left another cartridge shelf, they rushed to our lodging, carried off bedding, beds, provisions, &c.—Not content with this, they broke up room on the top floor in pieces, rendering the house completely unfit for immediate occupancy.

And to complete the whole, the crew were all (except the captain) carried on board the other and detained 24 hours, without any thing to eat or drink. The fear, has arrived at Plymouth.

Portsmouth, (N. H.) July 15, 1807.

Sir,

I have received a few days since your favor, with the proceedings of the citizens of Richmond, Manchester, and their vicinities; they came to hand just in time for me to lay them before a large meeting of the citizens of this place and others, who received your proceedings with the greatest applause. The meeting passed a number of resolutions, unanimously approving the measures of our Senators in Richmond and Norfolk, with a full determination to carry the President's Proclamation into effect. Our sentiment pervades the whole of the people here; I think I may say there are not five, who of the state of the British affairs. The citizens of New Hampshire will do their duty.

I have the honor to be,

Sir, your humble servant,

JOHN LANGDON.

Hon. Alexander McLane, chairman of the correspondence committee, Hancock.

GENERAL ORDERS.

The corps of cavalry will be formed into two regiments, of which Hessel, Lesher, Smith, will come out the first, having under him the majors Robert Grattan and Tunstal Bank—the second will be commanded by lt. col. Henry Hoover, having under him the majors John C. Wolcott, and Peter F. Archer. The corps of artillery, will be formed into one regiment to be commanded by lt. col. William R. Fleming having under him the major James Tasker and John Bromwich; of which the major generals of the respective divisions to which those officers belong, will be pleased to take notice.

Any corps of volunteers, which at any time previous to receiving orders for taking the field, shall tender their services unbroken by to the act of Congress of the 18th of April, 1806, or to the act of Congress of the 24th of February, 1807, will be accepted, and considered as substitutes, according to their number, for the whole or any part of the 21863 men, required from this state.

When the detachment and organization shall have been effected, the respective corps shall be exercised by the officers of every three—fourths militia by their proper officers; volunteers by their own officers, if organized at the time of tendering their services, and if not then organized, by officers to be elected by themselves and to be approved and commissioned by the executive of this state. But they will not remain embodied, nor be considered as in actual service, until by the subsequent orders they shall be directed to take the field. Correct muster rolls and inspection returns will be made to the adjutant general, who will without delay transmit copies to the secretary at war.

On this deeply interesting occasion, the governor indulges the pleasing hope that his fellow citizens will not wait for the slow call of the legal regime of militia, but that they knowing him as any thing else than the master of a common East Indiaman.

Previous to leaving the British ship, Capt. C. very leisurely took a memorandum of the officers names who had insulted him, saying, "perhaps I may come this way, a year hence, when you shall know who and what I am."

COMMODORE.—In the year 1799, Commodore Tingey, on board the U. S. sloop of war Ganges, of 26 guns, then on the West India station, was commanded to inform an English frigate of 32 guns, whether all his men had protections—the answer was they have, look at their colors—hoist an pipe to him—here will you stand fly me (—three cheers given immediately—well says an brave commodore, they shall take me before you—being close along side—and all ready, the boat three cheers was enough, and the British ship bore away.

Extract of a letter to the Editors, dated Lower Three Runs, July 18.

"A few days ago the Caterpillars made their appearance in the neighborhood, and have generally destroyed our crops; they first appeared among the grass, then among the corn, after which they took to the cotton and destroyed the forms, pods, blossoms and leaves, and after destroying the corn and cotton, they have now taken to the peas; and as the Caterpillars appear to be generally for a number of miles, no crops will be made; and from the great scarcity of provisions, we have every reason to fear the times will be very alarming."

For some time the interest on our debt has been paid with the greatest exactitude.

Mr. Hay stated that he had not yet been able to furnish Mr. Burr with a list of the witnesses on the list of the Venire, furnished him, was inaccurate; for these reasons a short delay in the trial would be necessary, that correct lists might in the mean time be furnished.

Mr. Burr expressed his desire to avoid delay; when, after a short conversation, it was agreed to under the trial to Wednesday.
