“WHY STUDY GENEALOGY?”

“BECAUSE this study furnishes one way of honoring ‘thy father and thy mother;’ it broadens one’s horizon; it links us to our kinsmen of the present and of the past; it awakens and deepens an interest in history. It brings out family characteristics that may reappear, points out special talents that may well be cultivated, and family failings that must be guarded against. It sometimes settles questions of inheritance. It ministers to that honorable pride that all ought to feel in the grand accomplishments of one’s ancestors. It is an incentive and an encouragement to the performance of similar deeds. The great historic events of the ages are personal matters to us, if some one of the same name took part in them. How delightful to find that one has kinsmen over all the land! How charming the correspondences that sometimes the ties of family bring about! When one comes of a long line of honorable ancestors, with what superb and ‘beautiful disdain’ can he answer the implied challenge of ‘upstart wealth’s averted eye!’

“As one’s interest in genealogy increases; as one goes from one’s immediate family to other families connected by marriage, the interest grows so real and so great that the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God, the two cardinal doctrines of Christianity, become instinct with life and beauty."—Frederic Allison Tupper in Magazine of American History for February, 1892.

INTRODUCTORY.

THE valley of the Mohawk, as well as that of Lakes George and Champlain, has been aptly called the "classic ground of America"—that section of country having witnessed, both in the French and Revolutionary Wars, deeds as heroic as any ever performed at the Pass of Thermopylae, or on the Plain of Marathon.

Among the principal actors in these scenes—especially those enacted in the Mohawk Valley—were the members of the Starin family. From the time of the removal, in 1705, of Nicholas Starin, the founder of the family in America, from Fort Orange (Albany, N. Y.),* to that section of country which is now known as the German Flats, N. Y., almost all of his descendants have been identified with the civil and military history of that valley—a history replete with chivalric valor, mingled with frightful suffering. During "Queen Anne's," and the "Seven Years' War" they freely shed their blood for the Crown as loyal subjects of Great Britain, and, later, during the entire Revolutionary struggle, they, as staunch Whigs, fought with equal bravery on the side of the Colonists, sacrificing their persons and their fortunes to the cause of Independence. No less than forty of the family served throughout the war, ten of whom being under the immediate command of Washington himself.* Some of them were neighbors and intimate companions of Sir William Johnson, Bart., and with that illustrious personage participated in, and shared the perils incident to, an unsettled and dangerous frontier life; while all of them were among the earliest and most reputable pioneers of the Mohawk Valley, and foremost in every effort designed to advance the public weal. Nor were they less patriotic during the late Civil War—a number of their descendants being found (as this Genealogy shows) zealously fighting on the side of the United States government.

* Albany bore several names in its early youth. The Dutch called it Beaverwyck ("the place of the beaver"); Wilhelm's-Stadt ("Williams Town"), and Fort Orange, after William of Orange. Since the organization of the county, it has borne the name of the Duke of York's Scotch title, Albany. The upper part of the present city was called the Colony of Rensselaerwyck (Rensselaer's Place), and was generally known as the "Colonie."

Accordingly, a genealogy of the Starin family—aside from the personal gratification which its members feel in its compilation—becomes not only of individual interest, but, to the student of those times, of special historical value; and, while this genealogy has been prepared for the family solely, yet, should it fall into hands other than those of its members, a perusal of the incidents here narrated, cannot but act as an incentive to feelings of the highest patriotism. In fact, this little book may be likened to a “Family Gathering” where the talk naturally turns on personal traits, anecdotes, etc.; and, as a well-bred stranger—should such an one chance to be present—will listen amusedly but not sneeringly, so, if any one, outside of the home-circle, reads this volume, it is to be hoped — for, of course, he is well-bred — that he will consider himself in the position of the chance guest!

In the preparation of this work, the amount of letter-writing has been very great; and the labor of ferreting out facts which could be relied upon will readily appear to any who have undertaken such a task; especially, when it is considered that the descendants of Nicholas Starin may be found in nearly every State and Territory in the Union. It cannot, indeed, be expected that the work will be found free from errors; still, I have in all cases sought to record that which appeared most reliable. It has also been my endeavor to bring into prominent relief sterling character, kind dispositions, patriotic purposes, and such qualities of head and heart as make valuable citizens and impart a healthy moral sentiment to community — traits which, as previously hinted, are marked characteristics of this line. Some of my letters to descendants still living, have, I regret to say, met with no response. Still, many have replied most sympathetically; and in this connection, I would state that I have derived much kindly assistance from Mr. George Moser and Mrs. Emelio Puig of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mrs. Hiram Baker, Mr. Mason B. Starin and Mr. William A. Starin of Chicago, Ill.; Mr. Frederic J. Starin of Whitewater, Wis.; Miss Jane Ann Starin of Hinsdale, Ill.; Mr. Josiah N. Starin and Miss Helen C. Starin of Germantown, Pa.; Mr. Frederick R. Starin of West Plains, Mo.; Mrs. William O. Jewett of Albion, Mich.; Mr. Alva C. Starin of Washington, D. C.; Mr. Adam L. Starin of Utica, N. Y.; Gen. Frederick A. Starin of New York city;

Nicholas Ster, the founder of the Starin family in America, was born on the borders of the Zuyder-Zee in the Province of Guelderland, Holland, in 1663. Thirty-three years later, accompanied by his second wife and their three children, and also by his three children by his first wife, he came over to America in one of the Dutch West India ships, landing at New Amsterdam (New York) in 1696, during the administration of Governor Fletcher.

It would appear that he brought with him some means of his own, since we find him, soon after his arrival, settled at Fort Orange (Albany, N. Y.) and engaging in an extensive and lucrative trade with the Indians. In 1705, taking advantage of the liberal offers of Queen Anne to Protestant settlers, he removed to that section of New York State which is now known as the "German Flats." * His reasons for selecting this locality in which to lay the foundation of the future prosperity of his family are indicative

* German Flats was founded as a district of Tryon Co., March 27, 1772, although its Patent is dated April 30, 1725. Its name was exchanged with the Kingsland district, March 7, 1788. Frankfort, Litchfield and Warren were taken off in 1796, and a portion of Little Falls in 1829. It lies upon the south bank of the Mohawk, south of the center of Herkimer county. A fine intervale extends along that river, and from the surface gradually of the shrewdness which has always characterized his descendants. This portion of the country had already, even at that day, become famous throughout the American Colonies for its fertility. Its fruitful soil at that time was from fifteen to twenty feet in depth, requiring no fertilizers as incentives to production; the eminences, which bounded the low grounds, possessed the same soil, and their summits were crowned—as many of them are still—with rich and beautiful meadows. The staple commodity was wheat; but maize (Indian corn), buckwheat, potatoes—then just introduced from South America—water-melons and various other delicious fruits were also successfully cultivated. The harvest, likewise, was uncommonly plentiful, and, withal, easily and speedily housed—an advantage, in those days of frequent Indian alarms, not to be overlooked. The lay of the fields, moreover, the expanse of the banks of the Mohawk, and the swelling hills and mountains, offered a delightful and variegated prospect, and, to one, like Nicholas Ster, accustomed to the monotonous lowlands of his native Holland, an agreeable change that was not without its charms; while, in addition to all this, low fevers of the typhoid type—so dreaded by the early settler—were in this part of the country almost unknown. All these advantages were quickly perceived by Nicholas Ster, and, as before stated, they led him to select this place as a per-rises to a height of three hundred or four hundred feet, and spreads out into an undulating upland. The valley of Fulmer Creek divides this upland into nearly equal parts. manent residence. The manner, also, in which his family thrived, sufficiently attests his discrimination and discernment.

Soon after his arrival in the Mohawk Valley, he changed his Dutch surname, Ster (Star), to the German, Stern (a word having the same signification in that language), and a few years later to that of Star-ing or Starin, though the last two names have continued to be used interchangeably by the family down to the present generation. He was married twice. His first wife died in Holland, and his second at German Flats, N. Y. He survived both his wives for many years, dying at German Flats in 1759, at the patriarchal age of ninety-six.

MEMORANDA.

Among the fellow voyagers of Nicholas Ster on his passage to America, was a certain Stephen Frank, who also brought with him his family. The latter, a few years after his arrival, on receiving a letter from Holland, went back to his fatherland, and returned with a large amount of money to which he had fallen heir. On his return, he informed Nicholas Ster that he, also, had become heir to an extensive estate which would be delivered up to none other than himself. Nicholas, however, replied that he "already had money and land enough, and would not cross the 'Great Water' again for that purpose," a resolution to which he ever afterward adhered. — Letter to the author from Miss Jane Ann Starin of Hinsdale, Ill.

The Starin and Frank families, as will appear later on, afterward intermarried.

Valentine Staring, son of Nicholas (1), by his first wife, was born in the Province of Guelderland, Holland, in the latter part of the seventeenth century and was brought to America by his father and step-mother. He lived to be nearly 100 years of age.

Adam Starin, or "Old Adam Starin," as he was familiarly called by his neighbors, son of Nicholas (1), after coming to America with his father and step-mother, took kindly to his transplanting and throve so well as to live to be over 90 years of age. From early youth he participated, like so many other members of the Starin family, in all the perils of a frontier life, retaining his physical and mental faculties in full vigor until his death. This is shown in the following anecdote given by Jephtha R. Simms, the Historian of the Mohawk Valley. During the summer of 1778, when nearly 90 years old, he was captured by a party of Indians while at work on his farm in New Germantown (now the town of Frankfort, N. Y.). The Indians took their captive into the forest, where they encamped, made a fire and had a war-dance, followed by the sharpening of their scalping-knives. They asked him significantly, if he knew why they were sharpening their knives, at the same time remarking in fiendish glee that they would wake him at five o'clock the next morning. Having then securely tied him between two Indians, they laid themselves down to rest, anticipating much pleasure in torturing their prisoner the following day. But they had not reckoned upon the latent energy of their seemingly aged captive; for as soon as the band had fallen asleep, Starin secured one of their knives, cut the thongs which bound his legs, "snaked" his way through the underbrush, and escaped. After going a little distance he concealed himself under a fallen tree, but judged that his flight had been discovered when, after he had thus been concealed for half an hour, some of the Indians in pursuit came along and actually stood upon the very log under which he lay.* Failing, however, to find him, they gave over the pursuit and returned to their camp-fire; when, leaving his place of concealment, he finally reached Fort Germantown (also called "German Camp") in safety.

It is believed that he left a large family of children, but the names of the only sons that have come down to us well authenticated are those of Heinrich, Adam and Jacob. It is, however, surmised that Frederick, Joseph and John, all of whom served during the war with credit in the Fourth Battalion of the Tryon County Militia, were also his sons.

Joseph Starin, son of Nicholas (1), was born in Holland and died at German Flats, N. Y., at the same ripe old age as his father, viz., 96.

No descendants so far as is known.

* This adventure of Adam reminds one forcibly of a similar experience of Amos Stafford, who, escaping from the Wyoming Massacre, concealed himself inside a hollow log, on which his Indian pursuers seated themselves and talked over the probabilities of capturing their prey. Stafford afterward made good his escape to Saratoga Lake, N. Y. For an account of this see my "Reminiscences of Saratoga and Ballston."

Nicholas Starin, son of Nicholas (1), was born at German Flats, in the Mohawk Valley, in 1712, and died there in 1802, having attained the great age of 90. During his life-time he passed successively through "Queen Anne's War," 1702-13; "The Old French War," 1744-50; "The French War," 1754-63; and "The Revolutionary War," 1776-83; dying almost on the threshold of the "War of 1812." In some of these wars, moreover, he took an active part, especially in that of the Revolution, fighting, at the age of 65, side by side with his nephews, Heinrich and Nicholas, at the battle of Oriskany.

