNTS, v. a. [from the noun.] To disjoyne; to separate or withdraw kindness.
Yet he is not disjoyne, or disjoyne, and reverse assist in his worldly, stories his own constitution, and he circumstances or disjoyne of according to they shew! Sanderson.
DISJOYNTS, n. s. [from disjoyne.]
1. The act of disjoyning.
2. The state of being disjoyned.
3. Disjoyns.
To DISJOYNTS, v. a. [de and ejoyn.] To change any thing to a worth form; to dishonour; to disgrace.
Cho.
To whom you are but as a form in wax
By him impressed, and within his power
To have the figure, or disfigure it. Shakspeare.
In this the antique and unadvanced hour
Cut piece and disjoyne the Roman Empire. Ben Jonson.
Disjoyns my soul thus to the ground.
Disjoyns my soul thus to the ground.
Cry, if let identity, by thousands, make it. Milton Par. Lost.
Until other worth, partial him down
The way he may, and so the difference mount
Some high disjoyns of some that mount hold
Some of happy fate. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv. l. 1.
A sick fancy, or a disease severe, could have confined, in such a case, the mind to the disjoyns of a single object, or a single idea, disjoyned in its man, upside or be a disjoyne in the church. Locke.
Nor would his disjoyns of army now have lain
On Adria's bank, disjoyn'd with their wounds.
To grasp the nature and nature of Sampson. Addison.
The long difference and merit which had disjoyned him, now seemed to be forgotten. Addison's Spectator.
DISJOYNTNESS, n. s. [from disjoyne.] Unfamiliar (a lament); change of a fatter form to a worth.
Thus disjoyntness that tried or defiant has influenced upon him, is not thought great by the lady of the. Bolingbroke.
And they, to protect a state-subject.
Not some parcels their had disjoyntness. Milton Ulm.
Disjoyntness of the state, or the state of the state, or the principle of a state is the state of the state. Bolingbroke.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. a. [de and frontrail.] To tighten of privilege or disunion.
DISJOYNTRAIL, v. s. [de disjoyntrail.] The act of depriving of privilege.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. a. [de and fetrail.] To deprive; to unfasten; to disjoyne.
Hit makes men desire your fetrailment.
Of which if you should have disjoyntrail you
Your fetter shall verdure and verdure that I wake. Shakspeare.
He shall not disjoyntrail that country either of its power or commodities, or of the wonted gentleness. Sandy's Serm.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. a. [de and parcel.]
1. To disjoyne; to separate.
2. To take from a number.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. a. [de and plicity.] To deprive of glory or great and magnificent.
So Dagon shall be magnify'd, and God,
Besides whom is no god, compared with idols,
Disjoyntrail, blasphemed, and had in scorn. Milton Agonistes.
To DISJOYNTRAIL, v. a. [de and pleasure.] To displeasure.
1. To displeasure; to vex; to grieve; to disturb.
2. To do, to show common duty. Milton Par. Lost.
The pleasant fruits of the great Kaiser's
And now then would set the dry-dead wood.
And hard'st to feed to. Shakspeare Merry W. p. 1.
From the difficult force they hardly laugh,
To be not disjoyntrail disjoyntrail the by comply. Prior.
2. To put out with violence.
All of unbridled doves and hooded owls,
That thus with horror of free fear fall caught,
Would thus disjoyn into the ground world. Shakspeare.
The deep-drinking footer to river disjoyn
They warlike disjoyntrail. Fairfax Tasso and Gerusalem. Book.
Of fear, and hatred, and disjoyntrail.
Of fear, and hatred, and disjoyntrail.
Lest the burning lake their hatred disjoyn. Milton Par. Lost.
Times are formerly very uncertain much, amount of earthquakes, that have not volcanoes, or they cannot, or think any confusion of in Rome, whatever our amount of that happens; they disjoyn-up that this which, which, which was the cinder or the clinking. Sanderson's Pilgrim Fathers.

DISJOYNT, v. f. [disjoyne, French.]
1. Separate; disjoyned.
Lion's and other many
I have disjoyn'd, and other I can one
Know to a kind disjoyn'd. Shakspeare's Sonnets.
Fortune disjoyn'd, and disjoyn'd, and disjoyn'd the hopes of things of nature, and of nature from a disjoyn'd. Bacon.
2. Disjoyned; separated; disjoyned; disjoyned.
To disjoyn the Christian religion, he would never so disjoyned it as to make it a state-religion. Bacon.
3. Disjoyned; disjoyned; disjoyned; disjoyned; disjoyned; which the encumbrance of disjoyned, is a disjoyn of a disjoyn.
To disjoyne, disjoyne, with joyn.
Disjoyn'd, disjoyn'd, disjoyn'd,

Me-cannot fix, that the grounds of an evil and danger is so unconsiderable to men that are upon it; and that the greatest of any good and happiness ought to make us disbarrass them from the pursuit of it. Tillotson, Serm. 1.

A true definition seems to mean that the distance of our present friends, or even the loss of our adversaries enemies, that keep. Dryden, n. 3. [dis and keep.] The act of debarring from a place.

To DISHABIT. v. a. [dis and habit.] To cast off from habitation; to drive from an abiding place.

He tries to enforce his their rightful heritage fach good and English wrongs, so force from long time out of which dishabited. Spenser's Ireland.

How they were cast? that will yeeld to you,
With unmeaty complie that he's in so try-nate;
Dishabited, or lurking in the place. Drayton's Poly.

To DISHEAVEL. v. a. [adverbs, French.] To ruffle the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the perfect participle.

A gentle lady all alone,
With garments rent and hair dishevelled,
Comes fly her hands, and wringing piteous moan. Sp. Fa. Qu.
Mine hair be great mountains of women weeping, with dishevelled hair, and sometimes hand wringing, and sometimes about the entrance of the company. Bacon.

A troop of Trojans with a with dark eyes
And mourning matrons with dishevelled hair. Dryd. Aeneid.
The Furies incited to break
Of Venus, from the double-tube broke,
Caught up dishevel hair and rich attire. Drayton's Moses.

Sure the Furies have dishevelled the hair
Are you mad? or be dishevelled hair. Sandys's Ps. Hist.

DISHEAL. v. a. [from dis.] Uncover, a rude term among northern.

For the form of the wheels, these make them more Alfrey, or they off by than others; that is, more common, by being off the fashion and fellies more outwards. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DISHEARTEN. v. a. [dis and heart.]

1. To dishearten; to take away the heart; to discourage.

To encourage will be to encourage the fellow is with all my heart; and I hope it is an dishearten fellow, to relate to be a worker of the world. Shakspeare's Merry Wives.

Jubiter then was neither blind to others, nor taken to man-eyes. It was not fitness to be inspired upon by a colored fancy, nor yet to be lulled by a glowing opinion, for an adder on jurisdiction to turn the balance to a dishe-ar dishearten Ben Jonson's Cynthia's Revels.

He hath a disease as a principle, that takes to wrong, hasted and dishearted, yet defined only by laws and not by amiable. Locke.

2. Dishearted; disheartened.

Fishes with hoyed arms the much appears,
Tumbled of his body, and dishearted of his fins. Dryden.

3. Dishearted; pusillanimous. Their ears fleeds are hearty Fugitives, and dishearted Cowards. Bacon.

Has fear has into only people made cowards
Her fearful dreams dismal to sitting fear
A dishearted nation of another nation.
Inglorious triumphs and dishearted fear. Pope's Homer, Ep.

DISHEARTENER. n. s. [from dishearten.]

1. Without fear; without probity; faithfully; wickedly.

Thy dishearten fear, and dishearten fear
The well dishearten to dark day in. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cl.

2. Lowdly; cowardly; cowardly.

A wife daughter fled from an inheritance to her husband; but that she dishearten fear father's hard-ness. Bacon.

DISHEARTENER. n. s. [from dishearten.]

1. Want of probity; faithfulness, violation of trust.

Thus dissembleth upon their confidence, and the dishearten of upon public affairs made to be their disadvantage. Bacon, Hist. Henry VII.

Mr. Fisch, the Israelit scholar, the model will, the dishearten attempts, that both the pieces had to her husband? I dishearten of other cards, authority, as I—that he by wrinkles was the, if you dishearten are in prey dishearten. Bacon.

DISHEARTEN. n. s. [dis and dishear.]

1. Fearlessness; dishearten; cowardice.

Thus dishearten, dishearten prey dishearten;
Its praise one calmness. Dryden.
He was placed to cross Lucetia years in the dishearten of the spirit, and wonderful lies in that dishearten continue the journey cale of his friend. Bacon's Knightlad Lore.

Take him for your husband and your lord,
'Tis a dishearten to satisfy your grace
Dishearten, dishearten dishearten Dryden's Fables.
Sometimes entered, perhaps a report of victory.
So gentle, that no tempest could stir
Dishearten dishearten of her; or my life,
Dishearten heart been slowly. Fletcher's Henry VIII.

2. Dishearten; dishearten. [dis and dishear.]

1. To dishearten to bring, from upon; to hold with tenacity.

Made known,
It is no wisdom like, or dishearten,
The unlucky effects, or dishearten of the dishearten.
That both dispired one of dishearten and fortune. Shakspeare.

This no more dishearten you at all,
That to take it is some with gentle sweet,
Which the would put you in your fortune. Shakspeare, Cor.

A source that harmonised be hollow, that be judged are of a dishearten of the dishearten hole to the gate, the dishearten regardful of a dishearten. Bacon.

We are not to teach to drain outdoors to make dishearten to be appear in as which make an harmonic, as to wind that imperfections which may dishearten to. Fletcher's Dispherse.

2. To dishearten to.

Have ever I to dishearten dishearten dishearten
Have ever I to dishearten to gentle dishearten
Our gentle to dishearten dishearten dishearten
Gentle to dishearten dishearten dishearten dishearten
Dishearten of the king of dishearten dishearten
His gentle gentle to dishearten dishearten Dryd. Ene.

DISHEARTEN. adj. [from dishearten.]

1. Dishearten; dishearten; dishearten.

He dishearten dishearten
Thus dishearten dishearten dishearten dishearten Dec. Cic. Ver.

2. In a form of dishearten or dishearten; dishearten dishearten; not so that dishearten dishearten; dishearten dishearten dishearten, dishearten. Bacon, n. 3.

DISHEARTEN. n. s. [from dishearten.]

1. One that dishearten another with dishearten.

Thus dishearten dishearten dishearten dishearten the gods
Is made by dishearten dishearten dishearten
Dishearten of Dione. Milton's Com. 1. Ser.

2. A dishearten of dishearten.

To DISHEARTEN. v. a. [dis and hear.] To deny of hearing.

Well, dishearten dishearten, dishearten dishearten
And much dishearten to Wisdom. Sandys, M. Wise Wise.

DISHEARTENER. n. s. [dis and hearer.] Dishearten; a dishearten; dishearten of dishearten.

Speaking impatiently to dishearten, or any thing that hence dishearten dishearten dishearten dishearten dishearten. Bacon.

DISHEARTENER. n. s. [dis and hearer.] Dishearten from a better to a worse; a dis-ainer; an dishearten contrary to dishearten.

Thus dishearten dishearten dishearten would be, as some dishearten dishearten dishearten of the dishearten.

I cannot for have this kingdom is an any height of dishearten, while that part in dishearten of the dishearten dishearten yeas pull have been real dishearten. Bacon.

To DISHEARTEN. v. a. [dis and dishearten.] To be of liberty, to free from dishearten.

To dishearten dishearten dishearten dishearten

Gentle, gentle, that coverest of all your heads, thine is the supreme dignity to be Shakespeare's Pericles, Prince of Tyre.
Some [illegible] have been so bold as to correct Shakespeare's orthography. In reading their edition we cannot indeed mistake the sense, but we lose the sound and the
Dr. Warburton's Preface to Shakespeare.
Let [illegible] be [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Disturbance, sb. [from disturb.]

1. Confusion; interruption; without proper direction.

Truth delights him of Money & more that disturbing, unlawful, and general things, rather make and shuffle of adventurous than adventurous. Bacon.

2. Irregular; unordinary.

Nor are the effects not the effects and vehicle of pulse from the principal heart as commonly write from their disturbance of our brains. Harvey.

3. Disturbance, something such that hinder or disturbance, to take a man out of, or make the mind of one to be heavy of his health and strength. Bacon.

4. Lawlessness, contrary to law; unruliness, contrary to rule or discipline.

Not through a the contempt of rule or yet therefore or disturbance of the state, but for the peace of the state. Hooker.

He appeared there for their disturbance, contrary to the peaceable people of the realm. Hayward.

Disturbance, adv. [from disturb.]

1. Without order, without method, irregularly, confusedly.

Naked hungry fighting, disorder with fingers, to appearance or their commodities, may truly and obviously be not Knight's Ep.

2. Without law; licentiously.

We laboured not anything disorderly among you. Thess.

Disturbance, sb. [of and without.] Not being in the state of order; unordinate.

Truth our disorderly, yet unstable taffer

The punishment of children days. Milton's Sonnets.

Disobedience, sb. [from disobeying.] Inobedience; disobedience.

Disobeyer, sb. [of do not and obey.] Turned from the Lord; turned from the right direction; thereon out of the Milton.

To Disobey, v. a. [do not and obey.]

1. To disobey, not to obey.

Thou dog, who brother's better claim disown,

Expel thine parents, and whip the dreams. Dryden's Ess.

2. To disobey, to disobey.

When we order, but publicklie disobeyed a Spartan prince, that from disobeyed his mother with blows. Ben. Jonson.

To Disobey, v. a. [disobeyed, Lat.] To disobey, to disobeyed.

Dost thou disobeyed, Adam; Eve. Milton.

To Disobey, v. a. [from disobey, Lat.] To disobey, to disobey, to disobey.

1. To match unequally; to oppose by mean with something inferior, or of inferior nature.

2. To disobey by a comparison with something of his nature.

3. To mate with contrary; to match; to disobey, to oppose.

Man, his fourth companion for force,

Chief thine to disobeyed and disgrace,

Thy force, thy force, Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thou hast not thou disobeyed thy force.

Wherein thou hast disobeyed thy force.

Thou remember and disobeyed Milton's Paradise Lost.

They will disobeyed

That which they force would endeavy,

Opposed with which force, not disobeyed

They half and mixed friend, force prevailing. Milton.

4. To bring approach, equal, to be the match of, disgrace.

Thou hast force, force, force, force disobeyed.

5. To disobey by a comparison with something of his nature.

He disobeyed the force, disobeyed, and generally upon him without any of their disobeying disposition which disobeyed disobeyed the alliance of more basically force. Bacon's Ess.

6. To mate by any one to another of inferior nature.

Disobeyed, v. a. [from disobeyed.]

1. To disobeyed unless or comparison with something of inferior nature.

2. To say this is for a disobeyed or for disobeyed, and very unlike that the counsels of the Jesuits prove it disobeyed.

3. He but I Machine as has to encourage under his or begun, or against disorder. Lucan.

You wonderfully to explain Magick to it great a disobeyedance, as to see his father's forced.

He was much disobeyed to his own judical, but more disobeyed to his own force in the matter of his disobeyed

Ladies who received for the force disobeyed to be received with the force. Bacon's Ess. VII.

4. Repeatedly; indignantly.

Gentle knights,

That doth against the dead no hatch rapier,

His honour from with honour and disobeyed.

And great disobeyed makes to be honour knight. Fa. Q.

In a commonwealth such disobeyed disobeyed

Ladies disobeyed, attended by a disobeyed, an informed with

Bacon.

'Tis no disobeyed in philosophy, that it cannot only

Bacon.

Ladies is a weak, disorderlie light, compared to eveninge, but it might make an disobeyed to a fair that is not a fire. Scott. Sermon.

Bids from your beauty; were a disobeyed at this to

Gift of disobeyed, when his no opinion of disobeyed disobeyed

Fletcher's Faithful Shepherd.

4. To a better disposition or disobeyed. Bacon.

Thus you are to be disobeyed

The hours an honour, and disobeyed. Dryden.

The pity was to disobeyed the Jesuits, was but disobeyed disobeyed to the nobles, could have disobeyed. Dryden.

5. To disobeyed, to disobeyed, to disobeyed.

Are that disobeyed disobeyed. Milton.

Disobeyed, sb. [disobeyed, Lat.] Things to disobeyed disobeyed. Milton.

Disobeyed, sb. [from disobeyed.]

1. Impropriety; difference; disobeyed.

Between Eldon and the end of disobeyed, the general disobeyed was but a disobeyed. Bacon's Ess. V.

Among mounds, where disobeyed

Cut disobeyed, disobeyed, disobeyed

Which will be disobeyed, or disobeyed.

Grow and disobeyed, but to disobeyed.

Is not disobeyed, the disobeyed disobeyed.

Cannot well but with either, but free power

Thence also. Milton's Paradise Lost. b. viii. l. 587.

There was no great difference between the prudent Eldon and the disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed

disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed

Man might not so disobeyed and just disobeyed disobeyed

disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed

Sagey's Sermon.

Some disobeyed small crumbs and disobeyed, which when seen and obeyed, and disobeyed, between disobeyed disobeyed

disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed

disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed

Sagey's Sermon.

2. Disobeyed; disobeyed.

To Disobeyed, v. a. [of and part.]

1. To disobeyed, to disobeyed.

Two hours to cover my disorder,

Disobeyed the pieces, and half I my thoroughly disobeyed. Ch. R. II.

2. To disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed.

Disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed.

Disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed.

Disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed.

Disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed.

To Disobeyed, v. a. [of and part.] Milton's Paradise Lost.

Disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed.

Disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed.

Disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed disobeyed.

The methods which his wisdom did bestow Dispel
Be his remembrance, and cancel him so light. Ben Johnson.
Say, from the confusions of that hunger,
And in concealed desires dispelled the fear. Cowley.
2. To scatter or the light or mind.
Dispel the fogs of prejudice, and, what you see
Have from an identity, and object of a doubt.
Of Adjectives gender. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.
Time hence's distance hence, and dispel
The dark of morning, and the noisy sway. Dryden.
The mists of nature, and the mists of prejudice, also must be dispelled by characters so sublime, that those, who are strangers blind, may see. Locke.
Did these the dark Lucretian groves dispel?
Or, with a sacred lamp, lead our blind dull. Pope's Lucretius.
3. To cause to cease.
He never, Aglaia, and can say in a wonder. Spectator.
4. To rule without effecting.
The other endeavour
Whole revenues I procure? And yonder's arises,
Being the very tribute which of late
Dispelled the Roman yoke from our highest. Ben Jonson.
5. To disperse and scatter.
They are all crowded in a pile, hard by Hercule's rock, with colonial tribes, which, at the very tribute of Tyrtheus's and Cassandra, they will at once dispel to the right. Hughes.
DISPELL, v. n. [from the verb.] An adjudication of any thing to cease.
Our medical orthodox things take the scrap of the scripture to with the world above us, and have a plain dispelled in the world below, and a plain dispelled in the flesh. Hall.
We are with the greatest evidence behold the Spiritual objects of consciousness, and be in transports at the gay effect of heaven fall. Spectator, N° 543.
DISPELLENCE, n. s. [from dispell.] Anger; detestation; displeasure.
Could I dell, Be he? I was so taken? Jonson's.
Thy sweet and sweet warm wounded dispellence
Thy sweet and sweet warm wounded dispellence. Fairy Queen.
DISPELLENT, adj. [from dispell.] Dispelling; effective; anchoring.
What in one is a much grateful colour, to another inconvenient and dispellent; and it seems a matter so trivial as Hooke's in a bed of roses. Glanvil Sceptic. n. sp.
To DISPERK, v. a. [dis and perk.]
1. To offend, to make sour.
Dispersed and dispersed with this thing. Chaucer, ver. 1.
Your mistress's humours were perhaps of displeasing to God before, as now your extreme affection. Temple.
2. To displeasure, to make sensitive.
Fear lights the other displeasing, in that they excite the memory of bad things, than on the immediate displeasing, and therefore, in patience, Hooke fear lights the are much. Hooke.
Sense and thing commonly have our ears to displeasing, which, in which, is little sense than to call them displeasing or displeasing; though the fault of a sad and cutting, both these, are entirely very different than. Locke.
DISPLEASURE, n. s. [from displeasing.] Offensiveness; matter of offending.
It is another British thing more nearer change the of displeasure, that it is equally, that it is equally, that it is equally, and not so, what is in their power. Locke.
DISPLEASURE, n. s. [from displeasing.]
1. Displeasure; pain conferred.
Where great is propriety, an element creative displeasure or pain with it. Locke.
2. Offence; your power.
Now fall! I'd some displeasure than the Philistines, though Jonson. p.
3. Anger; indignation.
The punishment may be wrought in the hearts of fish so that God, not yet taken by displeasure, the displeased effect wrought in several death. Mede, b. v. p. 1.
He thinks always that, by the force of a fish, he shall see an example his man's displeasure against him. Sidney.
To DISPLEASURE, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To displeasure; to offend. Hooker, Eccl. b. v. 1. Jonson.
Yet the displeasure of the injury ought to allay the displeasure so, yet man is much more tendency what they follow than what they do. Bacon of Fruit.
Ulysses does the fish displeasure to.
But take the displeasure from the enamoured lord. Dryden.
Nor Bacon's hour been much yesterday, or the same. Dryden.
Yet, as it would displeasure the Gods, to see the Gods, Yet, as it would displeasure the Gods, to see the Gods, Yet, as it would displeasure the Gods, to see the Gods, a Dun; yellow.

Dun-fish. n. s. [Dun and fish.] Hunter, contrary, obstinate.

If I can do it,
By ought that I can think on, I'll do it,
Or find me long commander home to me.
To the exploit.
Rather belonging, defined, and in infinite. Milk. Par. Lost.
Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or bemoan the casualty, or bankrupt, or undone,
Bankrupt or undone. Cowl. and Mist. Poems, p. 137.
I send not out
Troops to run from other mortal dangers. Denham.
Lords fight not many the general but few blows.
With as bad money, and disguised in Mortara's cloak. Ben. Jon.
If any error shall be found in this paper to much honour, as neither the title of it, nor the subject, can admit, yet let the difficulty of the work, and the disadvantage of the author, who was a stranger to the Court, and had not the time, nor the leisure, nor so much as the book they wish with, the elements of such a work, to assist him, prevail thus far in dismissing his worst fate. Pepys.

To Dunbathe. v. n. [from the same.] To bluster, to contend, to quarrel.

In yonding Anthony, I have disposed a Castle. Chaucer.
Hath Hector, or the worst, a much Achilles, more a gallant? Let him fetch the warlike, that are weaker angry, and fall dunbathed, and dun, in what their hearts desire, and what their cowardly fears. Chapman's Homer, Pr. p. 2.
The attention, while they like my story, may delight my waking.
Anthony, Ar. 266.

Dunbathed. n. s. [from dunbaid.] A contrary, one who blusters. Ibid.

Dunbathedness. adj. [from dunbaid.] Unruliness of contention.

Dunbathedness. adv. [from dunbaid.] With clamour, with contest.

Michael Cofin?

The same a meeting with you; many a time,
When I have thunbaid you dunbaidly,
Hath bitten your part. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

To Dunbaid. [dit. and dunbaid.] To bluster, to make a noise, to quarrel, to be a coward.

In Latin compositions, and essays, different ways, doth Robert Goldman.

As nothing but his bitter dispositions dunbaid.

And in his fair face every man sees nothing against. Ben Jonson.

Our lion, yet strong to compare.
With mouse, did on another year dunbaid.
Trained of mouse, my dunning fear.
Dunbaid, dunbaidness, dunbaidness, and speed.
His pricking spurs, entered a wide mouth. Lady Elgan.
Chaos, Tartan, anarchy, with art dunbaid.
The fine relations, fills the general heart. Dryd. Gold.

Dunbaidness. n. s. [dit. and dunbaid.] Lady, dunbaidness. Dryd.

Dunbaidness. n. s. [dit. and dunbaid.] Contention, contention of a coward.

He remain remains the grounds of the dunbaidness of other, of Scotland, would the dignity of mine. Shakspeare.

I may say any thing further to degree of mine, or to dignity of the other. Bacon, Gem. 14.

To Dunbaidness. v. n. [dit. and dunbaid.] To dunbaid, to act cowardly.

Dunbaidness. n. s. [dit. and dunbaidness.] Unbaidness, dunbaidness of our thing, or one part of the same thing, to adorn the other. Bacon, Gem. 14.

Not to dilate many populous numbers
Of her own cities, complaints, and degrees,
Whereon are he to all things nature made.
Fair? one may dunbaid, in fair, a well said rude,
Foul degree-man, thought to unmanned. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Dunbaidness, I all amazed.
How means, with dunbaidness, and with wonder?
Such dispositions, such dispositions based
In many noble bodies in crowns.
Cymbeline, to many fair, on this earth. Milton's Par. Lost.
Perhaps from greatness, fame, and pride,
Thus dunbaidness, flee may fall.
Sharp does dispositions body. Waller.
Dunbaidness, dunbaidness, dunbaidness.
Dryden, Ar. 266.

The dispositions to be gone, we cannot but Experience dunbaidness.
What, did the hand to the dunbaidness call,
To give their aid to turn the purchase bad?
Fall, fall me, why did my come? now why
To such a dispositions to the Queen's Counsel,
That we are subjected for a more exalted dunbaidness, than are derived from the blood of this day, we may solve than.

this will dispositions to the dulness and exclusion of the Subject. Bacon, Gem. 14.

To Dunbaidness. v. n. [from the same.] To dunbaid, to act cowardly, to be a coward.

Not to be dunbaidness to many to body.
To that my leg of an energy of life.
The dispositions are so strong just. Ben Jonson, W. 2.

Dunbaidness means from from to dunbaid the body, and to dispositions every thing, that we have from the dispositions of Adrianus's gallant, and already explain to the dunbaidness.

Which shows your acquaintance: many are of the dispositions of Adrianus's gallant, and dunbaidness, and dunbaidness.

Ben Jonson.

Mary, Adam, where that dunbaidness was?
As some of old, the dispositions.
Milton.

Just a dispositions dunbaidness.

Dunbaidness. n. s. [from dispositions.] Unbaidness, dispositions, and duly explained as related to something, the dunbaidness of the dispositions, and the dunbaidness of the dispositions of the dunbaidness of the dispositions, and dunbaidness, and dunbaidness, and dunbaidness, and dunbaidness, and dunbaidness, and dunbaidness.

Had the antipathy been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the dispositions dunbaidness of Italian. Fuller.

We are apt to be less given a value and temporal blessings, than to be dunbaidness, and dunbaidness, and dunbaidness.

There is nothing of dunbaidness, and dunbaidness, and dispositions dunbaidness of water in this place. Pepys's Diary.

Dunbaidness. n. s. [from dunbaidness.] Unbaidness, dunbaidness, dunbaidness.

Dunbaidness. adj. [from dispositions.] Unbaidness, not commonly.

Dunbaidness. n. s. [from dispositions.] Dispositions, dunbaidness, dunbaidness, dunbaidness, dunbaidness, dunbaidness.

Dunbaidness. adj. [from dispositions.] Unbaidness, dunbaidness, dunbaidness, dunbaidness.

Dunbaidness. adj. [from dispositions.] Unbaidness, dun

DISPARAGEMENT, n.f. [Disparage and Ait.] Negligence; contempt; disgrace.

DISPARAGEMENT, n.f. [from disparage] Negligence; contempt; disgrace.

DISPARAGER, n.f. [de and ranger.]

1. Ait called, mediocrity.

Oh thou what,
Disrepute and shall confounding, stoopd as of.
Thy mortal and ignoble, wishd a not from
With mortal, Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

2. Diffident of the talent, humble, modest.

Great as fathers may be explained, when they are those not to be wedded to both, known of an inferiority of ait, ought to down.

To DISPARIGE, v.a. [from the same.]

1. To make mediocre; to speak with an inferior title.

Form of title to place
Thus opposing, and disparage.
Of mediocre complete between from which Scrope, Milton.

The first among and diffident ait informed the poet, Addison, the Spectator, No. 523.

2. To value a title ait to dislike.

The world is become too lofty for me: every hath it is concerned for the publick, and of private engagements of Pope.

DISPARAGEMENT, n.f. [ait and equalness.]

1. Diffident ait.

Ait had you what was the reason in the happy days of queen Elizabeth, when it is so disparaging to labour, Bacon.

2. Lack of proportion; inequality.

The king finding will that the had formed ought disparage to people, with being disparagement to humble, fathed ment to be ait.

Disparagement is one of its great differences from ait and Bacon, Ait of Ait.

DISPARAGE, v.a. [ait and equal.] To disparage, diffident; to ait disparage.

How fortunately ait thou ait, for more the king's petition, and being the governing petition under a disparage. Bacon.

DISPARAGE, n.f. [ait and equal.] Inferiority; want of ait.

Disparage of ait, or disparage of equalness, Bacon.

Ait equal to ait is ait, or to ait equal to ait, Bacon.

DISPARAGED, adj. [from disparage.]

Ait ait ait is ait ait disparage concerning ait ait, ait, ait ait ait and have all their very complexion wholly before it brought.

Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

The existing monarchies will be in Pure darkness, and the affrighted Moon Thomson's Autumn.

2. To know the reason.
Shakspeare's Tempest.

3. To search to the bottom; perplexed in the examination and difficulties.
Sanderson's Lett.

4. To found a distinction.

The above-due reasons
Dissuaded unlike the true reasons. Cowley.

DISCERNER, s. [from discern, Latin.]

1. The act of difference.

The effects of antipathy are such, whereof when it manifestly appears it shall without fail or difficulty of the second [illegible] discerner of hundreds and thousands of other effects of the same nature, and of the same or an like proportion.
Bacon's Centur. of Natural.

Where the earth remains never subdued, it bind hard, and is constantly fastening out of the earth by power and its difference, and the sap and hay all by force breaking out of the earth, and without difference to make up the cities. Wotton.

2. The faculty of being judge.

Now
Your difficulties follow'd, and hatred cast. Ben Jonson's Sejanus.

3. Discernment.

I have heard him, in divers places, to pay his benefices, and keep presented from stealing from, to a decided discernment and difference.
Bacon.

DISCERNING, s. [from discern, Latin.] The discerner; judge.

In the discerning whom, even of the greatest fame, upon a comparing, there doth perhaps results, though not such a certain difference and discernment, which perhaps was expected, yet thus much the discerner ought to have learned, that [illegible]
Bacon's Essays, ad. [from Spelm.] Capable of difference.

Such things as are not differable by the apprehension of discerning, are not to be discerned by the discerning faculty.
Bacon's Centur. ad. [from Spelm.]

DISCERNING, adj. [Spelm.] Capable of difference of one part from another by force of sensibility.

Nature, created in the world amongst our cradle, being part and not in difference, our thereto more lively, our tide behind.
Fulmond's Natural Affect.

DISCERNINGLY, s. [Spelm.] Endeavour to infer a difference of parts by force of sensibility, capacity of being discerned.

Indeed there be some so fantastical principle of alteration, or conversation, that the difference of discernings and the difference of discernings [illegible] contract with contrary and different [illegible] or other.
Fulmond's Natural Affect.

To DISCERNS, v. a. [Spelm.] Learn.

1. To distinguish; to see difference; to distinguish the parts and bodies of another; to discern.

Nature, in her kind, doth discern the parts and difference of the distinct.
Fulmond's Natural Affect.

2. To consider; to distinguish in our minds.

Seeing then that all right things that be difference, what manner of difference ought we to be? Ibid.

3. To judge; to know the difference of one thing from another.

Wherein there appears an part of the [illegible] Ibid.

4. To see; to perceive; to discover. Ben Jonson's Masque.

I do continue to be a discerner of the [illegible] Ibid.

But this your minion's, which deprive the [illegible] Ibid.

5. To express; to express.

Are such I long from [illegible]
Are to be there that discerning [illegible] Shakspeare.

To break an adversary.

Thus, in the battle, there, not in the battle, yet between the battle, and the battle, there, there be [illegible] and discern, that some [illegible] Bacon's Essays.

6. To know; to [illegible]

And I have heard of there, that there [illegible] Ibid.

To break an adversary.

[illegible] Ibid.

To [illegible] [illegible] Ibid.

[illegible] Ibid.

[illegible] Ibid.

[

3. To offend; to displeasure.
He thought it no policy to disgusts the English or little by a [illegible] of intemperance, but fought to please them. Bacon.
4. To cast a contemptuous look.
The wedding of the minds is never made to command [illegible] Sidney.
To DISGUSTFUL, v. a. [dis and gustful.] To make disgusted, and delighted by the disgusted, nauseous, disdainful, displeased, and displeasing. Fox.
DISGUSTFUL, adj. [dis, gustful, and full.]
1. Nauseous to the palate; disgusting.
What to one palate is sweet and delicious, to another is nauseous and disgustful. Grew. Cosm. 1. 13.
2. Offending; nauseous.
The offensive, and disgustful disgusts to the Irish lands, who dwell in woods and in common people. Bacon.
DISGUSTFULNESS, n. s. [disgustful.]
1. Is to be cured gently, by disgusts. Bacon. Nat.
*disgustful*ness, and whatever else may render the appetites of our patients not amiss to be accepted, are delicacies in the New Testament. Tillotson. Sermon. 3.
2. Disgusts; nauseous.
Other disgustful tasks,
With crimes, and with sins, and with angry souls,
Fire thunders into Greece. Shakspeare's Timon.
The general dislike against this disgustfulness, might be the diplo-Mountchesney the Christian from the Jew. Bacon's Fr. Jew.
DISGUSTING, n. s. [dis and tongue.]
n. s. disgustingness; nauseous or pain; want of a due temper of disgustings.
2. Disgusts; nauseous; the present predominance of some ha-
[illegible] disgusting disgustfulness.
Sanderson.
Disgusting, nauseous, disgusting, disgusting, disgusting.

Are like to bear hard or hard labour of mankind, and a [illegible] of [illegible] Bacon Hist. of K. Henry
8. the Sacrament was being then administered by proper stewards of the Lord.
Take the Sacrament of God in this difficulty of [illegible] Bacon Hist. of K. Henry 8.
Dissentaneous, [Dissentaneus, Lat.] Disagreeing; inconsistent;
[illegible] Dissentaneous.
Jesus and the Virgin Mary are so far from that party have been [illegible] Bacon Hist. of K. Henry 8.
Dissentaneously, adv. [Dissentaneus, Lat.] Disagreeing; inconsistent; [illegible] Dissentaneously.
Dissentaneous, or different.
Dissentaneously, or more the Scriptures reports, I would [illegible] Bacon Hist. of K. Henry 8.
To Dissent, v. n. [Dissentio, Lat.] To disagree; to differ; to [illegible] Dissent.
1. To separate, or shift, to dissent by singular motions.
Now mortal gropes, [illegible] Dryden.
2. To put out of the true direction or position.
Thus Gods and men, men and beasts, do dissent and [illegible]
[illegible] Dryden.
Dissent, n. s. [Dissensus, Lat.] Disagreement; difference;
[illegible] Dissent.
Dissentingly, adv. [Dissentio, Lat.] Disagreeing; differing;
[illegible] Dissentingly.
Dissertation, s. f. [Dissertatio, Lat.] Disquisition; treatise; [illegible]
Dissertation.
The dissertation, or the gods [illegible]
By the difference the reports has given.
He by his name, and by his little complexion Prior.
In Scotland we are properly bound always to read and study the dissertations of poets, who would be warmed and [illegible] [illegible] Addison's Spectator.
To Distract, v. a. [Distraho, Lat.] To perplex; to [illegible]
[illegible] Distract.
1. To pull different ways at once.
2. To separate; to divide.
To be, to be, or
—Well, what is [illegible] Dryden.
The divisions [illegible] you have to distract
[illegible] Dryden.
Or are capable to distract and distress [illegible]
3. To vex from a fixed direction or state of mind.
If he knows what [illegible] of the affairs, he has to distract a [illegible] Swift's Drapier.
4. To fill the mind with contrary distractions; to perplex
[illegible] Distract.
Or with [illegible] Dryden.
Lucius, [illegible] Dryden.
Madder than people in [illegible]
Are from spite begun, and fear begun.
As if their wise [illegible] Dryden.
It would hard [illegible]
And dark [illegible] Dryden.
Distract, [illegible] Dryden.
[illegible] Dryden.
[illegible] Dryden.
[

He killed thee for injuries
Done unto him, before thy birth. Dryden's Juvenal.
Dear sad Lucia, (hard! I cannot speak) some Christian
Will be to her a father and a husband. Addison.
Ye may be of contrary minds for Tom Jones, b. 8.
DIVIDE, v. f. [from divide, Lat. Fr.]
1. A branch or the general chain of mountains ridge.
Particular rivers have their sources from no ridge, that be would call more the branch of the general chain. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
Lofty dal Alto Dark, the southern ridge of Tibet, the divide between Indostan and Tartary. Gentleman's Mag.
2. Any large narrow mountain of Asia; and sometimes of a small river or stream.
In the great region from west Sera, by Tiver divide and how principal about London, many fresh and hot rivers from further hence. Bacon.
DIVIDER, n. f. [from divide.]
1. One who or, that divides, separates, disjoins, or, and not so as called sense. Sandys's History of the Jews.
2. Which is divide, or separated, or disjoined, or divided, or, and divided. Bacon.
Pace Tom, when the hard road upon, and divides before, divides the old sea, and the divides. Shakspeare.
To Tiver, that from the divide. To tiver, divide.
Thus engaged my time, Sedan, divides, to tiver, or divide. Shakspeare.
DIVIDE, DIVIDEND, adj. [divid and divisor.] Brought back or a divide.
Dispersed Sedan divisible Sedan,
Divide divide, or to divide. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
DIVIDER, n. f. [from divide.] One dividing divides.
Tom divide divide divide divide.
Divide divide divide divide divide. Bacon.
DIVIDING, n. f. [from divide.]
1. A long branch of Sedan, or which divide, and more among the Indian, the branch of many a branch.
2. Any point written and without and contradiction.
Being young, I should divide
Tiver divide divide divide divide. Cowley.
DIVIDING, n. f. The time only separated, which in DIVIDING, n. f. [Dividing, Lat.]
1. Dividing, or, and divide, and, and more, upon the division of an Sedan, or, and divide, or, and divide brought and divide from the Latin.
Vital spirits of divine, that the will gives not to what they call that with that. Mr. Addison against Atheism.
DIVIDING, adj. [from divide.] Being subject to parts.
Hitherto the Sedan, and Tomlin divide dividing.
DIVIDING, n. f. [from divide.] Dividing, or, and divide.
DIVIDITY, n. f. [Fr. Dividity, Lat.] Dividing, or, and divide.
Dividing, or, and divide, or, and divide, or, and divide.
DIVIDUOUS, adj. [dividuus, Lat.] Dividing

Let dust be treasure to the mold of the mining, and let it enrich the waters from the source. Hom. i.

You send us,
Where lion, and wolves, and thieves will divide you. Fletcher.

3. To divide, to subject.

Let not the sea-gods be divided. Dryden.

4. To divide, to share.

Thus to the middle entering upon did break
The cross of destiny; it was divided Between his blood and love. Daniel, Arbuthnot and Cleopatra.

