

nately, on May 30, 1842, she became the wife of Montgomery, the son of Robert L. and Margaret Livingston, who died at Clermont-on-the-Hudson, on August 9, 1855. She, on September 15, 1857, was wedded in St. Clement's Episcopal Church, in the city of New York, to Clermont, son of Edward P. and Elizabeth Livingston, born September 4, 1817. She died childless, in the city of New York, in February, 1864; her husband surviving her at Clermont, the manor-house, near Tivoli-on-Hudson, until November 4, 1895. Their remains are entombed in the family vault, in the grave-yard adjacent St. Paul's Episcopal Church, near the village of Tivoli.

As announced by the New York Evening Post, on Saturday, November 22, 1856:

"Samuel Swartwout, formerly a prominent politician of New York, died yesterday afternoon in this city [at his residence, No. 18 Ninth Street], at the age of seventy-three. In early life he was connected for a short time with the navy. He was a steady and warm friend of Aaron Burr, though not implicated in the latter's political delinquencies. He was appointed, under President Jackson, collector of the port of New York, but his term of office was cut short [?] by an unfortunate defalcation, into which he had been led by unscrupulous men. His ardent temperament had induced him to enter largely into speculations in Texas lands, unprofitable coal mines, and various doubtful enterprises, the consequence of which was that he fell in debt [?] to the government, and was charged with being a defaulter to the amount of over a million. With the exception of a year or two in Switzerland, Mr. Swartwout has since resided in New York, devoting himself [at No. 4 Wall street] entirely to private affairs. It is understood that his funeral will take place on Sunday from Trinity Church.

"The United States revenue flag is flying at half-mast in respect to Mr. Swartwout's memory."

It is said, by another newspaper, that a very large number of persons attended his funeral, many of them being "old men, themselves tottering to the tomb. The burial service of the Episcopal Church was read from the altar by the Rev. Dr. Hobart, one of the incumbents of Trinity Church, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Eaton of St. Clement's Church. The coffin was of mahogany, lined with white satin, and bore on a silver plate the following inscription: 'Samuel Swartwout, died Nov. 21, 1856, aged 73 years and 4 days.' Mr. Swartwout was interred in the family vault of John R. Livingston, in Trinity church-yard."

The ex-collector was survived by his widow, who died, in Montclair, New Jersey, in 1874.