His business was that of an Indian trader, in which capacity he acquired the language of the different Indian tribes, and often made journeys among the Indian settlements far beyond the frontiers. During these trips he endured hardships of the severest kind, which, at the present day, would be deemed simply incredible; for it must be remembered that at this time the Canadas and the north-western part of that which is now New York State were little less than a primeval wilderness, whose silence was unbroken, save by the hooting of the owl or the scream of the panther, and whose solitude was undisturbed except by savage beasts or still more savage tribes, with here and there a trading-post or fort.*

* To give the reader an idea of what was involved in making such journeys at that time, the following extract from the journal of Joseph Ingham is given: "I traveled in 1789 up the Susquehanna, following the course of the river, and found it had been very little traveled; hardly a plain path, and this very crooked and hard to follow — quite impassable for more than a man and a single horse. Along the edge of precipices, next the river,

He was also a staunch personal friend of Sir William Johnson, and together with his relative by marriage, Myndert Wemple, was once sent by the Baronet into the country of the Senecas, under a "protection," that they might improve their fortunes by a monopoly of the Indian trade. It would appear, however, that this particular venture was not very successful, since we read that Nicholas, soon after his return, reported himself to his patron at Fort Johnson,* to whom, after giving a detailed account of the condition of things, he said: "Last winter John Abeel brought so much rum and sold it amongst the Indians, and caused so much drunkenness that he was greatly molested and hindered in his work by it; and when he threatened Abeel that he would complain against him, he said he 'did not care—he would sell it, and for every quart of rum he sold he got a Spanish dollar.'"

He often accompanied Sir William Johnson on his fishing trips to the Fish-House on the Sacandaga, and was often a companion to him on his many journeys from Fort Johnson to Schenectady and back. Regarding one of these trips the following story is still told in the Mohawk Valley at the expense of the and other places, I had to ascend and descend from one ledge of rocks to another, some feet perpendicular, at a great height from the water, and in some places extremely dangerous. The habitations of men were very few, and the inhabitants, instead of being glad to converse with strangers or travelers, would hardly speak to them."—History of Bradford Co., Pa., p. 87. And yet this journey was made within, comparatively, the then limits of civilization!

* Fort Johnson is yet (1892) standing, three miles west of the village of Amsterdam, N. Y., and retains in its massive stone walls the same characteristics as when occupied by Sir William Johnson. A station on the N. Y. C. R. R.—some few hundred feet from the fort—is very appropriately named "Fort Johnson."

Baronet. There were numerous little swamps along the road, and the Baronet once upon a time returning to Fort Johnson from Schenectady on horseback, accompanied by Nicholas Starin, passed a little marsh, in which he heard, as he believed, the voice of a new animal. Turning to Starin, he inquired: "What animals are those making such a strange noise?" Starin replied with a grin, that they were bull-frogs. Whereupon, he spurred up his horse, not a little mortified to think that he had but just learned, as his countrymen would say, "what a toad or a frog was!"

MEMORANDA.

John Abeel, the Indian trader mentioned in the above sketch of Nicholas, was the father (by the daughter of a Seneca chief, married to him after the Indian ceremonial) of the celebrated Seneca chief Cornplanter. The late Mr. Webster of Fort Plain was a descendant of Abeel.—See Stone's BRANT.

14

Philip Frederick Adam Starin, son of Nicholas (1), was born at German Flats, N. Y., in 1715. He was by trade a machinist, and for many years was the chief—in fact, the sole reliance of the settlers in the Mohawk Valley for the repair of their agricultural implements and also of their fowling-pieces and rifles. Hon. John H. Starin (169), his great-grandson, has at the present time (among many other precious family relics) a wrought-iron sconce for holding candles, made on the same plan of the new-fashioned piano lamp — which was designed and manufactured by him. It is really a very ingenious piece of workmanship, and demonstrates that the design of the present “piano” or “banquet lamp” is by no means of modern origin.

Among the well-authenticated traditions of the Starin family, also, regarding Philip, is the following: One day as he was at work at his forge, three Indians came in and peremptorily commanded him to drop at once the work upon which he was then engaged and attend to some job for them. Upon his not immediately complying with their demand, one of the Indians plunged a knife into his abdomen, letting out a portion of his bowels. Notwithstanding, however, this terrible wound, he pulled out from the fire a red hot iron bar he was mending at the time, and with one blow laid the savage dead at his feet. Whereupon, the other two Indians fled in the direst consternation. Mr. Starin recovered from this terrible wound, and lived many years afterward.

He was twice married: (1) in 1743, to Elizabeth Evertson, a daughter of John Evertson of Holland, and (2) to Elizabeth Simmons of German Flats. His children were all born at Glen, Montgomery county, N. Y. He was a most reputable citizen, respected by all, and, during his life-time, filled many local and civil positions with credit and honor. He died at Glen, N. Y., in 1795.

MEMORANDA.

The father-in-law of Philip Frederick Adam, John Evertson, died at Stone Ridge, Montgomery county, N. Y. Stone Ridge is well known in the border warfare of the Mohawk Valley, from the circumstance of the Tory leaders, Major Ross and Colonel Butler having, in 1781, passed through the place, capturing a funeral procession which chanced at the time to be passing through the streets of the village, and taking several prisoners.

Valentine Staring, son of Valentine (3), was born about 1728, in that part of the Mohawk Valley now known as the German Flats. He followed the business of farming until the breaking out of the Revolutionary War, when, like so many other members of the Starin family, he enlisted as a private in the 2d Ulster County Regiment, Col. Bellinger commanding. His death was particularly sad. On the 17th of July, 1782, a party of six hundred Indians and Tories entered the town of German Flats, and destroyed nearly the entire settlement, tomahawking all of the inhabitants who had not had the good fortune to escape to the fort or block-house. Among the latter was Valentine Staring, who was captured and tortured to death, within hearing of the garrison of the fort, who were too feeble to attempt his rescue.

Henry Staring, son of Valentine (3), was born at New Germantown, N. Y., about the year 1730. He was a very tall, stout, athletic man, and, like his uncle, "Old Adam Staring," was once captured by the Indians but contrived to escape. The Indians stood in no little awe of him; and it is handed down in oral family tradition, that "nature had given him the faculty of 'looking sour;' and that when he fixed his eye on an Indian he made him wince!" Indeed, it is said that even his neighbors at times quailed under his assumed ferocious look. He also served, during the war, as captain of a company in Col. Bellinger's regiment, which formed a part of the 4th Battalion of the Tryon County Militia — a regiment composed chiefly of the inhabitants of the German Flats and Kingsland districts. He was twice married.

Heinrich Staring (or Henri, as he often wrote his name), son of Adam (4), was born about 1730, at Schuyler, in Montgomery county, N. Y., which, at that time, included the present counties of Herkimer, Oneida, Madison, Oswego, Lewis, Jefferson and St. Lawrence. Like his uncle, Nicholas (13), he was a militia officer at the beginning of the Revolutionary War, and was present—as the Roster of the Tryon County Militia, still preserved, shows—with the rank of colonel, at the bloody and hard-contested battle of Oriskany; from which time, he continued to hold that rank in the Tryon County Militia until the close of the war. His residence was on the remote or western verge of the settlement of German Flats, about midway between Fort Dayton and the Fort Schuyler of the French War,* and near the small stream called “Staring’s Creek,” on which there was a small grist-mill, burned by the French and Indians in 1757; and which, being rebuilt, was again destroyed during the Revolution. He was a man of thrift, and owned many acres of land, some of which are still held by members of the Starin family. "He had," says the late William J. Bacon of Utica, N. Y., "strong common sense and great integrity;" and, possessing unflinching courage, zeal and loyalty to the cause of the Colonies, in their endeavors to throw off the yoke of the mother country, he became a prominent object for seizure by the enemy. Many attempts were made to capture him, which, by his great shrewdness and presence of mind, he escaped. A great number of anecdotes, illustrative of the extraordinary means used by the Indians to capture or kill him, might be related. One of these adventures is thus told in his Recollections of Oneida County, by the late William Tracy, who heard it from one who in turn received it from the lips of Judge Starin himself, several years after the war.

The event took place some time late in November, and about the year 1778 or 1779. He had, for some purpose, gone into the woods at some distance from his home, and while there, by chance, came suddenly upon a party of hostile Indians, who were prowling about the settlement. Before he became fully aware of their presence, he had got so completely in their power, that flight or resistance were out of the question. He was seized with every demonstration of hellish delight, and rapidly hurried away in a contrary direction from his home, and southward of the Mohawk, until his captors supposed themselves out of the reach of pursuit, when they directed their march westward, and at night reached a small uninhabited wigwam at a little more than a quarter of a mile from the right bank of the Oriskany creek, above Clinton, in what is now called Brothertown. This wigwam consisted of two rooms, separated from each other by a partition of logs. Into the larger of these there opened an outside door, which furnished the only entrance to the house. Another door communicated from the larger to the smaller room. The latter had one window, a small square hole of less than a foot high by about two feet wide, placed nearly six feet above the floor. The whole structure was of logs, substantially built. The Indians examined the smaller room, and concluded that by securely fastening their prisoner hand and foot, they could safely keep him there until morning. They therefore bound his hands behind him with withes, and then fastened his ankles together in the same manner, and laid him, thus bound, in the small room, while they built a fire in the larger one, and commenced a consultation concerning the disposition of him. Staring, though unable to speak the Indian language, was sufficiently acquainted with it to understand their deliberations, and he lay listening intently to their conversation. The whole party was unanimous in the decision that he must be put to death, but the manner of doing this in the way best calculated to make the white warrior cry like a cowardly squaw was a question of high importance, and one which it required a good deal of deliberation to settle satisfactorily to all his captors. At length, however, it was agreed that he should be burned alive on the following morning, and preparations were accordingly made for the diabolical sports of a savage auto da fê. During the deliberation, the horrible fate that awaited him suggested to Colonel Staring the question of the possibility of an escape. As he lay on the ground in the wigwam, he could see the window I have spoken of, and he determined to make an effort to release himself from the withes which bound him, and endeavor to effect a passage through it without alarming his savage keepers. Before they had sunk to rest, he had so far succeeded as to release one of his hands from its fastenings sufficiently to enable him to slip his wrist from it. On finding that he could do this, he feigned sleep; and when the Indians came in to examine and see if all was safe, they retired, exulting with a fiend-like sneer, that their victim was sleeping his last sleep. They then all laid down on the ground in the larger room, to go to sleep. Staring waited until all had for a long time become quiet, when, slipping his hands from his withes, he was enabled silently to release his ankles, and by climbing up the side of the house by the aid of the logs, to escape from the window without creating an alarm. In the attempt, and while releasing his ankles from the withes, he had necessarily taken off his shoes, and had forgotten to secure them with him. He was now outside of the wigwam, barefoot, at a distance of five and twenty miles from his home, without a guide or a path, hungry, and in a frosty night in November, and with a band of enemies seeking his heart's blood lying ready to spring upon him. But he was once more free from their clench, and this one thought was nerve, and strength, and food—was all he needed to call into action his every power. He stole with cautious silence from the wigwam, directing his course toward the creek, and increasing his gait as he left his captors and got beyond the danger of alarming them.

