

A "Harper's" Home.

In every home where Harper's publications are read—and such homes are legion—you will find families of discriminating people enjoying the comforts of life. You will find men of good common sense, women of refined taste, and boys and girls whose thoughts are directed the right way.

Harper's Bazar

is read by women who are interested in the fashions and in the home; who love to dress well, to dress their children well, and to beautify their homes. Much of their best information is gleaned from HARPER'S BAZAR.

Harper's Weekly

and Harper's Magazine are read by men and women who read only what is worth thinking about, and who think about what they read. They find in the Weekly the most interesting news of the day, and in the Magazine the best literary productions of the world.

Harper's Round Table

is eagerly read by the juvenile members of the "Harper's" Home. It is interesting and instructive, and receives the approval of the most careful parents. If you want to interest the young folks your object is half accomplished at the start by this paper's reputation.
