So-called Scopitones were similar in effect to the Soundies of the 1940s, but much improved technically, inasmuch as the 3-4 minute films were produced on 16mm in colour, with magnetic sound and could be viewed individually. Several different companies made them for showing on the Scopitone machines which were located in bars, cafés and restaurants. They were particularly popular in France. This writer remembers at least one of them in regular use in an Italian coffee bar in London.

The 130-segment, 3-year run of "Stars of Jazz" in Southern California is notoriously difficult to document accurately in view of the permanent loss of 65% of the series and the errors and omissions in listings, discographies and sleeve notes. No reliable filmography of the series has yet been published and it is a subject long overdue for in-depth research. The entries here should therefore be seen as being work in progress as some of the personnel listings have yet to be established and others confirmed. In general the dates given are recording dates; first transmissions were not necessarily on the same dates.

dir László Benedek

Music by: Leith Stevens
Music Arranged by: Shorty Rogers
Soundtrack Personnel: Shorty Rogers, Mannie Klein, Pete Candoli, trumpet; Milt Bernhart, trombone; Bud Shank, reeds; Johnny Williams, drums.
Although this seminal source music score was composed and arranged specifically to be performed by Shorty Rogers and his Giants the studio would not allow Rogers to use his own musicians for the soundtrack; it had to be performed by Columbia's staff orchestra. But Rogers himself was allowed to solo and Bud Shank has assured this writer that he was on the session together with Milt Bernhart (who was already contracted to the studio) and Pete Candoli. The various commercially issued "soundtrack recordings" must therefore be viewed with some suspicion.