He had got about half way to the creek, and had begun to flatter himself that his whole escape was accomplished, when he heard a shout from the wigwam, and immediately the bark of the Indian dogs in pursuit. He then plunged on at the top of his speed, and knowing that, while on the land, the dogs would follow on his track, in order to baffle their pursuit, as soon as he reached the creek, he jumped in, and ran down stream in the channel. For some time he heard the shouts of his late masters, and the baying of their hounds in the pursuit; and now that he had reached the water where their dogs could not track him, he laughed outright as he ran, in thinking of the disappointment they would feel when they arrived at the bank. The fear of the faggot and all its accompanying tortures furnished a stimulus to every muscle, and he urged on his flight until he heard no more of his enemies, and he became satisfied that they had given up their pursuit. He deemed it prudent, however, to continue his course in the bed of the creek until he should reach a path which led from Oneida to old Fort Schuyler—a mud fort, built on the present site of this city [Utica] during the French war, and which was situated between Main street and the banks of the river, a little eastward of Second street. The path crossed the Oriskany about half a mile westward of where the village of Clinton now stands. He then took his path, and pursued his course. I have mentioned that, in haste to escape, he forgot his shoes. He had on a pair of wool stockings, but on running on the gravel in the creek, they soon became worn out, and the sharp pebbles cut his feet. In this difficulty he thought him of a substitute for shoes in the coat he wore, which, fortunately, was made of thick, heavy serge. He cut off the sleeves of this at his elbows, and drew them upon his feet, and thus protected them from injury. But he used to say he soon found this was robbing Peter to pay Paul; for, in the severity of the night, his arms became chilled and almost frozen. He reached the landing at this place just in the gray dawn of the morning, and cautiously reconnoitering, in order to ascertain whether any one was in the fort, which was frequently used as a camp-ground, he satisfied himself that no one was in the neighborhood. In doing this, he fortunately discovered a canoe which had floated down the stream and lodged in the willows which grew on the edge of the bank. He immediately took possession of it, and by a vigorous use of the paddles, with the aid of the current, succeeded in reaching his home with his little bark in the middle of the forenoon."*

Staring was a plain, honest Dutch farmer, of limited education, but with a large stock of common sense and sound judgment, and above all, of sterling integrity. He enjoyed, also, the unlimited confidence of the German and Dutch settlers on the Mohawk. Hence, in organizing the Court of Common Pleas for Herkimer county in 1791, Colonel Staring was appointed its first judge by his warm, personal friend,

* "In a verbal relation once given to the author, of this escape of Colonel Staring, by the late Hon. Henry R. Storrs, who was acquainted with him, it was stated that during the Colonel's flight he was once compelled to take to a tree, so close were his pursuers upon him. The tree which he climbed was a hemlock, the thick foliage of which effectually concealed his person. The Indians came in numbers past the tree; but although their dogs had lost the scent of his track, they suspected not the place of his concealment. It was after his departure, having apparently relinquished the pursuit, that the Colonel descended, and took to the channel of the brook."—Stone's Brant.

Governor George Clinton, the latter evidently regarding those qualifications as sufficient to warrant his appointment to that office. Nor was Governor Clinton's judgment wrong in this matter. "I have the authority," says Tracy, "of a lawyer once holding a distinguished rank at the bar of New York State and whose partialities, all who remember him will bear me witness, betrayed, at least, no special leaning to the Dutch—I mean the late Erastus Clark—in the opinion, that for strength of mind, correctness of judgment, and unflinching integrity, he never knew a man, who, with so limited an education, in the station which he held, could have been regarded his superior." This office he held for many years.

A great many anecdotes illustrative of his simplicity of character are even yet current in the valley of the Mohawk. His sense, moreover, of the inviolability of contracts and the duty of fulfilling them, is well illustrated in the amusing but well-authenticated incident of his refusing a discharge to an applicant for the benefit of the Insolvent Act until he had paid all his debts—to be relieved from which, it need hardly be said, was the very object of the application. This is told by Tracy as follows:

"One day an unfortunate debtor applied to him to obtain the relief afforded by the statute, and having prepared and duly executed his assignment, waited the signature of the judge to perfect his discharge. Well, said he, have you got all things ready. Yes, replied the debtor; every thing is prepared—all you have to do is to sign my discharge. Very well, said the judge, have you paid all your debts? O no, said the debtor; if I had I should not apply for the benefit of the statute. But, replied the judge, I can't sign the paper till you have paid all your debts; you must pay your debts first. Upon this point he was inexorable, and the applicant was forced to seek elsewhere the relief he desired."

"The first incumbents of the Herkimer Court of Common Pleas, which then (1793) included Oneida county," writes Judge Bacon in his "Early Bar of Oneida," 'were three fair-minded, intelligent and upright laymen, viz., Heinrich Staring, Judge, and Jedediah Sanger and Amos Wetmore, Justices. Of the first of these men (Judge Staring), a very graphic and just sketch is given by the late William Tracy of the New York Bar, in a valuable lecture delivered in Utica thirty years ago.' "The first record," says Tracy, "we have of any court held within the territory of the county of Oneida, is in October, 1793, when a Court of Common Pleas was held in a barn * belonging to Judge Sanger, in the town of New Hartford, and over this court," Judge Starin presided, assisted by Justices Sanger and Wetmore. An incident occurred at this session of the court, which is so amusing and illustrative, that it is here reproduced substantially as it is related by Tracy, in the lecture already alluded to:

The day was cold and chilly, and the barn of course had no appliances for creating artificial warmth. In the absence of these and with a view to keep-

* Judge W. J. Bacon, in his address on the Oneida Bar, also says "that this venue of the court was held in a barn;" while the late Judge Jones, in his local History of Oneida County, says it was held in a "church." Both statements, however, are perfectly reconcilable, as the Dutch Reformed congregation held their meetings in Judge Staring's barn. — See Van der Kemp's letter a little further on.

ing their faculties awake, some of the attending lawyers had induced the sheriff (an impulsive and obliging Irishman named Colbraith), to procure a jug of ardent spirits, which was quickly circulated around the bar, and from which each one decanted (taking it like oysters raw from the shell) the quantity that would suffice to keep them up to concert-pitch. While this was going on, the judges, who were suffering from the cold without any such adventitious relief, consulted together and concluded that rather than freeze in their seats they would adjourn the court until the ensuing day. Just as they were about to announce this conclusion, and to call on the crier to make the usual proclamation, Colonel Colbraith sprang up, snatching, as he rose, the jug from the lawyer who was "sampling" its contents, and holding it up toward the Bench, hastily exclaimed, "Oh no, no, Judge, don't adjourn yet! take a little gin, Judge; that will keep you warm; tain't time to adjourn yet!" and suiting the action to the word, he handed his honor the jug. Tradition says the court yielded to the soft persuasion, and in the language now common and familiar to our ears, "smiled" and proceeded with the business of the court. What sort of justice prevailed during the remainder of that day, the historian of the incident does not tell us, and contemporary tradition is silent on the subject.

Judge Heinrich Staring was also the author of the celebrated "Yankee Pass," the story regarding which runs as follows: The early Dutch of the Mohawk Valley were very strict in keeping the Sabbath; and the legal penalties for such infringement were rigorously enforced. Now, it chanced that one Sunday morning as Judge Staring was going to church, he met a Yankee peddler on horseback quietly jogging along on his way east. Straightway the judge arrested him, and having received from the offender the customary fine of four shillings, was asked by the latter if — now that the penalty had been paid — he would not give him a pass to travel the remainder of the day, especially as he was in a hurry to finish his journey, and did not wish to be delayed? To this seemingly reasonable request the judge consented, and requested the Yankee (as he had not his glasses by him) to write it out himself and he would sign it. This having been done, the judge affixed his signature to the document, and the peddler went on his way. Some weeks afterward, the judge happening to be in the store of Messrs. James and Archibald Kane (the principal frontier merchants at Canajoharie) to sell some wheat, was presented with a sight note of hand for £20, which the Kanes, knowing it to be first-class paper, had purchased. Judge Staring, at first, was utterly astounded, yet confessed that the signature was his and “no mistake.” Finally, after puzzling his brains for several minutes and having had described to him the person who sold the note, he suddenly exclaimed, “Confound it! It’s that damned Yankee pass!” However, the judge, enjoying the joke, although at his expense, cheerfully took up the note, but ever more steered clear of Yankees—particularly those seeking passes on the Sabbath day!

Judge Staring, moreover, was as good a boniface, as he was a judge. He, also, like his cousin, John (24), kept an Inn at German Flats, and Francis Adrian Van der Kemp, who traveled on horseback through the Mohawk Valley in 1792, thus writes to a friend * of the hospitality he experienced at Judge Staring's Inn : " Having arrived at the German Flats, Col. Staring was the man with whom I intended to dine if it were obtainable. Although his honor was at the same time a judge of the Common Pleas, thus high in civil and military grandeur, yet he kept a public-house, and my imagination was soon highly inflamed when I glanced on his mansion and its appurtenances. The colonel was gone to the meeting; his barn was the place of worship. I went thither; the assembled congregation was very numerous; our Lord's Supper was celebrated with decency, and as it appeared to me, by many with fervent devotion. Four children were baptized by the Rev. Mr. Rosenkranz, of the German Flats, who had made this pastoral visit to direct these religious solemnities. After service the flock crowded promiscuously into the colonel's house, and used sparingly some refreshments. * * * The large majority of the guests gloried at the renewed election of George Clinton, while many who had voted for John Jay were equally disappointed. * * * The presence of the reverend pastor, the solemnity of the sacred festival, the presence of the fathers of the baptized children, some of them related to the colonel, procured me a good dinner. A very good soup, salad, roasted chickens, beef and pork, with bread and butter, were soon destroyed by fifteen or sixteen hungry guests. The Rev. Rosenkranz was born in the Duchy of the Paltz-Tweebrogen, from a respectable family of Swedish origin.

Endowed with a learned education he was not a stranger in [sic] elegant literature; a serious preacher who knew the art to enliven society with a well-regulated hilarity."

At the Treaty of Peace in 1783, Col. Staring was a prominent and influential man, and enjoyed the full confidence of his neighbors, who had sent him as a delegate, and, in fact, in a larger sense, of his countrymen. He was a member of the Convention from Montgomery county, called in 1788 to consider the present Constitution of the United States, which had just been submitted to the several States for ratification. As an Anti-Federalist, he was an ardent friend and supporter of Governor George Clinton, and he, with many members of the Convention, was opposed to the ratification of the Constitution. He was also for a number of years—beginning in 1788—an influential member of the New York Legislature, and, indeed, during his long life filled many and responsible public offices, among which was the supervisorship, in 1789, of the town of Herkimer. His death, which was occasioned by a fall from his horse, occurred in the town of Schuyler, on the 27th of May, 1808.* He is buried in the family graveyard at Schuyler, N. Y., a burying-ground which was there before the American Revolution. He married Elizabeth, a daughter of Johann Jurgh Kast, one of the original patentees of the German Flats,

* My authority for the date of Judge Staring's death (which appears to have been unknown to Benton and other local historians—although Col. Wm. L. Stone in his Life of Brant came near to it, placing it in 1810) is an obituary notice of the judge in a Herkimer county newspaper. This paper was kindly sent to me by Mrs. Mary E. Busch of Schuyler, N. Y., a great-granddaughter of Judge Staring.

and obtained by purchase and inheritance the title to 6,000 acres of land, comprising part of the "Kast Patent," which he left to his children.* Two of his sons, as will be seen hereafter, served in the Tryon County Militia during the war.