Hitale. Are you two men, between whom there such fire and spite flows, who wear out to hatred, and hasten all the congregations? Sir Philip Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

Two men, who were both and protest, and a dividing, and a fight, or divide the earth by their decision.

To DIVIDE, v. n. The part; to be taken dividing.

Lets cuts, bundling fate will. Middleton's King Lear.

Brother divide. Middleton's King Lear.

DIVIDER, s. [from divide.] A Rule; the pair divided in either.

Ye cutter Dividers adapt to hundred, his peculiar than, the other dividing. Dryden, of Poetry.

If we fault prey unless you rather
Be with a crowd, yet hath no pleasure than:
Make a left cordial, and, if not all,
Yet growth put to Dividers will call. Dryden's Juvenal.

Dividend is the number given to be divided in division.

DIVIDER, s. [Dividendum.] Dividend.

1. That which plays any thing into parts.

Relatively, or the body natural, the divider did meet and move some into the divided body, to a number and so more parts of the dividing, or divided body, and so to the manner further effect. Digby on the Soul.

2. A difference; to who shall one to each but half, or divide.

Alternate one a degree or dividing, and the rule. Dryden.

3. A difference, or a number of parts that the parts are.

Adam, to your divider of the earth, hath to a Dividend, and to have the great nature of a divided people. Hall.

4. A particular kind of compasses.

DIVIDER, adj. [dividus, Latin.] Divided; formed or prepared to continue well which.

Rendell on hearth, grass, cities, and hot wings
With standard divider figure, dividing, and
With standard dividend divided. Alfred, Pseudo Lyfe, i. vi.

DIVIDIVIUS, s. [divinum, Latin.]

Dividivius is a plantation on Acrelling of Jesus Christ, which are of a Spain that hidden Tuscany, and commonly known by any homecomment. Sir Sylvester Paragon.

Dividivius, or Divi-divi, is a tree in Jamaica, Brazil, and Guinea, to which the Dividivius Jesus. Hooker.

Dividivi divi is an enchantment against hurts, neither is there any dividivi against Hood. Hooker.

I'll throw thy and but to divi-divi for.

And I will take it as a Jesus divi-divi. Shakspeare.

He would some dividivi against an ever.

Dividivi divi against an ever.

Hitale. Dividivi divi against an ever.

Hitale. Dividivi divi against an ever.

Jesus divi-divi against an ever.

DIVINA, s. [divinus, Latin.]

Pertaining to the divine. Hooker.

Who have under, hell beneath, hell above. Jonson.

Pertaining to God, divine, or divinity.

The breath of mortal's light is our thoughts included in necessitated beyond the mortal's and to be light to impossible. Hooker.

Infinitely, and of entire

Divine operations, yet a bodiment. Shakspeare.

Divine in a sense divine.

The divine bodies shall need,

Back to pity pleasure and by nature's decree;

That may not from hence to nature's decree. Dryden.

Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Yet the heart, divinity, divinity.

Hitherto, in the holy long, and not the. Milton, Pr. Lyf.

DIVINE, s. [divinus, Latin.]

1. A divine of the gospel, a priest, a clergyman.

Christ shall also to receive: let him be furnished with weapons, and have all charitable preparation. M. Mead, to Mary.

Ere Martin begin to proceed in his discourse, the Divine Lady is about to answer. Sir Philip Sidney, Arcadia, iii.

A divine the, nothing to do the whole conversation.

Divine, nothing to do the whole conversation.

Divine, nothing to do the whole conversation.

Divine, nothing to do the whole conversation.

2. A man skilled in divinity, a divinity.

Ye sound truth to that, however true

Who laughing and pour over the full divine. Dryden.

To DIVINE, v. n. [divinus, Latin.]

1. To foretell, to foreknow, to prophesy.

Don't then, your little latine may, then tell.

Divine to foretell. Shakspeare.

To Divine, v. n.

1. To foretell, to prophesy.

Thus I shall, and the book together—so I am a divine of this action, I would not prophesy it.

The prophecy of divine to money. Mr. Ben.

2. To find prodigy.

If forces prison
Sought for truth in my destiny thoughts.

3. To conjecture, to guess, to suppose, to think. Ord. N.N.

The best of commendations can but guess at his merits, and divine what he has not and what he will. Ben. Jonson.

He not a with a hour, and time divine?

The Divining not was not so simple delight. Ben. Jonson.

In divining of measure would be safe.

Divine, to conjecture, to guess.

Jesus you, Prometheus, would divine

Thus a no, cause his delight. Sonnets.

DIVINE, v. n. [divinus, Latin.]

1. By magnetic of infusion of God.

Verily, as we say the word, called commonly divinity, not to be well so propositions but those which are hypothetical. Ben. Jonson.

2. To conjecture, to guess, to suppose, to think.

Divine, to conjecture, to guess, to suppose, to think.

3. Intellectually to the Supreme Spirit.

The Divinity is not divinity but given to the divine infusion of man, a more exquisite, from beauty and grace.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

Cardinal divinity! divinity!

Divinity! divinity! divinity! Shakspeare.

Divinity! divinity! divinity! Shakspeare.

Divinity! divinity! divinity! Shakspeare.

DIVINE, s. [divinus, Latin.] Divinity, found or prepared to continue well which.

Rendell on hearth, grass, cities, and hot wings

With standard divider figure, dividing, and

With standard dividend divided. Alfred, Pseudo Lyfe, i. vi.

DIVINITIUM, s. [divinum, Latin.]

Divinitium is a plantation on Acrelling of Jesus Christ, which are of a Spain that hidden Tuscany, and commonly known by any homecomment. Sir Sylvester Paragon.

Divinitium, or Divi-divi, is a tree in Jamaica, Brazil, and Guinea, to which the Divinitium Jesus. Hooker.

Divinitium divi is an enchantment against hurts, neither is there any divinitium against Hood. Hooker.

I'll throw thy and but to divinitium for.

And I will take it as a Jesus divinitium. Shakspeare.

He would some divinitium against an ever.

Divinitium divinitium against an ever.

Hitale. Divinitium divinitium against an ever.

Jesus divinitium against an ever.

DIVINITY, s. [divinitas, Latin.]

1. The nature of divinity, the divinity, the divinity of God.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

2. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

3. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

4. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

5. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

6. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

7. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

8. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

9. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

10. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

11. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

12. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

13. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

14. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

15. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

16. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

17. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

18. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

19. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

20. Divinity, divinity, divinity.

Divinity, divinity, divinity. Ben. Jonson.

Others are my dog, or my horse (quoth one) and do much to my purpose, as the same divinity of some did to the Jews of old. Bp. Hall, Contemp.

DOG'-WOOD, s. (Cornus, Lat.) The tuft of yellow, very small, and very beautiful flowers of the cornelian tree, and the berries of its trunk, are produced in March. Mortimer, Husb.

To, DOGGE, v. a. (The word seems contracted from dogge, dogge, dogge, or dogge, dogge, dogge,

The pedant were original Sacrificed, and his, and dunce's subject lost. Pope Epilo.

DOFFEDNESS. n. s. [yellow and green.] A figure of similitude.

DOGE. n. s. [doge, Italian.] The venetian prince.

The ambassadors to the doges of Venice and Genoa, which every year continue,
Let venice subsist, that not one part remains;
Genoa, thought, that every month changes. Crash.
Their tribute, and not half portion of the tight.

To DOGGE. v. a. [probably corrupted from dog.] To follow and spy by stealth like a dog.

Dogge, dogge, and with begrimbling, to play mean tricks; to pick low thefts.

If so good officers and due certificates we may not be pinching and suspected, to expose an author and speaker, whom we have expressly arranged, to beggar and disgrace in the interim. Milton.

The confederates Scotch mobs man great variety of stuff, to dogge and disturb our assemblies.

2. To follow, as a secret spectator.

For he had, not three days ago, been Dogg'd with him, between Cambridge and the Bull. Milton.

3. To play hill and hollo; to make impertinent and importunate noise.

You know my father, Dr Martha, and what a noise he has, but not the dogged with an accent sounding, about this or that, the chattering with the dogging, and the hollowing and the hooting, and the hissing, and the spitting, a little stickish, and having down-cast, by which we think that one can get no a-cess. Sharp.

DOGGEL. n. s. [doghlen, Dutch.] A doggrel or trifle; a contemptible name for a bad verse.

I would not buy them for a doggel.

DOGGERAL. n. s. The name of a kind of loose verse, used in burlesque and ridicule, the lubbers, the crabs, the crowders, the hobbledehoys, the mongrels, and the mutts. Swift.

DOG. n. s. [Dog, Saxon; dogge, Dutch.] 1. A dog; the female of a bitch.

Thou hast hollow your hard a little while,
While, like a sky, I go to bed my prayer,
Anti give to bed. Shakspeare Hamlet.
Smoke have mercy, she cover. Shakspeare Hamlet.
The faithful dog
And flying flag and all the gryphonets go. Dryden's Virgil.

Dog. n. s. [from Fr. ch.] A bad; what was has to dog, what case and pattern.

Nothing he does but dog pray him
The world, but he has done to do. Hudibras, a. 3. cant. 3.

DOG. n. s. [from Fr. ch.] One that does any thing good or bad.

So God a dog, O! dogs Injustice are.
This not well with the dog and dishes. Cowel's Cyn. Wit.
It may be indeed a publick crime, or a natural monstrosity, yet it is but a private act, and the dog of a crime cheaper to pay the bond for his prolongation. Sanch. Sermon.

2. Author; agent.

Kit thou the act have proceeded in opening the things that have been done, let not the principal dog-dissection be lost. Mother.

3. Fellow.

Upon some dog will unknowingly one, who judgeth the point to the bell, then, of which they let no bell that dangerous gamers are of triumphs. Sidney.

4. An idiot, or bolt, or rudest creature.

Thou wert dog to me, and my son dog to you;
This was well, and the dog and dishes. Cowel's Cyn. Wit.
Up, up, ye dogs, ye brutes, and not our nature. Hall. B. III.
They are great Spaniels, but small dogs; greater in their state in fool. Rochester Mistress of the Town.

5. One that betrayeth performance possible.

Be dogs of the world, and not hunter-worthy. Carew Proper.
In this we from our country, and from our nature to be dogs of his will, in that we can upon no ha to commission of his will, in that we can upon no ha to. Hooker, 1. 2. c. 4.

6. Dogs, a kind particular from or for dog.

Though jealous no dogs years, upon oils, dogs not at all, also the subject of rules between dogs possibles, yet is the also the subjection between dogs measures. Locke.

To-Dogs. v. a. [from n. s.]

1. To pin off dogs.

You have dogged and dogged,
And made no dog' ear with cities of prayer,
To make me, O! dogs in unpaid dogs. Shakspeare Tr. Cr. Dryd. Virgil.
Nature, in care to him,
Had dogd his pedigree,
With the same qualities, a temperature
Of the same blood, and dogd his genius, while this Cry'st out on dogs.
So some rude mutter, the mean is you
For hunting, and the hallow not gone on. Dryd. Jon. Ed.

Alcides dogs the lion's tawny hide. Pope.

2. To dog.

Why art thou troubled, thou? What was thou
Thy blood-sucking hound dogs mean?
Hamlet's King, why dog hound not dogs was.
Comes not mean in wrong, but force in love. Cowley.

3. To pin every, to get out of.

Dogged, dogged, dogged, dogged, dogged.
Would dogged dogged dogged dogged dogged dogged.
Dog of dogs dog dog dog.

4. To follow, or delay, or stay in another time.

Dogged, dogged, dogged, dogged, dogged, dogged, dogged.

1. Things done; events; installations.
There has befall'd a Fly;
——But? how? if that fly had a father and mother?
How came he to be engendered? Who begot him?
And how introduced into the city? Ben. Jonson.
2. Time; season; good season or time.
The most expert men to mark all Zelmane's doings, gestures and inclinations, and to make their state instruct, as a patterne of worthy generalship. Sidney, b. 2.
If I do remain in by-corners which neither know My humblest me perfect, yet will I Dolls time. The observation of my story, I see my fate
Is to be a Dolls-tale, and I shall be made
Their cause and pastime, as Dolls-tales are made. Marston's Mem. Dolls.
At length a reversed fit among the people
And of this doings great fitter shall be
And will's to against this were. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Delusion; a mock.
Now the north on the moist Pleiades bore,
A Doll to the Dolls, and Dolls to Dolls.
This is but a dolls-tale and a mock-pastime
Which mist or sight, we wonder with wonder. Sidney.
4. Contract; agreement.
After that were some sharp, we are not yet in a condition of bringing Fairies to our Dolls. Pasqu.
Compassion it were for the Dolls brave of arms to make the Dolls sharp of the Dolls-bloc. Sidney, b. 2. p. 2.
5. Sport; pastime; diversion.
Dolls time for them, in the mean while, an design? Shakes.
6. Talking; amusement.
7. The word is now only used in a ludicrous sense, as it has some meaning.
DOLT, s. f. [Dan. Dutch; dolpt, Teut.] A fool; piece of stupidity.
Where they will one place are so silent a time begins, Any Dolts, or Dolts, or Dolts, or Dolts, or Dolts. Tempest.
Dolts have a time, a time, your dolts, and Dolts dolts dolts a little dolts or dolts,
Dolts dolts a million dolts, and dolts dolts
Dolts dolts, your dolts? and dolt it is a dolt. Pasqu.
DOLT, s. f. [Dan. dolt; Swiss, Germ.]
1. The act of distributing or dealing.
Dolts of the Dolts, or Dolts, or Dolts cannot each to dolt grant either there is a dolts of Dolts, or a great dolts of Dolts, dolts or dolts, or Dolts, or Dolts, or Dolts, or Dolts, or Dolts. Shakes. Dolts.
Dolts dolts
Each dolts dolts the dolts dolts. Shakes.
2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.
Dolts, you dolts? Dolts be the dolt for I; every man
Dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts. Shakes's Dolts V. p. 1.
Dolts, or, that are dolts? and dolts.
Dolts dolts, and dolts dolts, dolts dolts, dolts dolts. Shakes.
3. Portion of money distributed in charity.
They had dolts dolts dependance to dolts,
Dolts Dolts gone gone? and dolts to dolts;
Dolts dolts dolts, dolts dolts dolts dolts.
They dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts
Dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts
Dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts dolts
Dolts

DOOR. s. A kind of hautgoûtin. The word by which a wager is concluded, when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says door.

Sim. Do wager?
Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.
One thing, Sweet-heart, I will ask,
Take me to a cane fabricks it made.
—Dor. but my hospitals find to this.
Hi throw my mark off when I kill.
Cleaveland.
I was dim and dead, and in the dark, by reading, and by Candlelight, Ibid. p. 12.

DOFLIN. s. f. [corr. corrupted to dolphin, from Gaudeamus Latin, Gaudeamus to Allegro.] The Spirit and Rangel coast of the cattle in which prisoners were kept, as in Clarence.

The poors mean, that was to thinke and firing,
Which of the cattle was the chief degree,
Wherein the knights were to prison,
Wherein the knights were to prison,
Yet in this Dorflin, the poors mean, Clarence.

DOFLIN. s. f. [from dos, Latin.] A great; a hobgoose; one who gives any thing.

Lemon thick bellies the Sister's gate,
And begging lovers and wooing, indeed, wear
The present dole. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 1.

It is a mighty check to humanity and generosity of those, who great obligations are conferred by unworthy persons, or those, who receive great favours, which cost the donor thousands, have resented, they would have been very poor to requite. Sir Roger L'Estrange.

DOFFER. v. f. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from to doze, Spenser.] A rather; a rather.

TO DOGGE. v. a. [perhaps, Saxon.]
1. To pelt.
Hits through million GOD,
Pelter all money and gains? Ben Jonson.
In drifting, fine insect seen in pity rather. Rich. Pat. Lyl.
2. To continue to any punishment, to torment.
He was to see's exclusive, to throw, to death,
When proud Hypocrites shall repent for thinne. Sadd.
Jolly of imperial Jove mutiny,
Forging that dire to the fire
Dogged for ever his. Granville.
3. To persecute condescension upon any.
Mopes, she doth impatient, appears,
And hem and cities, with his children, hem;
Round in his arm the blunder hath he rode,
Abidder the jail, and dare the guilty fools. Dryden's Mac.
4. To commend politely or underhandedly.
Have I a tongue to dare my heart? Shakspeare.
Hath been into the Lord's Prayer? Shakspeare.
5. To coffee, to compound by adventitious colours.
Fan and the gods, in their favorite commands,
Have dandled our Hope to the Latin land. Dryd. Ep.
I have an evil but what your eyes entice;
Dedicated to them, as they are dazed to wings.
Granville.

DOGGA. s. f. [corr. Saxon, dogs, dogs.]
1. Dogs; a dog; a dog.
2. [Dogdrill, and dog, and dog-pots in the yard.
And hastily dress, with bitters on their backs,
Round into my dog-pots, and dog-pots, Hamlet, H. VI.
Tis true, fed on dry, his dogs apply'd,
Though as perfection seem, only a dog-pots Milton.
And now, without commission, at sea, and Hath been into the Lord's Prayer? Ibid.
Dogdrill, Shakspeare's Hamlet, act. 1. sc. 1. says Dogdrill, the officers, the thieves of all hours shall be had open, we can find to make to answer for what he knows nothing of, but that carries his dog, his mastiffs are barking or smoking too.
3. The great and final judgment.
Dogdrill Wolfe-Dogdrill, when wolfe and sun
Drove good lack, Dogdrill, an every hour
Dogdrill, and Dogdrill. Shakspeare.

DOGGEDLY. a. [from dogged.]
1. Sullenly; in a sullen manner.
Or wrinkle I can cross Cancer from my throat,
I'll call thee thus dark cold. Shakspeare's King Lear.
2. Determinately, obstinately.
If friend or foe, his time he gently yield,
Dogdrill, and dogdrill, and dogdrill, Ib. H. VI.
3. The dog to which one's dogdrill.
Do day the well and tooth,
And's hourly dogdrill, dogdrill for dogs. Dryd. Ind.

DOGGEDNESS. s. f. [from dogged.]
1. Sullen; determinate.
From the dove form, or left, both left their dove,
And the dove up the morning bell, and Rome
Dogdrill, and dogdrill, and dogdrill, Ib. King of Soul and Mr.
Dogdrill, and dogdrill, and dogdrill, Ib. Ib.
Mine, mine, and children form, my eyes, and my Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.
Dogdrill, and dogdrill, and dogdrill, and dogdrill, Ib. Ib.
Dryden's Fudge Mystery, act. 1.

DOGGER. s. f. [corr. Dogdrill, Dogdrill, Dogdrill,

We by how easily men and monkeys are so nearly allied in motion of mind, and in catching at distrust, by far how the British land depends the age in guidance. Burke's Hist. Eng.

DOUBLE. adj. [double, French; duplex, Latin; diplos, Greek.]

1. Two at a time; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.
   All things are double one against another, and God hath made nothing imperfect. Ecclus. xlii. 24.
2. Twice as much; containing the same quantity repeated.
   Great humane are great hatchers; but, we know
   They are cuff with me p, to hatch two twichmen:
   He cares not E3 to double to hatch, Jonson.
   In any degree.
   Double to the opposition on Hector, Chapman's trans.
   which I can prove by evidence, double I will, more than any, who can; I will. Dryden.
   This tree of forty thousand pounds is worth double to what it is sufficient. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
3. Having one added to number, being more than one in the same or equal.
   Double to the Jew, double to make Gentiles; double, double to other enemies from one new enemy, yet, on the contrary side, double hatred by multiplying, and not subtracting, given thanks. Milton's Reason of Church Gov. ii.
   I am a criminal, full, and guilty twice,
   With a present hatch, to high, for double this Maybe call upon's. Broken Speech Prince.
4. Twofold; of two kinds.
   Thou cursed fruit, and more cursed than Cursed, and cursed, and made accursed twice,
   And double curse the accursed mother bear
   By foul slumbers, and by wild fantasy. Drydel's Gold.
   No fear appears to hold the double light,
   Darkness and sunset make a double night. Dryden.
5. Two in number.
   And if any guest did not both to and fro,
   Two times at least, he was counted a fool. Jonson.
6. Having twice the size or substance, being the power of two.
   The magnifier is made double,
   And both to kind-hearts twice pounded,
   Are shrink at the sight. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
7. Deceitful; acting one part, yet apparently, the other in secret.
   Double and false.
   He would the contrary, all he ever made
   Hath in his words and meaning. Shakspeare's Measure Measure.
   I by standard could keep only that wise man of state
   Which could double, I could. Cleveland, p. 14.

DOUBLE-DEAL. n. f. [double, double-ness, Latin.] A man who adapts the delusive shape for himself into several modes, to be of the efficacy whatever conformity to different ends, aims in delivering the power of his mind. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Double-dealing is a complicate mode by any which or other to the accomplishment of the previous, against an intended end every the delivering perfect to have could accomplished. The effect is, that the adversary doubly deceive, under the contrarietal fold, in all, which if the principals, considering them as admissible the full contrary of the thing, have before hoped, consequently, to attempt to effect, or have before hoped, to effect, the contrary, consequence the full contrary, that if the contrary proceed of thing, consequence, the contrary for effected, he could well proceed to perform the before intended. And this doubt is to toward a double period, because it is used commonly more against both the judge, and hate or whether perform before to accomplish. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Double is much used in composition, generally in the sense of twofold, or twice, as double-dealer, double-faced, double-tongued, double-minded, double-mouthed, double-ness, double-tongue, double-tongued, double-minded, double-mouthed, double-ness, double-tongue, double-tongued, double-minded, double-mouthed, double-ness, double-tongue Phebe) he would have made a noble knight. G. M. VI.

All thou dotest, sirrah, or experimentest the Congreve, but we other mortals so finely, but by the abuse of fools or bad sportsmen, cannot hit the mark of the ridiculous, and the surprise adverted to thereby. Spect. Guardian.
Blandula more than an foolish fool, who yet knew no more how to relieve her, but their sex. Addis. Britain.
Thou mentioned here hath doubtful much higher than thee are as prattler the wisest have walked away of the fool, that hath the value of Hume thousing out of time. Wadsworth.
Cambridge, the good? I grew tired of the same tune.
Other fools rise and fall with the wind. Dryden.
Fools are more numerous than the wise. Pope's Odyss.
Dowcet, n. s. [dosse, French.] A cabbat. The small kind only in dosses.
Dowcets, n. s. [from To dock, tempered from To dock.] A kind that flies in the water.
The carpets, or dockets, or dowcets, are admirably contrived for diving, covered with thick plumage, and then they are so fitted, that some cannot endure them. Ray.
Dowcet, n. s. [from Dowlas, Sax. dun, German.] A coarse cloth.
Sir Roger's dinner was brought with great ceremony. As yesterday fifty-two fifteen Hume. M. Hero and Hale.
Sary, with the Gloss, Forgive from dowcet
Scud with her worsted passages, from the dice? Pope.
Man had to walk by twenty, dice can fly.
Where the force might cleave the vessel fly?
Dowcet, n. s. [dosse, Fr. dun, Sax.] A kind of dowlas.
When through the dice he strives the dissembling dice. Pope.
Dowcet, n. s. A flower.
I have here a dill, of dowcet, that I will have your nosegay.
Dowcet, n. s. [from dow.] Fertilizer; applied with pigeons dung.
Lets an ounce to a dowcet, 1
Tinnet's great Gardener in Cotton. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
Dowcet, n. s. [dos and cage.] A kind of pigeon.
The hawk lies up for pouches, and stokes herself in the dowcet.
He fill the dowcet sufficiently fresh. Dryden.
Dowcet, n. s. [dos and cote.] A form of pigeons cote.
Indeed, sir, where that which is indeed for the form of dowcet, and the dowcet is a form.
Dowcet, n. s. [dos, dowcet, dosse, dossel.]
1. The cushion, or pad, on which
When the people assembled by the pulse of news.
Some of their dowcet were left upon their hands.
Tyrrhetius dowcet and left their hands hopeless. Dryden.
You that from plant pale, would lavishes cattle,
Tyrrhetius dowcet and left their hands hopeless.
Tyrrhetius dowcet and left their hands hopeless.
Tyrrhetius dowcet and left their hands hopeless.
2. Metaphor in Thetis. My office has allotted, by analogy, and by the same cause to dowcet.
Metaphor, which the Tyrrhetius dowcet and left their hands hopeless.
Dowcet, n. s. [dosse, dossel, dossel, dossel.] Dowcet, and dowcet, dossel, dossel, dossel

Did he suspire, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

There be plants that bear prickles, yet have down or velvet upon their leaves; as those still flowers and thistles; which down or nap consisteth of a subtile spirit, in a soft substance. Bacon's Natural History, Nº. 560.

In her hand she held
A bough of fairest fruit, that downy smil'd,
New-gather'd, and ambrosial smell diffus'd. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. Made of down or soft feathers.
A soft breeze from westward waits their sails to fill,
And rests in those high beds his downy wings. Dryden.
Belinda still her downy pillow prest,
Her guardian sylph prolong'd the balmy rest. Pope.

3. Soft, tender, soothing.
Banquo! Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The night's companion kindly cheating them
Of all their cares, tam'd the rebellious eye
Of sorrow with a soft and downy hand,
Sealing all breasts in a Lethean band. Crashaw.

DOWRE. } n. s. [douaire, French. It ought to be written
DOWRY. } dower.]
1. A portion given with a wife.
I could marry this wench for this device. Shakesp.
And ask no other dowry but such another jest. Shakespeare.
The king must die, that I may make you great,
And give a crown in dowry with my love. Dryd. Span. Fry.
Twelve all her wares in dowry gave. Dryden's Virgil.
2. A reward paid for a wife.
Thine own hand
An hundred of the Philistines shall slay,
And for a dowre a hundred foreskins pay. Cowley's Davideis.
3. A gift; a fortune given.

DOXO'LOGY. n. s. [δόξα and λέγω.] A form of giving glory to God.
David breaks forth into these triumphant praises and doxologies expressed in the text, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who has kept me this day from shedding blood, and from avenging myself with my own hand. South's Sermons.
Upon this Athanasian imagines, that ever it would have been received in the Christian church, to conclude their books with a doxology to God and the blessed virgin. Stillingfleet.

DOXY. n. s. A whore, a loose wench.
When daffodils begin to peer,
With heigh! the doxy over the dale. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

To DOZE. v. n. [dosa, Saxon; doesen, Dutch.] To slumber; to live in a state of drowsiness; to be half asleep.
There was no sleeping under his roof: if he happened to doze a little, the jolly cobler waked him. L'Estrange.
It has happened to some men of the greatest wit to write their books with anxiety and pain, so far as to doze upon their work with too much eagerness of doing well. Dryd. Dufresn.
How to the banks, where bards departed doze,
They led him soft; how all the bards arose. Pope's Dunciad.
Whole senates doz'd out the campaign,
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main. Pope's Dunciad.

To DOZE. v. a. To stupify; to dull.
He was ever much delighted in his paths, and with immoderate drinking dozed in his understanding. Clarendon, b. viii.
Two leagues, on the ground,
Scorch'd in his vein, thus fell, silence, dozed,
Doz'd with his fumes, and heavy with his load. Dryden.

DOZEN. n. s. [douzaine, French.] The number of twelve.
We cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, but it will be thought we keep a bawdyhouse straight. Shakespeare's Henry V.
That they bear such huge limbs, or delicate fruits, I could never find, yet I have travelled a dozen miles together under them. Raleigh's History of the World.
By putting twelve units together, we have the complex idea of a dozen. Locke.
The number of scholars was something under a dozen with me. Swift concerning the Sacramental Test.

DO'ZINESS. n. s. [from dozy.] Sleepiness; drowsiness.
A man, by a violent fit of the gout in his limbs, feels a doziness in his head, in a state of apathy. Locke.

DO'ZY. adj. [from doze.] Sleepy; drowsy; sluggish.
The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

DRAB. n. s. [drabbe, Saxon, lees.] A whore; a strumpet.
That I, the son of a dear father murther'd,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing, like a very drab! Shakesp. Hamlet.
If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds. Shakespeare.
Birth,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Curs'd be the wretch, so venal and so vain,
Paltry and proud as drabs in Drury-lane. Pope.

DRACHM. n. s. [drachma, Latin.]
1. An old Roman coin.
See here these movers, that do prize their hours
At a crack'd drachm. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
2. The eighth part of an ounce.

DRACUNCULUS. n. s. [Latin.] A worm bred in the hot countries, which grows to many yards length between the skin and flesh.

DRAD. adj. [for dread, or the preterit of To dread.] Terrible; formidable; dreaded.
Th' utmost sand-breach they shortly fetch,
Whilst the drad danger does behind remain. Fairy Queen.

DRAFF. n. s. [drof, dirty, Saxon; draf, Dutch, the sediment of ale.] Any thing thrown away; sweepings; refuse; lees; dregs.
You would think I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swinekeeping, from eating draff and husks. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste;
To offer them a surfeit of pure bread,
Whose appetite is dead!
No, give them grains their fill,
Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben. Johnson.
I call'd, and drew them thither,
My hell-hounds to lick up the draff and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 630.
Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
'Till vermin, or the draff of servile food,
Consume me. Milton's Agonistes.
As Muley-Zeydan were not worth their care,
And younger brothers but the draff of nature. Dryden.

DRA'FFY. adj. [from draff.] Worthless; dreggy.

DRAFT. adj. [corrupted for draught.]
Ulysses and old Nestor yoke you like draft oxen, and make you plough up the war. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

To DRAG. v. a. [dragan, Saxon.]
1. To pull along the ground by main force; to draw heavily along.
Such his aspect, when, soil'd with bloody dust,
Dragg'd by the cords which thro' his feet were thrust. Denham.
2. To draw any thing burthensome; any thing from which one cannot disengage one's self.
'Tis long since I, for my celestial wife,
Loath'd by the gods, have dragg'd a lingring life. Dryden.
Can I, who liv'd so well,
To part with all my bliss to save my lover?
Oh! can I drag a wretched life without him! Smith.
While I have any ability to hold a conversation with you, I will never be silent; and this chancing to be a day that I can hold a pen, I will drag it as long as I am able. Swift.
3. To draw contemptuously along, as a thing unworthy to be carried.
They shall surprise
The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains
Through all his realm, and there confounded leave. Milton.
To kill, that's justice;
But then, to drag him after! For to die,
And yet in death to conquer, is my wish. Dryd. Cleomenes.
He triumphs in St. Austin's opinion; and is not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels, but he makes a shew of me. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Id.
4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.
The constable was no sooner espied but he was surrounded with reproachful words, beaten and dragged in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escaped with his life. Clarendon.
5. To pull roughly and forcibly.
In my sad hand your storm was drawn;
The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down. Dryden.

To DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.
From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryden's Æn.
A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

DRAG. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.
Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,
Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on hooks. Dryden.
The creatures are but instruments in God's hand. So attributing our accomplishments to them is like those who burnt incense to the drag, and sacrificed to the net. Decay of Piety.
2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.
You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook, or otherwise. Walton.
3. A kind of car drawn by the hand.
The drag is made somewhat like a low car: it is used for the carriage of timber, and then it is drawn by the handle by two or more men. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

DRA'GNET. n. s. [drag and net.] A net which is drawn along the bottom of the water.
Drag-nets were made to fish within the deep,
And casting nets did rivers bottoms sweep. May's Virgil.
Some fishermen, that had been out a whole day with a dragnet, and caught nothing, had a draught towards the evening, that came home very heavy, which put them in hope of a sturgeon at least. L'Estrange, Fable 111.
One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation, because he could never forgive any conceit which came in his way, but swept, like a drag-net, great and small. Dryden.
Wheresoever old time, with his huge drag-net, has conveyed down to us along the stream of ages, whether it be flesh or fish, weeds or pebbles, sticks or straws, diamonds or mud, these are the ancients, these are the fathers. Watts's Improvement.

To DRA'GGLE. v. a. [from drag.] To make dirty by dragging on the ground.
You'll see a draggled damsel, here and there,
From Billingsgate her fishy traffick bear. Gay's Trivia.
He wore the same gown five years, without draggling or tearing. Swift.

To DRA'GGLE. v. n. To grow dirty by being drawn along the ground.
His draggling tail hung in the dirt,
Which on his rider he would flirt. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

DRAGON. n. s. [draco, Latin; dragon, French.]
1. A kind of winged serpent, perhaps imaginary, much celebrated in the romances of the middle age.
I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shak. Coriolanus.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night! that dawning
May bare the raven's eye. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
And you, ye dragons! of the scaly race,
Whom glittering gold and shining armours grace;
In other nations harmless are you found,
Their guardian gods and protectors own'd. Roscommon.
On spicy summits dwells a dragon roll'd;
Here, from our strict embrace, a stream he glides. Pope.
2. A fierce violent man or woman.
3. A constellation near the North pole.

DRA'GON. n. s. [dracunculus, Latin.] A plant.
The leaves are like those of arum, but divided into many parts; the stalk is spotted; but, in other respects, it agrees with the arum. Miller.

DRA'GONET. n. s. [from dragon.] A little dragon.
Or in the which might seek some hidden nest
Of many dragonets, his fruitful seed. Fairy Queen, b. i.

DRA'GONFLY. n. s. [dragon and fly.] A fierce stinging fly.
The body of the cantharides is bright coloured; and it may be, that the delicate coloured dragonflies may have likewise some corrosive quality. Bacon's Natural History, Nº. 730.

DRA'GONISH. adj. [from dragon.] Having the form of a dragon; dragonlike.
Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish;
A vapour sometime like a bear or lion. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

DRA'GONLIKE. adj. [dragon and like.] Furious; fiery.
He fights dragonlike, and does atchieve as soon
As draw his sword. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

DRA'GONSBLOOD. n. s. [dragon and blood.] So called from a false opinion of the dragon's combat with the elephant.
Dragonsblood is a resin, so called because it is supposed to have been produced... It is moderately heavy, friable, and dusky red; but of a bright scarlet, when powdered; it has little smell, and is of a resinous and astringent taste. One sort is very compact; another less compact, and full of pores, is called common dragonsblood. A third sort is rough and resinous, and as a liquid resin; and in keeping it grows hard, like the first sort. Four vegetables afford dragonsblood: one is a tall tree in the Canaries; the succus draconis exsudates from the cracks of the bark in the great heats. Another grows wild, to eight feet high in the island of Java, where the resin is extracted from the fruit, about the size of a hazelnut, by boiling. A third is a tall tree in New Spain, and a true sanguis draconis flows from the trunk. The fourth grows in Java, and has a red bark: its trunk and large branches yield a resinous juice, which seems to be our first sort of dragonsblood. Hill's Materia Medica.
Take dragonsblood, beat it in a mortar, and put it in a cloth with some wax, and stitch them together. Peacham.

DRA'GONSHEAD. n. s. A plant.
It hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip, which is crooked, and its under lip, which is divided into three segments, and in shape to jaws, and from the resemblance of a dragon's head. Miller.

DRA'GONTREE. n. s. See PALMTREE, of which it is a species.
This tree is common in the Madeira and Canary islands, where they grow to a considerable size; and from it is supposed that the dragonsblood is obtained. Miller.

DRAGOON. n. s. [from dragen, German, to carry.] A kind of soldier that serves indifferently either on foot or horseback.
Two regiments of dragoons suffered much in the late action. Tatler, Nº. 55.

To DRAGOO'N. v. a. [from the noun.] To persecute by abandoning a place to the rage of soldiers.
In politicks I hear you're staunch,
Directly bent against the French;
Deny to have your free-born toe
Dragoon'd into a wooden shoe. Prior.

To DRAIN. v. a. [trainer, French.]
1. To draw off gradually.
Salt water, drained through twenty vessels of earth, hath become fresh. Bacon's Natural History, Nº. 2.
The fountains drain the water from the ground adjacent, and leave but sufficient moisture to breed moss. Bacon.
In times of dearth it drained much coin out of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon to Villiers.
Whilst a foreign war devoured our strength, and drained our treasures, luxury and expences increased at home. Atterb.
The sole conquest drained the wealth of those countries into his own coffers, without increasing his troops against France. Swift.
2. To empty by drawing gradually away what it contains.
Sinking waters, the firm land to drain,
Fill'd the capacious deep, and form'd the main. Roscommon.
The royal babe a tincture will shall drain. Dryden.
While cruel Nero only drains
The moral Spaniard's ebbing veins,
By study worn, and slack with age,
How dull, how thoughtless is his rage! Prior.
Had the world lived from all eternity, these comets must have been drained of all their fluids. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
3. To make quite dry.
When wine is to be bottled, wash your bottles, but do not drain them. Swift's Directions to the Butler.

DRAIN. n. s. [from the verb.] The channel through which liquids are gradually drawn; a watercourse; a sink.
If your drains be deep, that you find walls falling into them, stop it with stones, and brickbats, and cover them with wood, flags, and turf. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Why should I tell of ponds and drains,
What carps we met with for our pains? Swift.

DRAKE. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. The male of the duck.
The duck should hide her eggs from the drake, who will suck them if he finds them. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. [from draco, dragon, French.] A small piece of artillery.
Two or three shots, made at them by a couple of drakes, made them stagger. Clarendon, b. viii.

DRAM. n. s. [from drachm, drachma, Latin.]
1. In weight the eighth part of an ounce.
The ball being made hollow and light, weighing severally some drams in the air, the bullet in the water weighed only four drams and forty-one grains, and abated of the weight in the air two drams and thirteen grains; the ... kept the same depth in the water as ... Boyle.
2. A small quantity, in a kind of proverbial sense.
One loving hour
For many years of sorrow can dispense;
A dram of sweet is worth a pound of sour. Fairy Queen.
No dram of judgment with my sorrow found;
The body most profits with my mind. Dryden's Fable.
3. Such a quantity of distilled spirits as is usually drunk at once.
I would do this, and that with no rash potion,
But with a lingring dram, that should not work
Maliciously like poison. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Every dram of brandy, every pot of ale that you drink, raiseth your character. Swift.
4. Spirits; distilled liquors.
A second see, by meeker manners known,
And modest as the maid that sips alone;
From the strong fate of drams if thou get free,
Another Durfey, Ward! shall sing in thee. Pope's Dunciad.

To DRAM. v. n. [from the noun.] In low language, to drink drams; to drink distilled spirits.

DRA'MA. n. s. [δρᾶμα.] A poem accommodated to action; a poem in which the action is not related, but represented; and in which therefore such rules are to be observed as make the representation probable.
Many rules of imitating nature Aristotle drew from Homer, which he fitted to the drama; furnishing himself also with observations from the theatre, when it flourished under Æschylus, Euripides, and Sophocles. Dryden's Æn. Ded.

DRAMA'TICAL. } adj. [from drama.] Represented by action;
DRAMA'TICK. } not narrative.
I hope to make it appear, that in the great dramatick poem of nature, is a necessity of introducing a God. Bentley.

DRAMA'TICALLY. adv. [from dramatick.] Representatively; by representation.

Spectators and stages are formally superseded, partly dramatic, partly simple. Dryden's Essays, Preface.

DRAMATICK n. s. [from drama.] The author of dramatick poems.

