AT page 7, Isabella might be called by the name of her first husband, although she had a second, if the first were a man of greater note. She might even be called by her maiden name if she were the representative of some great house. Isabel was succeeded by her great-grandson (not her grandson), according to the original inquest; so there were six John Suttons in succession, the first dying in 1487. Two of these Johns were fathers at the age of 20, and both died under 40.

On page 10, The Netherton there mentioned is not in Crophorn parish, but in Dudley parish.

On page 20, Thomas Fines died before his father, and was never a "Dacre."

On page 29, 17th line, read Northumberland, instead of "Quondam, his son."

On page 32, "Thomas Dudley late of the city of Westminster, died 1574." If he was the same Thomas, "baptized there Aug. 10, 1539," he could not have been the son of Lord Quondam, as Quondam's wife mentions her son Thomas in her will dated A.D. 1527.

On page 34, Thomas Dudley of Netherton and Thomas of Russells Hall were the same person. Geoffrey Dudley of Russells, who died in 1571, had a long lease of Netherton, county Worcester, which by his will he left to his son Thomas Dudley.

On page 35, Thomas Dudley of Coventry had a place called Dudley House at Stoke, a suburb of Coventry. It was not "Stone" Place. His widow Alice lived at Stoke, according to her will in 1595.

On page 37, Sir Richard Dudley, the husband of Isabel née Charlton, had a son and heir "Richard" according to Isabel's Inquisition Post-mortem. We do not find that Elizabeth Beauchamp married a Dudley, but a "Daundeley," and by him had only a son John and daughter Joan, who became heiress of her father and her brother.