Elizabeth Kast, the wife of Heinrich, was, like Jane Wemple, the grandmother of John H. Starin, the heroine of several exciting adventures incident to the many raids made into the Mohawk Valley by the Tories and Indians. On one occasion, she, with a few feeble old men, women and children, successfully held old Fort Schuyler (the site of Utica, N. Y.), against an attack of the enemy, causing the latter, by various stratagems, to believe that the fort was strongly garrisoned. Finally, the stock of provisions giving out, Mrs. Staring volunteered to go outside the fort and procure a fresh supply. Accordingly, she left the fort in plain sight of the enemy, crossed a bridge, procured the provisions, and returned unharmed, although her horse was shot under her while recrossing the bridge. During her absence the garrison remained on their knees, praying for her safety. By the timely succor thus brought to the beleaguered fort by this brave act, the garrison were enabled to resist until assistance came and the siege was raised.—Letter to the author from Mrs. Emilio Puig (a great-granddaughter of Heinrich Starin) of Brooklyn, N. Y.

In the obituary, to which allusion has been made, the following relating to the death of Judge Starin occurs: "His death was occasioned by a fall from his horse — the contusion and wounds received in the fall were followed by a mortification, which put a period to his existence in a few days after."

John Doxstader, the husband of Nancy, was a grandson of Jurgh Doxstader, one of the original patentees of the German Flats.

He was an active partisan on the American side during the Revolution; participated in the bloody struggle at Oriskany; and was often employed by Washington to carry important messages to General Herkimer. He suffered greatly in his property by his patriotism, his dwelling and all of his outbuildings having been burned during an Indian raid. After the war, he removed to East Creek, Herkimer county, N. Y., and became a very successful farmer. He died in 1812, and a marble slab in the "Starin Burying-Ground" at East Creek still marks his last resting-place.

Frederick Starin, son of Philip Frederick Adam (14), was born in 1744. He was a farmer by occupation, cultivating an extensive tract of land in the town of Charleston (now Glen), Montgomery county, N. Y.* He was a prominent member of the Dutch Reformed Church at Caughnawaga, N. Y., over which Dominie Abraham Van Horn was pastor for forty-five years. If the records of that church could be found, it would be seen that they contain many interesting facts relating to the Starin family. Mr. Starin married Elizabeth Frank, who was born in 1746, and was a descendant of that Stephen Frank who came over to America in the same vessel with Nicholas (1), in 1696. He died April 1, 1826. She died November 12, 1835.

Several members of this same Frank family settled in different parts of what is now Herkimer county, N. Y. For instance; Conrad Frank, Timothy Frank, and Henry Frank removed before the Revolutionary War, from the Mohawk to what is now known as South Columbia in the south-east portion of that county—its first name being Coonrodston. Again; the settlement of German Flats, which originally consisted of 1,000 acres, was first settled by some of the same family, the original proprietors of which being Starving, Frank, Oosterhoudt, Crim, Lepper and Hoyer. Frankfort (originally Frank's Ford), and which was formed from German Flats, February 5, 1796, was named after another member of this family, viz., Lawrence Frank, and thus derives its name from one of the Frank family and not from the town of Frankfort-on-the-Main, as has generally been supposed.

All of this Frank family like that of their relations, the Starins, did good service in the Revolution, and were identified with the patriots of the time. One of the family was a captain in Colonel Bellinger's 4th Tryon County Regiment; and, again, when for example, the celebrated Indian Chief Thayendanegea (Brant), was forced to retreat from a raid he had made on a little secluded hamlet, called Andrus-town, situated about six miles south-east of German Flats, on the 18th of July, 1778, he was pursued by a party of resolute Whigs under the command of John Frank—one of the head men of the "Committee of Safety." Frank and his men pursued Brant as far as the "Little Lakes,"* where also there was a small colony known as "Young's Settlement," from the name of its founder. Here it was discovered that Brant was so far in advance that the pursuit was relinquished. But as Young, the head man of the settlement, was a Tory, Frank and his followers avenged, to a small extent, the destruction of Andrus-town, by plundering and burning their habitations.

The above account was given to the father of the writer — the late Col. Wm. L. Stone — in September, 1837, by this same John Frank, who, though at that time, very old, had his mental faculties unimpaired. Col. Stone had known John Frank for twenty-five years previous to this communication; and, consequently, this information may be considered reliable. For further particulars the reader is referred to Stone's "Life of Brant."

Nicholas Starin, son of Philip Frederick Adam (14), was born at Glen, N. Y., in 1749. He was present at the battle of Oriskany, taking, like his cousin Heinrich, a prominent part in that action as 2d lieutenant of the 5th Company in the 4th Battalion of the Tryon County Militia.* He was — so oral family tradition says — a typical, jovial old Dutchman, and was, with praiseworthy zeal, particularly anxious that the ancient Dutch customs should be kept alive in his own family. Like his namesake and patron, Saint Nicholas, he neglected no opportunity of calling around him on certain festive occasions his immediate family and neighbors to participate in the festivities handed down by his ancestors in the Fatherland. He married (1) Catherine

* The colonel of this battalion, which was made up of the inhabitants of the German Flats and the Kingsland districts — at that time including all the territory west of the present Little Falls on both sides of the Mohawk river — was Hanyoost Herkheimer (Herkimer) a relative, probably, of Gen. Nicholas Herkimer, the hero of Oriskany.

MEMORANDA.

Indeed, not only Nicholas, but all the Dutch of the Mohawk Valley were distinguished for their good nature, love of home, and cordial hospitality. Fast young men, late hours and fashionable dissipation were then unknown. There was, nevertheless, plenty of opportunity for healthful recreation. Holidays were abundant, each family having some of its own, such as birthdays, christenings and marriage anniversaries. Each season, too, introduced its own peculiar and social festivals—the “Quilting,” “Apple-Raising,” and “Husking Bees.” The work, on such occasions, was soon finished, after which the guests sat down to a supper, well supplied with chocolate and waffles—the evening terminating with a merry dance. Dancing, indeed, was a favorite amusement. The slaves in the kitchen danced to the music of their rude instruments; while the maidens and youths practiced the same amusement above stairs.

Besides such holidays five public or national Dutch festivals were observed. These were—Kerstrydt, or Christmas; Nieuw Jar, or New-Year; Paas, or Pass-over; Pinxter, Whitsuntide; and Santa Claus, St. Nicholas or Christ Krinkle day. The morn of the Nativity was hailed with universal salutations of a “Merry Christmas,” a good old Knickerbocker custom which has descended unimpaired to us. Next in the day’s programme came “turkey shooting”—the young men repairing to some rendezvous to indulge in this amusement. Each man paid a few stivers* for a “chance,” when the best shot obtained the prize. The day was also commemorated, as it is at the present time, by family dinners and closed with domestic gaiety and cheerfulness.

New-Year’s day was devoted to the universal interchange of visits. Every door in the Mohawk Valley was thrown wide open, and a warm welcome extended to the stranger as well as to the friend. It was considered a breach of established etiquette to omit any acquaintance in these annual calls, by which old friendships were renewed, family differences settled, and broken or neglected intimacies restored. This is another of the excellent customs of “ye olden tyme" that still continues among New Yorkers, and its origin, like many others, is thus traced exclusively to the earliest Holland settlers.

Paas, or Easter, was also a famous festival among the Dutch, but is now almost forgotten, except by the children, who still take considerable interest in coloring eggs in honor of the day. The eggs were found then on every table. This old festival, however, is rapidly passing away, and like Pinxter, will soon be forgotten.

Santa Claus Day (Dec. 6) was the day of all others with the little Dutch folk, for it was sacred to St. Nicholas—the tutelar divinity of New-Amsterdam, who had presided as the figure-head of the first emigrant ship that reached her shores. The first church erected within her fort (the present Battery) was also named after St. Nicholas. He was, to the imagination of the little Dutch children, a jolly, rosy cheeked, little old man, with a slouched hat, a large Flemish nose, and a very long pipe. His sleigh, loaded with all sorts of Christmas gifts, was drawn by swift reindeer; and as he drove rapidly over the roofs of the farm-houses, he would pause at the chimneys to leave presents in the stockings of the good children; if bad, they might expect nothing but a switch or leather strap. In this way the young little Dutch people became models of good behavior and propriety. They used to sing a suitable hymn on this occasion, two verses of which are here given, for the benefit of those readers who may wish to know how it sounded in Dutch:

"Sint Nicolaas, goed heilig man,
Trekt uw besten Tabbard an,

En reist daarmee naar Amsterdam,
 Van Amsterdam naar Spanje,
 Waar appelen van Oranje,
 En appelen van Granaten,
 Er rollen door de Straten.

Sint Nicolaas, mijn goeden Vriend,
 Ik heb U altijd wel gediend,
 Als gij mij nu wat wilt geven,
 Zal ik U dienen al mijn leven."

TRANSLATION.

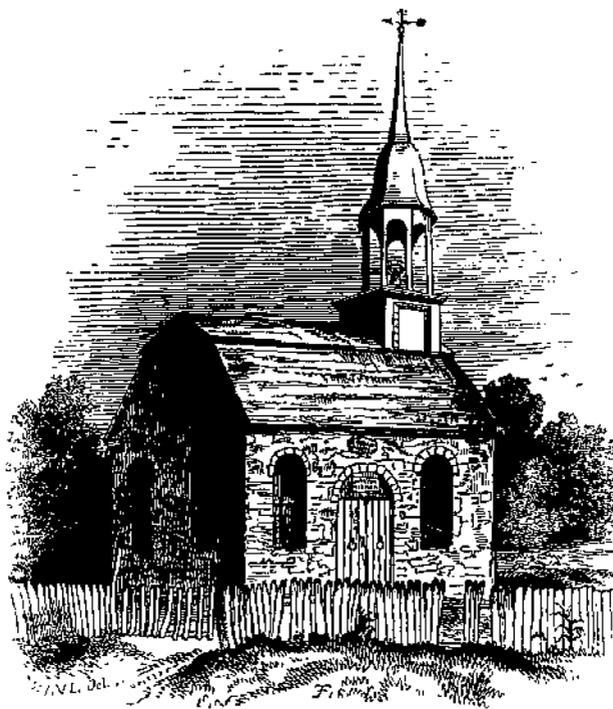

"Saint Nicholas, good holy man,
 Put the best Tabbard on you can,
 And in it go to Amsterdam,
 From Amsterdam to Hispanje,
 Where apples bright of Orange,
 And likewise those pomegranates named
 Roll through the streets all unreclaimed.

Saint Nicholas, my dear good friend,
 To serve you ever was my end,
 If you me something now will give,
 Serve you I will long as I live."

Mrs. Hiram Baker of Chicago, Ill. (granddaughter of Joseph (68), has recently written a very pretty piece of verse, illustrating, or rather commemorating, one of these visits of St. Nicholas (Santa Claus) to the little Dutch folk. It is entitled "A Season's Greeting," and is replete with genuine poetic sentiments.

John Starin, son of Philip Frederick Adam (14), was born at Charleston, N. Y. (at that time in the ancient town of Caughnawaga and now Glen, N. Y.), on the 31st of August, 1754. He was an Indian interpreter, a confidential friend of General Washington, fought throughout the war for American Independence, and was one of the Starin family who, as mentioned in the introduction, served in the Continental army directly under Washington. After the war, he kept an Inn in the present village of Fultonville on the south bank of the Mohawk opposite Caughnawaga. The Inn was also a kind of halting-place for bands of western Indians who were on their way east to visit their great father at Philadelphia and afterward at Washington; and often at night the halls of the Inn would be so thickly filled with sleeping red-men that "mine host" could hardly pick his way among them. There was also a permanent encampment of Mohawks just beyond the Inn; while directly in its front there were several eel-weirs that the Indians had built in the river, one of which is still (1892) plainly to be seen. In 1795 that amiable and philosophical traveler, the Duke de la Rochefoucault Liancourt, on his way east from Niagara, tarried over night at the Inn. "The Inn," writes the Duke, in his Travels, "was crowded by people indisposed with the ague; and by Starin's account, numbers of travelers are daily arriving who have not escaped the tainted air of the Genesee district."