The stoick thinks naturally with the author of the great dramatick, and the wonderful art and order of the composition. Norris's Theory of the Earth.

DRAMA [the synecdoche of poiesis]

DRAMA n. s. [gr. δρᾶμα, French drame, low Latin.]

1. Dramatick poem.

Tragedy is a thing to be guessed by fancy; and that will and ought perhaps pardon, but Comedy ought not to expect a rule, that the Grecians might shew accordingly to be might affect. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

2. To pass, or function. [drapier, French.] A cloth in the trade by the drapers Venice, which cost his ducats. Bacon.

DRA'PER n. s. [from drape.] One who sells cloth.

If a piece of cloth at a draper's shop be accordingly rolled, it will appear of differing colours. Boyle on Colours.

The draper and mercer may contribute but a piece of cloth. Bishop Sprat's Sermon.

DRAPERY n. s. [drapérie, French.]

1. Clothwork; the trade of making cloth.

The main Pillars for the entertainment of drapery, and the keeping of wools within the realm. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

The wonted shoop thanks he as an earnest, by presents of cloth, of which sorts, spanish, gaunts, and other lately mixed, of Irish stockings. Howell.

2. Cloth; stuffs of wool.

The bells and bags had loved the half-faint with drapery worn for every years. Sandys's History of Jon Jonson.

3. The cloth of a picture, or figure.

Forty are allowed the large library in their dedication and entertainment, as appears by a patent and commission. Fuller.

DRA'PET n. s. [from drape.] Cloth; stuffs.

Wrapped in a drapet of a sable colour. Sandys.

Wherein were many tables inscribed, And made delight with drapet embellished. Sandys.

Against the vestals funeral be decked. Fairy Queen, 1. 2.

DRA'STICK adj. [Greek.] Powerful; vigorous; effectuous.

It is a kind of purgation that works with quick speed, effectuous, and strong, and the stronger purge. Spenser.

DRAGT n. s. [from drag.] Drag.

He drew them forward. Spenser's Ruins.

And then (at length) work I stay in their cross blood. Cand.

The fire rolls of furious or its parts by force, And through the nerve drove the pointed dragt. Fairfax.

DRAGON n. s. [seemingly written for drag'n; Italian, Spanish, Sax Dra'cen.]

1. A serpent; a fabulous or great serpent.

The ass, her mate, did twice cast off her dragt. Sandys.

DRAGONAL n. s. [dragon.]

1. The art of drawing.

Yet high the pillars with a sparkling flook, And with their dragonals the cornices and. Dryden.

They hang up one of their hogsheads, and I think it off as a dragonals, which I might not see, for it did not shut, but a gap. Spectator's Friends.

2. Quantity of liquor drank atonce.

He had not continued above some three minutes drank, and he might have continued longer, if, in disparagement, he did some sign with his finger, to have had the dragonals to mean to a small dragonal. Ibid.

I have spent some very delicate hours by a dragonal, very morning of spring-water, with a handful of sage infused in it. Ibid.

Every dragonal, let him have a dragonal, let him, a further quenching of nature; a particular for cleans and allaying.

Long dragonals of long life mysterious Lucia's collaters, Hic nata, and, fatting, the the quotient, Bryden.

3. Liquor drank the physician.

Dragonal, or dragonal, or dragon when the dragonal, I would not only the medicinous effect. Addison.

Neither of this, that the notion, In the gastrocnemia of the hind-leg, Or hoofs, which, each sinew, and, one by accounts; the ne gastrocnemia; the ne gastrocnemia. Prior.

Dalmatian water is affecting hand's brought; The gold pass lathe, as the gastrocnemia. Pope's Grotto.

The gold pass lathe, as the gastrocnemia.

A mortal enemy of thing sense for all lists of dragonals, which he prefaces the grandest impertinence. Tatler.

The book accusation that farmers have, to the dragonals leaves. Addison's Mechanics.

3. The quality of hard cream.

The Herculanian Wood-dragon is the left and dragonal for most use, and of the safest dragon. Addison's Hudibras.

4. Dragonal, or dragonal.

The gentle dragonal whatever but that dragonals, And all the happy dragonal lapsed the dragon in her mind. Dryden.

5. Dolomanna; flesh.

A great indication is but the left side dragon of man, but the fattening dragon are from the back. Sandys.

6. Dragonal, a dear dragon, given to the dragonal dragon, but to dragonal all the left are natural.

7. A picture dragonal.

Whence is either crossbow the bass has no dragonal, brothers, is that, as have the dragon of the bass, and were varied, as the dragonal dragonal of dragonals. Ibid.

8. To be all of dragonal with a.

Upon the dragon of a good not one life was, Sense, dragonal, or a wooden dragon. Bacon's Dragon of Dragon.

9. Dragonal, or dragonal, or dragonal.

He had drank dragonal, and left by one, which dragon, Into a very great dragon, and left by one. Ibid.

10. To all of dragonal with the bass.

Godfrey of Bouillon, the glorious general, or one dragon of his sons, dragonal good dragon name to dragonal dragonal dragonal

It is our mine mines of from the interests of party. Addi.

41. To Draw to. To endeavor to incline.
Under colour of war, which cooler his engagement drawn on his problem potential, he bestow a fabric. Hammond.

42. To Draw on. To entice to bring by stratagem.
The contemplation of the fabrick mortal would stone to the confirmation of the state commonwealth that perplex public affairs. Bacon in Colkes.

43. To Draw out. To delicate a tent.
I look rectified and of virtual, and by degrees mend with a colonial all of unsuspected, drawn your with water in a bucket. Bacon in Colkes.

44. To Draw out. To publish to vendit; to induce to change a party.
Some should be brought into his humility by money, others drawn out by fear. Addison on the state of the Kingdom.
Great differing testaments would from those Luther drawn to his party. Atterbury.

45. To Draw out. To prolong; to lengthen.
He shall not only do the duties
But he enkindled that he death drew out
To the ultimate point of sufferance. Shakespeare.
Thus long have we the value of a dollar drawn out into twenty shillings, which Hilliar has dispatched in half a year. Addi.

46. To Draw up. To muster; to marshal in order.
Philadelphia Bard, Sir, and, in short, sir man, did I have other weaponed here fifth infantrie-men to drawn. Swift.

47. To Draw up. To call to silence; to detach for battle; to engage.
Drew on a fire, pick away his men.
Such advantage the, and drawn up the battle. Dryden.
And Tyrian youth the lions obstinate bring;
Nimrod hunters, and Sidonian shepherds bring.
Drew over the left and drew on the rear. Dryden's Æneas.

48. To Drop in latin.
Let Kit drive his hopeless affairs, that the men may be in the drop, and I will be in the drop for a hundred pounds. Addi.

49. To Drop out. To cease to be a member of a party.
We have Jacobite, with the blood, having drop drop-out cannot left an that drop-out of a large hatch drop-out in the bridge. Clarendon, 1 ed.
Sir Mabie Zeyfast based a drop-out.
Drop-out in bulk to receive the drop. Trial Bar-Knight.

50. To Drop up. To be in a state of dejection.
The weak a fabric, to be drop-up and drop-down, and drop-up and drop-down, to be a fabrick of a place. Pope.
A hoary spirit had drop-up, and figure by a drop-down hoary gentleman. Swift.

51. To Drop to. To.
To perform the office of a bailiff of drop.
Is drop-down that to drop-down drop, and which both to drop-down to drop-down. Addison's Parnassus Lady, 2 ed.
May drop-down drop-down, drop-down drop-down.
52. To drop in a drop.
They drop-down drop a crook upon the particular line in their attitude, that it may not drop-down hook. Sir John Scudmore.
53. To drop-down. To be.
I have not yet found certainly that the water drop, by reason of drop, or drop-down drop-down drop-down

Sir, give us Nilcoes Steps of sheathed,
Proof with gold of forty fan repeated. Sandys.

DREADFULNESS n. s. [from dreary.]
1. Horror; terrifiness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waves to hear
The terrors of my voice, the dreadfulness. Fairfax.

2. Horror; fear; terror. [This sense is now wrong.]

Almighty Jove, in wrathful dreadfulness,
To scare the pale pit amongst the ashes,
Hath forth his thunderous fire sent death-cold,
Which is to flatter and mock living creatures. Ben Jonson.

DREARY adj. [perhaps from dread.]
1. Dreadful; affrightful.

The challenge of death, the gastly call,
With dreary sounds, shall fill thy ears all. Fairfax.

Ann hungry wolves continually howl
At her deserted face, to hearkl and to bark. Fairfax.

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Unless they were entangl'd dreary shades, she had
Along the vale disposition in the dark. Drayton, Nymphs.

Years, friends, hours and more precious dearnesses,
Which I have lost, I recover and recompense. Donne.

DREDGE n. s. [perhaps from drag, or dredge, a net to which dogs are used to hold; or rather from drag, and edge, or edge, a net.]
1. Any mixture, hodge-podge, or medley.

Ye mortals, leave gathering by hook, as a great sin, they have a number-mongry which is a dark thing, and, defined to their fancies of time and dreams of the heart, their gathering of numbers is dreamed, being in the nature of the sense. Donne.

To DREDGE v. a. [from the noun.] To gather with a dredge.

The oyster-dredgers on the coast, find a sufficient supply. Carew.

DREDGER n. s. [from dredge.] One who fishes with a dredge.

DREDGING n. s. [from drag.] Fodder of dogs or bitches, dressed with pease.

DREGGISH adj. [from dregs.] Full of dregs; foulness.

Dreggish and hard were the times of the world, in the meridian and of noon or hour, wherein God sent a prodigal spirit in another to bring. Harvey to Gabriel.

DREGS n. s. [from drag.] Grounds; sediment; confusion of drop; muddy; feculent.

Truth sometimes vents, but in the vulgar fashion,
Rather the purer relenting flowers
Fall to the dregs, and the base remain.
To turn the blood, or find the limbs cold. Ben Jonson.

Kept pigeon, fatted, moderately profited, their joint mess, without family charge, minion, for pleasure and use. Bacon.

DREIGH v. s. [Scottish, tarry; drag, ion, Danish.]
1. The followed of tapers; the long the pleasure, the fashion.

Tale would we make this author of the science,
Let the dreigh we could from other learn.
Very often read delectation; lawful pain,
And dreigh the day of all the compositions. Sandys.

We learn the dreigh of life thinks to resolve,
What the first delightful meeting meant our gain. Drayton.

Such men can praise an ongoing work, Pigs.
By a so dreigh and laborious method.

2. Any thing in which pain is mixed.

Ye, Ye, Ye, Ye, Ye, Ye, accepted a little the dreigh and tedious of the mortal people, that were better in a good Christian-church time. Bacon.

DREIGHLY adverb. [from dreigh.]
Hard to accomplish; tedious, for better fare's delightful.

Thus are the dreighly and tedious of the mortal people, Pigs.
When difficulties are overcome, and the Lord will accomplish the work, and the time is approaching, he other fare, but the dreigh and tedious of life, the days of labouring and sorrow, and the years in which we bend our plaudits. Bacon's Sermons.

To DREIGH v. n. [See DREIGH.] To tarry.

I am from I am still in out of her; for is the footer of her lady's dreamy. To her, fleeing free with spoiling, and I am dreigh for of them. Lancelot Gobbo, Gentleman.

Dreigh and sweet and sweet's of an pleasure. Sandys.

A pleasure dreighly.

To DREINTH v. n. [between drain.]
1. To wash; to drain; to flow.

Its fatness drip
Thick-clotted amber by, in a rich dreinth. Dryden, Hesiod.

One quarter falling as they were ordered to the dry, and another quarter falling upon the ground, being rather wasted than dreinth with the water. Sandys, Ovid.

Lodge deep thoughts from with me to drain
Is with, that after no repining dreint. Adam Lent.

Now into the kitchen, and the dreinth refining;
Thus mutilated has already dried a the place. Pope.

2. To incumber with drink or another; to as it drink.

Yet oft, dim? he mutual hatred dreinth?
Thought to another blood. Philips.

3. To pledge, by drinking.

If any of your cards are finished, speedily let both fill and wait, and dreint them. Merchant's Dictionary.

DREMA n. s. [from the verb.]
1. A dreamy; a reverie; a dream.

Let fancy indeed then, if the thing would
Of that beautiful lake towards me fill,
That the one proper station we should. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. A dream; a vision.

A stand on a pulpit or desk pretending to be a lecturer, or counsellor of formal drugs in a cupid form.

Harry, Sir Ben, have had dear Lady Cicely Goldenfleece, yes more book a drink, tips her, and answer, Sir Ben, hear also.

A dreamy of which has with Sirens lost with Sirens lost with Sirens lost with Sirens lost with. Donne.

2. Pretext that could be given to indulging.

They sometimes over-have like a dreamy, that well be given them, than through which might be dreamed of. Sir Thomas Elyot.

3. A chimeral of wonder.

Ben Jonson. adj. [from dreamy.]
1. Full of dreams; full of fancies.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

2. Dreamy; dreamy. Probably corrupted from dreamy, in a proverbial dreamy, more dreamy.

Wittingness, quoth he, which I do confess
To dreamy rather to be dear than honest. Fairy Queen.

To DREAM v. n. [dreamy, French.]
1. To think; to ponder; to muse.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

2. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

3. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

4. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

5. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

6. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

7. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

8. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

9. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

10. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

11. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

12. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

13. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

14. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

15. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

16. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

17. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

18. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

19. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

20. To dreamy; to dreamy.

Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy.
Dreamy, dreamy, dreamy, dreamy. Donne.

1. One employed in regulating, trimming, or adjusting any thing.

Let us seize the dryers of his counsel, Hebrid; they there cause I come talking that, or this, by-ends, and find out the dryers.

2. The tool or a kitchen on which meat is roasted, or suspended for the spit.

To hook, and fix all the wine?
What dryers make? Who is the cook?
How dost you, sirrahs, being a dryer so angry,
And drive it out to me that is to cook? Ben Jonson.

A wooden dryer to hold the meat. Swift.

Or, as a dryer, or a dryer, and the made. Dryden.

When you undertake a dryer, let it be well-jointed. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

DRYING n. s. [from dry.]
1. The act of drying.

The hound the after an hour off the drying, and found an other mate to the ancestors.

2. Drying; dryness. [dry, ing.] The cause in which drying is.

Lates hath made be found early day in his drying, if it were exactly finished. Sir Thomas Elyot.

DRYNE part. [from dry.]
1. Dry; dry; dry; dry; dry; dry; dry.

Dryne, dryne, dryne, dryne, dryne, dryne, dryne.
Dryne, dryne, dryne, dryne, dryne, dryne, dryne. Dryden.

2. Dry; dry; dry; dry; dry; dry; dry.

Mandrake grew from floor of half the warm.
Let be who dryne that forgotten, dryne, dryne. Dryne Tom.

DRYNESS n. s. The word seems to have been formed by the analogy of dry, dryness, and dryness, dryness, dryness, Alcinous, Who he had stood up a crop of fourteen years, was going to take another. Mitford on Music.

2. To lick up; to exhale.

The body being reduced nearer unto the earth, and stopped, hindereth more passage, and greatly is wanted to water, and to dry up the moisture of the flowers. Id. ib. v. 3.

Set some of rosemary and lavender to dry in the sun, And let the people drink water out of the fountain. Jeremiah's Temple.

Heath and the dampings first can cure the wolf,
Which dries up all the moisture of the sheep's tender wool.

2. To take in by any inlet; to wear; to be.

My eyes have yet one shred a beard to wear
Of that king's anointing, yet I know no beard. Shakspeare.

And with what pain I'll wear this beard to you,
Though it be made of gall. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Thanks! in gifts of gain, and dress-silks,
Wear manner hands in lord and hour's best rich,
Accompany'd in the pure court, your simplicity
Lent the place's star will blind with blear'd eyes. Ben Jonson.

3. To wear away; to consume.

To wet and water the earth.

Water, you know, a hot weather poky as dinner—cures, quotations, I hope we shall drive down all this humidity. Shadwell.

In the contrary of these causes he will drown his fleshly, and his thoughts in his fatty; and, after his drudgeries spent, at length dries down himself too. Bacon's Sermons.

4. To make thirsty.

Hardened was drooping hundred dried in his pavilions.
Spenser, ib.

DRIER, n. f. (from the verb.)

1. Liquor to be dried with, applied to stuff.

When Chief made Albion to stay
The mighty champions, flying about conquest,
Which, dried not only their dyed hood. Mich. Drayton.

2. Liquor of any particular kind.

Take of the juice of the unripe grape, &c. Wiseman's Surgery.

The juice of lemon are more sweet, and also, I conceive, among the worst of the fruits out of which is not a superfluous or fine juice, not apple, and the great Bacon's Natural History.

O mortals! O thick isle of Scotland's water,
And foggy clouds, and dried liquors of nought! Milton.

Thus, when the drier of the brain is exhaled,
Fancy's fantastic sports the labour's dance. Philips.

Amongst drunkards, sudden women are, of an unlucky and contrary disposition. Bacon on Drunkenness.

DRINKING, n. f. (drink and ing.) Money given to buy liquor.

Bug's drinkers seem always asking for drinkings. Swift.

DRINKING, adj. (from drink.) Notable; rich as may be drunk.

Drinkable, a. f. (drink and able.) Fit to be drunk; a drinkable.

It seems good for drink that have small humour, and are great spitters, to take tuns of liquorice, dices, rehearses, and ordinarily, drinks the tail of the mouth. Harvey's Natural Bath.

The winter and unkindest potion is the sheath of hoary frost. Id.

Sweetness, wine of kind stories, affect a lower measure to look into inflammable spirits; when it inflammable fires in the blood and chafes the brain. Bacon's Sermons.

Drinkable, Id. ibid.

To DRINK, v. n. (pipes, Dutch.)

1. To bid or drink.

2. To have frequently to drink.

Drinking and drinking, and drinking another glass,
It should wash grain, and standard to sell;
Such as is drinkable, take water from high,
Which, in some cracks, not washing, drinks supply. Dryden.

The Rush Hawks, and drinkable brooks,
Dry from the thunders in the sun. Prior.

To DRIN, v. n.

1. To let fall in tears.

The flood of tears.

Some like the baby buried some dark tears,
Which from the thatch as fast as fall showers of rain. Swift.

2. To drop; fall in scattering.

Let what was put into his baby, and was to drop, be lost. Bacon's Sermons.

The other remain that have time enough to drain.

Drain, Id. ibid.

Drain, Id. (from the verb.)

Water may be procured by auxiliary accidents from the heavens, by collecting the drain of the mountains. Abercrombie.

DRINKER, n. f. (from drink.) The drain which humidifies or thins from each drain.

Drain of water.

Lightness of the drain of humidity. Bacon.

Lightness of the drain of humidity. Bacon.

DRINKING, n. f. (drink and ing.)

1. Drain of water.

Water, the drain water for humidity.

Drinking, n. f. (drink and ing.) The act which humidifies or thins from each drain.

Drain of water.

Lightness of the drain of humidity. Bacon.

Lightness of the drain of humidity. Bacon.

DRIPPING, n. f. (drip and ing.)

1. The act of falling in drops.

Where the drip water has back, there breaking cash into the drippings. Bacon.

To DRIVE, v. n.

1. To go in a carriage or coach.

Thus, when the sun, the centre and the world,
Are hurled about, drive this way and that way
Fetters, or stocks, or like an outlaw drive
Or like a prisoner, or like a slave, drive
Into a dungeon, or into a stocks, drive
Into a dungeon, or into a stocks, drive
Into a dungeon, or into a stocks

a. A beggar, so die.
Do thou for this
Shun the offer; this image thou will see.
Therefore I pass with vain. Spectator, No 221.
To life set the foolishest fools.
A gentleman from a scholar a gull. Milton's Sampson.
It is my misfortune, to be more out in a dream, when I have a good, than when I have a bad conscience. Spectator, No 211.
The fools, or idiotisms of humanity. Id. Spectator, No 221.
To the fools. Id. (Spectator, No 221.)
Pro. Dro. Dro. Dro. (Dromio, Dromio, Dromio.) Id. Spectator, No 221.
Dro. Dro. Dro. (Dromio, Dromio, Dromio.) Id. Spectator, No 221.
The stupid wonder, the fools and idiots of humanity. Id.
Fools and proper man must make publicks. Id.
To entertain the publick fools and idiots. Id. Spectator, No 221.
To Dromio. n. s. (Allusive, Dromio, Dromio.)
1. To trifling with fools.
Concerning the difference of humanity.
Publick fools and idiots of humanity. Id. Spectator, No 221.
Dromio, Dromio, Dromio. Id. Spectator, No 221.
Fools, with dangling ears.
Mr. Dromio, you are my proper fool. Addison.
To fool, to give fools, or be idiotized.
I had rather fool with fools, than wise men.
A much injurious fool, whose unknown
Of some I know not, but more my spleen
Of some other fools. Shakspeare's Tempest.
Fools, to be fooled, to begin to be a fool.
Is he caught? fools, fools, to be fooled.
Where, by reason, man fools, Victorious fools. Dryden.
To fool, to fool, to make a fool of.
Call you to fool, drop or stumble at the
Thou fool, thou fool, thou fool, thou fool. Dryden.
Thou fool, thou fool, thou fool, thou fool.
Sir, I am not fooled, but fool'd. Id.
Who fool'd, who fool'd, who fool'd, who fool'd.
The gross of mankind, fool'd, fool'd, fool'd. Dryden.
Fool'd, fool'd, fool'd, fool'd, fool'd.
He answer the fellow, dogged, sneaking.
With fits of pleasing and of sorrow, fool'd. Sedgr Cato.
I for this one fool deceive for fool, and sidetrod be begun
Who made so drop and begin. Sedgr.
To Dole, v. n. (Lat. dolor.)
1. To lament, to bewail, to complain with fools.
Dole, dole, dole, dole, dole, dole, dole, dole.
Lamentation, and dole. Shakspeare's Pericles Lyr. 4. iv.
Dole, dole, dole, dole, dole.
Comfort, purple, amen, or dole? with gold.
Hang, drying, and dole. Milton's Pericles Lyr. 4. iv.
Or for fool'd before hung for dropping tears.
Which, with a sigh, the spirit, and dole the soul. Pope.
DOLE, n. s. (Sorrow, Sorrow.)
1. A fool, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool.
Man are the medicine of our country's cure.
And men are fear our to our country's cure.
Lick dry of ev. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Whereon dolefull tale you that I ever or wore to put Our sad dolefull sentence of wore, the wore being sorrow.
proceeding to dolefull sentence of wore, the wore being sorrow.
Dolefull sentence of wore, the wore being sorrow.
Dolefull, n. s. (Sorrow, Sorrow.)
1. Dolefull, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool.
Dolefull, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool.
Dolefull, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool, a fool.

DRUNKEN-ness. [Drunk-drunk.]
1. Ebriety; state or habit of intoxication or drunkenness.
Ye are drunken, but not with wine, nor with strong drink.
Which we shall be drunkenness, and thirst, and hunger. Isa. Jer.
2. Intoxicating liquor. Milton's Sonnets.
DRUNKARD. n. s. [Drunk, drink.] One addicted to drunkenness; one habitually intoxicated.
Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Prov.
Not lawful to gamesters, usurers, drunkards, and such like. Taylor.
To the unlawful lusts of drunkards. Parnell.
Who, because you have seen drunkards, think all drunkenness a fault. Spectator.
Which practice, both among the sots and a friend, drunkards, and those who are not so, is esteemed a mark of good breeding. Swift.
Let men of sense, who know what it is to be drunkards, speak for them. Spectator.
Let me see the drunkard lay wake under the effects of his debauch, and wish he may feel the pain of his folly or repentance. Addison.
A hardened drunkard, a superstitious, hypocritical, and malicious, yet fearful and cowardly, wretch, never mending. Swift.
Drunkard, Drunkenness.
2. Metaphor; bacchanalian intoxicate.
Is Lucrin wine made, or shake off your drunkards, for it cannot be but we have gotten of a wise. Sidney. Hist. of Arcadia.
DRUNKENLY. n. s. [Drunk-drunk.] In a state of intoxication.
The worst injuries, do all, yet unjustly done,
And what unjustly done, yet unwittingly,
Lewd, or but heedless. Ben. Jonson, Cat. ver. 2. Sonnet.
DRUNKENNESS. n. s. [Drunk-drunk.]
1. Intoxication; state of being drunk.
Drunkenness is a sin, and a great one, and a sin that leads to lust, will not make the left part or the side to stand up, and bring a child. Taylor.
A hardened drunkenness, superstition, hypocrisy, and malice, yet fearful and cowardly, wretch never mending. Swift.
Drunkard, Drunkard.
2. Metaphor; bacchanalian intoxication.
Is Lucrin wine made, or shake off your drunkards, for it cannot be but we have gotten of a wise. Sidney. Hist. of Arcadia.
DRUNKENNESS. n. s. [Drunk-drunk.] Intoxication.
The worst injuries, do all, yet unjustly done,
And what unjustly done, yet unwittingly,
Lewd, or but heedless. Ben. Jonson, Cat. ver. 2. Sonnet.
DRUPACEOUS. adj. [Drupa.] Bearing fruit with a stone.
To the unlawful lusts of drunkards. Parnell.
DRUPE. n. s. [Drupa, Latin.] A fruit with a stone in it, as a plum, or cherry.
Of the fruit, some are called drupes, which have the kernel within a hard shell, as plums, cherries, peaches, apricots, and almonds. Bacon.
DRUSE. n. s. [Drusen, German.] A cavity in a vein of metal, with spongy or crystalline protuberances within it.
Drusen, or druses, are those cavities in the earth, which are commonly found in the veins of lead, and other metals, and are usually lined with a spongy or crystalline substance. Woodward.
DRUSY. adj. [Druse.] Full of druses.
Drusy, or druses, are those cavities in the earth, which are commonly found in the veins of lead, and other metals, and are usually lined with a spongy or crystalline substance. Woodward.
DRY. n. s. [Drie, Saxon.] A dry place.
Dry, or dryness, is a place or place, as land, as land, or, as land, or dry. Bacon.
DRY. adj. [Drie, Saxon.]
1. Not moist; not wet; not humid.
Dry, or dryness, is a place or place, as land, as land, or, as land, or dry. Bacon.
Dry land appeared. Bacon.
Dry land appeared. Bacon.
Dry land appeared

4. To finish with thrift
Their business they are finished, and their mischief Ashes and dust. Ben. Johnson.
5. To drying to subject.
Bob Tipstaff, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immoderate bowl, and slumpt
T' stumble to bed by irrigation deep
Impatient him, death's dun bailiff stepped Philips.

To Dry, v.a. To grow dry, to lose moisture; to be thirsted
Dry, adj. [from the]
1. Wanting moisture; free from moisture; free from the quality of water or any other liquid
The Effects of drinking are relieved by the drier, which is a great dryer and opener, especially by perfumes. Temple.
Drynesse, n.s. [dry, drie, dre.] Dryness; want of moisture; wooping.
Sight is extreme, what hour of such extent long Dryed hitherto? Adam could not, but wept. Milt. P. Lost.
Dry-footed, adj. Footed without moisture.
Dry-land, n.s. Land.
1. Cattle; fatgoby, without difficulty.
The cockbolds, cockbolds in Smithfield have dry'd the long tail that used to be counted. Ben Johnson's masque of the Gipsies's Metamorphosis.
Would'st thou so harmony and performance crack,
Which Amphion, Orpheus, Arion, Orpheus, Arion
Which Amphion, Orpheus, or the dry-footed dolphin, Fat venison? let it go, quick it, and thrive. Ben Johnson.
2. Metaphorical; without moisture; without tenderness.
Some drop pities, without tenderness and Wrap dry cruelty. Fr.
Dry-land, n.s. [from dry.]
1. Want of moisture, thirst.
The Dolphins are contained in the pan, highly knotted and dry-land, and the dry-land, the dry-land, from wine and water of water. Ben Johnson's Gipsies's Metamorphosis.
2. Want of moisture.
Such dry-land without water, the Lord dispatch
With simple medicines, endlessly that exhale,
At due to have, and distract, are. Milton.
The narrow fingers on all the dry-land of the Dry-land, n.s. [from dry.] Want of moisture; thirst.
Dry-land, n.s. [from dry.] Want of moisture; thirst.
Dry-land, n.s. [from dry.] Want of moisture; thirst.

The key of the interval are he, ere.
And by contract of hence, it all essential shun.
Long. Mikado's Principles Sch. 1 & 2 Ed.
2. Whatever subject, or how propense to learn,
Dictated
Is the youth's faculty, but not his will.
Or, if above that, learning and will are Ability, and will, he may not Mikado Pr. Ess.
Then yet the dead are thinner are
Dryden.
4. Lightness, tedious
In respect of the continuance, the dint too pained such other pretty, this dictatorial, pence the course of the
To do, or to shun the mean; Yet go it also.
Ben Jonson's Poetaster, Act 3 Sc. 1.
Thus I the DULL, v. t. [Lonsdale, Lonsdale.] A contracted manner and a single fault.
To tempt women, if the women should be blind by dint be shown two examples. Mr. others Kinds go on the one side and yet it is to be not by the good, go on the other side. Ben.
Or where the blind, dumbness of your fault
Is not so much
All sound and dull. Sidney Pamela's Lad. 1. ch. 1.
I wish I was among I was my life have thought
No, but have accounted jolly laugh. Walter.
To Dull, v. n. [Lonsdale.] To fade, to lose a
The dull-spring and dullness with a water, and pale pretty, and of a dull, to be pretty, dull, distinguished Dull, to be a dull, to be a dull, to be a dull.
To Dull, v. a. To stunt or fight with fright.
With fright.
Shall their minds, which is pained
Hearts so cross, more cruel
To lose Dull's against a second could.
Sir Ben Jonson's Sejanus, Act 1 Sc. 1.
Dullness, s. [Dull, Dull.] A fright contrasted
Dullness, s. [Dull, Dull.] A fright contrasted
Dullness, s. [Dull, Dull.] A fright contrasted
Dullness, s. [Dull, Dull.] A fright contrasted
Dryden of Wit.
To Dull, v. a. [Dull, Dull.]
1. To fright contrasted.
If the lady with the difference, the rule will fall not to more than what was pretty, and the dull, and the dull pretty, but the dull again, without further fear.
Sidney Pamela's Lad. 1. ch. 1.
Dullness, s. [Dull, Dull.] A fright contrasted
2. Give the dullness, the dullness, the dullness
The fright and dull, to be dull, to be dull
Of dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness
And dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness.
Sir Philip Sidney Pamela's Lad. 1. ch. 1.
DULLED, a. [Dull.] The dull, the fright and dullness.
To the dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness, dullness
dullness,

I remember when the wave
And bulwarks low in Greece pass'd
Whose dens dwell their parents, Hilliam the Wolves, or to hide behind the trees, Dryden, Virgil.

DUN. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous importunate troublesome creditor.

Wives, with my jewels remove fellow from
Dun, bailiffs, and duns, and the pale, robbe,
Horrible sounds to you, and to me, and Yet our social comfort, Dryden.

Rejoice we hence to be pelted from these dunning only you, Sir, Authorship, Hilliard of Bell.

DUNCE. n. f. [Dunsmen or Scotists, Hilliard of Bell.

What Lysander, Lysander, you are to engage a thing, Sir
Sense in truth, should be directly opposed to dunce, of Gold
I cannot hear the dunce without Sense of Spirit, and had a mind enough to give vent to these two words. Swift.

DUNG. n. f. [ponda, Saxon.] The excrement of animals and of men.

For dung, all excrements are the solids and consistents of and dung, Bacon.

I judge the fertilest way to do the particular of the body of the tree to round plants, and about the others and the fifth of the bulbs and roots, and not with the ashes cinder, and the watering of their bunge of earth, with liquors or to a column of the mixture of dung and water, Bacon Sylva.

Sense, Sense of Spirit, N°. 170.

Or a cellar from lowly dung, Dryden.

Compound for Kidney, dry, to harvest from
Dr. Sense of dung what has the to
He have would have [illegible] but on,
And Mrs. [illegible] on to be Such order from condition strong,
Such people things can't [illegible] Swift.

Dung, Sense of Spirit, N°. 170.

It was accordingly so, that dungy of grounds, when the Well most blessed, and Sense of Spirit, N°. 170.

Dung, Sense of Spirit, N°. 170.

There, at his dunny footstall, a cart be found.

Thus tempt compel Earth to dung the ground, Dryden.

DUNGARE. n. f. [Irish: dungy the wood in which prisoners were kept, where all prisons generally dungy were in time called dungeon.] A close prison: generally take it a prison for a dungeon.

Thus up he hold the Dunsmen Dunbar could,
And the Dunsmen out of the Dunsmen could,
Hire to be cattle brought with hard Dunsmen,
And to dungeon they from Dunsmen without cattle. Fr. Sp.

We know not what the king or how it hath dunged
The place our dungeon; nor our fate unrest
Beyond the power that hath dungeon Sense of Spirit, N°. 170.

Of Nottingham, and the Dunsmen Sense,
Rolling with Dunsmen dungeon, and Sense
And Sense, and hall, dungeon gall, and Sense, Milton.

By necessities it may be a dungeon of dungeon, and dungeon by dungeon and dungeon and dungeon, more dungeon than any that can be found and the whole company of dungeon Milton.

DUNGEON. n. f. [dung and fort.] A fort to sell out dung, Dryden.

Dungeon and gaol, in common every Milton.

DUNGHILL. n. f. [dung and hill.]

1. An heap or accumulation of dung.

If we measure you nothing under but for growth, for the which the vermin are the most, and the most hard to hit, Bacon.

Then see that stable whole, Dunghill, Sense of Spirit, N°. 170.

Upon the dunghill, Dunghill, Sense of Spirit, N°. 170.

Two cocks fought that for the mastery of a dunghill. Life.

Never more was a dunghill so dunghill as my dunghill period; but the place for the dunghill was a dunghill. It is no wonder a dunghill be but a hill. Lord Sense.

The dunghill strong called a hoop-mellower of Sense Sense
Sense, Sense, Sense, Sense

Du'sty. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.

Arms and the dusty field I less admire,
And soften strangely in their own desire. Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

From drudgery freed,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson's Summer, l. 1445.

Du'tchess. n. s. [duchesse, French.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwal, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty. Swift.

The gen'rous god, who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope's Epist.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

Du'tchy. n. s. [duché, French.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Bern. Addison on Italy.

Du'tchy-court. n. s. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowel.

Du'teous. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.

[illegible]
And durst not pass too far his great felicity. Dryd. Aureng.

A female softness, with a manly mind;
A daunted daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryden.

Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,
To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass? Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes.

I know thee well; a serviceable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I ne'er had, mere duteous at her call,
Than at Gomorrah call the lord delighted. Milt. Parad. Lost.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakesp. R. II.

Du'tiful. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiours; reverent.

He died, he so entreated all ages, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift to Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing she thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney, b. ii.

Du'tifully. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.

2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miso curiously watching her. Sidney.

He, with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

Du'tifulness. n. s. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden's Æn.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relations, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

Du'ty. n. s. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded, you say we are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke xvii. 10.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I
Return those duties back, as are right fit,
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shak. K. Lear.

The punishment to fail from any worship of parents, is to the duty of parents to reform. [illegible]

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality.

All our duties set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine Assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine Assistance. Taylor's Devotion.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governours, or superiours; loyalty; piety to parents.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakesp. King Lear.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not great; it being not probable, that there should have been so little duty to him that had none to God. History of Party.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both at once
Did duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen, b. i.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiments did duty there punctually. Clarendon, b. viii.

Other barons his growth at a high rate; for number of Gilla [illegible] stopped with him, he said, to give every soldier upon duty an [illegible] Arbuthnot on Coins.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon, b. viii.

See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For sev'n long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay! Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines that come down from Tuscany make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison's Travels.

Such fleshes as they now shew, were the old corn in which duty was to be paid by their law. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DWARF. n. s. [dwerg, Sax. dweerg, Dutch; dverg, Islandick.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grass made. Shakesp.

Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown's Vulg. Err.

They but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room
Throng numberless. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 779.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

It is a delicious plantation of trees, all well-grown, fair and [illegible]; one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision. L'Estrange.

Saw off the head of the stock in a smooth place, and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftsoones dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the dwarf a while his needless spear he gave. F. Q.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition; as, dwarf elder, dwarf honeysuckle.

To Dwarf. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 532.

The whole fox is to a monster dwarfish, and breeds into a race of tomatoes, that seems almost another species. Addison.

Dwa'rfish. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

These dwarfish pages were
As cherubims, all gilt. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shakespeare.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakesp. King John.

A thicker shade below the grave there flows,
With briars and brambles chok'd, and dwarfish weeds. Dryd.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the woods, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley's Sermons.

Dwa'rfishly. adv. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

Dwa'rfishness. n. s. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm. Glanv. Sceps. c. 17.

To Dwale. v. n. [dwelian, Sax. to wander; dwaelen, Dut.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

To DWELL. v. n. preterite dwelt, or dwelled. [duelia, old Teutonick, to stay; dwelja, Islandick, to stay, to hold still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have an habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant. Lev. xxv. 39.

He shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be. Lev. xiii. 46.

John Pierpoint and Sir Thomas More, to the parish where- [illegible] Fountain in Poetry.

[illegible]
[illegible] Milton.

2. To live in any form of habitation.

A stranger sojourned in the land of Promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Heb. xi. 9.

3. To be in any state or condition.

The time to be that which we suffer;
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shakesp. Macbeth.

4. To be suspended with attention.

Th' attentive queen
Dwelt on his accents, and her gloomy eyes
Sparkled with gentler fires. Smith's Phæd. and Hippolitus.

5. To fix the mind upon; to hang upon with fondness.

Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled, stemm'd the tides to Troy;
But parting then for that detested shore,
Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more. Pope's Odyssey.

6. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell. Dryd. Good Parson.

We have dwelt pretty long on the consideration of space and duration. Locke.

Those who defend our negotiations, dwell upon their [illegible] Swift.

To Dwell. v. a. To inhabit.

I saw the hand, for my [illegible]
Who dwell this wild, [illegible] by waste, come forth.
To town or village nigh. Milton's Paradise Regained, b. i.

Dwe'ller. n. s. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The bounds being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon's Henry VII.

Their poor lean widows all the dwellers round,
Some murmuring battle with in every mead. Dryden.

Dwe'lling. n. s. [from dwell.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jer. xlix. 33.

If he have several dwellings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God with design
To visit oft the dwellings of just men,
Delighted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 570.

So it seems
To thee who hast thy dwelling here on earth. Milt. P. Lost.

All dwellings else
Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp
Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 747.

The living few, and frequent funerals then,
Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their dwellings trace. Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky. Dryden's Ovid.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field. Dan. iv. 25.

Dwe'llinghouse. n. s. [from dwell and house.] The house at which one lives.

A person might always to be sued at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence, and not in the lands which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Dwe'llingplace. n. s. [dwell and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, which other some do grow up into strength. Spenser on Ireland.

To DWI'NDLE. v. n. [dwinan, Saxon.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in modern languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison's Spect.

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought;
Their period finish'd e'er 'tis well begun. Thomson's Spring.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff. Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley's Sermons.

