To the Editor of the Daily Advertiser.

The following is a letter received from a valuable friend, with my answer which I hope you will be good enough to give a place in your paper.

W. SMITH.

Philadelphia, June 20th, 1806.

SIR,

I have just received from Caracas, a list of the names of the American, taken by the Spaniards on board of Miranda's schooner—the name of Smith is twice found in it. I suppose the last to be my son, and grand son of Mr. Adams. Although I have not the pleasure of acquaintance with, when he was president, this circumstance has an importance of the most particular regard and respect towards such a distinguished character, and a place in my memorandum for his family. Not the least doubt exists but the greatest part of the prisoners are put to death, as pirates, and I would be very happy to be able to remedy this by your interference, to save the life of the unfortunate youth, good enough to incorporate the Adams and his worthy name. But, to render my memorandum effectual, it would require a letter, which should that colonel Smith would discharge the prisoner, on his word of honor, as the Executive he has of Miranda's papers, and the Spanish laws, for all the prisoners with whom he has commanded privateers, and the acquittal of Smith, in this country, who shared in his scheme and expeditions to fort, all which information he may be possessed of, the knowledge of which would be a great comfort, and cause for the preservation and tranquility of prisoners in Miranda, had his life to be secured.

I remember your attachment for Mr. Adams, I take the liberty to make the application to you, who no doubt will do all the means to relieve from affliction a worthy and disconsolate family, of a young man, of uncommon parts, prompt and decisive answer on this subject, is necessary, with particular regard and consideration, your obedient servant,

(Signed)

MARQUIS DE CASA YRUJO.

New-York, June 30, 1806.

DEAR SIR,

Accept my warmest acknowledgement for the kind interesting communication of the date, presented by your son, accompanied with a letter addressed to you from the Marquis De Casa Yrujo, whom after mutually considering I response to your request.

I am sure I shall do justice to the feelings of Mr. and Mrs. Adams, in their name I thank the Marquis for his communication, which is so full of tender, interesting and affecting. I am sorry that I have the pleasure to inform you, that the tender sympathies for the protection of their grandson, it will not to relieve the anxiety, solicitude and acknowledgements, which from them the Marquis is so justly entitled to.

For myself, not having the honor of his acquaintance, I have no right to impose any other attention to feelings or signals of consideration, than what would naturally spring from his own mind when making such an interesting communication.

He informs you he has just received from Caracas a list of the prisoners of American taken by the Spaniards on board Miranda's schooner, and the name of Smith is twice found in it, he suppose the last to be my son, and grand son to Mr. Adams, and says that he should be very happy if a timely and decisive interference to save the life of the unfortunate youth, grand son to the worthy family of Adams, and for the opinion he having no doubt but the greatest part of the prisoners will be put to death. But, to render this interference effectual he requests as the Executive of Miranda, that I should go to him with you, on my word of honor, all the prisoners, on the Spanish laws, and the opinion of the Spanish minister, I should as a member and expedition, in fact all the material information I possess, which I have obtained from the machinery he made to the Spanish government, and the preservation and tranquility of the prisoners Miranda has in the Executive.

When the Marquis De Casa Yrujo takes a disposition to see Mr. Adams, accompanied and with general Wilkinson's visit to Washington, his successor, and other friends, and finally assures that the persons accompanying the Marquis, are of the highest rank of this projects and plans, he will pay no his interference to expend, and delve all those then in the schemes, non-hostile treatment and commodious confinement, he will induce the government of this country to view the question in other lights than those which may end to expose it to more severe inconveniences than have hitherto been taken, or to the rousing of that spirit of indignation and resentment, which I am persuaded to boast forth, cause all of acting attended with strong marks of pub revenge.

With respect to my son, he was not acquainted with the planed general Miranda, he was with him as a young companion, to share his fortune and his fate, he was prepared for scene of his friends capable of deeds of gallantry and enthusiasm, and their letter—worthy his cause.

Whatever may be the situation and fate of the persons taken on board the schooner, I can never tarnish sensible the lash of tyranny on his shoulders, and sustain my son from a participation in their fate, whatever it may be. Nothing but the Marquis's word of an accusation, and the opinion of the minister for the indictment of his proposition, will induce me to proceed to conclude that were I in my son's situation I would not accept with his proposition to save myself, and I would not for a great an indignity upon my son, my family, and my country, I would be ever under the shield of infamy and disgrace. There is a double dealing here, will prevent such advice to the governor of Caracas, and under such a situation of things. (by whom I may have the honor to be personally presented) I conclude there not to tarnish the dignitie character of the Spanish nation by any acts of perfidy and hostility connection with the present case.

I have the honor, &c.

With great respect,

Your obedient servant and

Humble servant,

W. S. SMITH.

CONGRESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

APRIL 21.

Mr. SLOAN, the Speaker, rise to offer two resolutions which it accepted, the subject matter of which is relative, and greatly expedite business.

Introductory to offering these resolutions, I will the indulgence and attention of this House to a brief recital of facts. Mr. Pinkney, the accession of a deeping them; if in stat Mr. Monroe, the accession of the opinion, should conceive that I speak in public language, and discover too much warmth; I beg them to consider the magnitude of the subject, and the feelings of a citizen, who aimed at the vitals of our government, and produces an blast of the fatal effects liberty and independence, and the rights of a member responsible to the history, and that upon a just, and true representation of facts, I plead before this House, and the public, in my defence.

Mr. Pinkney, and Mr. Monroe, have been charged with a violation of the rights and property, which we have always enjoyed, and which are secured to us by the guarantee of the laws, in which I include both the sacred personal rights and other the honest citizens (if any there be) in the green gallery, and the honest citizens of the public gallery, and the honest citizens which I thus publicly declare, that I feel the sacred rights of property, and the inviolable distinction, as was lately applied by a member, that which I call the citizens in the galleries, and which I call the citizens in the galleries, and which I call the citizens in the galleries, and which I include both personal and other the honest citizens (if any there be) in the green gallery, and the honest citizens of the public gallery, and the honest citizens which I thus publicly declare, that I feel the sacred rights of property, and the inviolable distinction, as was lately applied by a member, that