John Starin also led the choir in the old Caughnawaga stone church* (erected in 1763) in the Dutch

*This old stone church was torn down in 1865. It fronted east with its gable to the street. Its entrance was by a double door (as seen in the opposite engraving), and on a stone tablet over the doors copied in Low Dutch from Isaiah 2, 3, was the following sentence: "Komteyca, laett ons op gaen tot den bergh des Heeren, to den huuse des Godes Jacob: op dat hy ons leere van synce wegen, en dat wy wandele in synce paden." Translation: "Come ye, and let us go up unto the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." The steeple, as Mr. Jephtha R. Simms was informed, was built in 1795, and was on the north end of the road. It was graced by language when the congregation was under the ministrations of Rev. Abraham Van Horn. His grandson, the present John H. Starin (169), has now in his possession the two pew doors which belonged respectively to the Starin and Sammons families. These doors Mr. Starin keeps as most precious relics and memorials of "ye olden tyme."

John Starin was married, in 1780, to Jane, a daughter of Hendrick Wemple (or Wimple) of the manor of Schenectady. He died at his residence opposite Caughnawaga (now Fonda, N. Y.) on the 19th of February, 1832, aged 77 years, 5 months and 18 days. She died at Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 4, 1840, aged 88 years, 3 months and 2 days. Their children, with the exception of Henry Wemple, were all born at Glen, N. Y.

the farm dinner-bell of Sir William Johnson, which was purchased by several male members of the congregation and conveyed to it on a pole by friendly Indians. The bell weighed about 100 pounds, and bore this inscription: "S. R. William Johnson, Bart., 1774. Made by Miller & Ross in Elis. Town (Elizabethtown)." In 1844 it was fitted up as a classic school known as "Fonda Academy." It failed, however, to be successful, and was afterward converted into a private dwelling. In 1865, the owner of this ancient landmark tore down its substantial walls; and this old church was henceforth a thing of the past. Built before the Revolution, this old Caughnawaga Church had associations with the great political and religious struggles of Europe and America. "It had been the scene of Indian warfare; of sudden and secret attack by stealthy savages; of bloody forays which swept away the crops and cattle of feeble settlements; of assaults by the French, of personal conflicts which mark contests on the outskirts of civilization. It was the stronghold of our fathers during the Revolution. The missionary and the fur trader more than three hundred years ago floated by its position in bark canoes, and in these later days millions of men and women from our own country and from foreign lands, on canals or railroads, have passed by on their way to build up great cities and States in the heart of our continent." Indeed, there is no spot where the historian could have placed himself with more advantage when he wished to review in his mind the progress of our country to greatness, than the Old Dutch Church at Caughnawaga.

MEMORANDA.

The father of Jane Wemple (Wimple), the wife of John Starin, was Hendrick Wemple of Holland. He was born in 1720, and, emigrating to America, became one of the twelve proprietors of Schenectady township, or Manor of Schenectady, as it was at that time called. He lived in Charlestown (at that time in Tryon county, N. Y.), opposite Caughnawaga on the Mohawk river. He was a man of large-landed property, owning 1,000 acres at what is now Cooperstown, N. Y., 1,000 acres of the "Stone Heap Patent," in Charlestown, N. Y., and 1,000 acres at Schroon Lake,* now in Essex county, N. Y. He also owned the Island of Menawald, given him for services rendered as Indian interpreter to Generals Herkimer and Sullivan.

* Then called Lake Scarron, after the mistress of Louis XIV, Madame de Maintenon. For the circumstances under which it was named, see Stone's "Life of Sir William Johnson."

His daughter, Jane, was also one of the same Wemple family, who, together with the Fondas, Vroomans and Veeders founded, in 1761, the Dutch Church at Caughnawaga,* which stone church, erected in 1763, was pulled down in 1865. (See previous note.) She was a very neat old lady, and her grandchildren well recall the short gown (spun and woven by herself) that she wore, and its pockets, fastened by a string around her waist, and worn underneath the gown, which had to be pulled up whenever she wished to reach its contents. She always carried in it some tid-bit for "the boys." She had long survived the numerous atrocities which she had been compelled to witness; and being a keen observer, with a remarkably retentive memory, she had in store a thousand legends of that stirring period. Often, on a winter's night, while the flames went roaring up the huge chimney, and the fire-light merrily played among the fitches of bacon hanging from the smoked rafters overhead, she would—as she was knitting, for she was never idle—recount to her grandchildren gathered around, her many adventures in a newly-settled country, and the sufferings endured by herself and kindred when forced to fly on the approach of the savage hordes of St. Leger.

At the breaking out of the Revolution, the Wemple family, as may be inferred from what has been said, at once ranged themselves on the side of the Colonists, becoming the staunchest and most ardent Whigs in the Mohawk Valley. They were, together with Heinrich Staring (18), in the bloody fight at Oriskany, and, as a consequence of their zeal, were among those marked out by Sir John Johnson and Captain Walter Butler for the tomahawk and the fire-brand. Indeed, I have now before me, as I write, an old manuscript (handed down to me by my father), yellow with age and almost crumbling to pieces, on which (written more than a century ago) are inscribed in faded ink, the names of those who suffered for their patriotism during the raid of St. Leger, and among these names are those of the Wemple family.

* The Indian name, Caughnawaga, is said to signify "a coffin," which it received from the circumstance of there being in the Mohawk river opposite the village a large black stone, still (1892) to be seen, resembling a coffin, and projecting above the surface at low water.

REV. ABRAHAM VAN HORN.

This sketch of Domine Abraham Van Horn, for nearly half a century the beloved pastor of the old Caughnawaga church, was sent to me inclosed in the following letter from Mr. Frederic J. Starin :

“ WHITE WATER, WIS., January 18, 1892.

“ MR. WM. L. STONE :

“ Dear Sir — Your letter of the 14th inst. finds me at home, and I hasten to comply with your request that I should send you the obituary notice of our old ‘Domine’ Van Horn; by this means, perhaps, perpetuating the memory of the ‘good old man’ who baptized us all and was for so many years the spiritual guardian of our parents, and the companion of our grandparents. Many times have I with reverence and pleasure (for he was always very kind and affectionate with children) watched his venerable form and his old white horse and chaise approaching ‘our old home on the hill,’ in his periodical and regular visits to my grandparents, who were always ready to receive him with the kindest and sincerest expressions of affection and regard.

"On each Sabbath he would preach a Neder Dutch sermon in the morning and an English one in the afternoon, thus making a full day of worship for his people, who came with their conveyances many miles.

"On my last trip east but one I visited his grave, and here is his epitaph :

"'Rev. Abraham Van Horn. Born Dec. 31st, 1763. Died Jan. 5th, 1840. Ordained a member of the Dutch Reformed Church in 1790, and for upwards of 40 years had the pastoral charge of the Dutch Church of Caughnawaga, during which period he joined 1,500 couples in the bands of matrimony and baptized 2,300 persons.'

"'Ann Covenhoven his wife. Born Oct. 13th, 1767. Died Sept. 14th, 1840'

"It was published in the Montgomery Whig, a paper printed at Fultonville, N. Y., in 1840.

"Respt. yours,

"FRED'C J. STARIN."

"OBITUARY.

"Died at his place of residence in the town of Mohawk on Sunday morning, Jan. 5th inst., of a sudden illness, The Rev. Abraham Van Horn aged 74 years and 4 days. At an early age he enlisted in the service of his country, and endured the privations and sufferings incident to the times that tried men's souls. He bravely encountered the dangers of that period until the glorious termination of that struggle which resulted in our national independence.

"Having aided in securing the civil liberty we enjoy he put aside the implements with which he fought under the Star Spangled Banner, and took the armor of faith and righteousness and went forth to fight the good fight under the banner of the blood-stained cross of the lowly Jesus, for that peace which cometh from above, from that world eternal in the heavens.

"During forty successive years he was pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church in this vicinity. Of the success of his ministrations it is almost needless to speak, that he was pre-eminently successful is almost universally known.

"His talents and virtues were of a rare order; as a minister of Christ, as a husband, parent, neighbor, friend, counsellor and philanthropist he was a pattern for all. He has passed through almost every vicissitude of life and fortune, and in every situation he was found to be the same high-minded, virtuous, benevolent and amiable man. He possessed the faculties of his mind to the last moments of his existence, and until the day before his death was industriously engaged in the usual avocations of his life for the support of himself and family.

"He died as he had lived, the noblest work of God, an honest man.

"His last appeal was made to the relatives and friends who surrounded his bedside but a few moments before his immortal spirit took its flight, exhorting them to put their 'trust and confidence in God.' His funeral was attended on Monday, the 6th inst., at the Dutch Reformed Church at Caughnawaga, by a vast concourse of his relatives and friends, who assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to departed worth. A very impressive sermon was delivered on the occasion by the Rev. I. D. Fonda. Many of the audience could not restrain their tears, and sorrow was depicted on every countenance."

He was twice married, (1) about 1790, to a Miss Sterling, and (2) to a Miss ——. He died about 1859, nearly 100 years old, at the residence of his son, Adam, at Irving, Chautauqua county, N. Y.

Adam Staring, son of Henry (17), was born in what was then Montgomery county, N. MEMORANDA.

Adam Staring's wife was married twice before she married him. Her first husband was a Mr. Myers, by whom she had a son, Henry, who died some fifty years since, leaving descendants, who reside (1892) near Herkimer, N. Y. Her second husband was a Mr. Bellinger, by whom she had a son, John, who died some forty years since at Syracuse, N. Y. Her first and second husbands were killed in the War of the Revolution.

Adam Staring was married to his wife (the widow of Mr. Bellinger) by the Rev. John Peter Spinner, the father of the late distinguished Treasurer of the United States, the Hon. Francis E. Spinner — whose remarkable signature to the United States bank-notes attained a world-wide fame. Rev. John Peter Spinner was a priest from Baden, Germany, who becoming a Protestant, entered the ministry and came to this country in the latter part of the last century. He became pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church at Herkimer, in 1801. He gave his son, Francis E., a most thorough education, which laid the groundwork of the eminence to which he afterward attained. Mr. Francis E. Spinner and the father of the writer (Colonel William L. Stone) were old friends in their boyhood at Herkimer, N. Y.; and the late Thurlow Weed used to relate, with much gusto, an adventure which happened to Colonel Stone, Spinner and himself, the main points of which were, they breaking through the Frankfort bridge over the Mohawk with their team one cold winter's night, and being precipitated into the stream, on their return from a "Husking Bee."

Nicholas H. Staring, son of Heinrich (18), was twice married; first to Jane Dygert, and secondly to widow Talcot, formerly Mary Myers. He served, during the Revolution, as second lieutenant in the 5th Company (Captain Peter Bellinger's) of the 4th Battalion of the Tryon County Militia, Colonel Hanyoost Herkimer (a relative of General Nicholas Herkimer), commanding. After the war he was appointed to a first lieutenantcy in the regiment of which his father was colonel. His commission is dated the 8th of March, 1791.—Letter from Mrs. Frederick E. Burch of Schuylcr, N. Y., to the author.

* The records (preserved in the Secretary of State's office at Albany, N. Y.) do not show when this regiment was first organized. The "Council of Safety," on the 17th of July, 1777, ordered two companies of Rangers to be raised in the counties of Tryon, Ulster and Albany, for the protection of the frontier inhabitants. One of these companies (in which Jacob Staring (20) served as a private) was to be commanded by John Harper, with Alexander Harper as first lieutenant. Jane's husband, Luther P. Sterling (originally, Staring, but changed by him to Sterling), was her second cousin, he being the grandson of Adam, one of the brothers of Judge Heinrich Staring, his great uncle.