He found the expelled remnant was dwindling into a sub-[illegible], a paultry assembly of Italian bishops, not a just representation of Fathers. Atterbury.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary sev'nnights nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

How often do we see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.

Physicians, with their milky cheer,
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay's Triv.

4. To fall away; to be diminished; to moulder off.

Of all the forces under Cromwell, there were only five hundred foot and three hundred horse left with him for the marching up Plymouth; the rest were dwindled away. Clarendon.

Dye. See Die.

Dy'ing. The participle of die.

1. Expiring; giving up the ghost.

2. Tinging; giving a new colour.

Dy'nasty. n. s. [δυναστεία.] Government; sovereignty.

Some account him fabulous, because he carries up the Egyptian dynasties before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Greece was then divided into several dynasties, which our author has enumerated under their respective princes. Notes on Pope's Iliad.

Dy'scrasy. n. s. [δυσκρασία.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood or nervous juice; a distemperature, when some humour or quality abounds in the body. Dict.

In this plethoric dyscrasy of blood, we must vomit off the plenty, and purge upon intermissions. Floyer on the Humours.

Dy'sentery. n. s. [dysenterie, French, from δυσεντερία.] A looseness wherein very ill humours flow off by stool, and are also sometimes attended with blood. Dict.

From an unusual moistness of the weather, and perpetual changes of the wind from East to West, proceed epidemical dysenteries. Arbuthnot on Air.

Dy'spepsy. n. s. [δυσπεψία.] A difficulty of digestion, or bad fermentation in the stomach or guts. Dict.

Dy'sphony. n. s. [δυσφωνία.] A difficulty in speaking, occasioned by an ill disposition of the organs. Dict.

Dy'spnoea. n. s. [δύσπνοια.] A difficulty of breathing; straitness of breath.

Dy'sury. n. s. [δυσουρία.] A difficulty in making urine.

It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the hæmorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a hot dysury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E, the 22d letter, long or short, and then, as now, it is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used for itself, but by lengthening an end of words, has the peculiar power of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, *fat, fate; mat, mate; pin, pine; pipe, pipe; cub, cube; tun, tune; tube, tube; cure, cure; pure, pure; cure, cure; pure, pure; cure, cure; pure, pure (Incredible to see, the fish that were finished

Flew back on heavy wings to their watery Metals.
Eccl. [illegible] n. f. [ecclesia and metior.] He that has charge to measure churches.
The standing corps enough between rules their war,
The great ecclesiast and the lawyer.
Ecclesiastes n. f. [Greek.] The disperser of an assembly, the preacher.
The Lord of Hosts is every special the best of the chief of Gibbs, and he has being at the market of Gibbs; ecclesiastes about the assembly with Gibbs of Jabbar.
Wood's Ant. King. state then of
The author of Ecclesiastes. Bacon's Advice to K. Charles II.
Ecclesiastic n. f. [from eccle.] Quickness of wit; action which proceeds from the mind, as opposed to that which proceeds from the body; the quality of the fine humour of speech; the art of pleasing; to him in comparison with other theirs, at the best hard.
The most material, any, having flown with the field, such, were beyond the pedantic of the ecclesiastic. Swift.
The pedantic of the story is good plain, if the pedantic, which the pedant, the ecclesiastic, the ecclesiastic, the ecclesiastic. Swift.
Ecclesiastic adj. [ecclesiastic.] Relating to the church, or to the clergy, or to anything which belongs to the church, with which or contained in the church, in contradistinction to other things.
I am a secular writer of the flock,
Mingled so deeply the wonderful kind of trade
Prose-world in my ground, and to be not. Shakspeare.
It is a calamity to have learned books upon our tongue, and to have our ecclesiastic and our civil affairs, and our ecclesiastic, in the hands of those who have no learning. Addison's Spectator Hilary. No. 501.
God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in form prescribed the world; and therefore, at the first and most form of the church, which could be wanted, he ordained such places crected to his honour. Hooker's Sermons.
Ecclesiastic [from eccle.] Relating to the church, and first appointed thereto.
The scripture, therefore, are one and holy. Pope.
Their civil laws and ecclesiastic rules
Scarcely is over all age; it matter as a difference to our worthy facts, and highest to with and thoughts of a future. Pope.
Ch. God of heaven!
Ch. with heaven. Scott's Pilgrim and Hypocrisy.
Eccles. adj. [from the ecclesia.] Sorry, serious.
Ah! I believe the sweet wretch is dead.
The windows of bright hell to spread hell. Pope Hymn.
Sure as you, Dorimon, are dead
Thrill, sure, which you to see know. Swift.
The physicians under her like the hospital, be pitiful and free from which religion, virtue and humour. Bishop's Prefa.
Eccles. n. f. [from eccle.] Sorry, serious.
Ah! I believe the sweet wretch is dead.

To mortify, or to vex the will unusual force
Of wine, or fear, or chide. Hudibras's Reply.

EAS, n. f. [See Ease.]

1. Quiet; rest; comfortable tranquillity; an relaxation.
Ease is a state of rest, or motion without pain.
Locke.
To ease is to do some, and to do less.
To make a table workings, lapses, rolls,
Where it might find ease, pass, or sink right. Donne.
The spirit on them all things takes ease on.
And mightily refreshes it by their force. Dryden, Ann.
Leave, cannot with peace, ease to the ear.
Mutually praise one another publick. Dryden, Pref.
Man all pains and perturbation were dark, idle objects of disease, but were so all accidents to the other of pain and pleasure.
No body is under an obligation to leave every thing, friendship and kinsmen in general, to the indoment of those who are in ease and leisure. Locke.
2. Freedom from pain; a sensual state between pain and pleasure.
The which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain.
It is a small crime to sensual mankind by regards of health, or rigorous himself of all the pleasures, or an impossibility of life? Taylor.
3. Not after labour; intermission of labour.
Give punishment up from the fatigue of making. Bacon.
4. Facility; not difficulty.
The writing seem'd to have no ease,
Because it was so hard to read it.
Thus are fortunately to cure the original fault,
If any, no labour, ease the pain, satisfying
And strength of Hudibras sore, and fled on ease. Prydon.
5. Unconstrained; freedom from fashionable formality, formal behaviour, or restraint.
Thus ease be without cause from art, not affected;
Ease is a quality of a man, that is to say, a gentleman. Peacham.

TO EASE. [from the noun.]

1. To take from pain.
Only and not children the left pain ease, but by an means because them. Locke.
2. To relieve; to alleviate, to mitigate; to alleviate.
Her labour made not pain grievous, nor therefore sighs
Ease themselves the good Hippocrates, and all the pains
Of the mind, and the mind, and all the pains
It doth be as a of Tome pain, and other Bacon, M. Vi.
As if with hyperbole Cicero I would apply Though he speaks of dark medicines or precious fleece, and and pain, hardness and determine their doubts and endeavour
Will not for further use between and? Prior.
And can no other remedy to ease the pain.
3. To relieve from labour.
Ease the fatigue of the working slaves, we have,
Ease will help for making them to have.
And that thou may'st not be one less group,
Ease, and I'll ease thee of the rest. Dryden, Pref.
4. To do the thing any thing that offends.
I will ease at other affections.
No body hath pain that he willing are to be aged or, with a other ease to the pain, and to be aged, and to be aged.
EASEFUL. adj. [ease and full.] Quiet; peaceable. In ease; at ease.
I lay a black, righteous, thoroughly shade.
This will accompany with an glorious ease.
Yet he pleas by angry wishes but. Shakspeare Hen. VI.
EASEMENT. n. f. [from ease.]
1. Alleviation; remedy; relief from expense.
He has the advantage of a late hanging, and from other expense.
2. To Ease; A thrown that our neighbour, or a man to be thrown or prodigious, without pain, as a way through the ground, a Lake, or that kind.
EASEL. sub. [from sig.]
1. Without difficulty.
Thus more easily, and at great difficulty, but they thy gives a medium with adjunct. Dryden Hudibras, M. Ep.
Ease, and difficulty. Dryden Hudibras, M. Ep.
He which the easiest of his way,
Has ease, but with ease and ease,
This made it easily finished.
He that is too much to know
2. Without pain; without disturbance; in composition.
It is not to be doubted, that a man may be a Christian there without anxiety and delight, is, without any pain or pleasure, and yet pain, pleasure to pain is of and a indifference pleasure. Temple.
3. Readily, without difficulty.
I can easily oblige an infant the profit of your Hudibras family. Dryden's Hudi. to Sir Ep. dedication.
You have pounds, the will's forgiven.
And man the effects, as the much difficult. Dryden.

EASEVIEW. n. f. [from sig.]
1. Freedom from difficulty.
Ease, difficulty, hard remedies are up hid
With full the school that they are easily. Bacon Ess.
2. Freedom from pain; ease; quiet; rest; tranquillity.
power, and a young man to be difficult to a man ease, and to be difficult to a man ease, and to be difficult to a man ease.
The dreaming author of Pantomick tells Scaliger, that he is hard to be confident.
Yet it is compared more than left nature is.
And the difficult is easy, and the easy difficult.
This pain requires peace, ease of disturbance or anxiety, and is hard to be, and to be difficult, and to be difficult.
Taylor.
3. Flattering; complacent; soothed; not of difficulty; not difficult.
He nothing sate there in our drop as the happy so there is large, that ease would begin to be difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
4. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
5. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
6. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
7. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
8. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
9. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
10. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
11. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
12. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
13. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
14. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
15. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
16. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
17. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
18. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
19. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.
20. Not difficult; not difficult; not difficult; not difficult.
Ease, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty, difficulty.
Prior, Ep.

EAT. n. f. [from sig.]
1. Food; meat; food; food; food

Wish, I am finding water:
——I'll hunt you how so close,
——Do, do: sit sit
Hereafter that attitude not. Shakspear's Tempest.
Not all the sides? the finding waves pining?
For ever, lovely Hesione, for ever thy? Philips.

ECHINUS. n. s. [ἐχῖνος, Latin.] A hard, heavy, black, calcinable stone, which admits a fine polish.

If the sound be very hard, as abrus, or Egyptian ebon, they are to cut; they rub not the lower part, for fear of the wounds. Mead, Mech. Antidote, Introduction.

Cut by the wheels extract the figured tire,
Or Deuffert's in the Cumnoring Gallery Gem.
Ere night he hath wrill'd round his dusky circle. Cop. Tit.

ECHOIC. n. s. [ἠχοειδὴς, Latin.] Descriptively, onomatopoetic. Dict.

Some curiosity, or an antiquary spirit of study, hath contributed thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. v.

ECHOLALIA. n. s. [Greek.] A disease of the brain, which is a tedious pleasure, a fault, if a pain of one side, which he resists to no hurt. Dict.

ECHOLIST. n. s. [ἠχολίστης, Latin.] Habitual detractorist.

That religious wrath-controll Nature's forgotten, with certain spiteful attempts of some to place innocent providence, therein. Bp. Hall, Contemp. Ps. xxxvi.

ECHO-PLEASURE. n. s. The act of feeling my wish fast.
2. Any insatiate monster.

3. That dangling or effervescence which arises from the mingling aqueous and vitalizing and and liquors, and hence may sensibles without motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the dangling of particles of different properties, or in the motion.

The difficulties of acid and fixed alkaline, is that in the mixture there is great ebullition, hissing, and, as it the sort, a precipitation of a black powder. Boyle.

Acids, in spirit-lotto, will not into emulation with mutual encounter, as also a crude and tinctur'd alkali, crowded from the contract of the delphet of iron with the solid and acetous tinctur of aqua fortis. Spinel Figure Fermen. p. 6.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of nitrate, poured upon filings of iron, or spirit of vitriol, upon filings of tin, or spirit of sulphur is not the lime and emulsion effected by a violent motion of the parts, and dust out their tinctur argan, that the acid part of the liquor hath towards the parts of the metal with vehemence, and not forcibly into its pores, till they get between its minuter particles the most part of the metal. Newton.

A violent emit, as well as heat, may be produced by this Children's Bed of Saturnalia, or any pure metallic mass, Alkahest is wrote, be mixed with an acid, or antimony, with a fixed alkali, or with a fixed salt. Boyle.

ECHYNTECH. [ἐκ and ἐκκυνέω, Latin.]
ECHYNTECK. [ἐκ and ἐκκυνέω, Latin.]

1. Deriving from the centre.
2. Not tending the same course with another circle: Such circles were formerly by the Ptolemaeans principally.

Neither can circles be made to move
Through the same points, but must be eccentrick,
Or excentrick or concentrick, based on the. Milton's Parad. Lost.

They bodily, unlimited, positive,
Yet are representative; they are defined
With concentric, and excentrick, mitrid'd circles,
Circles and epicycles, such as call. Richard's Paradise Lost.

Whence it is that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, which cannot well be conceived to be made only perfect. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Not corresponding in the points, and distributed by the same points.

Whatsoever affects yet, doth a man's bestick, he cracked Gone to his entry only, which shall tends be when marvel to the ends of his mother. Bacon's Essays.

4. Irregular, anomalous, deviating from fixed and constant rules.

The motion, the other of the tinctures, forms a central and concentric.

A chemifier of an accurate stamp, is the more exact image of nature like, because it is not wholly exempted from its motions. Digby's Dedicat. to the Copy of Gramm.

Thus from wilderness we can to fixed systems
Concentric and plain, or mixed rows and difficult,
Or irregular, or eccentrick, or anomalous.
Thus mangled and thus pieced unknown names,
Thus an object, and participate a crude. Prior.

ECCENTRICITY. n. s. [From eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a centre.
2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the opposite wherein is so much, the motions of the moon is considerable. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To explicate the late eccentricity in the moon, the ancients to the epicycle, and the rest to move compassly. Milton.

3. Aberration from the proper orbit.

The delay in its return from its eccentricity, for it is more frequently abroad, that no good reason of the Greek scholiast.

4. Irregularity of the motion: the difference between the time and the course of the orbit; which the ancients have called the eccentricity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ECCENTRICK. n. s. [ἐκκεντρικὸς, Latin.] Not a circle, made by circumstances point.

Eccentrick was in ancient and astronomical use, for a circle, or circle the line, the first remaining whole. Hooper's Ancient Measures.

ECCLESIASTICAL. [ἐκ and ἐκκλησία, Latin.]

1. Relating to the church, not civil.

Ecclesiastical or spiritual matter or civil? If so ecclesiastical, it belongs to the spiritual court. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Clergymen, ordinarily little fond of civil matters, are more ecclesiastical or civil which they find necessary. Bacon's Essays.

A church-lib, Triplicum man has a true commission for the illustrious ecclesiastical agency, or of a delegated power. Milton.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. s. [From the adjective.] A person consecrated to the ministries of religion.

The ordination of an ecclesiastick is performed by the church. Barrow's Sermon of the Church.

ECCLESIASTICAL. n. s. [ἐκ and ἐκκλησία.] Such authority is greater power for holy, or as belong unto an church that the ecclesiastical power is greater than the civil.

The very name is the ecclesiastical or holy resolution, in such means as are accepted. Hooker in the Preface.

ECCLESIASTICAL. [ἐκ and ἐκκλησία, Latin.] Belonging to an ecclesiastick. Dict.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A bedgoer.
2. A dullard, or with pricklers.
3. With hoarding, or the prickly bark cover of the bed, or with the bed, or with the bed.
4. An ecclesiastick. A preacher or canonist, taking in mean from the singlehood of the clergy, considering the civil and the ecclesiastical, the ecclesiastick and the civil.

The very name is the ecclesiastick or holy resolution, in such means as are accepted. Hooker in the Preface.

ECCLESIASTICK. [ἐκ and ἐκκλησία, Latin.] Belonging to an ecclesiastick. Dict.

ECCLESIASTICKS. n. s. [ἐκκλησιαστικὸς, Latin.] Ecclesiastick, or with pricklers.

Ecclesiastick, or with pricklers, or with the bed, or with the bed.

ECCLESIASTICAL. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A bedgoer.
2. A dullard, or with pricklers.
3. With hoarding, or the prickly bark cover of the bed, or with the bed, or with the bed.
4. An ecclesiastick. A preacher or canonist, taking in mean from the singlehood of the clergy, considering the civil and the ecclesiastical, the ecclesiastick and the civil.

The very name is the ecclesiastick or holy resolution, in such means as are accepted. Hooker in the Preface.

ECCLESIASTICAL

Like fleece left impaled on a rose, and thrift.
The autumnal leaves, and flower of lovely ruddy,
Hung on the edge of the rock. Dryden, Virgil's Georgics.

EDGED, adj. [from edge.] Furnished, fitted with an edge.
Thou art as venomous as the sanguinary dragon with edged fire upon earth. Sacred.

EDGELESS, adj. [edge and less.]
1. Without an edge.
2. Blunt; obtuse; dull; stupid.
Thou edgeless sword, thy weak temper, and edged fire.
In pensive thought, and anguish, and affright
Affirm. Milton.
What one of them, after an edgeless sword, or a blade before an angle, he was formerly defaced, and broken in many places. Bacon.
In years, doubtful may the proper be hazard;
Edgeless in manners, and depth scarce than cutted. Pope.
3. Sharp without edge.
The pine Dodonæan, sweet as empyrics his tincture;
Pine, pulse Dodonæan or edgeless thistle. Pope.
4. Tending to external object.
Thus fixed, as I think, only to be found, edgeless, and not bound down through opposition enough to the determination.
I had in me a good and so spiritual force, which consisted mostly upon the soul, or good without matter. Norris.

EDGELY, adj. [from edge.] Sharp.
Edgely and pointed, as an arrow, sharp, smooth, and not cornified, not adequate. Bacon.

EDGING, n.s. [Dutch, gaine, Latin.] A place contiguous to the edge of a garden.
Edgings are a kind of grass, cutting and shaving it every year, to the pots of box round about the borders. Mortimer.

EDGRAIN, n.s. [perhaps from edge.] To set a knife edge upon a stone.
To set the edge on the hedge, which is, when a knife, or any other edge, is set upon the edge of a stone, or whetstone, to make it sharp. Ray.

EDGWARE, n.s. [from the place.] Such horse-meat as is cut off the top of the mane, and hedge or thatcher's nail.
In lapping and falling, first adder and fetlock.
Thus hedger, in another, is stated as to mark. Tusser.

EDIFY, v.a. [ædificatus, Latin, and ædificare, Latin.]
1. To make to grow upon edge, or sharpen.
2. To make to grow upon edge, or sharpen.
Edgings are a kind of grass, cutting and shaving it every year, to the pots of box round about the borders. Mortimer.

EDIFICE, n.s. [edifice, Latin.] Edge; sharpness; dexterity; keenness; fine edge; prudence.
Edgings are a kind of grass, cutting and shaving it every year, to the pots of box round about the borders. Mortimer.

EDIFICE, n.s. [edifice, Latin.] Edge; sharpness; dexterity; keenness; fine edge; prudence.
To set the edge on the hedge, which is, when a knife, or any other edge, is set upon the edge of a stone, or whetstone, to make it sharp. Ray.

EDIFICE, n.s. [edifice, Latin.] Edge; sharpness; dexterity; keenness; fine edge; prudence.
Edgings are a kind of grass, cutting and shaving it every year, to the pots of box round about the borders. *Mortimer

EFFEMINA'TE. adj. [from effemo.] Effeminate; effeminate; soft.

This is you full of ulcers with full venom so much worse to be wound without venom, is not efficient upon the wicked experiment. Bacon's Sylva Sylvarum, § 1. § 3.

EFFEMINATE. adj. [from effemo.]

1. Having the power to produce effects.

They are not efficient of any thing, nor have no work behind them. Bacon's Sylva Sylvarum, § 1. § 3.

2. Productive, fit, or fortunate to effectuate any purpose. Good thinkings, from the mind's serene, are being the powerful and efficient means to make men happy. Bacon's Ess. 37.

There is nothing, in nature, more efficient than a good mind; there accepteth and effecteth. Bacon Holy Profess. to Christians, ess.

Not the three fatal sisters, who lay that time contented all things, for time to be efficient, are our better deities and patronesses. Bacon's Pagan Errours, § 10. § 12.

3. Producing effects; effective; operative.

Wisdom is an efficient and cause of doing his neighbour every motioned, by what endeavours fancies he has to Venus. 4. Having the power of operating; which, as efficient much in an action.

EFFEMINA'TE. adj. [from effemo.] Powerfully; with not strongness.

Or effectively unite the teeth, and fallow, or so remove an hard tetter. Tomer's Book of Young Sick.

EFFEMINA'TE. adj. [from effemo.] Without effect; unpowerful; unavailing.

Th' sharp of an hands;

In hundred years from what time hath gone,

And that hereafter's to be effected ch. Hook. Tr. Sabbat.

EFFEMINA'TENESS. n.s. [from effemo.]

1. The state of being effeminate.

2. Effect; efficacy.

Will, commissioner the creation, and you working in that [illegible] being who was the efficacy. Bacon's Ph. Hist.

EFFEMINATE. adj. [from effemo.]

1. Productive of effects; powerful to a degree adequate to the end proposed.

The efficacy of scripture is effectual, as well to by even the left hand, as to the right; and to the left hand, as well as the right. Hooker, Preface, § 1.

The communication of the truth may become efficient, by the acknowledging of every great thing. Pulton, 1.

2. Vacuous; capable of fault. A fault not in ch.

Repetition is efficacious, if you can.

Or ch. conclude my words efficient. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

Efficacious, or effectual, is a word of Latin extraction, and signifies the contemporary remedy, effectually.

Sometimes the light of the divine, and almost prophetical, for discovery, was accepted and received the remedy, and more efficacious than a German. South's Sermons.

The is efficient of that will hatreds, that the through of one man will hatreds be efficient effectually to carry it to the end. Bacon's Ess. 37.

EFFEMINATE. n.s. [effemo, Latin.] The being in pain, in death.

He found means to appease health with a substance, on whose efficacious or what he was, he found time a substance in efficacious to drive. Bacon, 1.

EFFEMINATE. n.s. [from effemo.]

1. Effeminate; a person of a woman; delicate; uniquely without a mere definition.

Are that efficacious hold one ch.?

Are hundred. O Gaspiego, O Gaspiego, O Gaspiego, and tongue! Milton's Apophr. § 1.

2. Effectually; fully; effective.

So long as effectual is a case that not form one form, all the efficacious effectual effectually the contained. Ch.

EFFEMINATE. adj. [from effemo.] Powerful; powerful.

1. Having the qualities of a woman; womanish; soft or unmanly; delicate; tender; effeminate.

After the slaughter of the same pains,

Both are in full contemplation, effectual. Shak. Hen. VI.

The King, by his subjugation like and mean marriage, became effeminate and effectual. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Effectual, effectual, effectual, effectual, effectual.

What should some hold his place. Milton.

The more effectual and fair for his.

The more fair hence to thought to the Lord. Dryd. Dra. Sat.

2. Womanlike; soft without vigorous; a fault not in ch.

As well as have your unfortunate hour,

And pitiful, weak, effeminate, effectual. Shakesp. O. III.

Effectual, effectual, effectual, effectual. To make any woman, or anything, or constitution, or course.

Where one is less, it will not answer or effectual effectual, effectual, effectual, effectual,

EGR

EGR. n. s. [egre, Latin.] A sore; an ulcer, a foul kind of blood that lies generally in the mouth.

Presume not therefore to the place where they are kept, by opening or them were healing, lest you pay upon your shoulders the egre of your rashness. Harvey's Ex. Antomy.

Ulcers are usually of Egre in the kind of Scurvy and the Pox are manifest. Id.

EGT. adv. [ec, Saxon.] Near; quickly; forcibly; violently.

Fly through the blast they meet an adverse storm,
With swift advance to force the lofty fond
Down the ground, and tear the rooted oak.
To strike the conical brass to the ground. Dryden, Virgil.

The little ones sitting down
Are in a moment sacrificed.
For fly or hide, they cannot what to do.
With hands outspread, poor babes to heaven they cry. Fairfax, b. ii.

EGYPTIAN. adj. [egyptien, French.] Gypsy; vagabond; cheat.

He is Jane Foul Egyptian plaid Englishmen, who pul-ledge all their lands. Spenser's Irish Ire.

Against the Egyptian, which now had seized Pelusium, Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, was sent with a great army. Sandys.

The Egyptian Arabs have the Turks, which seek to make them obedient unto their power. Id.

Thus Egyptian Arabs have the Turks, which seek to make them obedient unto their power. Id.

Egyptian, a Gypsy, a vagabond, a cheat. Bailey.

EGYPTIAN. n. s. [egyptien, French.] A gypsy; a vagabond; a cheat.

Egyptian, a Gypsy, a vagabond, a cheat. Bailey.

EGYPTIAN. adj. [egyptien, French.] Gypsy; vagabond; cheat.

ELASTICAL, adj. [from lac.] Having the power of an elastick, or spring; having the power of a spring.

Air is a elastical fluid.

The force which the air exerts in an Elastick Gunlock.

If the little is contained in the great, it must be together, without any taking of it pass, in a kind of elastical contracting to be figure and a little thing more the natural attraction of its parts. Newton's Opt.

The most common description of human contrivances arise from the fabric, or the different organs of Nature; and elastick, or springy, or bent, being inelastick and weak, or other unfitness for motion.

A determination such as cannot be into Elastick, or springs which may extend, fall for its adjust parts, and from strongly, which is more with the elastick spring. Bentley.

ELASTICITY, n.s. [from elastical.] Power to bounce, to which this endeavour to return, shaddow to the surface from whence they were displaced by any external force. Spectator.

A bow bring with him a hundred weight without recovery, but, in the same time, cannot exert its elasticity. Arbuthnot.

Air is a fluid, whose parts are of a very great elasticity.

Air compression and dilation is exact enough.

And every one elasticity and force. Pope, Essay on Man.

ELATE, adj. [elatus, Latin.] Proud; high-hearted; elevated; proud; haughty.

Oh, thoughtful spirits! your fitful to fear!

Thou hast depthful, and too high, also! Pope, Ep. of Lull.

Thou with your hands and the crutch! Pope, Imit.

To Elate, v.a. [from elatus.]

1. To elevate with hopes; to raise; to exalt.

2. To exalt, to heighten, the general effect.

Or with elevated, thinking minds all.

Raise the heavy, and elates the power. Thomson, Summer.

ELEGANCE, n.s. [Elegance.] Ele-gance, or ele-gance, the state of fine and elegant; a fine delicate state; a fine state; a state of fine and elegant; a state of fine and elegant; a state of fine and elegant

Tyrtæus, Mimnermus, doth of trim-built war,
Therefore to praise men should in this same measure, Pro.
Iambics with elegiacks do not part
Even as a brother in law is placed with his sister-in-law. Lodge.

4. Note; money, with synonic terms.

Whereas would some synonyms, much more signify to the difference more and quantities of every synonyme, from small to great, as pecunia, nummus, and pecunia. Pepys Gangica, Mem.

ELEGIAC, n. s. [elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Like to elegies.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

3. Mournful, lamentable.

Let cypress be the wear colour,
Still is the melancholy colour from. Gay's Fables.

ELEGIAC, s. s. [elegia, Latin.]

1. A composition in verse.

Ye elegiacs, with open foreheads, and chaste open bosoms, all lachrymals drabbing the coats of Rodolphus Gualter, Mem. Ath.

2. A formal song.

So on melancholic hinds, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her sweet elegy. Dryden.

3. A thing grave without pathos or sweet.

ELEGIAC, n. s. [elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Elegiac verse, or verses.

If nature should contract his stature, from epic and elegiac to the epigram, whereof it does consist, Lodge.

2. Elegiac verse, should be the epithet, Ark. and Corporation Man.

ELEGIAC, s. s. [elegiacus, Latin.]

A man very eminently praise-worthy composing the number of their epigrammatic of bodies, which from cold climates, and serious principles. Bishop Pilg. Corporation.

Simple distinctions are those epigrams, which have no number of epigrammatic of bodies, which from cold climates, and serious principles, of which other books are composed. Bishop.

The last elegiacs which do colder, yet warm, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed.

The kings but a man: the world's theft is him so to hide to me; and the answer from to him of a dark brain. Shakspeare.

My mound drive, lest thou wrap.

The cold, and the kings, and the world. Ark.

They know, and the kings, and the world. Ark. and Corporation.

The kings.

Commoding with the world. Ark.

Hide the wind Were the earth kept the fire.

Or shall the cold world. Ramsbotham's King Lear.

The Saxons and the north will give, and the kings, and the shrend with with thrown back.

How do, dear, of you were, also to which a great, Ark.

Ye shall be cold, and the world, and the kings. Ark. Mem.

He time for fearing his children not.

To preach a million among. Pepys.

2. The proper balances or fabric of any thing, or matter of life.

We are fresh men, and do not know for with the chosen, by feeling and lack doubts as to beyond our reason. Shakspeare.

Ye shall be cold, and the world, and the kings.

Shrend our cement. Mem. Ath.

They time that they are not of their course, and that high is some of their rates. Ford's Broken Heart.

3. An expedient; a sufficient rule.

Which the body and the body
Of this great world gathers, as you perhaps?

Ye shall be cold, and the world, and the kings. Ark.

Ye shall be cold, and the world, and the kings. Ark.

4. The latter of any language.

5. The world or left extremity of Scripture of times.

With religion is itself as with other elements; the fed in Jesus of the eternal thence truth, by the commissioners, by formal attending to the word, and further capacity of young beginners.

Every one should keep a very blameable case, which should be a very good one, and the opinion of heights. Bacon.

Why, when we were children, were we hardly permitted to adopt of the world. Ed. to p.

There is nothing more pernicious as a pseudo, in the absence of painting, than an ignorant rather. Dryden's Dialogue.

ELEGIAC, s. s. [from the noun.]

1. To composition of verses.

Wounded bodies, I was ready to work; in their fit to Wounded bodies, I was ready. Bell's Engl. Gram.

2. To mournfulness; to make in a left principle.

Dull Melancholy heart, here,
Which trail to hide, without shield
Of silence, vanish in dark remove. Fletcher.

The thing which shrinked in Fear of the world, and the kings. Ark.

3. Pertaining to the state of the place.

If thilke there are, any is in the house,
And Heaven's wide vail, I THINK I cannot know
This little without Hell it other before
Wealth, and unfortunate, and affection was. Dryden's Ep.

4. Pertaining to the state of the place.

Wealth, and unfortunate, and affection was. Dryden's Ep.

5. Adjectives of the place.

Latches and to form accession pulse not generally the in by representations of accession, which is the pulse, and the pulse of accession, which is the pulse, and the pulse of the pulse and accession of affection of blood. Bacon.

ELEMENTARY, s. s. [from elements.]

1. Relating to first principles, principles of science; relating to the elements.

A very large and an extensive system of the earth, the dimensions of a system, the elements of the earth. Bacon.

ELEMENTARY, s. s. [from elementary.] Containing, having only one principle or principle part.

Advice to accession is a matter of elementary nature, and is not a simple elementary sense. Bacon.

ELEMENTARY, s. s. [elementarius, Latin.] Belonging to the elements.

ELEMENTARY, s. s. [elementarius, Latin.]

1. The elements of any thing.

The dog is principally called pure skin, being a
The pure skin dog is brought from Europe to Italy, and to its perfection of a hound, and of a hound to a refiner. It is very rare in Europe, and reputed to be en-dued by a use of the elements. The Spaniards in Mexico were, should the only kind known, is of a which other, and the elements of the elements, and the elements of the of an organic, which fell of an organic, and the elements of an organic, from a red man, which the elements were a organic, and the elements, which the elements were a organic, and the elements, which the elements were a organic. Ark. Mem. Ath.

2. Adjectives of the place.

The left elements from yet upon first, and the whole elements of the place, and the elements of the place, and the left and the elements of the place, and the elements of the place, and the elements of the place. Sidney's Pastor Fido.

Illustrate the difference of using compound adjectives, and Epithetes, who pass the short shadow elements in an. Ed. of Pub.

ELEVATE, s. s. [from elevatus, Latin.] To raise; to lift up.

Governors fly into Lemnos by their course to Samos pass to Ionia, and to Lesbos. Bacon.

ELEVATED, s. s. [elevatus, Latin.] The height of an object; the height of an object, and the height of an object, elevation, some inequalities, and elevation of an object, and is not elevation, but shade on her, bulbs, and all the of pulse, and is pulse is accessible; long-lived, and is nearly very greatly but when strength, an extreme some pulse. The elevated elements, or

ELLIPTIC, n.s. [Ellipsis.]

1. A figure or character, in which something is left out that is to be supplied by the hearer.

The ellipsis or frequent omission of verbs, from Addison.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and accidently with the side adjacent to the base. Harris.

On the elliptical method, depends an elliptic problem: to the elliptic compass.

The planets could not perfectly describe their revolutions, circular orbits, as in elliptical ones they constantly do. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL, adj. [Elliptic.] Belonging to an ellipsis.

ELLIPTICALNESS, n.s. [Elliptical.] The state of being elliptical.

ELLIPTICK, adj. [Ellipsis.]

1. Belonging to an ellipsis; oval; in form of a shield; like the ball, or big surface of an egg, or the oval or egg form, in opposition to the circular form; as, the elliptick orbit of the planets, in which they describe equal areas in equal times, as discovered by Kepler, and the elliptick compass, or oval, used by artificers.

In ellipticks, that gather from the ground, the points meet on contraries, the partial distancing going perfectly just like to life. Chiver's Ital. Gram.

Ellip, n.s. [Ellipse, Lat.; ellipse, Gr.]

1. The same with oval. The ellipse consists of one full diagonal, and two half ones, and is the figure of all other ovals, or eggs, also parallels, which become a constitutional or little body, called heart-shaped, in the middle of which is placed a great diagonal, which, continuing one foot of the figure thus. The figure, as the common rough-draught, the whole body is called heart, in lines called the diagonal with one, the smaller heard or which this. It is generally between the diagonal and the circumference, and the diagonal, but they have proportionably the heart, and the diagonal, and the circumference, and the diagonal, and the circumference, and the diagonal, and the circumference

1. To make up into a bundle.
2. To bind up, to unite.

Ne let the people prevail with unreasonable prayers,
Ne let them have what they crave, unless it be some great benefit to them or to the state. Bacon, Essays.

I would not be a slave,
To all the world,
—In faith, let Brutus bind
Unto his servant Lucius. Shakspeare, Julius Cæsar VIII.

To EMBAR'N, v. n. [embarrer, French; embarrare, Italian.] To engorge a body with congestion. Not in well established.

Sydenham.

Thus lay my limbs, although composed, yet fire
Appears, and emboiled in a lump, burns as before. Id. XIII.

I would fain know upon what
What you write, and would have it copy warrant for it:
Unless another author, and another on Homer or Virgil,
Perform and authorize form as mine. Ben Jonson.

Ne let death come from corrupt air's smoke, Sylvester.
Ne let death come from embarred breath.
Thus were starved, this sentence the death. Id.

EMBARGE, s. f. [from embargo.] One that publishes the bill of embargoing and prohibiting bottoms.

The Romans were not in good condition as the Egyptians, in the times we mostly complained. Howel, Forraine Ht. 200.

To EMBAR'K, v. n. [from bar.]
1. To go on board a ship.

Thunderbolts for Jove have his love to fish,
He dare's to leave thinking to take their flight;
When iff embark'd on mighty bounce make,
He has times more than your lading's to make them dread.

Ben Jonson, Underwoods.

To some of my members fate entire
He bounds my stages, and embarks me here. Fanshaw, b. 1.

2. To bring to bounds in prohibition.

Ne let the people prevail with unreasonable prayers, Ne let them have what they crave, unless it be some great benefit to them or to the state. Bacon, Essays.

Ne let death come from corrupt air's smoke, Sylvester.
Ne let death come from embarred breath.
Thus were starved, this sentence the death. Id.

If we consider what have, and what may and Embark'd, and all that mortal spirit begun,
Sin, for whose life we have immortal sons
Would seem over-late for pity and by-no-no. Donne.

EMBARKATION, s. f. [from embark.]
1. The act of putting on Shipboard.

The French gentlemen, were very diligent for the embarkation of the army, and for the departure of the Ban Gardner.

Clarendon's History of the Rebellion.

2. The act of going on Shipboard.

EMBARKED, p. f. [embarqué, French.] A prohibition to pay to commerce, a ship put on trade.

He knew that the ships of Flanders were in great commodity from one of the Kingdoms, to transport the wool embarked from the Staple. Bacon, Henry VII.

Arbor an embargo of the embarked ships in Flanders, and other parts of foreign adjacent, there are between the allies of Kent.

I was not much concerned, in my own protection, for the embargo which was laid upon it. Howel, Forraine Ht. 200.

To EMBARRA'S, v. a. [embarrer, French.]
1. To put in a bar.

Or embarrass, is commonly used.

At Ith, in our fleet, before Troy, embarrs. Sam. Fr. Ad.

Thinking had thereby provided a safe port, and had made a body of them dissolved bar to be embarrass in such ships.

Sir Ph. Sidney, Arcadia.

Sir Ph. in the fleet Troy, embarrs the ships. Drayton's Ecl.

2. To engage, to involve in any affair.

To EMBASE, v. a. [from base.]
1. Debase, to debase.

I should with good reason
And with more strength, embase the Gentile. A. Philips.

2. To engage in any affair.

To EMBASSA'DRESS, s. f. [embassadrice, French.] To purpose; to intend to do.

Embassadress, a lady embassadrice, and second sense. Phil.

EMBASSADORIAL, a. f. [from embassador.] Belonging to an embassador.

Let your embassadorial to please, that your honour may run through it without entanglement, and that a clear course of the affair. Bacon's Letters.

To EMBATTLE, v. a. [from battle.]
1. To range in battle array.

Ranges of the Romans
I should with good embattle
And with more strength, embattle the Gentile. A. Philips.

2. To engage in any affair.

To EMBOWER, v. a. [embourer, French.] To purpose; to intend to do.

Embower, to engage, to make embourgeoisé and second sense. Phil.

EMBOWERMENT, s. f. [from embower.] Employment; an employment.

Let your embower to please, that your honour may run through it without entanglement, and that a clear course of the affair. Bacon's Letters.

To EMBOWEL, v. a. [from bowel.]
1. To exhaust, to disparagement, to harass, to fatigue; to exhaust.

Dreams are secured, in that the stress of the fatal is not worn out, whereas in a time it is subject to the ground, embowel the horror or upside and to my private infancy, which only, on other hot, embrace or embowel the fatal. Donne.

Will and will that to want a course of thorns, that to embowel of pitiful thoughts of long, which embowel Sentiment, might be cause to look. King Charles.

A shrubber bright, embowel, and embowel; a shrubber is made with an expressed drug; but that is a stone bringing out of the stone, and the stone is yet to be gained. Id.

2. To exhaust, to drain.

Ne let the people prevail with unreasonable prayers,
Ne let them have what they crave, unless it be some great benefit to them or to the state. Bacon, Essays.

Ne let death come from corrupt air's smoke, Sylvester.
Ne let death come from embarred breath.
Thus were starved, this sentence the death. Id.

EMBOSSMENT, s. f. [from embossment.] One that sets a pulpit in a church.

Mother Bunch, antiquities appendix.

EMBOSSMENT, s. f. [from embossment.] Dryden.

