"The EAGLE is half a century old, and one of Brooklyn's cherished institutions." —Syracuse Journal.

"It is well known that the EAGLE has long stood in the front rank of good journalism, which means a newspaper in its best sense, a paper for the people, and not an organ for the few—and it is housed in as fine a building as any newspaper in the land." —American Advertiser Reporter.

"The EAGLE is admired by journalists all over the country as the best example of a purely local newspaper. It publishes all the news of the world, but its first aim is to record the affairs of Brooklyn, and this it does with remarkable thoroughness, and with such fairness that even in political contests it publishes full reports upon both sides. It is clean and dignified, and has prospered to the point of owning a model building which is one of the sights of the town." —From Harper's Monthly for April, 1883.