Nancy Staring, daughter of Heinrich (18), when a little girl of seven years old, was carried off by the Indians during the Revolutionary War. She had been sent to one of her father's relatives near Fort Herkimer, into which she could be sent for security in case of a sudden attack upon the settlement. The woman in whose charge she was left, allowed her to wander into a field near the house, where she was seized in a stealthy manner by the savages and taken into captivity. Judge Staring, it is said, was not very forbearing toward his relatives for this carelessness, as he fully anticipated his little daughter's fate in case her parentage should be found out by her captors. She was, however—more fortunate than Frances Slocum, the "Indian captive of Wyoming"—rescued after the close of the war, having endured a captivity of seven years. Family tradition relates that when she returned to her family she had become (as was the case, it will be remembered, with the "Wyoming captive") a complete savage in all her tastes and feelings—preferring to sit on the floor with her legs crossed, and eat alone rather than at table with the family, who, at first, were a little afraid of her. Her raven hair, also, had grown long and had been kept in regular squaw fashion. While with the Indians they were in the habit of selling, or rather pawning, her to the whites for liquor, contriving to steal her back again each time. Finally she was discovered in Canada by her relatives who, concealing her in a hogshead of feathers until the Indians had given up the search, brought her home and restored her to her parents. She afterward married John Doxtader.*

* This complete transformation of young English captives into full savages was not, in the early history of the Colonies, so uncommon as might at first be supposed. Besides Frances Slocum, Rev. John Williams, the "Deerfield Captive," states that in Canada—whither he was taken after his capture in 1704—he found several English children, captured the summer before, during the raid of the Abenakis on the settlements in Maine, "already transformed into little Indians both in dress and behavior." Indeed, Williams, himself, complains that his little daughter, Eunice, after being a captive among the Indians for two years, had forgotten all her English. This same daughter, Eunice, remained in the wigwams of the Caughnawagas, forgot her English, and in due time, married an Indian of that tribe, who, thenceforward, called himself Williams. Many years after, in 1740, she came with her husband to visit her relatives in Deerfield (Mass.), dressed as a squaw and wrapped in an Indian blanket. Nothing would induce her to stay, though she was persuaded on one occasion to put on a civilized dress and go to church; after which she impatiently discarded her dress and resumed her blanket. She and her husband were offered a tract of land if they would settle in New England, but she positively refused. She lived to a great age, a squaw to the last. One of her grandsons, Rev. Eleazer Williams, tried to pass himself off as the last Dauphin, son of Louis XVI. Joanna Keltogg, also taken captive at Deerfield, when eleven years old, married a Caughnawaga chief, and became in all points an Indian squaw. John and Zechariah Tarbell, captured when boys in one of these Indian raids on Massachusetts, became Caughnawaga chiefs, and one of them, about 1760, founded the Mission of St. Regis, Canada.—See Parkman's "Half a Century of Conquest," Little & Brown, Boston, 1892.

Charity Staring, daughter of Heinrich (18), was born in Schuyler, Herkimer county, N. Y., on the 17th of December, 1777. Her first husband was born December 9, 1773, and died December 31, 1814; and her second was born in 1770. She died at Schuyler, N. Y., in 1855. She was a lady much revered during her life for her many lovely and christian virtues, and was known as "Aunt Charity" the country round.

MEMORANDA.

John Fluskey, the husband of Charity Staring, was a gallant officer in the War of 1812. In the early part of that contest he served as first lieutenant of a troop in a squadron of the Fifth Division of U. S. Cavalry, and at the time of his death he was major of the third squadron of the Sixth Regiment of U. S. Cavalry. His lieutenant's commission, dated May 1, 1807, bears the signature of Gov. Morgan Lewis, and his major's, dated April 22, 1814, that of Gov. Daniel D. Tompkins. These commissions are now in possession of his granddaughter, Mrs. Emelio Puig of Brooklyn, N. Y. Major Fluskey was a high Mason, and his funeral is said to have been one of the largest and most imposing of any that had ever taken place in the Mohawk Valley.

Regarding their children, the following items are of interest:

A daughter of Charlotte Fluskey (Theodosia Curtis) married Rev. Charles Chaucer Goss of New York city, who was born at Bridgewater, England, in 1821. He was the first organizer of a movement having for its object the furnishing the army in the late Civil war with religious instruction and entertaining reading. He also traveled through the West, establishing Sunday-schools and visiting miners' cabins, and at the opening of the war, he joined the Evangelical Alliance. As superintendent of the People's Mission in the last thirty years he held religious services in parks and theaters, because he thought that people would go to such resorts who would not go into a church. He also held services in Barnum's Old Museum. He was, moreover, the author of "A History of American Methodism," "The First Century of American Methodism," "The Century Group," "The Founders of Southern Methodism," "Bishops of the M. E. Church," and other books. He wrote the hymn, "Safe in My Father's Arms," and at the time of his death, on the 22d of July, 1891, had almost completed a book which he called "What and Where is Hell," in which he expressed liberal views, believing hell to be in the individual. He was also finishing a song-service hymnal. He was a "located" minister, attached to St. Paul's Methodist Church. His wife, son and daughter survive him. He is buried in the family lot at Sparkill, Rockland county, N. Y.

John died in California, unmarried.

Catherine married Joseph Starin, a cousin. She is (1892) the only one of Charity's children now living. She resides at Frankfort, N. Y.; and one of her sons, Adam, who served in the late Civil War, resides (1892) at Silver Springs, Florida.

Lutitia, fifth child of Charity Starin Fluskey, and her husband, Almeron Porter Lincoln, were both born in the Mohawk Valley, the former in Schuyler, N. Y., and the latter, October 7, 1808, in the village of Little Lakes (Indian name, Wa-i-on-tha), Herkimer county, N. Y. She died January 14, 1863. He died April 12, 1855. He was known as Captain Lincoln, and was part owner of the Hudson River steamboats Francis and Rip Van Winkle. They were married in 1832.

Their children are: Almeron Porter, b. 1833, d. young; Helen Lincoln, b. June 3, 1835, m. Jacob Weeks, Feb. 17, 1857, and d. Dec. 15, 1857; one daughter survives, viz.: Emma, who was b. Nov. 27, 1857, and who m. Samuel Farrington of Yonkers, N. Y.; Emma, b. 1839, d. young; Emma Rosetta, b. May 9, 1841, m. Emelio Puig, Jan. 14, 1865; Mary E., b. Sept., 1843, d. young.

Mrs. Emelio Puig (née Emma Rosetta Lincoln), who is a lady of considerable literary ability, resides (1892) at 152 Hewes street, Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y. She was educated partly in the Flushing Normal College, and partly by private tutors—her parents sparing no expense on her education. Her mother, Lutitia Fluskey Lincoln, was a cousin of the late Matthew Starin (138) of Horseheads, N. Y., whose wife was also a sister of Mrs. Puig's father. These families are, therefore, doubly related. Mrs. Puig's husband, Emelio Puig (b. May 24, 1838, at Loretto, and brought up at Barcelona, Spain), is a Spanish merchant, who conducts a long-established commission business between Cuba, the United States and Europe, and is well and favorably known in New York business circles. The names of their children, who were all born in Brooklyn, N. Y., are as follows: Louisa Matilda Lincoln, b. March 20, 1867; Casimera (girl), b. Oct. 15, 1868, d. Dec., 1868; Casimero (boy), b. Nov. 23, 1869; Sophie E. L., b. Dec. 21, 1870, and Emma F., b. March 9, 1874.

Harriet, the daughter by the second marriage, had nine girls — no boys — and had forty grandchildren.

Nicholas A. Staring, son of Adam (19), married at Schuyler, N. Y., Adelia Cox. He was a man of some local prominence in his day, and was a juror, in February, 1834, in the celebrated case of "The People agt. Nathaniel Foster," for the willful murder of an Indian named "Drid." The court consisted of the late distinguished Hiram Denio, circuit judge, and Jonas Cleland, John B. Dygert, Abijah Osborn and Richard Herendeen (all of local celebrity); Jas. B. Hunt (district attorney), and Simeon Ford were counsel for the prosecution; and for the defense were no less distinguished counsel than John C. Spencer and Lauren Ford. The prisoner was acquitted; but the jurors came in for much adverse criticism. John C. Spencer, it will be recalled, was the Secretary of War when his son was hung at the yard-arm for mutiny by Commodore McKenzie of the man-of-war Somers. He lived and died in Schuyler, Herkimer county, N. Y.

Lawyer, Reed.

Catharine Starin, daughter of Adam (21), married (1) Frederick Lawyer, January 4, 1818; and (2) Ezra Reed. The date of her birth and death is entirely obliterated in the family record. Both of her husbands were from Danube, Herkimer county, N. Y.

56

John F. Starin, son of Frederick (22), was born at Glen, N. Y., January 6, 1773. He was a farmer, and was married at Glen (Charleston), N. Y., in January, 1792, to Hannah Hughtner, who was born in 1773. He was highly respected in the community; and was from 1816 to 1822 a deacon in Rev. Abraham Van Horn's church, and an elder in the same in 1828. He died October 9, 1847. She died December 22, 1850.

Jacob F. Starin, son of Frederick (22), was born at Charleston (Glen), N. Y., on the 20th of June, 1785. He was married in that village, on the 22d of December, 1804, to Harriet Schermerhorn, who was born at Schodack, N. Y., on the 8th of June, 1788. He died at Fultonville, N. Y., May 9, 1828. At the time of his death he held the office of elder in Rev. Abraham Van Horn's church. His comparatively early death was caused by an acute attack of dyspepsia, doubtless brought on by his changing the active and laborious life of a farmer for that of a "tavern-keeper," as all proprietors of houses of entertainment were then called. He survived this change in his occupation only three years, and but for it he would probably have lived—judging by the advanced lives of others of the family—forty years longer. His remains were subsequently removed to White Water, Wis., where they now rest beside those of his wife, who was living at that village with her son, Frederic, at the time of her decease, an event which occurred on the 22d of January, 1869.

Some thirty years since, he removed to Eden Prairie, Hennepin county Minn., where he still (1892) resides, with his son Miron Stanley (150). He was married on the 9th of May, 1833, at Houseville, Lewis county, N. Y., to Hannah Devoe, a daughter of Rev. David and Eve Devoe. Isaac Labah, to Chloe (daughter of Josiah and Mary Ann Kellogg Gaylord), who was born on the 11th of March, 1783. He died at Syracuse, N. Y., on the 3d of April, 1859. * Cobelskill has been written Coberskill, and Cobelskill as given in the text. In the laws, which record the formation of that town, it is spelled Cobelskill. It derives its name from a Mr. Cobel, who, at an early day, built a mill near Central Bridge. The Indian name of Cobelskill was Ots-ga-ra-gee. The late Jephtha R. Simms—that accurate and industrious historian of Schoharie county—is my authority for the above statement.