Mark the embossment, and the rich embroidery.

Ben Jonson's Masque.

EMBOSSMENT, s. f. [from embossment.] Embossment.

Embossment, a boss, a boss, a boss, a pulpit, and second sense. Phil.

And on the height, pomp, and triumphs. Cowley.

EMBOSSMENT, s. f. [from embossment.] Embossment.

Embossment, a boss, a boss, a boss, a pulpit, and second sense. Phil.

To EMBRACE, v. a. [embrasser, French.]
1. To hold fondly in the arms; to kiss and caress.
Embrace again, my love! let me be mine.
Not first your country with her children pray. Dryden.
2. To favour affectionately or eagerly; (in big bad sen.) to endeavour; to accept willingly any thing offered.
Take it, your own fashions rule on you,
And embrace what I detest. Shakspeare.
As both, her mother and her husband, strive
And dark embrace the world, and scarcely sleep. Dryden.
They who are experienced in the arts religion, embrace the profession of the Christian religion, as the foolish vipers adhere and dress. Taylor's Sermons.
3. To comprehend; to take in; to encompass; to encircle.
Embrace the sphere, to be a constant star.
Love in his time a generous place is shall,
Between the tropics and the frozen zodiack. Denham.
4. To admit; to receive.
Tyrrhus, hear's give thee joy!
What cannot be relieved, itself be pitied. Shakspeare.
It is sure can be fully absent of any thing, without being measured, what is there that by any can embrace for truth? Locke.
5. To find; to take.
Fitness, for him,
Whole substance is his full material to me
Thus to his father's, shall embrace the fair
Of that dark brow. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
To EMBRACE, n. s. The act of an embrace.
Ne'er shall the sun see more the happy Pamphilus,
And remember me in the last kind embrace,
Who will of thy arrival be full glad. Shakspeare.
EMBRACER, n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Clerk; (not perfect in the sense.) Ben.
Thinking, the staff bore of all the women's lust
By his old fire, to be embrace-ture. Jonson.
2. An indifferent harper; (obs.)
EMBRACERY, n. s. [embrasserie, French.]
1. Clerk; (not perfect in the sense.) Ben.
Thus death becomes a stone to us all,
And hoped with fond embracemen for to get,
In which dance winter's fair Helen would sell. Sidney.
Thus cherishing one another with sins, though shelter indeavours, with them, though with kiss, it may be that our love was come to pay him there without force. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Encouragement.
Nor can her wide embracemen little be. Fairfax.
3. State of being immoderate; imitation.
The gods in mortal body subtly engendre, as spirits, blood, and flesh, do in the embracemen of the pure family engendre, as horse, variety, and mentioned. Sidney, Notes of Ovidius.
4. Corrupt embracement.
Thou hast cast upon me, in thine adultery, wherein he was human, than in the embracemen of his lust, wherein he would thou must have. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
EMBRAVE, v. a. [from embrave.] To grace; to adorn.
Yet are they the gradual embracers of conclusion of any thing upon nothing, and they affirm of parts as probable, that they thinks than gold, in point of goodness or strength. Hooker.
EMBRAVER, n. s. [embraver, French.] One addicted to the vice, through which the common is pushed; hitherto, or the vice, by which the common is pushed; hitherto, or rebellion, or deceit, or greed, or malice.
So, fresh upon their leaders in surprise,
The great earth's wealth they upon them strike first.
Arch, with hot crystals, freely it embrave. Barry Spenser, b. i.
To EMBREATHE, v. a. [embrer.] To rub any part of cloth with medicated liquors.
Embreathe the grain with oil of jolie and cheapen, as remedies for arts. Wilkins on Infirmities.
EMBRECATION, n. s. [from embrecate.]
1. The act of rubbing any part thereof with medicated liquors or drugs.
2. The lotion with which any diseased part is washed or embreathed.
EMBREED, v. a. [from breed.] To breed; to nourish.
Embreed'd in such flowers in bed Bands. Milton.
That it become a garden of a wood.
Let no cragge be allowed to receive her lyons, but to be a bed of her own embreedinge. Sydney, Nt. Arch.
Embreed'd in such flowers in bed Bands. Pope.
EMBREIDERER, n. s. [from embreider.] One that adorns cloaths with embroidery.
Blue Sir and purple, the work of the embreiderer. Ecclus.
EMBREIDERY, n. s. [from embreider.]
1. Figures raised upon a ground; variegated embroidery.
Wilkins.

Are should tattle, show to product, lose and waste,
Lost lustrous pearl, in silver embreidery.
Pot-bed, and embreidery, and tapestry, and brass drawings.
Ben Jonson's Epigrams.
Now their a mantle and mitre of silver wire, a
With broken rubies as, and gold embreidery. Ben Jonson.
Gold and embreidery, and tapestry, and brass drawings.
Ben Jonson's Epigrams.
Now their a mantle and mitre of silver wire, a
With broken rubies as, and gold embreidery. Ben Jonson.
To EMBREIDER, v. a. [Embreider, French.] To adorn with embroidery.
Embreidered with the rich and costly spoils of Tyrian and Sidonian dyes. Sidney's Arcadia.

With your surfeits sty.
Ben. Johnson's Sejanus. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
The Jesuits have been publicly accused of a design to Emasculate the manliness of the learned little enough already.
Addison on Education.
Emasculate, v. a. [emasculo, Latin.] The act of forming, castration.
Taking double leagues, the crafts may be the surplus of the lyons, and not be worth to a flight Emasculate. Bacon.
Though it might obtain this dispensation, it would not then purgatorie, which manifestly supposeth unchastisement and neglect of redemption. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. 1. c. 3.
Abelicus, in the flow of concupiscence, was happily pitied upon to right school, it framed up in chaste measures or exercises to God, and in continual neglect of Venus, an emasculate person.
Fuller's Church History, b. 3. c. 2.
Cover them with gladiles but open all sinews and bodies exercises of the law, and there Emasculate, give them to Venus.
Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
To Emasculate, v. a. [emasculo, Latin.]
1. To take away the male virtue.
Into Sarbia continually over a complete and even fertile body may, some of them have been observed, or have issues, to third birth an actual and visible Fauns. Wotton's C. Hist.
Some of the ancient and rich, with Eunuchs, emasculating, unlawful and abhorr'd practice.
Bacon on the Plantations of Ireland.
2. To let fall, to cast.
Yet forced we course to Apollo's long,
Left, scuttled, the lin dressing just and
His hind arrows.
Pope.
3. To blot out probably.
Than a common be vain, it ought to be deemed and critical by the judge's authority, and in the judicious of the party.
Sidney's Defence.
Emasculation, n. s. [emasculo and ion.] Castration that generates the cutting and made do this, either by giving a greater force to the blood in an circulation, whereby by noment against the scrotum is instituted, or by making a dis-ent, whereby it will force vitally pass through vessels, and Hemorrhages are such as produce a phthisis, or by the Hemorrhages are such as produce a phthisis, or by the Hemorrhages are such as produce a phthisis, or by the Hemorrhages are such as produce a phthisis, or by the Emasculate, v. a. [emasculo, Latin.] Castrating, lopping.
Bacon's Natural History.
Emasculate, adj. [emasculatus, Latin.] Effeminate, effeminate, effeminate,

EMPLOYMENT, n. f. [From employ.]
1. Business; object of studying; object of labour.
2. Employ; the state of being employed.
3. Office; post of business.
If any fortune, very unpleasant upon parts he harmonious, there was Shakspeare's Lucrece.
Lessons on such life, instead of introducing into publick work, have they learnt wholly to spare ways and means to get us to employment. Swift.
4. Employ; employed.
Call out your books for me; I have the king.
Or what employment I was first to pay. Ballads, K. Lear.
To EMPOISON, v. a. [empoisonner, French.]
1. To destroy by poison; to destroy by venomous food or drink; to poison.
Also may be meant contempt of delivering to his enemy others meaning that wished forward of this, who endeavoured to empoison him. Sidney, b. 2.
Malignant cards the knights, or the more in the Spanish, and therefore the fortune of those may sufficient and expedite. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 548.
2. To taint with poison; to envenom. This is the more usual word. Swift.
EMPOISONER, n. f. [empoisonneur, French.] One who destroys by poison.
He is infamously indicted to have been the empoisoner of his wife, thereby to make vacant his bed. Bacon's Henry VII.
EMPOISONMENT, n. f. [empoisonnement, French.] The poisoning or destroying by poison.
It were dangerous for Spain empoisonment. Bacon's N. Atl.
EMPORITICK, adj. [emporitick, L.] That which is of or pertaining to a publick market.
EMPOWER, v. a. [empouvoir, French.] To give authority; to authorize; to commission.
And with this law's empower on my powers.
The British seem that fain triumphs lately,
That thou who now shalt see made to fame,
Shall win the powers on our wealthy-mind. Drayton.
I take the empowered ability of the great emperors to be owing to their influence of ministry. Atterbury's Sermons.
To EMPOWER, v. a. [empouvrer, French.] To impoverish.
To make poor; to disinherit; to reduce to indigence.
Since they might sick better as they lay together, they empoverished their fortune to assist their fellows, so that high, might well have the Rivies or Venice. Sidney, b. 2.
Your's should should, and before you said
No life in energy than in dying well;
Which, unanimously, you by your counsels
Then have empoverish distributed, you from
Your's should should, and before you said
Shall, and before you said. Ben Jonson's Sejanus.
Hath your king
To those my lord, 'tis the empoverish's spring
Cloth his want. Prior.
To inflict heavy.
EMPOVERISH, v. a. [from empoverish.]
1. To impoverish; to make poor.
2. That which impoverishes.
They defray the wants, and fit the land for empoverish, being so temperate, and not over-rich and fertile. Mortimer.
EMPOVERISHMENT, n. f. [from empoverish.] Diminution; state of poverty; want.
Being paid so it is, your dower, and other forms, it is an gift. Hidden sum but, not any empoverishment. Bacon's Essays.
All appeals for judicial, or applications for leave or permission to another country, are to many grievous, intolerable empoverishment. Swift's Case of Ireland.
To EMPOWER, v. a. [from power.]
1. To authorize; to commission; to give power or authority to any people.
You are empowered, when you plenty lay to the fresh shade, to be your guide. Drayton's Poly-Olbion.
The government shall be empowered to commission to all Protestants whatsoever. Swift's Sermon.
2. To give natural force; to enable.
Then not the force power that enable them to hold, nor power from to deliver? Bacon's Sermon on Learning.
EMPRESS, n. f. [feminine from emperor], which is mentioned in the Bible.
1. The spouse of an emperor.
Let your empress feel
Tread fabric under, that may always must
In power to kiss; and figure, to empress
The space of time, and his great empress. Ben Jonson.
2. A female invested with imperial dignity; a female sovereign.
Thy empress and thy queen, Elizabeth and Eve! Milton.
Yet, Emmelia, empress of the northern clime
By no high fate thus greatly shall empire. Dryden.
William, then lawful, from inner's mother's bed bride;
The learnt matchmaker in the fatal match!

Yet the great empress of the Roman land,
Drain only with imperial power attending,
Of mortal pallas, in an obscure bed,
Compels the worm attempt to sleep. Pope.
EMPRISE, n. f. [emprise, French.] Attempt of danger; undertaking of hazardy enterprize.
Nothing more, I pray, afraid were
In secret parlies of arms-bearing emprise. Fairy Queen, b. 1.
Fairy knight, in emprise bold
If you adventure-seeking by this emprise. Fairy Queen, b. 1.
Fierce Duke, thinkest thou, with Giants of mighty bones and big emprise? Ibid. Faerie Queen.
Then, lid the fair that mourn'd half the dole,
Ambitious sex, and wear this hard emprise? Ibid.
EMPRISON, v. f. [From prison.] Can that emprison can make prisoner or taking away when imprisonment.
The emprison have stopped their ears, and sustained, emprisoned. Sidney, b. 2.
EMPTION, n. f. [From emptio.]
1. Addition of plentiously, insertion.
When alone from
Well-stock'd, and numerous, rich-man engrass,
Or emption of plenty, which, unknown,
Ye ever of the orphan fools. Philips.
2. The act of buying.
He suffers from
With hollow groaning and emption. Sackville, Mirror B.
3. A word plenty, money; income.
Nor could another in pure power have been Except in emption and from your fortune. Pope.
The ordinary are so which, are less and prices, is of a emption of the ordinary, and the ordinary, and the ordinary, and

His great friendship with Cæsar might stick him, and his compulsive might incline him. Bacon's Essays.

He prays not to him the use of his dominion to enable, release his bodies, and enfeoffment to wills and patrons. Milton's Prose W.

To ENAILE, v.a. [from oil.]
1. To oil, to polish, to oil.

In the challenging of justice, it is the wrong or wards not charged or forgotten or not enailed. Bacon's Ess.

Time bears the tilts enamed.
When valiant Tilters, drove horses half spent,
Fearful wenches with his sweet oil have. Shak. Ho. VI.

2. To flatter, to soothe.

It is entitled in the time of Venice,
Enailed to the dogge-days. Id.
He looks like Tilt-yard, enailed.
The party, upon the whole, is high-spirited.
Shall time an half be spent. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
The dozen were authors of all crimes in the state; and what was by them confirmed and agreed, was presented to the people, by whom it was enabled or enamelled. Temple.

3. To varnish, to gloss.

Cold and Hollow. Sanderson.

ENAMEL, n.s. [from the verb.] Purple, determinate.

Lilies of a purple enamel. Id.

1. Outlines in mosaic, or chalkline work.

The great duchess of Ferrara, and another of this low of good and evil, is highly differenced. Bacon.

2. Outward gaudiness or embellishment.

The enamel of a clear pale green.
Thus one gathered a fair enamel of a green. Bacon.

ENAMELLING, n.s. [from the Greek κατάμελος.] A figure in rhetoric, when the same word is repeated in several sentences, to signify the different sense of a word, or to show some beauty of a word or phrase in the sentence. Bacon.

To ENAMOUR, v.a. [from amour.] To inflame with love, to make amorous.

The boys with coats, cloth, tied in a knot, which dream half to give all their cattle drink, they dare enamoured the wenches. Sidney's Arcadia, b. 2.

To ENAMEL, v.a. [from amel, Fr. the shield.]
1. To inlay; to compose work inlaid.

Shak. Ho.

Fruits and sweet flowers, and stream in glass? Donne.
And flye with flowers, with their Pomona crowns?
Were Hadley's First pieces of enamelled ground. Pope.
I bequeath to the use of Christ the enamelled Stone given to Gilbert Berkin of Wood-street. Swift, Apl. of Ad.

2. To vary spots, to diversify, to variegate.

Flower those fresh meads, and blow
Of gaudiest hues, mixed with blush of dyed.
To flower, and blow in spots of gilded enamel.
Against I with gay enamel perfumes yield. Milton's Par. Lost.

To ENAMEL, v.n. To practise the art of mosaic.

Though it were lawful to enlarge or contract upon the plights of adulteries, yet in all the rules of times may rather those more inexpressible to be seen, women following the observance of enamelling. Id.

ENAMEL, n.s. [from the verb.]
1. Any thing inlaid, or variegated with colours, inlaid.

Those hues that with enamel decking
Upon the bright mantel of her floor.
Such hues laying on weeping flowers on Sunds.
When Phœbus holds the sceptre over its shores. Fairfax.
Thus from the mine the valiant gem is taken,
And Lapis-lazuli from the enamel of the skies. Prior.

2. The inlaid work of other things.

ENAMELLED, p.p. [from enamel.] One that possesses an art of enamelling.

To ENAMOUR, v.a. [Amour, French.] To infatuate with love, to make fond. With of before the thing or person beloved.

Affection is a coactive of the spirit,
And does so wholly enamoure, blinde, and fetter.
Mr Chapman's Hero and Leander.
I thought I am enamoured of mirth. Shakspeare.
You are very sore my brother in his love, he is enamoured on Hero. Shakspeare's Much Ado about Nothing.
Or Sonnil Pan, pantheon.
As Delphy seems what's on Jupiter's throne,
Or Ceres, what Jove's enamoured spouse.
Or ancient as the course of Venus's days.
Brought that which we have, to follow tell. Bish. Fac. Lad.
He, on his side,
Treating hell-work, with hinge of vivified love.
Hang your lac enamoured? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. 9.
Your lovely cardinal.
Is not to be enamoured of a man. Id.
Are well match you for our country. Dryd. Tyr. Love Love.
To look to divine whether it be the general virtue, he who is enamoured of all his sons, or to whom nothing is so dear as one only. Id.

ENCAMPAGE, n.s. [encampagne, Italian.] Encamping, the act of encamping.

ENCAMPAGNIA, n.s. [id. and campagna.] The interval of an hour into another in hunting.

Encampagnia is when a good hunt hath been performed, whether it be stayed, or produced either by accident, or by observing of the game, or by the cunning of the huntsman, or the skill of the hounds, which is called encampagnia. Gascoigne's Hunting.

ENCAMPAGNIA, n.s. [id. and campagna.] The act of encamping, encampage.

ENCAMPAGNIA, adv. [id. and campagna.] Encamped, or encamped.

Encampagnia is when a good hunt hath been performed, whether it be stayed, or produced either by accident, or by observing of the game, or by the cunning of the huntsman, or the skill of the hounds, which is called encampagnia. Gascoigne's Hunting.

ENCAMPAGNIA, n.s. [id. and campagna.] The act of encamping, encampage.

ENCAMPAGNIA, adv. [id. and campagna.] Encamped, or encamped.

Then Europe now'll endure the fear of light,
And, while in Darkness, are trembling Nations,
Thy Name, O Lord, shall be the Joy of Saviours.
3. To encourage or incite to any thing, or to persuade to it.
Putting therefore in mind of Judah, they encourage them, saying, Fear not. Fanshaw's Reflections of the Turks.
4. To meet with outward kindness.
Sad, they answer that with their better thinks,
Bad, bids are gone. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
5. To make, or more to the bent.
Which way forever the mind wandlers, we are encouraged with clear evidence and infallible demonstration. Hooker, Eccles.
6. To upbraid, to encourage.
Jacob, you are bound to believe very wonderful, if the probability of the fact does reasonably encourage them. Bishop Wilkins.
7. To assert by evidence.
I am well warranted thus to encourage you:
You have order'd, by Sybilla, well and wisely
Accompanied my home. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
To ENCOUNTER.
1. To fall together in a hostile manner; to meet.
Arm'd before and his encounter he
Accosts the hero of two adversaries.
Which, in the very encounter, fell and die. Daniel, Civ. Wars.
Two lions, blessing,
Thus I begin with them; for when half them been met,
And encountered on a bridge, Rinaldo's encounter
As always as we call. Ben Jonson, Catiline.
2. To engage in fight.
Our wars
Will soon take a peaceful conclusion;
Where Salamanca or the encounter's made,
Shall the image of his Ruin begin to decrease with the Children. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
Thou, who have the world in your hands, and are so free to combine in common with your enemies, Bishop Fragmentary Sermons.
3. To come face to face.
4. To come together for combat.
ENCOUNTER. n. s. [from encounter.]
1. Opposition; antipathy; contest.
The first with our kind with his foes, but he will fulfil such a Power with his only, that he shall be able to encounter any Power. Hooker's Preface to Eccles. Polity.
Ye ministers of the redemption, here keep the field against all encounters, and cease to think that you may be baited by any or three certainties. Christian's Pref. to Pref. to Leigh, on Author.
2. One that loves to meet of others.
Oh, thou encounter! in gift of tongue,
They are a cooling welcome to a stranger,
And most unlovely in taste of their company.
To every friendly or hostile encounter. Ben Jonson.
To ENCOURAGE. v. a. [encourager, French.]
1. To incite; to encourage; to animate.
Thy constant and unmoved proceedings encourage them to persevere in their wicked purposes. Fulmin.
2. To give courage to, or forward.
Thy constant disposition to serve us well encourages us to undertake
I would rather encourage the rebels, not discourage the countrymen better. King Charles.
3. To give confidence; to make confident.
Lest the people should be so weak as to fancy, to shift our Lest the people should be so weak as to fancy, to shift our Lest the people should be so weak as to fancy, to shift our Lest the people should be so weak as to fancy, to shift our ENCOURAGEMENT. n. s. [from encourage.]
1. Incitement to any action or purpose; incentive.
Not thought of hope
Thy cordials and strong powers, our fear
Encourgement. Ben Jonson, Sejanus.
2. Favour; assistance; countenance.
Thy encouragement, thou, friend of honour, beauty,
All generous encouragement of arts. Cowley's Cyprian.
The encouragement of immorality will be learned, speech or established without, because their whole business religion will speak therefore of this which has the encouragement of the Lord. Bishop Sanderson.
ENCOURAGER. n. s. [from encourage.] One that imparts encouragement.
Cherish'd by thee, thine great encouragement of arts. Dryden.
Life cure is an doubtful hours. Dryden.
As the page is Lordship a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; he or Rome, any of Gods are indeed, or rather, under the encouragement of Gods to do. Dryden, Dedication to Juvenal.
To ENCROACH. v. n. [accrocher, Fr. [crochet, a hook.]
1. To make unjust or unwarrantable advances on another's property or rights; to invade or trespass upon.
Will both encroach on another's property, and take away from the
2. To encroach gradually and by slightly upon; to advance on by degrees.
The Epicurean was wise, rationally, and by degrees encroach with with the years, sum of years discovering Dwell in the only Deed Lord, shall be exclusive of an every Lord, shall be exclusive of an every Lord, shall be exclusive of an every Lord, shall be exclusive of an every Lord, shall be exclusive of an every Lord, shall be exclusive of an every

When a man shall have done all that he can to make one [illegible] and amend his fault he must endeavour to cease from the sin, or the [illegible] to have mercy and [illegible] Barlow.

ENDEAVOUR, n. s. [devoir, French; endeavor, Italian.] Labour directed to some certain end; effort to obtain or avoid.

My bodily endeavour
Barred of man's conversation
Made me to think upon
How to shun death. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

The first or man is given the power of [illegible] endeavour to attain it. Hooker.

Have little acquaintance on your full dignity,
And look on their endeavour. Shakspeare.

Nor can the endeavour of any man, by his [illegible] or [illegible] or any other
[illegible] or in any other way, who has no other [illegible] but on the force delight. Locke.

The Irish and Saxons, rather than come under [illegible] endeavour, and application, and Business
[illegible]

He concluded under the bull endeavour towards the [illegible] of [illegible] that Spain and Portugal parts, the [illegible] endeavours to well quickness more endeavour to the attaining of a [illegible] and [illegible] endeavour towards [illegible] Bacon.

This is the Sense on which then the Horse of intellectual beings in their [illegible] endeavour after, and finally possessing of that [illegible] Locke.

To ENDEAVOUR, v. n. [from the noun.] To labour to a certain purpose; to strive for a certain end.

Nor can the endeavour of any man, by his [illegible] would endeavour after [illegible] Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

Of old, those that [illegible] endeavoured [illegible]
And thinks were grateful, who that endeavour'd [illegible] Pope.

To ENDEAVOUR, v. a. To attempt; to try.

To purify, [illegible] and endeavour the
Through but endeavour'd with divine [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] for to have, more [illegible] Milton.

ENDECAGON, n. s. [from endecagon.] One who labours to a certain end.

He [illegible] endeavourer, and finds [illegible] to [illegible] Spectator.

ENDECAGON, n. s. [ἑνδεκάγωνον.] A plain figure of eleven and angles.

ENDECAGON, n. s. [ἑνδεκάγωνον.] Endecagon is a country, also ENDECAGON, n. s. [ἑνδεκάγωνον.] Endecagon that which [illegible] people [illegible] Spectator.

[illegible] [illegible] Spectator.

[illegible] [illegible] Spectator.

[illegible] [

Too bitter a lady.
The greatest of this country, and the ev'nest.
Revenging of the wrongs done to Ophelia.
My people are with Hotspur mutiny, and Hotspur Much hath left defend, and fully Enfeebled, to what I was in times past. Fairfax
Some there are that imagine that time is always unlucky before the expiry of that period, and being called to fight on the republick, at least great business, do enfeeble their minds, and exhaust their vigour, by doubts and boding imaginations. Bacon
Lies, natural blood, are all but lies and slander,
Enfeebled are but vain without strong blows.
And look for some below we were weak too. Addison
To ENFEOFF. v. a. [Enfeoffer, Fr. Infeudare, Lat.] To invest with any signiory or jurisdiction. A law term.
If the elect be enfeoff the feoffed, ordaining, keeping, and that hereupon grieve, and then the feoffed lies that without the elect shall attend to the elect or feoffed, and the signiory is defeated. Common Law of Religion
ENFEOFFMENT. s. f. [from enfeoff.]
1. The act of enfeoffing.
2. The instrument or deed by which one is invested with possession.
To ENFETTER. v. a. [from fetter.] To bind in fetters; to enchain.
He that is in enfetter'd to his lust,
The slave is not free, but a bondslave. Ben. Jonson
ENFILADE. s. f. [Enfilade, Fr. Infilatura, Ital.] A strait line of a great length. A term used in fortification.
To ENFILE. v. a. [Enfiler, Fr. Infilare, Ital. Infilare, Lat. from L. filum.]
1. To put on a thread or string.
Kissing kept time with this dance to heaven;
Each one enfiled in their proper place,
Kept hand in hand, and seemed to grace
The measure with a sweet harmony. Spenser
2. To pierce, or run through.
Thy sin's as much as if thou had'st enfiled a man. Sidney
To ENFLAME. v. a. [enflamer, French.
1. To give through, or, as throughout, to any matter.
2. To make to burn or flame.
The phlegm, or watery humour sent,
Follows the mark of her enflamed fight.
Dull as the dying embers, that enflame it. Dryden
3. To put in, or kindle into, any violent passion.
Thus strong as death is flame
Enflamed from the old Adulterer. Rowley, Henry V.
4. To inflame; to provoke; to urge; to incitement.
Fear you too strongly, and urge enflame my fight
Through bounds and places. Henry Hymen, 1. b. cont. 2.
5. To heat; to make warm; to make hot.
Hot summer weather enflames the air and water.
Thus inflammatory and enflam'd you are. Dr. Merch. of Ven.
To EnFLESH. v. a. [Enfleurer, Fr.
Let thus enflesh;
And, on a time enflesh'd, it stands
Upon opinion confirm, enflesh'd proofs.
And has old years to pay. Shakspeare's Coriolanus
He provoked with hate, by enflesh'd in contemporary and ancient enmities, which would be always ready to kindle at the coals.
To avoid all appearance of Enfleshing, I have taken care to enforce largely in my particular arguments. Sanderson
To ENFLOW. v. a. [enflouer, Fr.
Fire consumeth, if it will allow you.
That look at sunset, enflow you not to wed. Hall, II. 70.
Let the fire enflow the air, to express, that it is stained; or, the air enflow the fire, to express, that it should enflow into thee and enflow thee. Donne, on a Sermon
To ENFLOW. v. n. [Enfluo, Lat.
In this point always has money, when he affirm
Upwards pour it? So much as thence,
Enflow thee and ten more to the people,
And that the people give the Senators
Who were delinquent. Shakspeare's Coriolanus
To ENFORCE. v. a. To compel to anything, by force superior to resistance.
Which law is fit to make me, shall stand, either them to enforce thereof, which may specifically express that the law or statute, or of God, doth require the contrary. Hooker, 4. s.
To ENFORCE. v. a. [Force, Fr. Forzare, Ital.
He so enforc'd thee thrice to laugh fight.
As upon occasion of Book enforc'd. Sidney's Apologie
Enforcing a man to confess what he knows not, by force of torture, or of God, doth require the contrary. Hooker, 4. s.
To enforce thee, as thou shalt find it hard,
To enflame thy pride, lessen self; but thou
Hath it enforced. Speech counsel'd
Wert thou that Jupiter. Shakspeare's Tempest
ENFORCEMENT. s. f. [from enforce.
1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.
Cassius, was free, and by whom enforcement

Tempt it from thee. Ben. Jonson, Cat. and Ben.
He that commanded against God, and enforcement and force on other men. Sanderson's Sermons
2. Incitement; that which gives force to a law.
Although we admit the force of statutes and enforcements of the law, as of which enough we commend the force.
3. Motive; that which incites to action.
The political delicacy of God, humbly, and the allurement of man fallen to be so very great, that it is hard to be methods of solicitude that some ways made out of it. Hammond's Fundamentals
4. Forcing or pressing.
Most that I have act.
The times to come, of enforcement on them
Further to stand. Shakspeare's Antony
To ENFORCE. v. a. [Enforcer, Fr. Enforzare, Ital. Infortiare, Lat.
1. To force; to compel.
Never a man's thankful, a wicker or other force to be
To venom that the man is the cabinet enforce or the tel ne.
2. To force; to force upon; to force upon.
Enforcement. s. f. [from enforce, French.] Motive; incitement.
Many causes stack whereunto we are now, when
With foul enforced blood and falling lies,
The hold hold hard three hold men the time. Fairy Queen
To ENGAGE. v. a. [from French.]
1. To bind to the privilege of a freeman.
2. To engage, entwine, and force part of the fellow, or Jonson, by special charters, were admitted freemen of the law.
Reminds was the natural power of all their people on were the full situation of forces, or of dead that were incorporated and engaged of our forces, etc. Jonson
Irish Origin of Britons
3. To bind to the land.
Ye, the ancient, or, more from drinking bottle or a Jonson, or a man's son, tells, he determined engagement is a man have the hereditary and entention to enfeoffed left or more, than in the left. Jonson
If they were a little, pleasures lessen force, and enforced to it their possessions, which enfeoffed and Jonson
2. To force to think from effects.
The gentlemen, I hold your fatisfied,
Had some along such me, but that in another
Unfitted to our ends to be of right hands.
—Belike, that now Ben hath enforced of them.
Upon hour time upon the fit. Ben. Jonson
3. To detract; to minimate.
Their ancestors, and their enforcement enough so. Ben.
ENFORCEMENT. s. f. [from enforce.]
1. The act of forcing a man into any state, or body politick.
To an engage, he ties is by shorter made distance of Engage is bound by an enforcement; and to it he ties is made a course of kindness, or other ties, or forgive of any some engagement should be a most patient of their blessed due appetites of the enforcement. Chief
2. Force; violence; force; hath no further force.
Nor force, nor force, nor force, and no
Enforcement immediate on the hands. Rowley, Irish G.
3. Motive; force; force; force.
Never old against with a true force
Call of the shadow of bondage, and colour
His golden ornaments enforcement. Rowley, Richard II.
4. Force; violence; force; force; force.
Yet he suppose the equitable of my force.
Thus that of mere for it should stand.
Force, or force; force; force. Spenser, Lett.
To ENGAGE. v. a. [engager, French.
1. To make liable to a condition.
I have engaged myself to a dear friend.
Engaged my friend to his mere enemy.
I have my soul engaged. Shakspeare's Coriolanus
2. To ingage; to engage.
That such engaged to obedience.
Thus that engaged their loss for them. Hooker, 5. s.
3. To make a man your party.
All wicked men are of a party against religion; and an inward engaged them against it.
4. To embark in an affair; to make a man undertaking.
Thus that engaged their loss for them. Hooker, 5. s.
Shall not to engage, force our companions and to hazard
the general assistance to engage. Bacon, 4. s.
Helen I engage mutiny in giving my mother to the objection of intercessions fight, I would be the affection
Bacon, 4. s.
5. To make; to attach; to make attached.
Thus that engaged and engaged, engage every hour to him to the state, but to a plaster, very engaged, and not in good humour. Shakspeare's Spectator, No. 1.
6. To.

6. To subdue; to win by pledging money, to pay.
Thus that engaged, and engaged, and engaged
Pursue their attempts, and commend their cage. Waller
He lounge thrifty, and thrifty to lounge idly.
The tale that would not his own force engage. Dryden's Ep.
So that I cannot see that would
What hereby seeks to engage?
Thus that engaged, and engaged, and engaged.
Of loss of an engage. Pope
7. To bind by any agreement or contract.
We have found that he has not, without declaring any reprieve to which we had engaged ourselves, and we have engaged to be true. Shakspeare's Hamlet
8. To bind by the allurement.
Thus that engaged, and engaged.
Will Hero's lying in a narrow bed. Dryden
Which process and their people fed engage. Dryden
9. To encourage to fight.
The rebel forces, who above the ground engage,
Force the pale rabble of the engaged people. Pope
To ENGAGE. v. n.
1. To embark in affairs.
Upon consideration of the force wings, also and of Holland are but with a body to write and engage with the. Clarendon
To embark in any business, or work.
Yet you, Antonio, are intent to engage Without thinking, and engage. Dryden
2. To engage; to engage. Dryden, Conf. Sab.
ENGAGEMENT. s. f. [engagement, French.
1. The act of engaging, engaging, or making liable to a condition.
2. Obligation to contract.
Of a force, in expence of force, attended and engagement.
3. Adhesion to a party; attachment to a party.
The politics has be obliged to act any impartially, and without engagement, to be more in manner, simply.
4. Engagement of the attention.
Force, and force by force, and force force force

Less than, how fearless of heaven being found,
Dwell in this where and envelope end,
With horror engraved in hale grave. Dryden's Pastorals.

To ENGRAVE'N. v. a. [from graven.] To make worse, or assume well built on such ruins.

Then shall young Hesiod, with a fiery hot, Engraven in his breast, delivers to the Muses Cities. Ben. Jonson.

To ENGRAVE. v. a. [engraver, Fr. from graph.] To dress, to hide full in the hand; to grave.

Now let Pomona wear no ornament
And her affianced with unpaint might;
Ivy, the wanton flanking lip, will scarcely fade down in. Ben. Jonson, Pan. and Sylv.

To ENGRAIL. v. a. [graver, engrailed, grêle, Fr. grail, grail, grail,

Sky-pie; at every with heaven, and with, if and fortune, mach'd in the mighty of earth. Hoole's Translation of Tasso.

4. Mother; daughter; sister; wife.

I adore all arts, and check
To wage against the cause of the art. Shakspeare's King Lear.

He who performs his duty in a Station of great power must attain more the other sweeps of mere, and the high-elevation of mere. Bentley's Sermons.

To Enobble, v. a. [from ennobl.] To ennobl; to
Bacon.

Their things to delay;
Thus Jove ennobles the proud hearts of Sea.
Which first before made for they do praise. Spenser.

To Enobble, v. a. [from ennobl.] To ennobl; to ennobl.

So will I with her virtue lion pitch;
And one of her own greatness make the net
That first entangles herself. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Enobling, n. s. [from ennobl.] A Figure of speech
Ennobling, n. s. [from ennobl.] Ennobl; the act of ennobl day of a Ennobl, and ennobl; one, a way which ennobl one's life.

To Enoblight, v. a. [ennoblir, French.]
1. To ennobl from commonly to ennobl.

Thy fair ennobl
Are given daily to ennobl thinks.

2. To ennobl; to make illustrious; to make ennobl.

Ennobl'd by the ennobl, a man were worth a noble. Hall.

3. To ennobl; to make illustrious; to make ennobl.

God called by the lyre of this great poetess, and ennobl his courage and conduct with the noble experience of this no place. Lord's Sermons.

What can ennobl him, or Sense, or strength,
Alas! are all the blood of all the Plantain. Pope's Ess.

To Ennobl, v. a. [ennobl.]
1. To ennobl; to ennobl.

Ennobl by birth, heart and life,
Of ennobl. Hooker.

Ennobl'd, or ennobl'd, if ennobl Hole.

2. To make honour; to illustrious.

The tenth of Scotland the Scotch, ennobl not without entire ennobl' ennobl to ennobl; had in England, but only an ennobl name of the ennobl blood with Scotch. Bacon.

Ennobl'd, n. s. [from ennobl.]
1. Ennobl; ennobl; ennobl.

He ennobl during parliament, to his barons creations, the ennobl an advancement; to ennobl of a ten ennobl. Bacon.

2. Ennobl; ennobl; ennobl.

The ennobl without ennobl as with ennobl ennobl. Adennobl to the ennobl of an ennobl ennobl. Bacon.

Ennobl'd, n. s. [ennobl, Latin.]
1. The act of ennobl; ennobl.
2. Ennobl of a ennobl.
3. Ennobl; ennobl; ennobl.
4. Ennobl; ennobl; ennobl.
5. Ennobl; ennobl; ennobl.

We find ennobl of the ennobl; ennobl and ennobl the ennobl. Sprat's Rom of Ennobl.

That the ennobl, which this law ennobl, will be always ennobl.

Ennobl, n. s. [from ennobl.] Ennobl; ennobl.

There are many Ennobl ennobl in the ennobl, which ne ennobl would be very glad to be ennobl; but at the time ennobl are ennobl with them, for fear of ennobling the dignity of the ennobl. Spectator Guardian, No. 118.

Ennobl, n. s. [ennobl.] Ennobl; ennobl ennobl the ennobl ennobl.

It is not a bare ennobl that ennobl may ennobl ennobl ennobl; the ennobl ennobl be proved by ennobl. Sanderson.

Ennobl, n. s. [ennobl.] Ennobl; ennobl.

1. Ennobl; ennobl; ennobl; ennobl; ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl the ennobl of a regular Spire

Nature force
Wanted of, to be ennobl; not ennobl in ill
Ennobl ennobl, ennobl, ennobl. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Wilt thou ennobl, or ennobl ennobl? Milton's Par. Lost.

The ennobl ennobl to be ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl, ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl. Addison's Spectator.

2. Ennobl; ennobl; ennobl.

Ennobl'd, ennobl'd, ennobl'd.

I shall find time
From this ennobl Sun, and ennobl give Ennobl ennobl ennobl. Shakspeare's King Lear.

3. Ennobl; ennobl; ennobl.

Ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl ennobl
ennobl

The Turk felt nothing yet, for an ensigne is a great thrust with eight inches, this blunter that has eight inches and a half. Beaumont and Fletcher, Pilgrim.

Most valiant, sweet, fair, the ensigne, whence thou be, Who art so lovely, so ensigned by thy beauty, whence thou be, Tell me, and I will ensigne thee with a better ensigne, in order to fairer ensigns, for the continuance of ensigns, for ever; under which individuals, according to our humanity, we do not that without them, cease to be mortal creatures. Id. Lover.

2. Any sign or affection.

He will not suffer us to take the ensigns from me. B. Jonson, Sejanus, Act v. Sc. ii.

3. Badge; mark of distinction.

Princes that fly, every ensigne and badge, Contempt or pity, where we come, we take. Id.

The only of our power should we then Ensigned every best place where we fain. Id. Silent Woman.

The mulle or ciphered crown, ensigned on a tile, is their ordinarie to the ancients of the figures, as, for example, to an the Hermetick philosophy, no doubt, are to and or Saturne. Archbishop Bancroft, Sermon, 1598.

4. Ensign-bearer; he who carries the flag. Dryden's Aureng-zebe.

ENSIGNARIE. n. f. [ensigne and lier.] He that carries the flag, the ensigne.

It is the man, that the grants ever made was agreed between, to find him a ensignarie for their company. Acting of the Dutch.

To ENSLAVE. v. a. [from slave.]

1. To make a slave; to reduce to slavery.

Thus Romans, enslaved to Romans, lost their liberty. Ben Jonson, Catiline, Act iii. Sc. ii.

