- 171 + ELIJAH, b. Aug. 21, 1766; m. Rachel Snow.
 172 + JOHN, b. Aug. 16, 1768; m. Mary Crawford.
 173 + ERASTUS, b. June 6, 1772; m. Rhoda Burt and Hannah Colton.
 174 LUCY, b. July 19, 1774; m. (int. pub. Nov. 10, 1801) Jeremiah Chapin Warner, born Sept. 17, 1767, son of Eleazer and Mary (Chapin) Warner of Granby, of a family originally from Ipswich, Mass. They had one dau., Lucy⁷, b. May 25, 1802, who m. Josiah Ward, and lived to an advanced age; no children. Lucy, the mother, died June 9, 1802. Mr. Warner married again and had other children.

73. William⁸ Goldthwaite (Thomas⁷, Samuel⁶, Samuel⁵, Thomas⁴), of South Danvers (now Peabody), Mass., born probably about 1743, was married Feb. 28, 1765, by Rev. Nathan Holt, to ABIGAIL KING of South Danvers, daughter of Zachariah and Hannah (Southwick) King (married Sept. 28, 1737), and a descendant of John and Elizabeth (Goldthwaite) King. Mr. Goldthwaite was a potter by occupation and lived on the Main street of the town, on the corner of Holton street, the site where stood, till recently, the South Danvers National Bank. His death appears in the Salem Gazette of March 29, 1808: "Died at Danvers, very suddenly Mr. W^m Goldthwait, 71."† Mrs. Goldthwaite died about 1820. William was one of the four Danvers Goldthwaites at the battle of Lexington. Children :

* Mehitabel (also Hittabell and Hitte) was a common name in the early Goldthwaite family, and was taken from Mehitabel, daughter of the emigrant, who died when a young woman, unmarried.

† This would make his birth 1737; there are so many reasons, however, for believing him to have been born later, that I am inclined to consider this newspaper statement of his age erroneous. Thomas, b. 1738, is set down in the old record by those who should have known, as the eldest brother; moreover, William, who was a potter, and therefore presumably learned his trade and lived on in Danvers, marrying his wife there, appears first in the tax-list in 1765, very good evidence that he had then lately come of age.