Joseph Starin, son of John (24), was born at Kinderhook Falls, N. Y., on the 29th of April, 1783. He began life as a merchant first at Fonda, N. Y., and then at Johnstown, N. Y., keeping also the first toll-bridge built over the Mohawk river, from which latter enterprise he is said to have derived a considerable revenue. Afterward, he removed to Bennington, Vt., where, until his death, he carried on a farm, and also a successful mercantile business. He was twice married; first to Maria Groat (sometimes written Groot) of Neskayuna,* Schenectady county, N. Y., and from whom he was afterward divorced, solely on the ground of incompatibility; and secondly, February 12, 1814, by the Rev. Mr. Marsh of Bennington, Vt., to

* Niskayuna is derived from the Indian term Nis-ti-gi-oo-ne, or Con-nesti-gu-ne, by which latter name it is known on the old maps. The term was also applied to portions of Watervliet and Half-Moon. It signifies "a field covered with corn." Upon its first settlement by the whites this place was occupied by a tribe of Indians known as the Connestijune. Neskayuna was visited in 1687 by a spy from the Adirondack nation — the allies of the French. Hunger drove him to the house of a Dutchman by the name of Van Brakkle, where he devoured a large quantity of pork and peas. On his leaving the house of his entertainer he was waylaid by Ron-warrigh-wok-go-ua, a Connestijune chief, and slain. Cutting off the head, the Connestijune chief repaired to the house of Van Brakkle and threw the head into the window, exclaiming to the horrified owner: "Behold the head of your Pea-eater!"— The late Giles F. Yates, in the SCHENECTADY REFLECTOR of 1835.

A. — a graduate of West Point, and who was in command of Fortress Monroe during the late Civil War. He died at Bennington, Vt., on the 8th of June, 1843. His first wife died at Fultonville, N. Y., on the 23d of May, 1844. His second wife, who was born December 20, 1797, died on the 29th of March, 1851, at Palmyra, N. Y., at the residence of her son in-law, Rev. Daniel Harrington.

MEMORANDA.

Joseph Starin's first wife, Maria Groat, was a relative of Lieutenant Petrus Groat, who was killed at the Battle of Oriskany, while fighting bravely under General Herkimer (See Stone's Brant). She was always held in high estimation by her children and grandchildren, who never failed to visit her regularly each year at Fultonville, N. Y., until her death.

His second wife, Calista Dimick (also spelled by some of the branches of the family Dimmick), was likewise a most estimable woman. She was descended, on both sides, from Puritan blood—her paternal ancestor, Thomas Dimmick, having emigrated to New England in the seventh, or last voyage of the Mayflower. Her father, Elias Dimick, of Bennington, Vt., who was an extremely conscientious and devout and godly man, never omitted rising at midnight to commune with his Saviour, and appropriated one-tenth of his income for religious and charitable purposes. Her mother, Lydia Warren Dimick, was also equally religiously minded. Brought up, therefore, amid such pious surroundings, it is not surprising that she was imbued with a noble and generous nature, which endeared her to all those with whom she was associated. On her decease, she was deeply mourned not only by her children but by her many friends who had, by long intimacy, become familiar with her lovely traits of character.

General Justin Dimick, the brother of Joseph Starin's second wife, was an accomplished officer; and his record during the late Civil War was, as above hinted, most creditable. On giving up the command of Fortress Monroe, upon entering the retired list, he turned over his command to his son-in-law, General J. Roberts, at the same time receiving the appointment of the Governorship of the Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C., a position which he held from February 8, 1864, to April 1, 1868. He died October 13, 1871, at the residence of his son-in-law, Major Parry, in Philadelphia, Pa., and was buried in Woodland Cemetery.

The following extract from a Philadelphia newspaper, in relation to his obsequies, shows the estimation in which he was held :

THE LATE GENERAL DIMICK.

The funeral of General Justin Dimick took place yesterday afternoon. A military escort was tendered by General Meade, but declined. Generals Bache, Crosman, Mordecai, Hachet, Van Vliet and Ruff acted as pall-bearers, and General Drum and Colonel Emory, in undress uniform, represented the staff of General Meade, the latter officer being absent from the city. The services were held at the Church of the Holy Trinity, and were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Davis of St. Peter's, who officiated at the burial of General Dimick's son. The body was interred in Woodland Cemetery.

The "Old Dimick Place" was about three miles out of Bennington, Vt., on the old stage road leading to Hoosick and Troy. The "Joseph Starin Farm" was separated from the "Dimick Place" only by the public road, and the houses on each farm were but a few rods apart.

Joseph Starin, who was full of anecdote, was wont to tell a story relating to a favorite slave, Cæsar, whom he owned when residing at Fonda, N. Y., before his removal to Bennington. The story is thus graphically told by his granddaughter, Mrs. Hiram Baker of Chicago, Ill., in a letter to the writer :

"Grandfather was the possessor of some very fine horses, among them one team which he valued highly, and in which he took great pride. The care of this pair, especially, devolved upon Cæsar, who had been particularly cautioned against taking them to the neighboring river (Mohawk) to drink through a hole in the ice, lest the ice breaking, their lives might be endangered by drowning. Cæsar, however, too lazy to bring water to the stable, paid little heed to his master's instructions, and one unlucky time the catastrophe so much dreaded was barely averted. On this occasion, while the horses were drinking through an air-hole, the ice suddenly gave way, plunging both team and Cæsar into the freezing stream. The animals finally succeeded, after much struggling, in reaching the bank, as did Cæsar, who had clung with frantic grasp to the tail of one of the horses until safe on terra firma; but a more frightened negro never was seen, and, for a time, his condition was most pitiable to behold. However, when often asked what would have become of him had the rapid current swept him under the ice, he would invariably reply: 'Oh! I'd come out somewar down dar by Pete Fonda's,' there being at this place another opening in the ice some two miles below."

Myndert Starin, son of John (24), was born at Glen, Montgomery county, N. Y., on the 31st of May, 1786. His parents gave him a good education, and personally nurtured the promising characteristics of the lad. He was the first regular mail-carrier in that section of the State, and was also engaged in trading successfully on the frontier. When war was declared against Great Britain in 1812—although ill at the time of the draft, he refused exemption on that ground, and enlisted and served bravely throughout the war. Four years after his discharge, he began business at Johnstown, N. Y., and in 1819, extended it by taking a building at Sammons ville. Here he greatly enlarged his business, and with such success, that in the year 1827, he was enabled to change his residence to Fultonville, N. Y., a new village which had lately been taken off the town of Glen, and which was the business center for many miles around. This village, in connection with Thomas Robinson, he had founded and had named it Fultonville, in honor of Robert Fulton. At this place the partners ran a flour-mill, distillery, paper-mill, an ashery, saw-mill, blacksmith shop, nail factory, and a factory for carding, spinning, weaving and cloth-dressing by the aid of water-power supplied by a little canal from the Mohawk river. These multifarious operations required employes, and the village grew and extended. As completed under the eyes of Messrs. Starin & Robinson, its business facilities included, in addition to those already named, a warehouse and dry-dock, boat-yard and basins, and a plaster-mill. He also, like his son, John Henry (169), engaged in the passenger and transportation line, and owned several row-boats, built expressly to carry some twenty passengers each from Utica to Schenectady. These boats, which were tastefully fitted up and curtained, were in use on the Mohawk river from 1810 to 1815. They were called "river packets," and three of them were named the Myndert Starin, Jacob Lasher, and Rob Roy.

Upon the completion of the Erie canal — in which project he was of much assistance to his personal friend, Governor DeWitt Clinton, its originator, and to Colonel William L. Stone, Governor Clinton's right-hand man in the project — the value of his property was greatly enhanced. He also, like his father, took great interest in church matters,* and there is yet (1892) a lady, Mrs. Van Haagen, living in Chicago, Ill., who, so Mrs. Hiram Baker writes, vividly remembers Myndert Starin leading the singing in the old Caughnawaga stone church, in the German and Dutch languages in the morning, and in English in the evening.†

In 1810, he married Rachel, a daughter of Thomas and Maria Sammons of Johnstown, N. Y., the latter of whom was born September 4, 1767. He died February 8, 1845. She died September 4, 1855.

Its place should have been in the Memoranda under John (24), but the records of the Caughnawaga church were received by the author after the sketch of John had been printed. Here is the extract:

"Minutes of meeting of Consistory.

"Caughnawaga, Feby. 21, 1803. The consistory of this congregation convened at the house of the Rev. Abraham Van Horne. Having examined the accounts of John Starrin and John C. Davis, & being fully satisfied, the said John Starin & John C. Davis have delivered unto Evert Yates and H. G. MEMORANDA.

To Sampson Sammons, the grandfather of Myndert Starin's wife, belongs the honor of having had fired at him the first shot in the War of the American Revolution, west of the Hudson. The occasion was as follows: A Tory sheriff, by the name of White, had, on some trifling pretext, arrested a Whig by the name of John Fonda and committed him to prison. His friends, under the conduct of Sampson Sammons, went to the jail at night and released him by force. From the prison they proceeded to the lodgings of the sheriff and demanded his surrender. White looked out from the second story window, and, probably recognizing the leader of the crowd, inquired, "Is that you Sammons?" "Yes," was the prompt reply, upon which White discharged a pistol at the sturdy Whig, but happily without injury. The ball whizzed past his head and struck in the sill of the door. This, as we have stated, was the first shot fired in the War of the American Revolution, west of the Hudson! Nor was the part played by his son Jacob in these troublous times of less moment. At a public meeting, called to sympathize with those slain by the British at Lexington, among the Whigs present on that occasion were Sampson Sammons and his two sons, Jacob and Frederick. The meeting, which was held at the house of John Veeder, in Caughnawaga, was attended by about three hundred people, who assembled unarmed for the purpose of deliberation, and also to erect a liberty pole—the most hateful object of that day in the eyes of the loyalists. Before they had accomplished their purpose of raising the emblem of rebellion, the proceedings were interrupted by the arrival of Sir John Johnson, accompanied by his brothers-in-law, Colonels Claus and Guy Johnson, together with Colonel John Butler and a large number of their retainers armed with swords and pistols. Guy Johnson mounted a high stoop and harangued the people at length and with great vehemence. He was very virulent in his language toward the disaffected, causing their blood to boil with indignation. But they were unarmed, and for the most part unprepared, if not indisposed, to proceed to any act of violence. The orator, however, at length became so abusive, that Jacob Sammons, no longer able to restrain himself, imprudently interrupted his discourse by pronouncing him a liar and a villain. Johnson thereupon seized Sammons by the throat and called him a “damned villain” in return. A scuffle ensued between them, during which Sammons was struck down with a loaded whip. On recovering from the momentary stupor of the blow, Sammons found one of Johnson’s servants sitting astride of his body. A well-directed blow relieved him of that incumbrance, and springing upon his feet, he threw off his coat and prepared to fight. Two pistols were immediately presented to his breast, but not discharged, as Sammons was again knocked down by the clubs of the loyalists and severely beaten. On again recovering his feet, he perceived that his Whig friends had all decamped, with the exception of the Fondas, Veeders and Visschers. The loyalists also drew off, and Jacob Sammons returned to his father's house, bearing upon his body the first scars of the Revolutionary contest in the County of Tryon!—See Stone's "Life of Brant," vol. I, pp. 52, 107.

Jacob Sammons' grandson, moreover, the late Colonel Simeon Sammons of Fonda, N. Y., during the late Civil War, equipped, put in marching order, and conducted to Harper's Ferry, eleven hundred men in twenty-nine days. When Colonel Sammons reached Washington and was asked the usual question what he had come for? instead of expressing, as many did, a desire for easy quarters near the Capitol, he answered "to fight, by—"; and as evidence of the sincerity of his purpose and that these were not mere empty words, he brought home, after the war, two bullets in his body. Again, at the springing of a mine in front of Petersburg, Va., he leaped over the parapet, and, though his foot was shattered by a bullet, caught the standard and planted it in triumph over the works of the enemy.