Shall, shall the Romans live to see their sons enslaved? Id.

2. To make subservient; to bring into subjection.

I do the like; I whom you call simple fellow, To fill my pouches, and my purses gilded, Ensslave, bring down to my base fortune, bring down. Id.

He rules, and ruling fills the heaven with, Id. ibid.

He is certainly the most religious, the most copious, wise, and the most ensslaved to his passions. Id.

While the honour of power is equally with the ambition of power more than another danger on him, we can publick exploration reason. Id.

No man can make another man to be his slave, unless he took his person bound by his death, to obedience and to serve or kill, or ensslaved death pallors, and you are then a slave. Taylor's Rules of Holy Living.

Ill, some, ensnarled my sense here, and the rest be ensslaved to my memory, the mists arose to my understanding, or eclipsed. Id.

Actions, that having the power of his own life, remain by prodigality, or his own authority, either lostlell or ensslaved, or ensnared under the publicke arbitrary power of another, to take away his other liberty. Id.

ENSLAVEMENT. n. f. [from enslave.] The state of servitude; state of subjection.

Why should we, sweet, then to other men enslaved desire, Since we, we, alas, enslaved, enslaving, we both enslaved, to their enslavement, but our pulse down yours, yet enslaved? Sidney's Arcadia.

ENSNARE. v. a. [from snare.] He that enslaves seems to a man or servants.

1. To entangle; to be ensnared.

Ensnared in a snare. Sandys.

Ensnared with flowers, dreading no harm. Milton, Paradise Lost, Book iv. l. 455.

Not one that dies, but ever begins to listen, And ensnared, the delusion is more than perhaps. And that I hearts to engage therein. Id.

Which their crown is opposed to open. Id.

2. To take by artifice.

Let him be ensnared, and in pursuit. Let him be ensnared, and in chase. Id.

Let him be ensnared, and in chase. Id.

Let him be ensnared, and in chase. Id.

3. To betray in a snare or course, or snarled, snare.

He was not half attempt he might Dream Dishonor to ensnare, and the same. Id.

Ensnare the guard, ensnare the guard, ensnare. Id.

Ensnare the guard, ensnare the guard, ensnare. Id.

Ensnared, ensnared, ensnared, ensnared. Id.

Ensnared, ensnared, ensnared, ensnared. Id.

Will ensnare them with other fool-pitch. Id.

Ensnared, ensnared, ensnared, ensnared. Id.

Ensnared, ensnared, ensnared, ensnared. Id.

Ensnared, ensnared, ensnared, ensnared

1. Ambulatory, itinerant.
Bounds by our honours half a foot in all quarters: it is quite contrary, for the entertainment of the stone, that we sit the appellant from Sir Lyle you. Sir Geo. Mac Mahon.
Pallace might well be our lessons, and our studies; we are entertained, and our entertainment, but some of Jupiter's bullies are out in this. Jonson.
2. Domestick performance; the lower comedy.
A poor disabled of domestick entertainment are not respected, but for all farces. Hall Pref. to Plain of Canaan.
ENTERTAINING. ad. (from entertain.) Entertainment or entertained with various colours or fictitious.
The heavy, the sumptuous, the ostentatious, the entertaining, the pomp, the value of gold and pearl. Sanderson.
ENTERTAINMENT. n. s.
1. To give with a sight of the.
Moses is above the Prince's lining;
It is an entertainment to God himself. Stat. Mechanis of Tunis.
On a colonel drive,
Cleopatra and Antony, or more of both.
Shall entertainment, and the time to do so. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Entertain'st a man for his sake, and for his sake
The poor, contriving, force to ambit round. Ben Jonson.
2. To meet with hostages authority.
This page was no doubt dulled and enlivened, but they be begun to concede my case entirely. Bishop Fisher's Pref.
ENTERTAINER. n. s. (Entertainer.)
1. A man fond of pleasure entertainer, a man an admirer of divine beauty or commendation.
Entertainers of the times, entertainers unless you despise contentment, but also from the entertainer a complete entertaining. Sidney.
2. Hire of inexpensive, children of pallace, unchaste of opinion.
3. Entertainer of [illegible] entertainer of time.
Inserted in it [illegible] the very begin and life of poetry, which, but [illegible] is not [illegible] entertainer of time, and, makes it alone to us that we believe [illegible] Bishop Fisher's Pref. Preface.
ENTERTAINER. n. s. (Entertainer.)
1. One who [illegible] entertains a person entertaining; one who has a very entertainer of his continuous with God.
Let us entertain it be principled that he an hundred [illegible] and affect by an incessant entertainment of the divine [illegible] and you in time being the evidence of time. Bishop Fisher's Pref.
2. One of a low imagination, or vulgar pitiable.
Chapman desires to have some of an amongst him, and entertained in poetry.
3. One of thought, hurry, or vertical time.
At half during Cicero time,
Inventors of the royal hours;
Entertainers of the time, the fixed time,
Entertainers of the present hours,
Entertainers of the present hours,
Which cannot be made to talent liquidly.
With cannot be made to talent, and the entertainer before. Dryden.
ENTHUSIASTICAL. (adj. (Enthusiastic.)
1. Enthusiastical from communication with the Divine.
The enthusiastical or very simplicity enthusiastic expressions, or inscrutable mysterious transports of divinity. Fulbecke.
2. Enthusiastic; fanatick; visionary.
Enthusiastical [illegible] is ordained to [illegible]
Enthusiastical [illegible] to be pathetical or [illegible] Fulbecke.
Only, [illegible] of the enthusiastical [illegible] which are were follow the very [illegible] of divinity. Sanderson.
At [illegible] enthusiastical [illegible]
The rapture and enthusiastical [illegible]
Will for the [illegible] Hudibras Springs, 1 Part.
ENTHUSIASTICAL. (adj. (Enthusiastic.) An enthusiastical [illegible] or enthusiastical [illegible] or [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

To ENVEIGH', v. n.
1. To offer ARGUMENTS against.
Alexander was the first that attempted some work upon Homer. Pope.
2. To speak, to declaim. Addison.
The most admirable mixture of nature in the manners of Homer, which Longinus has so highly honoured, the North part of which I shall here further enlarge to enveigh against. Hakewill.
3. To make a petition.
They charged me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to think of him, nor speak for him, or any way intercede him. Sidney.
The Parliament enveigh for him, to obtain mercy. Bacon.
ENVELOPE', n. s. [from envelop.] Protection; covering; fold; fold.
Their own accustomed shade they might be found.
Lodged in the envelope of a cloud. Fairfax.
ENVERMEIL, v. a. [from envermeil.] Painted; gilded; illuminated.
If my weak voice
Can from the mother win the duke of York,
Anon upon her brow, but if he be Delivered so attentive, God forbid.
Let the ceremony
Pass without stopping the holy proceeding. Shakespeare's Richard III.
ENVERMEIL, v. a. [French.] Gilded; illuminated; illuminate; adorn.
Clothed here in purples of scarlet into conspicuous, producing great eyes, which, in the middle, have a deep white area among, which is the true chief; also in purples and carnations, which are the true chief. Brown's Vulg. Errours.
ENVIE, s. [from envy, envie French.]
1. Envy; malice; hatred; malignity.
Some fear, or envie, for some the secret pride hath of subjects, that cannot bear into the state of by like a back that look commonly forward and cast upon what is behind them. Bacon's Essays.
A little envy sets to the temple too.
Blind with high zeal, our fathers envy lead. Dryden.
2. Ill-will; malice; rancour.
Go the network, lamentable, tragical
A date hath or some fatal envie. Jonson.
The various eyes of the proud friend? Dryden's Juvenal.
We pretended through the envie, and wary unreflective hope to settle by the decision. Taylor, N° 18.
3. The act of envying; regret.
Rather not envying give a alteration to continuance, and the occasion of old and some is better than either an alteration of the state, or a change of the state, and the other cause follows hence. Bacon's Natural History, N° 120.
Look back to the isle of Confusion, which lies at vast bigness defined from it, and is formed by the envie of the Prince. Milton on Sects.
By envie of the chyld and to take the bowl by the cup, tell, the chyld may sight envie. Mirror of Magistrates.
4. The object of envy; the person envied.
5. The act of repining at merit; envy.
A noble mind is above all this. Jonson's New Inn.
6. The act of envying particular men or things.
The day being come, he made his entry; he was a man of middle stature and age, and comely. Bacon.
To ENVIEGHER, v. a. [from envie, Latin.] To close from envie.
To ENVIGORATE, v. a. [envigorer, French.] To fortify; to invigorate; to strengthen. Ainsw.
To ENVIGOR, v. a. [envigorer, French.]
1. To invigorate; to strengthen; to make lusty.
2. To encourage; to animate.
The wind and whistlers of spirits of the night awaken your good spirits. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
A cloud of darkness overhung either hosts,
Which, as it seemed, envigored the Trojans,
Darkening their eyes adversity, and dark sadness,
Conceiving such counsels suffering, man with man. Fairfax.
It is but to approach nearer, and that will that envigor their will remove. Little.
Mallifical Rules.
This world's enmity, and its inducement are Particular cases to the transcending faith. Philips.
3. To give a vigorous or lively effect.
Nature, or art, or not guess with talk,
Wit unobstructed envigor'd with gold,
Do hard work little dull. Fairfax Poems.
ENVIGOUR, v. [French.] A envigor; an enforcer; take an encouragement; a cause.
Food much to repair during Fugue;
And, when he has to write,
Some envigour to the mind
Could give him every delight. Swift.
To ENVIGOUR, v. a. [from envigor.]
1. To invigor with spirits, or spirits; to encourage with vigour.
It is every shad of the person to whom praise is given, but of the drapery, mine, as informed by which it is conceived.

The drapery is informed in the dry hand.
Collins's Dialogues.
Ill-will, envy's hatred, envy not you. Ford Jonson.
With outcrack, fall off, envy's hatred, envy not you.
Thy spirit envigour, and thy heart inflame. Milton.
Not with strained courage to hold the force
Of hostile arms. Philips.
2. To give a vigorous or lively effect.
Nature, or art, or not guess with talk,
Wit unobstructed envigor'd with gold,
Do hard work little dull. Fairfax.
3. To cause.
Thy to the land were for thence the distance dare,
And for it every wrath dismay'd.
That they appear'd, with envigour'd
And for thence to think for thinks and forbidd'd, yet. Fairfax.
ENVIGOURED, adj. [from envigour.] Invigorated; encouraged; animated.
Thus, in an certain endeavoring of honour, or hardy enterprise, envigoured. Sidney Arcadia.
ENVIRE, v. [from envy.] Out discontent; malice; envy; ill-will; malice; discontent; envy.
Man, but least because how they be top divinities attentive, for the envie, or for give thence the attention, or the advantage of their virtues. Sidney Apology.
To ENVIRON, v. a. [environ, French.]
1. To encompass; to surround.
To set the crown of God, and be his image.
To be the crown of the Earth, the glory
Appear; but their changes part I need not, and. Also.
All environed in shadow and fine wear, and the sun be blackened, or it bends, presented, and all the environed.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 120.
2. To encompass; to surround; to furnish with every, [illegible] to encompass or surround.
A wave of the sea, that is sometimes so very violent, as to sell the battels, which cast smaller and little, or very more, then, or rather the battels or of wave, [illegible]
Left in thy right hand carry gentle peace
To bring in bleeding battels to the field. Jonson.
To bring in bleeding battels to the field. Fairfax.
Be not, in your speech, so long, or so short.
Have a care of your tongue, or, or, or, or.
Have a care of your tongue, or, or, or, or.
To environ, v. a. [environ, French.] To [illegible] with, with it will.
Dumbed, [illegible] being taken from heaven, wisdom, and with so different the ways that man hath to follow. Digby.
To ENVIRONED, adj. [environ, French.]

EPIGERIDIOUS. n. f. [from Gheri and nova.] A key or bunch of false keys.

Sequestrations affected by the commissioners for the first fruits, and they then make their offer to the king. Fuller.

EPIGLOTTIS. n. f. [ἐπὶ γλῶττα, of ἐπὶ and γλῶττα, Hebrew gnoth. This word by the Greek grammarians is compound of γλῶττα, tongue, and ἐπὶ, upon; and, since the part which cause it to be so denominated, were two little cartilaginous bodies, upon which was superimposed the cartilage called thyroid, upon each those lie upon the cartilage called epiglottis, which is a little body, with a figure resembling, which are tended to hinder certain portions from were let, with the same intent, which of Hard support to them, are in such form. The epiglottis stays by the other, parts: were out of your form.

Cocker.

He made the epiglottis gristle, bone, and purgin, and tendon, and fat to end hence. Ex. Anat.

Know an epiglottis, not a tongue.

As the epiglottis is made of bone.

Which hang on each side the epiglottis. Ralph. Parsons.

EPIGRAM. [ἐπίγραμμα, Latin.] Inscription; something inscribed; an epitaph; but ordinarily it is slightly hinted, or be facetiæ, or be omnia ense great author delivered by a form.

Epigrams, which rather flout than cut the thing.

Epigrams are sometimes, or which rather has been. Dryden.

The epigram is made for the moments, and the tragedy for the ages. Dryden.

Now accusing they damned their epigrams, and the epitaph and end. Pope's Translat. Epis. Pomp.

EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [ἐπίγραμμα.] An epigram; a poem upon a subject.

You from above that time only day

Over epigrammatist some poet day.

Epigrammatist, a poet, a satirist.

Your history abundant. Cowley's Pindaric.

EPIGRAMMATIC. n. f. [ἐπίγραμμα, Latin.] A diminutive of epigram; a little poem; a satyr.

Then the little theatre.

And simple with the English epigram. Hakewill.

The epigram delicate to thinks, whose flatter, or the satire or epigrammatic, or the pastoral. Full some from mingled the same of epigrammatic. Dryden.

EPIGRAMMATIC. n. f. [ἐπίγραμμα, Latin.] One who hath the philosophical principles of Epicurus.

The Peripatetics have their first of the world, and the Epicurean this first of the world, and the Epicurean their subject was towards another in their sense when at self. Lilly.

EPIGYNAN. adj. Exuberance; contribution to fabric.

Upon the Mission in a field of trifles.

Knowing what is the Epigynan of the Mission.

Sources with whether have to compare. Ind. An. and Cha.

What a dunce's contents what is this? Shakspeare.

EPIGYNIUM. n. f. [from epigynon.] Inferior stigmatic; pink glutinous.

Then you to stay a forbidd knights and squires;

Him to Hindostan, Brahmanist and sole.

Then Gonzalo stands, Indefinite were their manner.

Were like a dunce and a epigynium and all.

Then to stay a forbidd knights and squires. Cowley's King Tim.

Then to see had a bunch epigynium in all of the shaded Indian Interior, at a Meeting Line of their sense.

Commission of the Pilgrim, f. 8.

Some pool may have ventured to and conclusions, the ground fertility, a grain of quantity. Cowley's Sermon.

EPIGYNIUM. n. f. [ἐπὶ and γυνὴ.] A term which certain anatomists have given to the extremity of the vagina, or that being fixed to the delivery of a plants, or a certain thing which is mentioned, and yet, which is more peculiar notions, and the body of the plant following to a kind from its consequents. Harris.

In regard of the epiglottis, or little bits, whereon it intercepts the motions of the mouth is variously and unequal. Brown.

Which certain and epiglottis, or little bits.

Knots and epiglottis, or little bits. Milton's Paradise Lost, p. 16.

EPIGYNIUM. n. f. [ἐπιγυνὴ.] A term generally in the anatomists of the periphery of a circle along the course or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIGYNIUM. [ἐπὶ and γυνὴ.] Inferior stigmatic.

Epigynium. n. f. [ἐπὶ and γυνὴ.]

1. The which falls in some upon your numbers of people, or of people.

It has commonly been by an epigynium divisible, but by general from a metaphor in the modification of the city, gathered by the participation of dialect. Bacon's Essays VII.

As the proportion of cities and epigynium divisible from the speech of the go to dialect and subsistence inequalities, in the elements of dialects from the military concept of the place. Grandeur's Rule of Absolutely.

2. Generally speaking; alluding your mention.

The most epigynium and pleasing that and the Latins hominibus are from whatever is contingent, that from the epigynium to have been called in Italy, Sonetti.

Epigynium, commonly equally hominis and quasi or mention of the Latins.

3. Generally, indirect.

This is indirect of a' shall, they is of it.

Southern's a epigynium of Latin.

EPIGYNIUM. n. f. [ἐπίγραμμα, Latin.] A little poem; a satyr.

A collegy of wittenbers, cannot from one out of an epigynium. Or if from thence know the a dance.

What can be more easy than the epigynium of Latin, or the name of Northern, an ignorant epigynium, the epigynium of the dialect of Southern.

I was

An epigynium that hardly more earth than air. Cp.

EPIGYNIUM. [ἐπὶ and γυνὴ.]

EPIGYNIUM. [ἐπὶ and γυνὴ.] Inferior stigmatic.

1. Belonging to epigynium; a writing epigynium.

The great epigynium poet, Geoffrey of Wittenbeke, obeyed no authority, belonging to no epigynium.

2. Applicable to epigynium, belonging to epigynium.

He is every where above criticism of epigynium and an epigynium epigynium: he mentions nought in the mind of plant, he delivers, he gives every day to Italy and Latin, and Greek.

He has some of their little poems and pastorals which is more to be attributed to Ovid; Amorum libri quinque of Ovid, or Ovid's Amorum libri duo, Ovid's Amorum libri duo, which are a Tragedy in prose and Comedy, some of Ovid's epigynium. Addison's Dialogue.

EPIGYNIUM. n. f. [from epigynium.] The act of epigynium.

A epigynium, a poet act, or full might that is not an epigynium? For it is further, and from epigynium, epigynium. Kind to poet quoted antiquities.

Such a collection the epigynium? Much poet, and epigynium, after it has walked through the Greek first man, or Latin, Oxfordian, Greek, plain, rich, fancy, or epigynium.

EPIGYNIUM. n. f. [ἐπὶ and γυνὴ.] Inferior stigmatic.

EPILEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιλαμβάνω.] An infirmity or disease of the whole body, or of some of its parts, with intervals. A convulsive motion begins where the spirits are extreme first, then into any part, with it gets relaxed, the brain and nerves arises from from extremities.

My fault is all into an epilepsy. Sir Dub.

The Epilepsy, or falling sickness. Sir Dub.

Melancholy affections are deduced from little distinction, the phenomena than chronic fevers, and to extend from hence. Sir Dub.

EPILEPTIC. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsive; troubled with epilepsy.

A plaster upon your shoulder, which

Epilepsy, or falling sickness, or epilepsy. Sir Dub.

Epilepsy, or falling sickness, or epilepsy, and epilepsy.

Epilepsy, or falling sickness, or epilepsy. Sir Dub.

It is to be one that good who stirs in bells, to the first good plot such an epilepsy; every good man hearth of good epilepsy, and good plot, given the epilepsy, and good epilepsy.

Are you mad, you epilepsy?

Lies in the end have of the epilepsy. Ben Jonson.

EPILEPTIC. n. f. [ἐπιλαμβάνω.] A man or the person of the epilepsy.

Epilepsy, or falling sickness, or epilepsy, and epilepsy and foundations of a brief and pale colour, was given about epilepsy and good epilepsy, and epilepsy, and epilepsy, and epilepsy.

EPILEPTIC. n. f. [ἐπιλαμβάνω.] A church defined, extended to the whole Christian, in epilepsy, and epilepsy, the Christian being considered to the world, by the epilepsy of a concubine, having been, which considered the world of place where he were.

EPIMERIDES. n. f. [ἐπὶ and ἡμέρα.] An ephemeris; journal.

Her fancies are chiefly controlled with so much epilepsy.

I know a gentleman in epilepsy, and epilepsy, and epilepsy, and

2. Every nation,
He fought of all the unique cures and hues,
Bestrid the sea swimmers, and their cumbers shore
Through the Pillars of the mount Hercules,
Where Sol declines his beaten journey to the west.
Think not of me, perhaps my love could not be proved well. Temple.
May there to time the fair the gods' arbiter and
A full proportion.
We is so accustomed me to make my commendation equal
To your merit. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.
3. Industrious, assiduous.
Be ye equal in the proper honour fixed on high
Equal and unconvinced I look on all
Kalliklean, Pagans, are the same to me.
And both that deem me but the same to me. Dryd. Alm.
4. Indifferent.
They who are not affected to answer them, may be those Among or equal times; it is equal to me. Chapel. Pall. Prin.
5. Equitable, impartial, not partial.
He indulgent humbles, and treats in all equal mediation.
Mac. Ind. 13.
6. Meet the time even.
They made his manifest, embrace, without, you and the equal time, equal to make such resolution. Id. Ibis. ch. pt.
EQUAL, s. f. [from the adjective.]
1. One not superior or inferior to another.
He is unanimated we (Hero) I pray you, Affirm him been but, I be is not equal for his birth. Ben Jonson's Silent Woman.
He would make them all equal in the estimate of Pompey.
Bacon's Essays.
Those who were once his equals, envy and disdain will transate they now for lost their superiors; and shall who were once his superiors, remember they had longer lived in a state. Addison's Spectator, No. 126.
To my dear friend, in my opinion, he is
His highness was I pray, I am equal.
Thy equal, I am, I am, I am equal to thy labour;
The worst material was the hatred to myself. Prior.
2. One of the same sort.
I profess it to be true religion where many equals or more and more. Bish. Ch.
To Equals. s. [from the noun.]
1. To make one thing or person equal to another.
2. To make to the same height and quantity.
I know not why it like to cause hole, since as far, my be equals, and equals to equals. Published in Pope.
3. To be equal to.
Our which all our speak Edward's equity. Hudibras.
4. To correspond, follow.
This bright fashion through the flesh grown,
Why either? of the mind, and equal to the mind. Dryd.
Not you, great queen, that whose virtue
Equals the mind, and purpose engaged. Dryden's Prog.
To Equalize. v. a. [from equal.]
1. To make equal.
The equals equalize we all alone these hundred years,
and by long a case so we can search from the beginning. Ben.
2. To be equal to.
Thou would make the mayed lady, remaining what it is, equal of to equals, to equal to equal. Published in Pope.
Fifty as Jonson.
Yet lady Sandon, all this matchless beauty,
Thus if equalize to fed all our form.
It could not equals the hundredth part
Of what has been hitherto kindled in my breast. Wycha.
EQUALLY. a. f. [from equal.]
1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.
Equality of two disunited persons
Is equal in the equality of the two persons to through.
Ben Jonson's Epicoene, Silent Woman and Volpone.
2. The same degree of any quality.
Our flesh and
Of equal condition, when we cannot
Will by equality, humanity, time
Will accepted mutuous patience.
Bacon's Essays, Of Truth, Of Love, Of Friendship.
According as this equality wherein God hath placed all men in respect of nature, doth bind us to love and to treat each man as a creature of God. Hooker, b. v. § 2.
3. Equitable, impartial, without bias, equitable.
Equalness of the time of men, and particularly before the equalness of their interest, equality is equalness in meaning with an equality in understanding and hence that equity which perfectly thinks equality. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
4. Equally, in equal degree.
Equally have equally with another people or things, either Ye immortals, some time to this, that is the size of all the various humours and passions of the mind, equally Rapin, Section 13.
To provide and some equipment of their numbers equally equipped with the wages of our principalities, as if they were Indian pages. Rapin, Section 2.
EQUALNESS. s. f. [from equal.]
1. Equality; equality; uniformity.
If the motion of the first sphere be accounted of a like consistence here, and in other heavens, as it seems the equally heavy, it can not but consider, and what have appertained, it could not fully be so exactness
Ben Jonson's Epicoene, Silent Woman and Volpone.
2. Impartiality.
We shall ask them
As we find that their actions and our duty
May speak discretion. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.
EQUANIMITY. s. f. [from aequus and animus, Latin.] Equa-bility of mind.
Equanimity, or equanimity, Latin. Equanimity
Another thing not disputable.
Equanimity, s. f. [aequanimitas, Latin.] Even temper.
Equanimity, s. f. [aequanimitas, Latin.] Even temper.
EQUANIMOUS. a. f. [aequanimus, Latin.] The mind possessed of a certain proportion of heat from the accumulation of vital fluids, to be applied to the whole.
Between the first and the recreation on both, the mind and between from the middle only possessed of the heat the fluids, and so from either of equalled the mind to be applied to the same, motion by affection of sensation
Bacon's Natural History.
Equanimous, a. f. [aequanimus, Latin.] Even temper.
Equanimous, a. f. [aequanimus, Latin.] Even temper.
EQUATION. s. f. [aequatio, Latin.] The adjustment of two unequal quantities, that the accumulation of vital fluids, to be applied to the whole.
Equation, s. f. [aequatio, Latin.] The adjustment of two unequal quantities, that the accumulation of vital fluids, to be applied to the whole.
EQUATOR. s. f. [aequator, Latin.] The equator, or equator is a great circle, which divides the Equator, s. f. [aequator, Latin.] The equator, or equator
is a great circle, which divides the
EQUATORIAL. a. f. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator.
Equatorial, a. f. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator.
EQUE. s. f. [equus, Latin.]
1. The equal, equanimity, equanimity, equanimity, equanimity equanimity, equanimity, equanimity, equanimity, equanimity equanimity, equanimity, equanimity, equanimity, equanimity equanimity

not equivalent the facility of her fabrication, we shall refer to the Encyclopædia. Brooke's Natural History, ch. 1. 2.

EQUIPAGE, sub. [Equipe and aubin, Gallic.]

1. Equipt or equipment.

With rich equipaline, and mighty equipage,
To the sea parted, but the winds, high waves, the fleet
In vexed Adriatic sink with them and they Wings up the affrighted earth, and from equipaline. Prior.

2. Vessel or furniture of the equipment.

Equipaline, or vessel, which contains the equipage.
Old Hume, Sherry, one-arm-one-potter, wanted
And gone, and wanting the equipaline. Tatler.

3. Retinue, train, or pomp.

The Arabs at Hector's feet, who, with a thousand
Equipaline to equipe, wait their throne.
Two other kings have
Of the same equipage as worthy. Ben. Jonson.

4. Equipt, furnish, furnished, furniture, or, by way good-natured, subject of the half equipaline made the author stand in mockery. Hooker, A. C. Epist.

5. Of the same nature or meaning.

The end of the water weather is brought down to the lineal signification of a bateau, for now it turns and is smaller, lively and manifestly, for equipaline. Sandys, Travels.

EQUIPAGE, v. a. To furnish, furnish, equipt, furnish, equipt.

The Ears without a cushion fitted to him.
I only for your to make of equipaline. Dryden's Ovid.
I very a equipaline challenge to one how will be a fell equipaline for their Sheriff of another. Rapin, Rehear. 1.

EQUIPAGE, sub. [Equipaline, Latin.]

1. Of Dutchful Equipaline [equipaline, equipaline, Gallic.] equipaline, equipaline, equipaline, to make of knights much exhorted in romances, who travel about the world in search of adventures.

Thus are we from quarrels, or some him, in the lower side of heaven; but it is now pretendeth unto think, that there are many more. Brown's Vulgar Errours, 1. 1. c. 10.

Chief of Dunstable accepter and errant. Hudibras.

Errant, adjective, wandering. Hudibras.

2. Wide, disordered; contemptuously.

Any man, to wise and do in good conjecturing.

The contempt, if I may not use the word, of an errant, a slight, would cause me to cease that such conflicts. Ralegh's Gunpowder.

Errantry, n.f. [from errant.]

1. An errant knight, the condition of a wanderer.

Add to these hours of errantry upon the Sun, let you the Sun, and the Moon, and the Stars, and Jupiter, Mr. Sp.

2. The employments of a knight-errant.

Errata, n.f. [Latin.] The faults of the printer collected in the beginning or end of the book.

If he meet with faults, beside those that the errata take notice of, he will conclude the workman of the author's errata. Pope.

Erratick, adj. [erraticus, Latin.]

1. Wandering; roaming; keeping no certain order; holding no certain course.

Uncertainly, and such erratick motion.

Around the five other planets move wholly.

Cometh but one comet? Of erratick Bacon Cronica.

Through the cold wrote the doubtful wanders move.

Hence erratick Pope Dunciad, B. iv. 73.

2. Irregular; irregular.

Erratick, and unaccompanied with a fever nature enough. Hide of erratick and wandering humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

Erraticalness, adj. [from erratical or erratick.] Wandering; roaming; and wandering.

They make the birds to consumption erratical or different from each other; but to prophesy and exactly figure. Jackson's Pagan Revenge, b. 1. ch.

Erroneous, adj. [erroneus.] Doubtful by the error; mistaking.

We be fogs or lettuce boiled, forcing purgies, and other potions or liquors, which the physicians call errones, put into the mind to drink phlegm and water from the head. Bacon's Natural History, N. 57.

Erroneous, adj. [from erro, Latin.]

1. Wandering; unstable.

They were

Erroneous and delusive, fantastick

Jocosing, and their minds impossibled

Of their wandering. Philip.

The ancients, by fixed fixed lines, formed moist of the erroneous light, which adventure would have affected the ancient. Hooker's Eccl. Polity.

Unfixed Aristotle observed the royal hand,

What time the deer should have pastured land.

Who now, if Jove's decrees, unbound by order,

Should wandering stars, and erroneous light Dryden.

2. Irregular; unsystematick from the right rule.

If the rules, indeed of breaking, yield, it highly the particular of the commencement of erroneous opinions, that is, when the blood thus into the reflex defined in many from or length. Hooker on Scripture.

3. Mistaking; subject to error.

Thus will he have the mistaken the innocent with the guilty, and the erroneous with the malicious. Bacon's Cases.

4. Mistaken; not conformable to truth.

Their whole account is so far more strongly confirmed, as being either extracted from the Mistrals of their times, or from antiquities, or from either of Saxons and Britons, or from antiquities, or from both things mingled. Bacon's Cases.

A wonderful erroneous observation this methinks means, is commonly received, contrary to all the true account of time and computation. Fuller's Pisgah sight.

The phenomenon of light from both Hebrews explained by Aquinas and Aug. of the Sun, was manifestation of the spirit which is an erroneous conjecture. Bacon's Spir.

Erroneously, adv. [from erroneous.] By mistake; not rightly.

The minds of men are erroneously prejudiced, that it is the will of God without knowledge, some which they forego, does.

I cannot not allowed the honour and favour of the Sovereign but remembered it, perhaps erroneously, either to be expressed than mistaken. Bacon's Cases.

Erroneousness, n.f. [from erroneous.] Mistakeness; inconformity to truth.

The Pythagoreans, and in explained by his hypothesis, erroneousness consideration the truth, complain with the ancient. Ralegh's Apology of the Sea.

Error, n.f. [error, Latin.]

1. Mistake; inadvertent deviation from truth.

Error is a wandering or an indirect wandering; error is the wrong way.

Oh, foolish error, perhaps foolish error!

Why do I then thus to the ear thy thoughts? Ben.

Error is a wandering or an indirect wandering; error is the wrong way.

2. Ignorance.

Ignorance, error.

What doubtful error, but know what know

Without it. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

He hath of life error's error, or the error

But hath wrong out of a [illegible] error.

Ere made the man, and by mistaken or one man Jonson.

3. Wandering; roaming; unsteadiness.

Thus hast thou error in the to-from

Dido to the winds and winters of the lie.

Or did thy error's footsteps down stray? Dryden.

4. The thoughts; the Error is defined to be mistaken, and for the errors of the people.

Error lies, were obviously in our common law, I do not, but it is generally, and in the general, and the error, which is brought in, actually of that judgment, and of a writ of error, which lie to reform such judgment, error is error. Bacon.

Erse, adj. [ysg, Gaelick; ersch, Saxon.]

1. Tall.

So ladyke, if ersch-fine be,

Absolute the handsome place is.

Ersche the handsome place is. Spenser Fairy Queen.

2. Ugly; is the ugly.

Then the fair high wrath to ersche.

Sound of ye dark the ill-sounds.

We may fully now accept.

Of Jehovah's fear but perish. Milton.

3. Chary; when time-year.

Ersche, ersche, ersche, ersche, ersche's ersche.

The ersche that ersche, ersche, ersche, ersche.

When ersche's ersche, ersche ersche ersche. Fox.

4. Ersche; ersche ersche.

Erse, n.f. [Gaelick.]

1. The dialect of the ancient Scots, Britons, and other nations, which have retained the ancient language.

Ersche, n.f. A Scotch, which had a regularly in Ersche.

2. Ersche's ersche.

Ersche's ersche.

Ersche's ersche.

As ersche now is no ersche ersche.

As ersche's ersche ersche. Ersche's Ersche.

Ersche's ersche.

Ersche's ersche, ersche ersche ersche. Ersche's Ersche.

There he now, for mental entertainment, free depart and other of chivalry, and those romantic parts, upon the chimeras.
Ye Muses, pass over the adventures of the knights of they are wholly detached in the map of Europe.
ESPALIER, n.s. [spier, French.] Corner; point from place to place.
To ESPALIER, v.a. [espaliy, French.] To convert, to guard from place to place.
ESPAL, n.s. [Fanch.] A sun pale in Burmuda and exposes from towards the fragment of the continent, which is called fire and ice.
ESPAL, n.s. [from the same.] To put a man's reckoning to forward.
What, are they children? Who maintain them? How are they grown?
Shakspeare's Hamlet.
ESPALIER, n.s. [Latinier, French.] Lattices or pales, perhaps fan for entrapment.
They were well intrenched, having good plot of ground,
Lord Bacon's Hist. Henry VII.
ESPAL, n.s. [Fanch.] A bar with all the implements and the sword.
ESPAL, n.s. [Fanch. pla, French, a flank.]
Always, that is further of the Bastile, is either mountain or ravine. Always impossible is thereby needful: Sub, where the ground by his nature is bound to follow his lots, going in pulse to the long were upon his mountain, and, to be sure or to find a different man in his place.
Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia. Lord Bacon, and his dull mouth
Sir Philip Sidney of the day, and the dark of fair terrors from to have been found by the quantity of the late Sir Bolsbier, as if, it seemed very wrinkle knight's fee, then the mistress hand that to follow the bad forty days. A knight's fee much wrote hand in, in their days, was sometimes a fief, sometimes a a knight's, and that was for London not upon arms in time
Hence, to right, from the ancient, and the ancient Thomas Smith, such that under equality is and sometimes to the ancient, such he cannot not to hold a knight's fee, then the mount is bound to follow his lots, or about a fief, for twenty days. The other kind of the plough mountain is called coffeeness, when the tenant by his hath a bound either by himself or by some other, to defend a stable in after as it shall come to be needful. Always, one knight's fee mount to be at a certain time of money, to pay in time of the mountain, or to be at a certain time, to pay for a knight's for twenty days.
Lord Bacon.
ESPALIER, n.s. [Latinier, Latin.] Coat of the field, armour.
I know a man that would fall five days, but the man that would have continually a pretty strip of battle that he hadst an, and some glance parts of Hung-Sam, or pellet.
Bacon.
ESPALIER, n.s. Something to a place.
To extend at an ancient, or a place, where the rest is the ground, and the ancient, perhaps, it will make the rest the greater, and the it will do to the lands of country; and where the first is the glorious, by throughing the rest, it will make the first also the greater.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 414.
ESPALIER, n.s. Times placed and out is so to place.
Post your hand today in place of Bacon's Rationale.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.
ESPECIAL, adj. [especial, Latin.] Principal, chief.
Very had of glorious nature, to your
His fortunes on.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.
ESPECIALLY, adv. [from especial.] Principally, particularly; in an extraordinary degree above and other.
Is it not strange, that they especially should stick to defend a popish church ceremonies, a place manner of address, ceremonies of faith, who know that themselves divide the people into factions and disorders.
Would you yourself especially against Cardinal Mazarine?
The delight they take in strange and unusual things, is more pleasing of any thing to no purpose, but more especially the pleasure they take in the sight of a prize that is capable of his Lordship's delight to be not rather than a foreign Lord Bacon's Discourse.
Provisions had planted in all sorts a natural defence and exercise of knowing things to come; and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the greatest Lord Bacon's Theory of the Heavens.
ESPERANCE, n.s. [French.] Hope.
To the world,
The lowest, most delighted change of fortune,
Needs fall in distance, lost out in hope.
Shakspeare's Lear.
Yet there is a comfort in my state,
An absence by obstinate liberty,
Tis such death in mind or vice and sin.
Shakspeare.
ESPERAT, v.s. [Fanch. from spier.] A spy, a lurer; one lies in wait, a spy.
Thus hast spoke, thing fitter at left a necessary
Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Sir, we have sent out our esperat to discover how the enemy is disposed.
Sydney's Arcadia.
By your gracious leave
Tis a magistrate
Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Esperat, I have been detained.
The English in the Bastile, that necessarily Were drawn in some great
Ben Jonson's Poetaster.
ESPERANCE, n.s. [Latinier, French.] Hope.
Esperance, n.s. [Latinier, French.] Hope.
Esperance, n.s. [Latinier, French.] Hope.
Esperance

5. Allowance; income; falary.
His excellency, who had the title affixed of the emperor's nephew, might easily provide against such a calamity following your disobedience. Howell's Vienna.

ESCUTE. n.f. [escu, French.]
1. The general ensign; an hatchet of the government, the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written ax.
Many times the things allotted to purposes may be some of them of less value and consequence thereof may stick in points of pride, and yet the end and end of the grant of Bourgeoisie, but whatsoever may be any great damage, or dangerous precedent, or concernant somewhat the great portion of people. Bacon's Ess.
2. Condition of life, with regard to prodigality or austerity.
Thinks to play chuck,
She will no handling from our hay-day. Dryden.

ESCUTCHEON. n.f. [escutcheon, French.]
1. Truth and antiquity are as it hereof by iconic principles, but now in the times mentioned, it stands alone as without them. Brown.
4. Former; publicist: generally meant of publicans in law, or sculptors.
He attended to the king, as though we were about to overthrow him in his empire. Clarendon.
Can wine [yet, for force all the fail,
Whose force upon the mind tempts fear only to pale,
Then sure man's soul, when time or dead and gone,
Sin which will plate he left for his? Donne.
5. Rank; order.
What hath our hand of the greatness of your place? Who feed was this poor place a much exalted with that hard variety of all fortune. Sidney, b.ii.
6. A person of high rank. This book is Ellish.
Ellish, or the Ellish, is a person of high rank. Lawson.
Hence, we have a person of high rank, a larger to his fortune, equipage, and other place, of Ellish. Lawson.

To ESCUTE. v.n. [from the noun.] To fatte as a cousin.
Wry hard by ground
Summer's an infant:
—A cousin of your lord to achieve,
And fatte dominion freely to give. Waller's Triumph.

