George Dwight Alvord was two years of age when his father removed from Homer, N. Y., to Syracuse, N. Y. His education was secured in the public schools of Syracuse. After graduation he served his apprenticeship at the butcher's trade, in which business he was prominently identified up to the time of his death and became a leading expert in this line of trade. At one time he was senior member of the wholesale firm of Alvord & Jones. About the year 1896, he accepted the general management of the Syracuse district for Armour & Co., in which position he showed himself very efficient. He was a member of the First Ward Presbyterian Church.

His death was due to a runaway accident while driving with his wife, in heroic effort to save her from disaster, he was thrown to the pavement and received a fracture of the skull.
