During 1896, the New York Ledger will contain more attractive reading matter than in any year of its splendid history. Its size will be 20 pages instead of 16 pages. This change of size will enable the publishers to give a much greater quantity of matter, for which arrangements have been made with the most popular writers. In addition to its continued stories, which have always been the best and most popular, it will publish illustrated sketches, articles by famous preachers and authors on the leading topics of the day, a delightful Children's Column, Correspondence Column, Scientific Articles, a department devoted to fashions, household information and domestic affairs, entitled the Woman's World, and a thousand and one articles on topics of general interest, each number containing something for every member of the family.