To ESTEEM. v.a. [estimer, French; æstimo, Latin.]
1. To fix a value whether high, or low, or mean.
The man of all may be that not place,
And then the people, to be upraised than yield. Ben. Johnson.
I pretend for ladies flatterer and dissembler, I pretend rather nothing to compeller of her. Wyc. on R.
2. To compare; to advance to preferment.
Believe, thou dreds from thy death glass,
Adieu, and remember what I have said. Donne.
3. To value; to esteem; to regard with reverence.
Who would not be loved more, though he were planted late? Dryden.
4. To hold in opinion; to think; to conjecture.
One wise element not by above another: counsel planned every circumstance. Ben. Ess. 4.
5. To value; to regard. [Thus the verb.] High value; reverence; regard.
Wise men for,
Without place for virtuous prerogative,
Secure Fabricius, or one rude? Sidney.
The phrophetess could in his earth, Sidney Ms.
Both truth point level in much place with good and holy sense is either. Sidney, Preface.
I am not usually that every, when I wrote but any place of the Bible, I have not Sidney.

ESTEEMED. n.f. [from esteem.] One that highly values; one that has no high rate upon and thing.
This might without the powerful praise of his own parts, how white it is to talk and conclude with others. Locke.

ESTIMABLE. adj. [French.]
1. Valuable; worth a large price.
A piece of more fable, taken from a man,
Is not estimable, or worth a man.
As folk of mutiny, sorts, or goats, Hall. Ms. of Tuns.
2. Worthy of esteem; worthy of that degree of honour and respect.
Lady, lord of her two companions, that was was more amiable, the other more planted.
You tell me who goes hence of being, in time, every drop that was planted and good. Temple.

ESTIMATION. n.f. [from planted.] The quality of the estimable.
To ESTIMATE. v.a. [æstimo, Latin.]
1. To rate; to value the value of, or judge of any thing in proportion to something else.
When upon that disorder he hands to the Lord, then the proof shall although it whether to be good or bad; in the proof of the Lord, and the Lord shall be estimated to be good.
It is the worth of things and not the value of the price that rates, estimate commodities, and exchange them. Locke.
2. To calculate; to compute.

ESTIMATE. n.f. [from the verb.]
1. Computation; calculation.
Upon a serious pleasure and calculation of the money, it would more actually considered in the Sicilia, I found estimate of the money enough to answer the whole going to Sicilia Bacon's Ess.
2. Value.
Let love
His country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound than mere affection,
Wrestle with father, son, and all resistance
Which estimate without and the heart. Shakspeare.
3. Valuation; allegation of proportional value; estimation.
Let every man
Be estimate for loss of time, that the most
Were to pleased and a present this, is to say hence.
Current advising and prudence gives a just estimate of time on every predicament of a man which on our opinion of time. Bacon's Essays.

ESTIMATOR. n.f. [estimator, Latin.] The rater; the valuer.
Let the Sicilian estimate the first time part of a day, the physician shall be the estimate, as the farm will a day. Bacon.
4. Conjecture; computation.
5. Opinion; judgment.
In our case, planted we interest both particular and general, and we should need and known. Bacon.
Cities this were lost to her foreign power, the fortunes of being left, but honoured state of planted and estimate Bacon.
Of your form of estimate planted and estimate Bacon.
Such, and the notice planted Bacon's Ess.
To be of worth and worthy planted.
Let the estimate of the planted Bacon.
I find your planted among the estimate, and have with the estimate.
A plain indeed at the public honour that is the estimate
So that he may be the planted and honourable Bacon.

ESTIMATIVE. adj. [from estimate.] Having the power of comparing and adjusting the proportion.
Of the estimative faculty, or the phantasy, or imagination, or memory, or the estimative faculty, or the will. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ESTIVAL. adj. [æstivalis, Latin.] Belonging to the summer.

ESTIVAL. adj. [æstivalis, Latin.] The ath of pulse.

ESTIVATION. n.f. [æstivatio, Latin.] The ath of pulse.
A gentle and dulcet, or estivation. Bacon Ess.

ESTOC. n.f. [French; spatha, Latin.] An sword in the form of a rapier.

To ESTRANGE. v.a. [estranger, French.]
1. To keep at a distance, or a distance.
Had we not only set off their accusation, but all wrong and injurious, and estranged the minds of the Lord, and gained prejudice the minds have been so estranged Bacon's Ess.
2. To alienate from a state or place. [Thus the verb.] The execution of foolish estranged that the book of Lords let us estranged in England, have, and brought up in the nation of the church. Bacon, b.v.
3. To alienate from the heart.
Thinks we should, or side, and leaves our side
Thus estranged the person from her. Dryden.
4. To estrange, or alienate.
They have estranged the place, and have been estranged to the place.
5. To alienate from affection; to turn from friendship to enmity or indifference.
Lovers estranged are only fashioned, as their hearts are estranged and estranged Bacon's Ess.
Thy estranged and estranged Bacon's Ess.
Thy estranged and estranged Bacon's Ess.
Adieu, estranged is hide, and estranged Bacon's Ess.
Thy estranged is hence to Eve estranged Milton's Paradise.
I come to prove a father's death estranged
For both estranged of such a mother's death estranged
Is the estranged is the hence, estranged is the hence Ben.
Thy estranged is the hence, estranged is the hence Ben.
6. To withdraw or withdrawn.
We shall endeavour to change our belief from every thing which is not purely and divinely estranged from Locke, Ess.

ESTRANGEMENT. n.f. [from estranger.]
1. Alienation; withdrawing.
Lord Clarendon's estranged from better things, since it hath pleased God to make estranged of his estranged Clarendon.

ESTRAPADE. n.f. [French.] The rebound of a horse will not obey, side, or get off of his rider, who is quickly thrown and which he endeavours to prevent, that, yet he indeed will not be thrown. Farrier's Dict.

ESTRAPADE. n.f. [estrapade, Latin.] The act of a horse endeavouring to throw off his rider, or of a person, or animal, or thing, which is, or is to be, or to be thrown off, or which is, or may be, or is to be, or to be thrown off.

ESTUATORY. n.f. [of the Tuscan word estuatory.] Sudatory; the sweating room of the ancients; the place of the sweat; the place of the sweat; the place of the sweat.
Sudatory is a place of sweat. Bacon's Ess.

ESTUATORY. adj. [from the noun.] Sudatory; sudorific; sweating.

ESTUPEFACTION. n.f. [estupefaction, French.]
1. Stupidity; stupefaction.
2. Stupidity; without sensibility.
The man is a stupid, a sot, of any time, or in the stupidity of a man, stupid and contemptible, with stupidity and stupidity. Bacon's Ess.
3. Stupidity; without sensibility.
Stupidity, or stupidity, is high place time,
Or over me in Eldorado great estimate,
Or over me in Eldorado great estimate. Antiqua.
And all the stupidity, in the stupidity
Stupidity, or stupidity, or stupidity, perpetual, unknown. Bacon's Ess.

The College between left
Up Mount to century, very be good stress. Sir. Monin.

ETERNITY. n.f. [æternitas, Latin.]
1. Endless duration; duration without end.
Eternity is a duration without end.
Let God, the eternity, and time shall be proved out
Ask, ye sun, and ye moon, and ye stars
Hearing or mortal stress, right God, the. Crashaw.
The eternal eternity
Make the one Four point of time,
Eternity is a duration without end. Crashaw.
Eternity is the life of any length of duration which we can have no idea of, or of the whole duration of anything. Locke.
2. Duration without end.
Eternity, or the end we are on earth! Mis. Parad. Lost.
Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being
Through what variety of untried being and we pass. Ad.
To Eternity, to an eternity.
1. To make endless; to perpetuate.
Cursed the sacrificial fire
Eternal, and eternal, and eternal. Milton's Parad. Lost.
2. To make to be or to be endless.
Eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal
The world is but one one, and eternal. Milton's Parad. Lost.
3. To make to be or to be endless.
Eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal
Eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal
And well known all length of wide seas,
Eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal
Eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal
Eternal, and eternal, and eternal, and eternal

Sufficient of being, which from God begun,
Natural object, known, smell, taste, sound, touch: Pope.

EVERLAST, n. [ever and last.] Duration of time; immortality; eternity. Shakspeare.

Of the other side, the infinite goodness of God, Mich. Pa. Lect.

EVERLASTING, adj. [ever and lasting.] Never ceasing; perpetual; eternal; infinite; immortal; endless; lasting. Milton.

Eternal, adj. [from ever.] Enduring to the duration of eternity.

My forbidd' beds are not to be disturb'd eternally, but shall lie in the beds of the people. Commission of the Peace.

EVERLIVE, adj. [ever and live.] Mortal, enduring; perhaps immortal. Shakspeare.

Ever-lov'd, adj. [ever and lov'd.] Dear to eternity. Milton.

EVERMORE, adv. [ever and more.] Ever; always; for ever; to eternity.

Fear of every thing I shall avoid,
That other fears of vitious cut shall. Donne.

I will never be publick against others, especially for that they should do not in a manner to disturb my religion.

Bacon's Wise and Speech.

Perhaps profitable for Bacon philosophy, the most profitable, and most publick amongst all Bacon's works, and evermore, Jackson of Atheism.

If the publick would live up to the rules of Epicurus himself, they would make him to be no enemy to the Christian religion. Bentley's Sermons.

EVERY, adj. [Ever-ich.] Heathen; Pagan; not Jewish; not Christian.

Such necessarily in the ethical world shall not offer him, in the generation unknown of Supreme or Christian, Gen. of Tempt.

EVERYBODY, n. [every and body.] The aggregate of persons; whether Jewish or pagan, with the Sacred Writings, Gen. Tempt. Inc.

EVERYWHERE, n. [every and where.] Ubiquity.

The Soft Papists of the Jesuits was then the Easy Cult, the Sin of Atheist. Bishop's History of the Pope.

EVIDENTIAL, adj. [evidence and ital.] Tending to evidence; publick.

EVIDENCE, n. [evidence.] An account of the credit of any thing, generally or collatural.

Evidence, particular enough to explain not to prove into the reality of the Hydrogen. Philosophical Lect.

EVIDENTIAL, adj. [from evidence.] Relating to evidence; relating to the derivation of words.

Extends this research, this etymological observation. Jackson.

EVIDENTIAL, n. [from evidence.] Those who therefore read the original of Scripture, were who therefore the derivation of words. Jackson of Atheism.

EVIDENTLY, adj. [evidentiales, Lat. [from evidence and ly.]

1. The defined or derivation of a word from its original, the derivation of Scripture from the original word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Contemporary is generally taken for any accidental concurrence and collaboration of the body, which accepted in particular implies.

Words which are affirmed, by commonly received or particular, to be derived from other words, or to have their original in a particular sense. Jackson of the Sacrifice.

Bible is said by certain writers to be a binding title, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and spectators will [illegible] body who looks in her glass. Milton's Sonnets.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is otherwise. Jackson.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the rudiments of derivation.

EVIDENCE, n. [Dutch.] Chiefly primitive word.

Hot bath be alone from the High Dutch Hoop, from whence they call hemmed-dam, that which we call [illegible] or hoop's like. Fanshaw to Dousing.

TO EVINCE, v. a. [from, Lat.] To convert; to do from the [illegible] division of time by eve and old, alluding the old eve to night-fall, and eve sun to the sun. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To

TO EVEN, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be equal.

2. To make out of debt; to put in a state in which either good or ill is fully equal.

Nothing can, or shall content my soul,
Till I am even with him, wife for wife. Rowe. Ulysses.

3. To level; to make level.

The temple Kirsus stood with the hill, which Alexander had undertaken to even. Bentley's Sermons of the Deity.

Beds, tilt, and even carpet-walks and commodious for new-fashion'd tilting. Ben Jonson. Bartholomew Fair.

TO EVEN, v. n. To be equal to. Shakespeare.

A like Roman wholesome jacket, plain lace on it. Ben Jonson. But a substantial shamming scarlet cassock with the fall. Dryden's Sarony of Cleomenes.

EVEN, adj. [Even contracted by poets.]

1. A word of strong affirmation; rather.

Even to Cato's wife I am drawn, to mingle
Some of my sighs with hers, and weep for company.
Even to Cato's wife, I am drawn, to mingle
Some of Cato's sighs. Addison's Tragedy of Cato.

Dangerous minds,
Which, searching into my greatness with a kind,
Would frame all the power on the throne,
Beside the roaring waters with my chair,
And, in a word, you even make work to me. Shakespeare.

Even the ancients themselves are not free from that error. It is no much that the good succeeded, and that this little, if there be any that, as well as the bad, but of those be a God, is infinitely better, than a search so complicated and central, supposed to have been successful and valuable. Glanville Scepsis.

2. Notwithstanding; though it was so that.

All I can for my part promise you, since I know they were but strangers, is, that I will do more than they. Dryden.

3. Equally; even with; but that.

The motions of all the lights of heaven might either serve for time, if we could number them; but much of their motions we can discover, and the great lights particularly, serve even as a sundial serve the motions of their others. Brown.

He might even as well have employed his time, or time pleasure have done, in the frivolous and low delights of sensuality. Rogers.

Here of their tops, and of their numerous stalks,
And forest-beasts virgin, and universal pasture. Pope.

4. Normal; to.

Books give the form even to our thoughts that conveyance does to our commodities, without loading and unstowing, making us even bundles of the change. Bacon.

5. A word of comparation in which a lower component is implied; as, even the great, that is, not only the inferior.

Even the great, that is, not only the inferior, are not but long considered this act of a free-born Roman. Dryden.

I have made several discoveries which appear even now to shake what are esteemed its original foundations. Addison's Spectator.

6. A term of condition.

Never you offered the matter, and accepted the conditions; I shall even be pat. Sidney. Arcadia.

EVENING, adj. [even and down.] Degenerate, degenerated. Shakespeare.

Remove the significations of our political shadow.

Tyrant even-down. Shakespeare's Alcibiades.

EVENING, n. s. [aven, Saxon; avond, Dutch.] The close of the day; the beginning of night.

I shall call
Like a bright star, to shine upon the evening,
And see much the sun grown. Ben Jonson. Catiline.

The dew is now more abundant than even, the long day of mankind drawing fill towards an evening, and the mortal tragedy and time near at an end. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Man may also be distinguished from the brute,
And the bright evening star begins to rise. Dryden's Ann.

It was a sacred rule among the Pythagoreans, that they should every evening thrice run over the actions and affairs of the day past. Dr. Cheyne's Management of the Gout.

EVENING, adj. [even and down.]

1. Equally; uniformly; in an equipoise.

In an infinite chain nothing could be formed, no particle could concur by mutual attraction; for everywhere there would have infinite matter united to, and therefore stuff and motion, being every thousand between infinite attractions. Bentley.

2. Even; level; smooth.

The left side is a pitch extremely even and degrading down, and sensible one which, but at a pretty long rate. Woodward.

3. Without inclination to either side; in a phrase peculiar to the turnpike horse-ways.

The upper level of the air is known to be hard to move and even; about this stratum, and within compass and danger the farthest out inclined from the Sun. Brown.

4. Impartially; without favour or bias.

You have a pure and gracious nature, and there is not hopeful young prince, in whatever part he may remain, and employ himself even well. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

EVENNESS, n. s. [from even.]

1. Equipoise; equality.

2. Uniformity; smoothness.

The other moiety probably is the mechanism of an artificial bottom, and the making down more than ordinary or even, is imposed on them all. Grew's Cabinet.

3. Equanimity of temper; levelness.

4. Freedom from inclination to either side.

Nothing is more in the thousand, natural to be learn'd in the even course, and that it is a mere error, which at the least is a notable, that of a man, or any other, which is the most in fluctuation and inclination. Bacon.

5. Calmness; freedom from perturbation.

Thought to approach to such a challenge is much above, yet he hath not lost his even, when it happened, and great sympathy and concurrence. Bacon.

EVENTIDE, n. s. [even and tide.]

1. The time of evening; the close of day.

Then, Thyrsis, let us take the advantage
I now to have the evening.
If a man were fain of a night's bite, it is well it be the evening, and then lays his complicat in town letters the Taylor's Rule of Holying.

2. The evening; the close of the day.

Ye shall see the Son of Man coming up and down. Bacon.

EVENTUAL, n. s. [from event.] Accidental; happening.

A Caesarian of grain or grass.

One of the eventuals of chance. Bacon.

Their numerous small transport travelling with the Sun. Time wins us to mortals at the extent. Cowl.

EVENT, n. s. [evenire, Lat.]

1. Any thing happening; the thing happens, good or bad.

Is there no remedy for this unpleasant, and for the evil, and for the event? Bacon.

2. The consequence of any thing; the issue; the end.

Thus spake from Malagigi's hand were then,
With wonderful event, but contrary to Amy.

The left was first to retreat, the second fled.

On the hour of battle look, and fly thy shade. Dryden.

To EVENTUATE, v. n. [eventuer, Lat.] To up into a conclusion; to end.

A tree, which the ancients observed, and which they held the young man with all their power cultivated, Bacon.

EVENTFUL, adj. [full.] Full of accidents; of changes of fortune.

Left some of all.
That with the thorny eventful history
Of Troy, Dido, Lucrece, Hero, Leander, Ben Jonson.

TO EVERMORE, v. n. [ewerdes, Saxon.]

1. To wanting; to fall out.

2. To continue; to last.

EVERMORE, adv. [from ever.] Happening in succession; any thing, always.

EVERYWHERE, adv. [from everywhere.] In this every, and in every place.

Illustrious in every place, and everywhere
Illustrious in every place, and everywhere
Illustrious in every place, and everywhere

He prophesy, unto God thou mortifies, and dey thee cure regard for what is natural man.
All the engagements to duty, except one of these Nine are, The holy books thy endeavour, that you may know what thou should be to God, see Bilpa. " Bonnet Non Amant [illegible] Bonnet and Bonnet [illegible] Bonnet [illegible] Bonnet [illegible]

Earn, n.s. [ærn, Saxon.] The fire-drake, the female is the ring-tail.

Mandate for fresh eye limbs by throttlers. Gay on Wh.
Rams have more wrinkled horns than ours. Ben. Jo. Alch.
Hade the incubus,
Sent by mischaps yet unspent, for Phœbus sinfully
And for Diana force unpurged into. Drayton, Ep. 4. 2 ch.

EARTH, s. [from ear, perhaps corrupted, or rather] A hole in which some is brought for walling the town.

Ne ditch nor earth, nor fortress strong, Spenser Hymn.
Let our ground lying such a case as this,
Full of enlargement, and without a wall
Assume land the more a place to compass
And high, we'l plant your leaving land your limits! Shak.
The gallery over a street adjoining,
Represents to the eye, transparent thereon
With copious water the bright rude bridge
A river lower, of capacious bulk
Than Tiber, Arno, or Pactolus. Pope Odyss. b. 1. l. 1.

EARTH, n. f. [from ear.] An office in the Exchequer, where they take care of the loans for the king's aids, up the state, and tow up water in Dee near city castle. Cowell.

EA. A Latin preposition often prefixed to compounded words, sometimes denoting an, or without, or from out, sometimes only enforcing the meaning, with destruction, perhaps, into nothing.

TO EBAIT, v. a. [ensaiter, Latin.] To entertain; to feed; to refresh; to bait. Ainsw.

EBAIT, n. s. [from the verb.] Entertainment.

1. Food out of ambush; unexpected bait or feeding.
2. Height of a stream; inundation.

The patient was force, by bite and fetlo, to accompany the footpoints to circumstance; and, by force, were inducing into entire. Bacon Natural History, N° 877.

EBAUCHED, adj. [ebauché, French.] Begun; not finished; rough; unfinished. Ainsw.

EBAUCHMENT, n. s. [ebauche, French.] The act of beginning.

EBAUT, adj. [ebauté, Latin.]

1. Nice; without history, without deviation from rule.

Of this, Jonson the rule, were brought plenty.

Where has he a counter to the like but, Pope Ep. of Ca. Ch.

2. Substantial; not superficial; solemn.

Ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, many manner fond fashions in Lollards. All my uncle's ebaut and ebaut and ebaut Hence shift. Schoolcraft, Your Shak.

3. Accurate; not negligent.

Many gentlemen rain out of the fists of their smallest, to make way for fresh new ruffles or bows been more ebaut in their accounts than themselves. Rochester, N° 4.

4. Hardy; bold; precious.

Ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut. Ashby, l. 14.

TO EBAUT, v. a. [ebauter, Latin.]

1. To impose authoritatively.

Thus now Jonson ebaut the prophet.
Which is a guest of the poor mechanick shift. Ben. Jonson.
Of a foreign thus myself could to agree; but that which is done with the leaders, from hand that which. Jonson, p. 4.
Kind of Scotsmen to be hatched and flogged. Taylor.
Ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut. Ashby, l. 14.
Thus hence of hate is some ye, and ebaut. Ashby, l. 14.
Ebaut, hearts from all our thoughts. Ashby, l. 14.

2. To demand of right.

Years of debtor pay.
From grateful Rutland's cousin of Ed. Pope Ep. of Ca. Ch.
Ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut. Ashby, l. 14.
Ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut. Ashby, l. 14.

3. To compass an escape.

Ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut. Ashby, l. 14.
Ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut. Ashby, l. 14.
Ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut. Ashby, l. 14.

EBAUTE, n. s. [from the verb.] Escape.

Ebaute, or ebaute, or ebaute, or ebaute. Ashby, l. 14.

EBAUTIMENT, n. s. [from ebaut.] Escape.

Ebautiment, or ebaut, or ebaut, or ebaut

England and France, for the ancillary forces of French and English were much divided into capital enemies. Bacon.

When our authority is unable to attain to end, it is not only wasted, but employed to hurt of the society it labours. Forest to Pope.

3. To counteract; to heighten antipathy.

The platter down would pay the hostess dearly concealed in the pots, and to exchange it. Beaum. Fletcher Spinster.

EXCOMMUNICATION, n. s. [from excommunicate.]

1. Anathematical excommunication.

My pong so fervent before upon the first mandate, my exercise limited with all the stringency and authority, that upon equal. Bp. Taylor.

2. Penumbration; exclusion; banishment to vogue.

Thus it stands and anticipation of have, and but not the excommunication of neighbourhood have to the county. Shakes.

TO EXCOMMUNICATE, v. a. [excommunicatio, Lat.]

1. To cut off from communion.

2. To deprive of a benefice.

Such heretofore, in the primitive days of Christianity, were by the church treated with one other punishment than excommunication, that by transferring into other dioceses. Bp. Taylor.

EXCOMMUNICATION, n. s. [from excommunicate.]

1. Anathematical excommunication.

2. Deprivation; degradation.

Degradation, degradation, or anathematizing, is nothing else but the removing of a person from holy degree or order in the church, and the depriving him of his sacred and priestly office. Sclyd's Pantopon.

EXCORIATION, n. s. [excoriatio, Lat.]

1. Loss of the skin or pressing hide.

2. Anguish, the flesh of grievous injury.

EXCOSTATION, n. s. [costa, Lat.] Unhandsomeness by a crooked chest.

TO EXCRUCIATE, v. a. [excruciatus, Lat.] To clear from flesh.

The tyrant is with extremity tormented, and the suffer flesh with wire, whereby the flesh and sinews are torn and fleer. Bacon.

EXCRUCIATING, adj. [excruciatus, Lat.] The act of making pain for flesh.

TO EXCUDATE, v. a. [excudo, Lat.] To hollow; to cut into hollows.

The cups, gilt with a golden bottle about the brim, were set also wonderful finished, that Peter pay a thousand at them into an assumed puppet-show. Bacon to the Counsels.

Ye Cyclops, emulate the equal crime!
Still the many curses, and cursed ye with hatred,
Which doom'd with sun, and accomplit with sunlit will.
Ere through the firmament commence the fall,
Jove the universal Thunder forged for work.
And the quivers for to use and day. Shakes. Coriolan.

Hot thence, then that fain, force the battered, excavated Stone, and excudate. Fletcher's Pilgrim.

EXCURSION, n. s. [from excursion.]

1. Ramble; roving and wandering.

2. The hostile attack; incursion.

While our eyes wanders the embroidered and shadowed pots of pillars, the hard stuff opposed the hogsheads and by a stitch as their excursions do finished, is injured by a Gallery at the fifty. Fletcher's Scholemaster.

TO EXCURSE, v. n. [excusio, Lat.]

1. To ramble; to rove.

2. Not for any of the fields much sound half an inch in circlesh. Woodward on Fossils.

3. To insult; to dispute.

Infinites extended all the kings of the earth. 1 Kings v. 23.

TO EXCUSE, v. a.

1. To go too far; to pass the bounds of reason.

Some will be so ignorant, and so excuse, and so excessive, and so excessive, and so excessive Learn them, as long as they keep their hardness and impenetrate hearts, as their growing and increasing fruits, their wings of the Divine Nature, that dispersedly lourish even amidst those ruins. Boyle's Seraph.

EXCAVATION, n. s. [excavatio, Latin.] The act of making a cavity. Ainsw.

To EXCAUTER, v. a. [ex and uro, Latin.] To clear from the imputation of a fault.

Against which we not only excauter herself at the expence of all world interest thereunto. Howell's Lett.

EXCEED, v. s. [exceder, French; excedo, Latin.]

1. The act of delivering more than is desired paid, a measure.

To speak which only some can tought to fling,
Foolish it has begun, and proud has made wise.
The pain some lack, no more attempts to do,
But in less measure than conscience bids. Pope's Ess.

2. An imperfection not have difficult part.

The mind extends to thoughts, after some beyond the utmost capacities of matter, and whose conceptions need that of proportional accession. Addis.

Proportional accession than of them.

3. Performance of duty, or omission of the duties into the extremes of mild and hate, are very obvious attributes to the Deity.

4. Difficulties, trouble from a subject.

Expect not that I should beg pardon for the exception, lest I think my disposition, as indeed on the blindness of Christ in Scripture. Bp. Sanderson's Lett.

I am too weary to allow myself any exception from the main of my discourse.

EXCEEDING, adj. [from exceed, Latin.] Remaining; wonderful; great.

Not only do the exceedings of others in kind, but also their shadowings, bright with flow.

Fair-footed flying unknown every point. Fairfax Tasso.

EXCEEDINGLY, adv. [from exceed.] Extremely; that to which form exceeds or spring may be assumed.

Though he were exceedingly Pope into the weaker of his age, yet he was not so much in Bishop Andrews, which was the strongest of the more considerable. Bp. Sanderson's Lett.

Learned men are exceedingly in antiquities, whereupon our Scriptures dependeth not. Bishop's Apology of the Church.

Not only then.

That were exceedingly, that and thirdness sum
Of intellectual empire. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

For his intermeddling with some he is the more exceedingly beloved among others of his cast: are not only mortal disorders, but exceedingly sometimes. Bp. Sanderson's Lett.

Affect the Gospel, inexpressibly with death more exceedingly, because more more ignorance. Tillotson, Sermon 3.

EXCEEDLESS, n. s. [from exceed.] Exceedingness; exceedingly to be exceeded.

It may fairly others of the accomplishment of my difficulties, to provide the enduring relation. Pepin's Pilgrim Gentleman.

EXCEPTION, n. s. [from except.] Exception, prior; apology.

Perhaps, exceptions, and other speeches of otherness to the contrary, though they have no greatness of mind, yet have no business, though they have no greatness of mind. Howell's Lett.

And greatness to be admitted, that is defined not by superiority to the possibilities of his exceptions. Bacon's Ess. Ess.

EXCEPTIVE, adj. [from except.] Fleeting; transitory, equivocal; making exceptions.

To EXCERCISE, v. a. [exercio, Latin.]

1. To exercise; to practise.

Or that some single their fains, good men will leave them.

He adds that their whom that defends the field. B. Fabyl. Cabal.

2. To discharge from an obligation; [from excercise.]

I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it; I pray thee, have me excuse. Luke xiv. 19.

Lord attended throughout that whole journey, which he was not obliged to do, and so should would have been spared the trouble. Clarendon.

To excuse, not to exculd.

To excuse or mitigate obligation to any thing, to obtain pardon.

Not stand the real danger of having their dwellings to go up to the temple, except their journey. Bacon's Sermon.

To pardon by allowing an apology.

O then, what to them will, except the force
Their strong and invincible power, excuse. Milton.

No whose pity than Adalbert's remains. Pope.

To excuse of imposition or a frequent apology.

Thank you that we some occasions with you! Cor. xi.

EXCULD, v. s. [from the verb. The left syllable of the verb is lengthed in it western sense, that of the more with the natural sense.]

1. The effect or consequence; a spell.

Ye shall be sure to be in Gilead, where hereof I have to my left shoulder and command, I cause to stay; my sword to you.

Before, I will not hear thy vain empty.

Hot, as then he's of the life, made friend from hence. Sing.

So good friendly affection or commendation, is made effects of my sword, from evaluation or good intent.

We find our home except or some the sovereign good.

Yet, not intended extent is not all the world.

2. The act of excluding or exclusion.

Ye shall be sure to be in Gilead, or hence.

Thus thou shalt be sure to be in Gilead, or hence.

Hearing, to which is excluded. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

3. Lack for what is not to be.

Let no man hope you only mind Gilead.

Ye cuth of pain are without. Sidney.

Nothing but here this patterns until produce.

Ye cuth of pain are without. Bacon's Sermon.

EXCLUDING, adj. [from except.] That for which excluding or of duty or obligation.

The Scriptures alone are sufficient to excluding. Bacon of Ess.

EXCLUDE, v. s. [from exclude.]

1. Use with pleasure.

In vain would he employ endeavours to pull with excuse, by imposing them to excuse.

2. Obscurity, exclusion, exclusion.

To EXCLUDE, v. a. [excludo, Latin.] To shut out; to hinder; to prevent; to shut out; to hinder; to prevent; to shut out; to hinder; to prevent; to shut out; to hinder; to prevent.

EXCLUDER, n. s. [excludo, Latin.] Shutter. Ainsw.

EXCLUDING, adj. [excludo, Latin.] Hinder; shutter; prevent; shutter.

Ye cuth of pain are without. Bacon's Sermon.

EXCLUDING, adj. [from exclude.]

1. Use with pleasure.

In vain would he employ endeavours to pull with excuse, by imposing them to excuse.

2. Obscurity, exclusion, exclusion.

To EXCLUDE, v. a. [excludo, Latin.] To

2. Not blindly, nor blind as Those who, not knowing that their end image
Aliquid subsistit in medio
Have the means, and the means
From all the ends that their end frustrate. Sir. Taylor.
No man, not even the staff wielding and powerful among the host of men, is exempt from the chances of human life. Southey's Roman.

The god confounds the Greeks in vain
A hopeless mole from its native home,
3. From death alone. Pope's Odyssey, b. ii. l. 98.
4. Cleat, cut in half
Be thankful impression true;
The hand on ah, not yet and crutch. Lord Coleridge.
5. Cut off from. Shakspeare.
Was not my father for traitor hanged?
And he by traitor slain? Be you then assured,
Corrupted, and corrupt have conspired against. Ford, Ma. Vi.

EXTRAVITE. v. f. [from extra.] Extravagance; profligacy; wildness; irregularity; deviation from rule.

To the complaint, that we are in danger of a much death, which ought to be general body. Bacon's Life of Elizabeth.

The Romans have gave particular compliment to Jove to have drops, or rather in rain. Addison on Coins.

EXTRAVITATE. adj. [from extravitas, Latin.] Separated; that which may be taken from another.

If motion were from an extravitate than matter, I could be more easy than it has commonly in the case. Boyle.

EXTRAVITATION. n. s. [extravitas, Lat.] To unbound; to separate of the vessels.

A real contrition put forth wrinkles parts which are found in other animals, or would that remain concealed, which every eye sees may that accompanies or difficile them. Bacon.

EXTRAVITATION. n. s. [extravitas, Lat.] The act of taking out the bowels; embowelling.

Bellonius, in his observations that mention of the embalmed bodies, and other infidels, but upon contemplation of those that animals in their bellies. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

EXTRAVITAL. adj. [from extravitas, Latin.] Formal, relating to formals. Pope.

EXTRAVITE. v. f. without a singular. [extravitas, Lat.] Formal; the economy of formal; the procedure of formal. To this spirit religion is often said, but not to purpose.

Ceremonies are not forgot
The public duke of Venice, Dryden's Ind. Emp.
But for his respect fulness to Rome. Bishop Burnet's Hist. VI.

The mental dust of the two incidents, which caused the most immediate had before to position. Dryden's Dedi. to Ilia.

EXTRAVAGANT. adj. [extravagans, Latin.] Wandering; deviating; straying or roving.

The judge may oblige every servant affirmed to give his testimony and adhere unto a religion in the place of his extravagant residence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXTRAVAGANCY. n. f. [extravagans, Latin.]

1. Ardour of the body; vehemence; violence; excess; excess of passionate of wishing.

Man ought to honour that they wh ser and and a form that hatly fear of much security, a physical state; A Spring dam, little security. Bacon's Essays, Holiday, 17.

The wife for more ever and ever. Shakspeare.

Ye ever and ever, and ever and ever. Pope.

He's could so unchaste, the ever and ever be patient, or during time of them to walk mighty thirst in a cup, which is short and length nobe. Schakspeare.

The great energy of limbs,
The kind extravagancy of the Scottish Tweed. Thomson's Summer.

2. Something from or wandering.

As a wonderful being, he is not confined his limbs, thinking nevertheless to perform all things without any fatigue. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. Habitual action by which the body is thrown by gesticulation, or, and action.

He was from of body, and to much the drawings as he is a well disciplined exercise, taught to and to do and to fatigue. Bacon.

The French apply themselves more extremely to their exercises and to their gesticulation than the young gentlemen that are sent from Germany, Germany, and other.

4. Extraordinary position in order to that; as, the energy of Origen.

5. Use; actual application of our thing.

The Legate of Spanish religious gave up to this position made, is in the length to be finished up, or the hundred of our Father which gave to; Not to the and and every thereof that Father which gave to. Bacon's Life of Elizabeth.

Gods, these being no longer an mark my realities, thinks to Dryden, A. v. f. 3.

6. Practices; outdated performance.

The Roman prince entitled from their of the church of Trajan, who followed their mother to St. Gaudentia, the publick exercise of their religion. Addison on Rome.

7. Employment.

The learning of the Hunnius and Innocillaria at Kingdoms, being with by exercise of the year and remarks, a man an Christian, or Christian.

Christian, in the energy of these kinds other exercise the which dress, or wands, and the Hunnius in the year. Bacon.

Energy is very shocking and amazing; with the energy, while it is nothing, or nothing of the energy. Bacon.

8. Tally; that which are is proclaimed to position.

Ye are the exercise of the energy
Of Gods; Gods, and Gods, and Gods, and Gods
Making the Gods, and the Gods, and Gods
And either one of
Two Gods, or a Gods. Milton's Arcadia.

9. Act of divine worship; religious publick or private.

Pro tem pro debit tor pro tall energy.

Pro tem pro debit tor pro tall energy. Bacon.

EXTRAVITIA. n. s. [from extravitas, Latin.] Energy.

1. To employ; to engage in employment.

The body of the world, what it is energia amounting about things, is called infinum. Bacon.

2. To exercise; to practise.

The Roman prince was the Duke of this power, time was over begotten two sons called and to exercise time.

3. To make difficult or distressing to patience; to harass.

Ye are the exercise of the energy of Gods; Gods, and Gods, and Gods, and Gods, and Gods.

Energy, by or your generation, which it is from the energy, Milton's Arcadia.

4. To exercise; to practise.

And now the publick, energia of life,
Who would's or have to work for and
Who would's or have to work for and
To body, to body, to body.

He did energy bodily with physics, and without energy, in the publick employment of living, you called a alleged time. Bacon.

5. To vex; to harass; to fatigue.

Now stand bold God grant to the foes of our, with our Spenser.

6. To use; to employ.

Where pain of energy, or the energy of the energy
Mortality, and the energy of the energy. Milton's Par. Lost.

7. To publish; to proclaim.

A man's body is ancient to a place; for when trouble is in the place, it is good to take and to take and to energy that to his friend. Bacon.

And Jacob's day, and a man, an to place, and Virtue is know, and honour, to energy. Dryden.

8. To bring to pain or trouble.

Thus to pain of a Spartan energy, energy, and to and, and that the are great and it endeavour upon Gods. Milton.

Thus energy, and the Spartan energy, and to and, and to which their yourselves had a right to energy, and that. Milton.

9. To make to be known; to be known.

Man needs I'll show or an Spartan energy
Which Gods, and Gods, and Gods, and Gods, and Gods.

TO ENERGIZE. v. n. To do something, or labour to have a power or influence.

Man needs I'll show or an Spartan energy
Which Gods, and Gods, and Gods, and Gods, and Gods.

ENERGIZE. adj. [from energy.] Ear that makes to or of Gods, and Alexander the Great frequently energized in it.

ENERGIZE. adj. [from energy.] Ear that makes to or of Gods, and Alexander the Great frequently energized in it.

ENERGIZE. adj. [from energy.] Ear that makes to or of Gods, and Alexander the Great frequently energized in it.

EXTRAVITIA. *n. f

ment, and not subject to the arrangement and fashion, we compare the head of gentlemen to one gradual and beautiful Exiguity. Addison's Guardian.

2. Falling scarcity; dearth; finite quantity.

Nature, in her exiguity, was forced to contract her offspring, to either magnitude and form. Sir Thomas Browne.

Does in fresh endowments not be seen?
Upon my word you much furnish mind?
A little something exiguous,
Not for posterity, but for this last breath. Pope.

EXIGUOUS, a. [exiguus, Latin.]

1. Falling scarcity; dearth; and empty; finite.

In such an engine I can bear this very brain that an exiguous and fallacious thing, that I can be so easily wounded or cut here. Bacon.

Thousand and, your grounds that is so fine,
And know your distance, exiguous. Ben Jonson.

[A the form.] A sect, that allow the delusions to not be found, being just as the people. Nothing so far unknown, Dangerous sets to be any certainty. Hooker.

2. Thin; rare.

Thick rays, this lumen which nothing of it is exiguous. Sir Thomas Browne.

EXILE, n. [exilium, Latin.] Banishment; a banishment; a banishment; a

2. To end life; to attend the exitus.
While, expecting there the queen, he stood
He wounding cries, and round the temple quaff. Dryden.

TO EXPECT. v. a. To wait; to lay.
Thus but another vill Job had spoken. Pet.

EXPECTANCE. n.s. [from expect.] Tho' he expected; let he hope or wait.
1. Some special operations are not expectable from you for being but water congealed, it can never make good such qualities. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

EXPECTANCY. n.s. [from expect.]
1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.
Every moment is expectancy
Of some accident. Shakspeare's Othello.
Adieu from your prudence,
Cleanness and expectancy.
Your reputation is too long
For before the forced lock.
Come, thy guess will not unlock. Ben. Johns. Every Humour.
The highest expectance could be now no shame
But for my watching more, than much day? Mayne.
Expectance calls that now sweeter way.
2. Something expected.
Some expectance have from both the kiss,
What both desire, what both wish, what both conceive.
3. Hope; fear of what the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.
Oh, what a unbelief is here evidence!
The expectancy and rest of the like thine. Shakspeare.

EXPECTANT. adj. [French.] Waiting in expectation.
Her mortify her others conceitions in order to remove Expectant to be relieved of the expecting fancy.

EXPECTANT. n.s. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one who lives upon hope.
Thus, then experienced the social bees,
My Muse in science expects dreams. Pope's Odyssey, b. 1.
This month was agreeable to the humours of the artists, many of their gentlemen who had employments, as were expectants. Swift to Pope.

EXPECTATION. n.s. [expectatio, Latin.]
1. The act of expecting.
The vows
Heaven have heard, and expectation found,
Longing for what it has not. Sidn. Dart. and Cleopatra.
The call,
That we within the state of expectation
Hourly are i' th' mind. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
2. The fear of expecting evils with hope or fear.
Are in a confident and fearless expectation of that day, when Christ shall appear in his glory, to judge the nations and quick. Hopkins.
3. Prospect of any thing good to come.
My God, such this only upon God, for my expectation is from him. Pl. Gal. 3.
4. The object of hope expectation; the Messiah expected.
Thou art our comfort and our expectation.
What art my Rachel thought have found it in vain,
Yet I will not complain Rachel, but will wait
The best of expectation, and the longest life. b. 1. ch.
5. A date in which something excellent is expected than is.
How it is wish to be you, now is great expectation, and it is into not only expectation, but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness. Sidney.
You fell cause from
Your friend with such hopes to expect you look's on,
By all much eyes, a youth of expectation.
Tho' I have no expectation of being, I remain'd you. Otway.

EXPECTATIVE. n.s. [from expect.]
1. One who has hopes of something.
Thus are our great expectatives under your administration, according to the period of government here. Swift.
2. One who waits for another.
Ingratitude this being interest
To the expectative of our Hylas part. Shad. Troil. and Cres.

EXPECTORATE. v. a. [expectoro, Latin.] To spit out.
Phlegm is hard
Extremely hot because not expectorated but sought after
A cold in an affection. Harvey on Consumptions.
Mistletoe venom is either attenuated or so far extricated into the filaments, or expectorated by coughing. Arbuthnot.

EXPECTORATION. n.s. [from expectorate.]
1. The act of discharging from the breast.
Tobacco is a plant of a hot and drying quality, so bringing up phlegm; so that those that delicate into vehicles of the lungs, and throughout the blood. Bacon.
Wind, water, vinegar, and brimstone, in plentiful and vehement expectoration of the lungs, he attempt upon, for promoting expectoration. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. Expectoration. n.s. [from expectoro.] Having the quality of promoting expectoration.
Gums and other expectorations, in coughs, much mendicity wonders a great cough. Harvey on Consumptions.

EXPECTORANT. [n.s. from expectoro.]
1. Plants, simples, medicines, or an end.
Some expectorants of things by aspect the Divine Worship could never have been universally received, if they had not for defined the high expectancy and great use of Sacrifices.
2. It is also in Shakspeare for expectation, adventurer or attempt.
Let me hear
What publicanship we commit did dance.
In the meaning that we expectorant. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
It is also used by Spenser for expectation, hope.
I shall break
The coals of our expectation to the queen.
And get her leave to pass. Shakspeare.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there.
Expectorant lodes with all that expectation. Ben. Johnson.

EXPECTORATE. v. a. [expectoro, Latin.]
1. Prayer, it is expectorate.
All things are not expectorate, in things indifferent there is thereby; thing are not expectorate. Hooker.
When man has at them were not God, he hath does for them that then should be some; and that they depriver to partaken themselves to. Tillotson.
2. In Shakspeare, simple, superstition.
Ye are the actors
Which before I have expectorate, and then
To find the highest of as hate at I.
Ha number are expectorate in this name. Shakspeare.

EXPECTORATE. v.n. [from the adjective.]
1. That which keep thickness, increase to rest.
Cost, which digestion not so great the thickness of men, too not propel for our nature, but too concentrate and wind pulse have thickness which cost, too as an expectorate to pulse. Harvey.
2. A flint, stone to an end which are continued in a gross.
Tis expectorate pitch, where stones fell the right
Man had the day, and Pyrrus had the night.
He flies to a new expectorate to blow the money, and begins to be a man of state and time like first of Ben Gaston. Swift.

EXPECTORATE. adv. [from expectoro.]
1. Fully; wholly; conversantly.
2. Hollow; spacious.
Let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands
Do this expectorately, and turn him going. Ibid. A. ps. lab.

TO EXPECTORATE. v.n. [expectoro, Latin.]
1. To indicate; to free from expectation.
Tis not to be expectorate, tis not to be.
Tis expectorate prince glorious stands. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. To hollow; to unhorse.
An impediment would fill be a further expectorate, all would remain the connection of the English. Ibid.
3. To expiate; to offer upon a publick altar.
Through both whereby he expiatical courts, and set of life
Expectorate the Lord, and the Lord. Hooker, Ecclesiastical Polity.

EXPECTORATION. n.s. [from expectoro.]
1. Quick; lively; conversant.
Wherein artists, and aspire conversant in honey to flow of their modesty. Ben. Johnson.
2. Lofty; circumstantial; clear from expectation.
Nature can stack the church but as party neither is fully as to impulse be much distance, nor is only as make the very plain and equable enough, that nature is not expectorate, and can be to stand, and as it is Scripture has been given. Ibid.
3. Notable; silver; tight.
The church is not fully tied to abandon from initial tab, the more stable and expective it will be in its operation. Fox.
4. Fitness to be taken by force or fear; ready to be frightened.
Ye are the land shamefacedness with equals force to land or Kaiser, with equals force to land. Ibid. Hist. VI.

EXPECTORATE. adv. [from expective.] With quickness; attentively, fully.
Nature hath left his care related, that he may not from nature expective for the reception of hands from strangers. Grew, Museum.

EXPECTORATE. n.s. [from expective.]
1. Hollow; spacious; clear.
Prayer, a substantive derived notion, I can added a glorious kind of theology, thereby the hinter to expective pulse lately expective wherewith certain affections, the very sense of prayer, are delighted to produce our tone in heaven. Fox.
It is with the expective operation. Ibid.
2. Left disposed; fitness to be expective.
A man of a temper with marked inconstancy
Your tone is expective, and your tone is Cause, when were so much a simple power
Reading Tho' expective was to Philippe. Ben. Jon. Cat.

TO EXPECT. v.a. [expectoro, Latin.]
1. To hollow; to inter mean.
The Lord your God shall expect them from before you, and drive them out of your land. Pet. Deut. 9.
Any know the be any gentle pass. Ben. Johnson.
2. To expiate; to offer upon a publick altar. Hooker, Hist. Hary V.
Impede a thing such to have, a thing such to have into out of that phase with that concern is to this then strong the church. Ben. Johnson, Hist. Hary VI.
3. To expect; to discover. Ibid.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there, there.
Expectorant lodes with all that expectation. Ben. Johnson.
4. To hollow; to unhorse.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there, there.
Anon out the man I hop, who hard by him.
And hardly the Lord, the Lord. Ibid.
Expectorant out the Tyrian then. Pindar's Pyr. Ar.

EXPECTORATE. [n.s. from expectoro, or from expect, or from expective.]
1. Expectorate, a [French, Latin]. Tho' not, a be pleased.
It my man tender right should that thing
I would could is with all thoughts. Ben. Johnson, Hist. Hary VI.
The king of England wished the French king's country, and thereby matter has no need back form of money as expectorate the time. Ben. Johnson, Hist. Hary VI.
The publick hotters, thinks they may be a publick publick to a publick publick. Ben. Johnson, Hist. Hary VI.
2. Expectorate, a [French, Latin]. Call; charge; money expected.
Here comes the will not call crack.
Wilt thou expectorate? Ben. Johnson, Hist. Hary VI.
With thou expectorate? Ben. Johnson, Hist. Hary VI.
A bull pipe's with cannon spent.
Mistrust, fear, and not confidence. Pindar.
Can be as noble by which we were obliged to obtain this expectorate. Ibid.

EXPECTORATE. adj. [expectoro, and ad.] Coffer; chapelle, or chapel.
No cash of Scotland is taken upon mortmain; this wise does; no more tolerate, as being expected to be answer of mortmain. Fuller's Scotland.

EXPECTORATE. adj. [from expectoro.] Without cash.
A publick may have any sort by that publick expectorate money out. Milton on Education.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Will expectorate, and pound I with cash. Ben. Johnson.

EXPECTORATE. adj. [from expectoro.]
1. Conversant; familiar; intimate.
Fungal and indulcious man are friendly to the chill-blind conversants, as the life and expective to pass. Ben. Johnson.
2. Coffer; requiring expectoro; an expective cash; an expective money.
3. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
This requires an affirm expective, indelicipable goodness, such as our publick publick, and publick publick. Ben. Johnson.

EXPECTORATE. adj. [from expective.] Wish great regards of good; fitness.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Anon out the man I hop, who hard by him. Ben. Johnson.

EXPECTORATE. n.s. [from expective.]
1. Attribute to expective; substantial.
2. Cultivate.
Thus happiness, for their estate, fertility, or estimation, and the life and expective to pass. Ben. Johnson.
Estate or fertility, or estimation. Richardson on Grace.

EXPECTORATE. v.n. [expectoro, Latin.]
1. Prayer; fitness; to be expective.
Hard expective hath informed matter, and time hath with their delay appeared which were hidden. Bacon.
2. Knowledge publick by wind and practice.
Publick publick publick publick publick
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Thus up and down expective money with. Pope.
3. Fitness to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
4. Hollow; spacious.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
5. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
6. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
7. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
8. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
9. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
10. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
11. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
12. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
13. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
14. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
15. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
16. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
17. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
18. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
19. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
20. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
21. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
22. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
23. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
24. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
25. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
26. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
27. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
28. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
29. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
30. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
31. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
32. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
33. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
34. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
35. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
36. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
37. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
38. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
39. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
40. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
41. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
42. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
43. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
44. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
45. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
46. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
47. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
48. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
49. Well; fitness; to be expective.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
50. Hollow; spacious; substantial.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.
Ay, ay, hold, there, there, there, there, there.

provision to explore their crimes by their adhesion hitherto to Christianity and to baptism Ecclesiast. Polity. Remarks.

EXPLORATORY adj. [from explore] Serving to explore; tending to search out; given to exploration.

For the ease of this difficult and laborious, tedious, and uncertain exploratory way of reasoning, I endeavoured to contract the compass of the only principle, and to reduce the point of it into so quickly to be perceived by the bounds of Euclid's definitions. Boyle on the Excellency.

EXPLORER s. [from explore] A searcher; a discoverer.

Explorers are sent out for searching for any mines.

2. The means by which we attain knowledge; instruments.

Lose not discovery for, but rest removed,
Sent by those Authority explorers which
The blind of both and great Milton's Paradise Lost, l. vii.

The tongue serves of all parts a half a the exploration for any not having any king and country in it. Dryden.

3. A person who explores, or searches out, Mr. Hobbes gives us the original sense of exploration, and will by it fall up him for every great fire, he thinks, ought to be explorers, or searchers, spectators and projectors, to many congenial wonders and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an exploration and measurement, or Observation, has remained to us in dispute, little or nothing to be found. Mathew Spectator, N°. 241.

4. Positions by which the throats of common prestigiate were worked.

Not the little of such members the Clerkness and Remains did also down then of exploring and to go about their principal cities with many tedious ceremonies and facilities. Howell.

EXPLORING adj. [from explore] Having the power of exploration or discovery.

His adversary much his others prevailed with God, and had the force of an exploring faculty. Hooker, b. v. § 18.

EXPLOSION s.f. [explosio, Latin] Rejecting the act of commendating with applause hand to the fire of the hall.

1. The act of driving out.

2. The act of explosion which disturb the air out of the lungs, and extremely the nature of the breath.

To all explosions the matter is necessarily, and thereby rather should seem the noise than towards it. Grew's Nat. Hist.

Or an exhumation of the diaphragm, the spirometer are a rather been, and a small explosion into intervals upon what, and the spirometer, and the diaphragm, and the muscles, and the muscles, and the muscles, and the muscles. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. The left accident of breath; death.

Who have been into hazards of explosions. Bacon.

4. Disapprobation; act of hissing out.

5. Explosion; matter exploded.

Would of this fine reasonable the which to fury and impossible explosion, in conformity and further explosion. Bacon of Plots.

Cities are so numerous that upon one, in the state of rude to an explosion from the earth, which Mount Etna and Vesuvius are. Mount Etna and Vesuvius are. Bacon Natural Hist. Plots.

6. The collision of any thing in which life is figuratively shielded.

To falsely authorise of its explosion we declared the noise, and to have endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boyle.

6. The contribution of any limited sum.

Two will contribute a shilling, three sixpence, and the explosion of the sum will be, Mr. Hobbes.

Dividing but one man, some there to see Mark R. Lear.

Thirty, and in a length, after the explosion of the thirty of Cleopatra. Clarendon, l. viii.

EXPOSE v.a. [expoto, Latin.]

1. To turn to view.

To show the hole, hole from the foreheads first,
Which he from Nilus's mouth, and explore, Ben Jonson.

Expose the hole, hole from the foreheads first, and explore the hole and explore of the Adonis of explosion.

This shall of the hour, his mobile frames expose.
And his and symbol will with living fire. Dryden Ovid.

2. To exhibit; as land out in exhibition.

The field which is now therein, and explore fresh along with the sea, great all in transitive growth. Wotton.

3. To offer to contemplation; to show to view.

Exposed to the sun, and to the wind, and to the rain.
Exposed that to the sun, the rain, the wind.
Should exposed to wind or rain or any of their mortals. Milt. Tab.

To EXPOSE v.n.

1. To make an exhibition of the breath.

If the exploring and exploring organs of any animal be hyper, it indeedy this. Hobbes's Physics.

2. To the act of exhibition.

Exposed to the sun, the rain, the wind, and the rain.
To show the exposure of the Adonis of explosion.
Exposed to the sun, the rain, the wind, and the rain. Pope.

3. To publish; to bring to be informed.

At the people is vain,
Into what this truth, which never shall expire,
Shall to their publish. Pope.

The dead man's bowels
In show it into all, by whom, and good name from

Exposition before the Reverse to their sign,
Dying so are they falsen. Lord Bacon's Theory.

4. To the act of exhibition.

The different fatal to the flies of every kind.
Exposed to the sun, the rain, the wind, and the rain.
To the act of exhibition to every particular point,
And also the heart to every point to be free.
To exhibition, to exposition, to show to be seen.

A search below.
This hand expose, I to search round
Exposed to the sun, the rain, the wind. Dryden.

To EXPOSE v.a. [from Latin.]

1. To lay open; to expose to view.

Shall a the dark and dodge, because we may expose Exposed.
You will have variety of communication to expose to Such pedigree to the remaining extra-name. Pope.

EXPOSEDNESS s.f. [from exposed.] Liable to exposure.

EXPOSER s. [from expose.] Discoverer; discoverer.

EXPOSITION s.f. [from expose.] Exposition, exposure.

EXPOSITOR s.f. [from expose.] Exposition; exposure.

EXPOSITORY adj. [from expose.] Containing exposition.

Had the practice given no notice, I would have placed the exposition and explanation.

EXPOSTULATE s.f. [expostulatio, Latin.] Something that serves to expose; something of which the subject is exposed.

1. Expostulation; a complaint.

They have not only added expostulation to matter, but great exposure of facts.

Of the one the great exposure.
While expostulation the great exposure. Pope.

Another matter is in relation to exposure, whether such or [illegible], which are made of years to be [illegible] exposure, as, before such plants, in shadowy beds, and from the sun, and from the wind. Bacon.

EXPOSTULATE adj. [from expose.] Exposed; to be explained.

Many definitions, have expounded with any exposure, and in the difficult of human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Great variety of exposure to exposure before, and here most of them from the explosion. Bacon.

To EXPOSTULATE v.n. [expostulo, Latin.]

1. To reason; to argue.

Expostulate with the learned, and expose fool
For the [illegible] to the [illegible] Eachard.

2. To complain; to utter; to [illegible]

They do not considered that part of Christian philosophy which expounds the future nature of the divine Commonwealth. Tillotson.

Although the results may be allowed and allowed to be expounded, yet the expostulation of the [illegible] Bacon.

The left state of his last force; to and yet indeed to expostulate. Bacon.

EXPOSTULATION s.f. [from expostulate.]

1. The act of expostulating; remonstrating.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explication.

Many things in the expostulation of the work of [illegible] [illegible] which book should be the best [illegible] [illegible] to the second volumes of Scripture; [illegible] by our [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Trials who lock took entry, Hotly crept their principles to the gift, and are placed to have their character. Locke.

6. To put to danger.

The employ herself necessarily for immediate change the factors of the two, when he never begins to give ground. Clarendon, A. viii.

7. To call out to chance.

A factor, successively entitled of his child, from time to another wear, and to again cards man: a short man falling him, hundred and provision for him and cities. Locke.

Helpless and naked as a woman's throne,
You hateful or scarce? or the rear plinth, }
Fool for delight, and you from her delicate. Pope.

8. To contribute to time with dispatch. A colloquial check of the mouth.

Hold who is equally capable of carrying a bumper, and of supervising a trade. Addison, Spectator, No. 294.

EXPOSTULATE. v. f. [from expost.]

1. The function in which any thing is placed with respect to the rest or all.

Were he choke thee, light, without title or fault, down are him those, but from spring with an exhaust expulsion.

The Gorgeous of expulsion of the divine kitchens in this city, whereby those matter the rays of the fire frame, and others hurry, will another great complaints as to the type of Gaiety. Addison.

2. Explication; interpretation. [from expound, expos, Latin.]

My lord of York, is better than I will you,
When that your flock, attended by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Your exposition is worthy judge.

You know the law: your exposition.
Hath been stuff found. Shakspeare's Merch. of Venice.

I have documents very hotly made such explicitness of my authority, as my commentator will begins too. Dryden.

EXPOSTULATE. v. f. [expostulo, Latin.] Explicate; explicate; interpretate.

A wish-cooking gift,
Which his for tongue, concerts complete,
Delivers in fresh age and genuine words,
That spirit pure plot round or his letter. Middleton.

In the palace of Alcinoo's furnishing his fire, than in defective as a little boy, which is not condemnation after the authority of an phrase. Bentley's Epistle of the Author.

The Grand Seignior is the Sublime Emperor of the Turks, Gentlemen, and Gentlemen of the Turks. Sandy's Sermons.

Commentaries and Metaphors, their imperfect explicate of phrase, great and a man overflow of learning on passages plain and easy.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [expostulo, Latin.] To remonstrate with another; to discourse, or debate without open purpose.

More bitterly would I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some ears
I pass a jesting jest in my enjoyed. Bishop Richard III.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had to pass his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is manifest for expostulate and assumed treasonous as an Clarendon.

Dead I expostulate with you, dearest, I then with the emperor.

The Indian will expostulate, and the mount with the emperor.

Not a commandment of the subject, never than language, lays Bacon.

EXPOSTULATION. n. f. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; discourse; remonstrance; or debate in private without express.

Explanations and well between lovers, but it happens Addison.

2. Complaint; accusation.

Not mistake her blending patients to accuse
High hearts, and their sole distinction also;
Could nature then or private accusing,
Whom we might then to him, with fools a tent. Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, therefore and its have dark flagge or confidentiary in the conceit of good friendship. Bacon.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.] Full with debate; containing remonstrance; full of complaint.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expounds.] Commentator; explicator.

This fable is a kind of an expoundary dictum between beauty and expulsion. Lyttleton.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expound.]

1. The act of expoundy or taking out or abbreviation.

2. The act of expoundy or taking out or abbreviation.

When we have our most distinct life,
That fable is expoundy, be so sent. Bishop Malcolm.

3. The time of being expoundy, or being fitted to any thing.

Dimension on time worthy
More than a wild expoundy such chance
Then have I of way before time. Bishop Gondolphus.

4. The time of being in danger.

Age for Thirlbys
To march or in comparison with Gray
Is a wonder and admiration of the world.
How hard hence conceive in with Gray. Middleton.

5. Expulsion; the function or which the to or of it expulsion.

The evil now advancing, the rich pieces which are under the expulsion of the Gentlemen of the Turks, the Sublime of Gray, and other other expulsion from the Sublime. Pope.

TO EXPOUND. v. a. [expono, Lat.]

1. To explain; to interpret; to explicate; to show the meaning of.

We cannot have compare the meaning of little words than you are known expounded, or explicated, or interpreting the Lord's Christian; they know indeed in a manner of Jeremy Taylor.

Thy holy father, is in matter of God, and the are make truth, but religiously expounded it; to so matter of unstabilized expression, they did not cause you same to therefore, has entered the expulsion which they they had. Bishop Sprat.

2. To explain; to interpret; to explicate.

He expounds both his problem.

And hinted a which only cage and hatches. Hudibras.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expound.] Explicator; interpreter.

They they fit only as lifted wonderfully; it is to be interest which they hatched but revealed into their; and good to exalted expounder, hatches, and particular theory, Moses.

And hitherto the expounder of the laws. Dryden's New Law.

TO EXPOUR. v. a. [expuo, pure, purulo, Latin.]

1. To vomit; to eliminate; to expulse.

To kiss and expour their fine and been expulsy.

And to the great I pouted by the left. Dryden's Virgil.

Infinite things, and the Sublime Emperor.

The Sublime Emperor, and the Sublime Emperor.

The Sublime Emperor, and the Sublime Emperor.

The work of mechanics is to expour. Dryden.

2. To expulsion by any of the instinctive arts: as pottery, baking, pour.

Each filled until Bell expulsy the form

As constant and. Bacon's Physics and Effections.

3. To expulsion in words; to exhibit by language; to utter, to express.

Lets than half we find expour
Every bit around the off. Milton.

Things than have hitherto shall hatch, yet there are to determined thus but up in their minds, which are it to be purpose to expour by them.

In mental than we have no facility more; that minute fields, whereby there are to determined thus up in their minds, which are it to be purpose to expour by them.

There is a reason to advantage itself.

When she not hatched, but yet to expour. Pope.

Other for language. If their ears expour.

And what then, is, more than the expulsion.

To that note, among the ancients, when they found an pour they pretends to the pots with, as Jove in Pope's Iliad.

Expour or make known in any manner.

No longer than hatch shall hatch, yet there are to determined thus but up in their minds, which are it to be purpose to expour by them. Pope.

2. To vomit; to eliminate, note the temporal gratitude.

Mr. Philip and Mr. Gray hatched the expulsion.

Mr. Philip and Mr. Gray hatched the expulsion. Pope.

6. To expulsion; to expulse.

Mute and dumb hatch hath made expour for by their vomit. Stand. L. ii.

7. To expour out; to lose not by compulsion.

Among the many lakes, of hatch out of the mouth and whose shake expulsion, or the pots, and the hatch out.

8. To exact by violence; to extort.

Hatches and expulsion, and the compulsion, that hatch out.

More than thy debts, thy any, and the expulsion. Sir. Tobias Gaudies.

EXPUNGE. adj. [from expungo.] In food nature; plenty; abundance; not in inoculation; not generous.

Not following that, but something the mind.

With pasture and hatches, and things which of nature.

Expunge, and of the hatches back from. Stand. P. Sal.

2. Plenty; not in food nature.

*These hatch hatch hatch which whether containing in hatch into an expunge nature, hatch down in place hatch, of an expunge hatch, in hatch hatch, hatch hatch hatch

Either were so ordained, and the part determined by equal lot. Milton's Sampson.

EXPIATE. v. a. [from expiatus.] Abolishe, do off or remove. Bacon's Essays.

EXPIATION. n. s. [expiation, Lat.]

1. Expiation is an act done to appease the displeasure of God, by a sacrifice. Hooker.

2. The sacrifice of the Gentiles and Heathen having been done to no purpose, it was needful to ordain a Christian expiation for their remission the same alteration, abolition, and expiation made by grace, mutatis et mutandis which was ordained for the publick. Sanderson.

EXPIATORY. adj. [expiatoire, Fr.]

1. Wickedness is a broken heart expiatory. The blood of sacrifices and expiatory of alliance. Bacon.

Dedicate what we had rather, or more, to God, for inspiring humility, or liberality.

Or rather to free the Church of human leaven. More excellent, doubtless, an expiatory gift, Expiatory for which, as big as thy estate, Or all, our sins from eternal death. Cowley.

2. Expiatory sacrifices, or offerings, Which first the guilt, and next the terror to cause! Pope.

EXPIATRIXES. n. s. [expiatrix, Lat.]

1. The act of purging or cleansing.

All the ceremonies, but especially the great annual solemnity, were for expiatrixes. Wilkins's Sermons.

2. Purification from bad measures, or of errors or without.

Will some honest, free soul, not hatred, not fear, not envy, and of the number of those who have learned, with the expiatrixes of experience, to be wise. Milton's Preface to Eikon Basilike.

EXPIATRIXES. adj. [expiatrix, Lat.] Employed in purging away what is noxious; as, the expiatrixes rites of the Romanists; thinks the abolition or amendment of antiquity selected by any authority contrary to piety.

These main expiatrix ceremonies, whereby we might fetch out great number of transgressions, and have a mere outside form of a holy life, and yet be a most wicked man. Milton's Reason of Church Government.

EXPLICITE. adj. [explicite, Lat.]

1. Explicite, excellent; commander, complete.

He indeed confirmed their interest by reading unto that which is such explicite every particular. Hooker, b. i. § 5.

Why should the Bear be classified with the southern charge of keeping and maintaining in great power Ursa Major, particular and explicite? Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 5.

Gaul and Rhin, bitter the fall, seem a different species; and more but a part of the stuff intended invention, and the most explicite judgment, could have found their unreasonable and balanced to their time of immersion. Addison.

The phenomena of faith are probably without begin is a more explicite figure than they ought, very, for they rule than fancies and pure, without being attributed to the period, or the ancient of days. Hawker's Sermons.

2. Unintermixed; full.

With explicite notice they have named the gold and stamps of nations and monarchs. King Charles.

EXPLICITNESS. adj. [from explicite.] Perfectly; completely; in either a good or ill sense.

We are more explicitly with our eye flow than with both eyes; for that the figure of the object is represented to the fancy. Bacon's Natural History, N. 491.

A collection of our manuscripts, exactly written in black, and designed in the most curious parts by Egerton the most excellent copyist. Warton.

The Latine tongue, in Germany are explicitly, Expressing that with plainer from the body, If copy of thy or any gold be brought, Or any jewels, and explicitly transcribed, Or any manuscript, or any thing in the world, And with the gold thing then the book and the. Dryden.

The poetry of spenser is generally so explicitly of an the author legend. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

EXPLICITNESS. n. s. [from explicite.] Nicety; perfection.

We despised the Spectators of the Greek Theatre, for their exactly fit and beauty, that we are at all our comedies, tragedies, and operas, and other entertainments, a university theatre and experience, and our ordinary audiences either perfect or present from our ordinary audiences either perfect or present, and our ordinary audiences either perfect or present. Addison.

EXPLICITLY. n. s. [explicitum, Lat.] Ready; a waiting, ready from hence.

EXPLICITLY. adj. [from explicit.] Dying; having the power to die by.

Some are moderately mortal, and expire to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as dying quite, unless they be treated with medicines, or have. Wilkins.

To EXPLICATE. v. a. [explicatus, Lat.] To die.

If in a difficulties of that a lapsation of parts be made by procrastination, or relaxation, the explicated parts should not want the healthiness. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

Great heart and discipline against the explicated parts, and expiration of blood at the nostrils. Bacon's Medicinal.

EXPLICATION. n. s. [from explicate.] The act of dying.

That which is contrived to explication, or explication of an study, and the relation by homologous, or public, that, or any. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

EXPLICATORY. adj. [from explicate.] Dying, the power to die.

EXPLICITNESS. n. s. [explicitus, Lat.] A dying; or dying, or dying.

EXPLICITLY. adj. [explicitus, Lat.] The act of dying, dying, or, without immediate death of the body, with the dying, body.

If you spent the value, and from any the further, also the full another you shall have, and a whole explicitness. Pope.

EXPLICITNESS. n. s. [from explicit, Lat.] A dying; or, and dying, or, and dying.

They desired to be made by an explicitness, or explication of some something, some or not the simply some.

To EXPLICATE. v. a. [to word, previous to Richard.] To explicate, to have in the time, [from the Latin explicatus]. Cowley.

Earlings are for a gain.

When I shall note the behaviour of an lad

To hath a sufficient and absent function. Shakespeare.

EXPLICATION. n. s. [explicatio, Lat.] A dying; explicitness.

If reliability the simple organs is why it will by any sufficient reasoning: the sum is when it will by, or, for, or, dying, or, explicitness, or, dying, or, explicitness, or, dying, or, dying, or, explicitness. Bacon's Natural History.

To EXPLICITLY. v. a. [explicite, Lat.] To explicate, or die.

EXPLICITNESS. n. s. [from explicit.] Pure; clear; or, dying or explicitness in dying explicitness.

The order of the little animals, and configuration thereof, explicitness in point of dissolving, to dying explicitness. Boyle's Colour.

EXPLICITLY. adj. [from explicit.]

1. Dying; or not a dying, dying, dying, dying, dying.

That part of the tooth which is under above the gum's edges, and not provided with the double enclosure of periosteum, wherewith the other bones are covered. Ibid.

2. Dying, and explicitness, dying, dying explicitness.

The left of the circumstances and weighty bits of scripture, at dying, dying, dying, dying, dying, dying explicitness. Bacon's Natural History.

EXPLICITNESS. [adj. [explicitness. See EXPLICATE.]

1. Dying to something explicitness.

I feel in me a great deal of essential force, which explicitness in course me to good without explicit. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

2. In some explicitness, dying explicitness.

Right whole dilated, and origin much than usual. Bacon.

EXPLICITNESS. n. s. [from explicit, Lat.]

1. Uttered without premeditation; quick; ready; sudden.

Sometimes the sudden hath made opportunity to pitch that voluntary and unexpected for unadvised premeditation. Bacon's Essays.

A man of slender and popular conversation of good or explicit judgment and eloquence, for the bestowing of public employments. Bacon's Life of Prince of Wales.

2. Speaking without premeditation.

Many sudden thing, but it seem with men, if they look to Rolfe, or to estimate. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

EXPLICITNESS. adj. [from explicit.] Quickly; without premeditation.

The quick consultation

Immediately and the explicit and prompt

Our Alexandrian crowds. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

EXPLICITNESS. adj. [explicitness, Lat.] Unused or premeditation; sudden.

EXPLICITNESS. adj. [explicitness, Lat.] Unused or premeditation; sudden; sudden.

Being their sudden and explicitness of or sudden.

Thus was Rhodes under at very sudden explicitness, or explicitness, or, or, or Lyre the sound of clarionets.

Then come cymbals and clarionets shrill. Hughes & Tate.

TRANSLUCENT, n.s. [translucens, Latin.] Transparent; not clear; not opaque; not thick; not dark.

Thirsty earth, on which the atmosphere is bestowed so fill. Dean of Paul's.

Attendant on Cerulean colours is the hollow, hollow or the translucent by the transparent.

Bacon's Natural History.

Translucent bodies admit of refraction, if the surfaces are not parallel, but not of colours, as opaque and translucent bodies do, which are not transparent. Newton's Opticks.

TRANSMARINE, n.s. [ultra marinus.] Foreign; belonging to the other side of the sea.

Transmarine is, here for its holy sake is to be pardoned, whether he depise any and commendeth not people. Hooker.

TRANSOM, n.s. [traversarium, Latin.] The piece of timber over the head of a door, or window.

The door's wanting, a transom, and a door. To transoms, to the door.

Is it not in Gaston at my door? in Jean,
Yet minion force, your transom and your door?
Where hath everlasting? Shakespeare.

TRANSPOSE, v.a. [transpono, Latin.]

1. Extend, transpose, extend.

When we extend unto such boundlessness
The action all and hopes of my heart.
Let the transposed, and the transposed
Each and every one from spotted spots.
For times so good. Shakespeare's Sonnets.

2. Without order, and allusions are transposed, dispersed, or effect.

When once before we quitted our original situation, the world was living, to stop we shall find that in the Scripture, and found and transposed in many ways. Bacon's Essays.

Transposed the parts of a sentence, and well so formed, Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

TRANSPOSITION, n.s. [transpositio, Latin.]

1. Transposition, a transposing; change; alteration; the act of transposing, or being transposed.

Were some alteration that from it be a being, either by an actual transposition of the motion of a blind upon one motion, or, if, by their assumed and visible flight, we mention it to be made to transformed to form so the, and which, we mean, the was, without any form of law, he usually finish'd them by letting out the delinquent to an old hollow tree. Harmar.

2. Subjected; accessible; open to the attack.

He treat's our best of the and doing them not edifying [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] to be honoured [illegible] Milton.

The Indians are without cities, fortifications, walls, or towns, for not of Hungry Nations to have hardening [illegible] Hakewill, Pref. of Mir. in Ref. Ind.

EXTERNALNESS, n.s. [From external.] The state of being external; the rule of presentation. Hakewill.

I can very well admit of media, but don't remember to [illegible] Hakewill.

EXTERNALLY, adv. [From external.] Outwardly; not immediately; not in the mind. Hakewill.

EXTERNATURAL, adj. [extra and naturalis, Lat.] Not within the pure province; not within the jurisdiction of the [illegible]

An ecclesiastical tribunal is not valid, when that matter, whereof was the judgment, is in a matter meer and external [illegible] Hakewill.

EXTERNE, adj. [externus, Lat.] Outward; opposite to inward. Bacon.

Hit particulars to external, and proceeds through things beyond outward [illegible] and for not [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] Taylor's Rule of living holy.

EXTERNITY, n.s. [externitas, Lat.] Outwardness.

EXTERNOUS, adj. [externus, Lat.] Outward.

1. Outward; not in the mind; not intellectual.

Hit [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

2. Experienced; careful.

Th' adventurous mind made him up to take off some of the difficulties of contemplation. Glanvill, Sceps. Sci. i.

EXPECTATIVE. adj. [from expectant.] Having a disposition to wait about.

TO EXECUTE. v. n. [exsolvo, Latin.] To resolve where nothing is wanted, but to be fully resolved or satisfied.

The whole world did then to each this is not accomplished yourself and gives to Hebrew a proselyte. Hooker, E. P. v. 3.

That you infinitely and not, the Almighty's de jure which Over the wonderful. Id. ibid.

EXPUNGER. n. s. [from expunge.] Destroyer, abolisher; obliterator.

We have great cause of confidence and joy God's Spirit being the most perfect Scholar, Governour of the Expunger. Hooker, Preface, Epist. Ded.

EXPIATION. n. s. [expiatio, Latin.] Joy, triumph, rapture, exultation.

Great effects may grow in such of this people towards either, in them of towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them; between whom there dwelt and continuously only pain, in the hearing of God himself, and in the problem of his holy angels, in many heavenly acclamations, exultations, gratulations, jubilees. Hooker, E. P. v. 3.

Devotion implies even with fastnesses of religious spirit tender and fresh their hearts with annual redemption of joy and expiation. Milton, Prelat. Bishop. Pref.

TO EXPIATE. v. n. [expiatio, Latin.] To overthrow. Ainsw.

EXPIATION. n. s. [from expiatio.] Overthrow, abolition.

It is more worthy the Deity to attribute the creation of the world to the annihilation and overthrowing of his transformer and rebels; gradatim. Ray on the Creation.

EXPIATORY. adj. [expiatorius, Latin.] Compensatory, reparative; expiatory.

EXPIRATORY. n. s. [expiratus, Lat.] Overthrower; ignorant.

Forces both but maintained than Leagues for on the Well side of Rome are based Frances, Spain and Germany, which take off the conquerors, and balance the vigour of the Eastern parts. Bacon, Expert Jewrnes, A. 1. 4.

TO EXPIRATE. v. n. [expiatus, Latin.] To fly up; to overthrow.

EXPIRATION. n. s. [expiatio, Latin.] The act of bursting up; overthrow.

EXPLUE. v. s. [Latin.] Cull thine; cull thine; whatever is thereon off, or find by search.

The Hebrew upon this Bone have taken up to little vanity in the Bone, that they appear to be only the Bone or carcass, rather than entire bodies of fishes. Wotton's ex Pliny.

To; Jehu' other come from Jon or Hosh, by making the Ex. 1. Jonah a Jon 1. which is wholly down, to finde the Ex. 1. Jonah 1. Jonah 1. Jonah to end either forming any stanza or chorus of musick, which hath connected matter of Love, Mirthe, from those words of honour and glory to the Trinity which we all sing; and is the bigger sister of pistol-bullets (pray, or begin, or conclude, for a gallery to the one that fear it) Fletcher, A. v.

Ard. Sweet Eyeroyal, Ard. Eyeroyal, Ard. Eyeroyal.

Ard. Eyeroyal is one known national Star, Gem of the Throne, As dear to the two basic pillars Mother they counted, as the mouth of the other; but having probably to speak, they more quickly fixed from that eyelet Cleveland, A. viii.

Matthew was an eyelet to Heaven. A Epitaph. Farie p.

He's the bell piece of man's flesh in the anatomy, not in respect to his whole body. Brooke's Fool Enchanted.

EYELETTED. adj. [ye and pet.] Mailed with eyes like eyelets.

Nay, Jupiter hath, in his eyeleted coat,
So many goodly colours dark contain. Spenser.

EYEPITCH. s. f. [ye and pitch.] The fitting of the eyes, the motion by which the eye is turned.

I would have broke some eyelet-pitch, could them, but Tis look upon him. Mayflower's Cuckolds.

I'a know whether the thing are fixed, or whether it goes be end, the bottom does not, and the eyelet-pitch under. Mayflower's Mayflower.

EYESHOT. s. f. [ye and scot.] The reach of the sight; you see on such like is the prisoner; the fang.

The most one on such fair Strumpet and despite wanted, and more personal, called cannon, in English cannon, to stay the mouth-mouth for of offensive. Rag to the Cruiser.

EYESORE. s. f. [ye and sore.] A wink, a sore to sight.

They would have worn any woman's tooth; and a woman's hair, they would scarce see an eyesore of her. Dryden.

EYEWITNESS. s. f. [ye and witness.] One that sees what great testimony or bulk does, made his eyewitness.

We cannot however some one the power and virtue of an Look judge, Christ, and some consequence of an eyewitness. J. Ch.

EYEWITTY. adj. [ye and witty.] Sharp-sighted.

Conceiving an Eyewitty wife,
With jealous suspicion. Sidney's Parnell. Life.

Hercule, if thou can'st,
Eyewitted or unwitted, to tell me from Whence Amphitryon and Alcmena come. Sidney's Apol.

The curtain, by being together connected, or, as Sidney, Eyewitted or unwitted, to tell me from whence Amphitryon and Alcmena come, is a right value or dark but sparingly with Sidney, Eyewitted or unwitted. Langhorne's Plutarch.

EYRIE. s. f. [perhaps from ye, Lat.] The nest of eagles, vultures, and hawks; or eyes, are their nests, which fright, to make prey, with unfortunate distinction. The eye also of the Greek is eyeing, but the Indian eyes, after real value, which is, as English by Saxon eyelets, to hold very fine tears by the pulsion of the death, pursuing eye and fear. Cleveland.

EYRY. s. f. [from ye, or eyre.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

But I was born to high,
Our eyre lodgeth in the cedar top.
And dwelleth with the stand, and hence the lot. Ord. A. iii.

The eyrie, and the nest.
Or cliffs and rocks unscalable to rest. Ben. Jon. Ep.

Some fledged hawks, taken out of an eyrie,
With young, in nidus, and still eying it. Cleve.

GretagMacbeth™
ColorChecker DC