Frederick Sammons, son of Sampson, also served under General Gates at the Battles of Saratoga, and bore himself throughout that campaign as a brave and gallant soldier. He was, moreover, together with Nicholas Stoner (See Simms' "Border Warfare") at the side of General Arnold when that officer was wounded at the Brunswick Redoubt.—See Stone's "Burgoyne's Campaign and St. Leger's Expedition."

Nicholas Hanson's son Hendrick, was the first white child born in the Mohawk Valley west of Schenectady on the north side of the river (Barber and Howe's Historical Collections of New York State). The descendants of the Hansons are to be found to this day (1892) in this region of country. When, on the 20th of May, 1780, Sir John Johnson's party passed through Tribes Hill on their descent upon Cherry Valley, Henry (Hendrick) Hanson, who was a zealous Whig, was among those who were murdered.

He also built two steamboats on Lake Erie—the Indian Queen, lost in 1845, and the Waterloo, burned in 1850. From the time of his adventure on the Caroline he was known as "Captain Starring." He was twice married: first, at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1832, to Adeline Morton Gould, who was born at Fredonia, N. Y., in 1810; and secondly, at St. Charles, Kane county, Ill., in 1858, to Mrs. Symantha Collins. He died in 1862, at St. Charles, Ill. His first wife died at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1854.

His first wife's eldest sister, Esther Williams, married Sherman P. Whalley, a direct descendant of Edward Whalley, the "Regicide," who, on fleeing to this country, was hidden in a cave near New Haven by William Leete, at that time the Royal Governor of Connecticut. One of Colonel Stone's best stories is founded on this incident.

occupation of his father before him, he early in life gained a high local reputation as one of the most intelligent and practical farmers in the Mohawk Valley, a reputation which he maintained until his death. He was, moreover, a man of much shrewdness of character, and was credited with many original sayings, one of which was, in speaking once of an improvident neighbor, that "nobody could guess how his family was clothed and fed, but by supposing that the habit of eating, drinking and wearing clothes was, like all other habits, when once fixed, not to be shaken off!" He was married at Root, Montgomery county, N. Y. (formerly Charleston), on the 19th of May, 1825, to Catherine Diefendorf (a daughter of Judge Henry J. Diefendorf), who was born on the 22d of January, 1806, at Currytown, N. Y. He died October 8, 1881. She died April 3, 1883.

Frederic Jacob, son of Jacob F. (58), was born at Glen, N. Y., on the 17th of April, 1821. His profession was that of canal and railroad engineering and land surveying until 1872, though previous to his adopting that profession as his life work, seven years were passed by him in learning the science of rudimentary agriculture in the Valley of the Mohawk. Since the year 1872, his business has been altogether in connection with the land department of the Canada and North-west Railroad Company at Chicago. He is, like his second cousin, John Henry (169), a gentleman of fine presence, having a striking "Starin" physiognomy. He resides (1892) at White Water, Wis. He was married at Glen, N. Y., August 24, 1843, to Jane Maria Groat. She was born April 25, 1821, and was a daughter of John Groat of Glen, N. Y., and a niece of the first wife of Joseph (68).

MEMORANDA.

Mr. Frederic Jacob Starin, like his second cousin, John Henry (169), has always taken a deep interest in the genealogy of the Starin family. This is shown by the following extract from a letter, written in a semi-humorous vein, to the author :

"It has always been a source of regret to us, that nothing of our ancestry beyond our grandparents seemed to be authentically known. We were always traditionally aware that 'Uncle Frederick' and 'Uncle Johannes,' as they were familiarly known to us children, were brothers. The former lived on his farm, on the upland south of the Mohawk river, from 1770 until his death, having retired from the laborious and fatiguing life of a navigator of that classic stream, an occupation which he had pursued during his early manhood, and apparently until rather late in life. The latter lived at a well-known spot on the south bank of the same historic stream, within the limits of what is now Fultonville ; and furnished entertainment for the people traversing the valley, either as voyageurs upon the river boats ; or as travelers upon its banks in stage coaches and other vehicles, for many years.

"By reference to my Holland Testament, Matthew ii:2 : 'Zeggende: Waar is de geboren Koning der Joden? want wij hebben ghezien zijne STERRE in 't Oosten, en zijn gekomen, om hem te aanbidden.'

"Again I. Korinthe xv:41 : 'Eene andere is de heerlijkheid der zon, en eene andere is de heerlijkheid der maan, en eene andere is de heerlijkheid der STERRIN ; want de eene STER verschilt in heerlijkheid van de andere STER.'

TRANSLATED.

'There is one glory of the sun, and another of the moon, and another glory of the STARS ; for one STAR differeth from another STARIN, glory !'

"Again Hebrean xi:12: 'Daarom zijn ook van eenen, en dat van eenen verstorvene, zoo velen in menigte geboren als de STERREN des hemels, en als het zand, dat aan den oever der zee is, hetwelk ontelbaar is.'

"Again Judas 13: 'Wilde baren der zee, hunne eigene schande opschuimende; dwalende STERREN, voor welke de donkerheid der duisternis in eeuwigheid bewaard wordt.'

"Again Openbaring xii:1 (Revelation): 'En er werd een groot teken gezien in den hemel: namelijk eene vrouw, bekleed met de zon; en de maan was onder hare voeten en op haar hoofd eene kroon van twaalf STERREN.'

"The idea of sending you the above selections from the Holland Dutch (or Neder Deutz) Testament, was suggested to me on perusing Webster's references in his definition of the word 'Star' and finding none given in the Holland Dutch, to which nationality most of our people with whom we have had intercourse supposed we legitimately belonged, e. g.: He gives Dane, or Swiss, 'STIERNNA;' German, 'STERN;' D. (Dutch), 'STAR;' Armenian, 'STEREN;' Bengal and Persian, 'STARA;' Saxon, 'STIORRA.' This last being the only possible and yet confessedly remote excuse or even apology for 'STAURING' or 'STORING,' as most of the past generations with whom we have had intercourse, have evidently written it for reasons best known to themselves.

"One German by the present name of STERN, of which there are a great multitude in the West, said there was no relation whatever between our and his name, as his signified a STAR of Heaven, and ours a bird or a fish. To-wit: STORK — STARLING — or STAR fish. His must have been a fallen STAR, while from what we know of ourselves and what we find in the above selections, our STAR is in the ascendant and may it never be dimmed!"

Mr. Frederic Starin's wife was a descendant not only of Petrus Groat, who fought under General Herkimer (see ante), but of the Groat who, in 1730, built the first mill north of the Mohawk on the site of the present Cranes' Village. This mill for many years served the settlement at the German Flats fifty miles distant.

Matthew Starin, son of Adam (59), was born at Frankfort, N. Y., on the 13th of September, 1811, and moved to Horseheads, N. Y., in 1852. His occupation was that of a farmer; but he was also a justice of the peace for several years, and held from time to time other offices of trust and responsibility; filling all of them to the thorough satisfaction of his constituents. He was, moreover, personally, highly esteemed by all who knew him, and his acquaintance was a very wide one. He was married, in 1838, by Edward Davis, a justice of the peace at Frankfort, N. Y., to Adeline Lincoln, a daughter of Colonel Joseph Lincoln of German Flats, N. Y., and a lineal descendant of Stephen Hopkins, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. She was born October 14, 1816, at Warren, N. Y., and died in Horseheads, December 21, 1887. Mr. Starin resided until his decease at Horseheads, on the old homestead adjoining the farm on which were piled up the skulls of the horses killed by General Sullivan, in his memorable campaign in the summer of 1779 against the Six Nations—hence the name of “Horseheads.” On the 12th of February, 1892, Mr. Staring was stricken with paralysis; and on the 27th of the same month, a second stroke carried him away—tenderly ministered to by his children and grandchildren until the end. His death has prevented the author from obtaining much information of “ye olden tyme,” which would, undoubtedly, have proved of very great value, not only to the history of the “Starin Family,” but also to that of the Mohawk Valley—as he had always taken a great interest in family tradition. The local newspaper of Horseheads contained a feeling and appreciative obituary of him.

MEMORANDA.

A Sacramento newspaper contained the following obituary notice of Henry DeWitt Staring:

"The sad news has reached us of the death of Henry D. Staring. He was a loving husband and kind father, and his demise will be regretted by a host of devoted friends. Some few months ago, consumption in its most virulent form took a firm hold upon him, and finished its fatal work at three o'clock yesterday afternoon. He was patient during the period of his excruciating sufferings, never complaining. He left behind him a fond wife and four children to mourn his loss. The funeral will take place from his late residence, corner Eleventh and G streets, at four o'clock to-morrow afternoon. Mr. Staring was an old resident of this city, having arrived here in '49. Subsequently, however, he went East, but returned in 1876, when he entered into business, and just before his sickness he was engaged as storekeeper in the bonded warehouse corner Eleventh and B streets. He was scrupulously careful in his work, and studiously honest in all his dealings. Simple in his manner, he charmed by his affectionate nature, and a fitting tribute to his memory would be an epitaph, 'Pause, stranger, here lies a saint.'"

Adam Luther Staring, son of Adam (59), was born at Frankfort, N. Y., October 11, 1826. He married Sarah Wintermute of Horseheads, N. Y. He, also, was one of the "Forty-niners," or pioneers to California, and accompanied his brother, Henry DeWitt (143), to California in that year. They both sailed from New York on the 29th of January, 1849, in the bark William Ira, commanded by Captain Hall, a native of Vermont. After a prosperous voyage, they landed in the Bay of San Francisco, July 6, 1849, and among the first persons they met were a David Staring and his brother from Little Falls, N. Y. He remained in California for some two years, when, leaving his brother, Henry DeWitt, he returned to the East and engaged in business at Horseheads, Chemung county, N. Y. After a residence there of nine years he removed to Saginaw, Mich., where he remained from 1862 to 1883. He then took up his residence in Utica, N. Y., where he is (1892) engaged in the mercantile business.

She is unmarried and resides (1892) at Hinsdale, La Page county, Ill. (near Chicago), in the family of her relative by marriage, Mr. Edward K. Gordon. She takes a lively interest in the family genealogy, and, as stated in the Introduction to this work, has furnished the author with much valuable information.

John Kellogg Starin, son of Henry Wemple (67), was born in Guilderland, Albany county, N. Y., on the 14th of June, 1808. He was married, July 10, 1839, in New York city, by the Rev. Josiah Nelson Starin, son of Henry Wemple (67), was born at Guilderland, Albany county, N. Y., on the 9th of December, 1810. He has always led a very active life. At an early age he entered his father's store in Esperance, Schoharie county, N. Y. (whither his parents had removed), and from 1833 to 1873 was engaged in banking, being connected with the Madison County Bank in Cazenovia, N. Y., as teller and book-keeper, from 1833 to 1836, and teller of the Cayuga County Bank in Auburn, N. Y., from 1836 to 1840, when he was made cashier and director, which positions he held until 1873, when he resigned. In 1876 he removed to New York city, where for four years he held a confidential position in the main office of John H. Starin (169), in the management of his financial matters, during the latter's four years' absence in Congress. In 1883 he removed to Philadelphia, since which time he has occupied himself chiefly in taking care of his late brother's lands in Iowa, Wisconsin and Missouri, and has, consequently, spent much of his time in the West. It may also be added, as an item of interest, that Mr. Starin, during the term of his clerkship at Auburn, N. Y., was offered the cashiership of the old Bank of Utica, of which the late Hon. William J. Bacon and Hon. Horatio Seymour were directors. This offer—though strenuously pressed upon him—he declined. Subsequently, he was urged to accept the position of manager of the San Francisco branch of Wells, Fargo & Co.'s business at a salary of $10,000 per annum — to the stock of which company he was one of the original subscribers, owning one-tenth of the original capital stock in common with Henry Wells, William G. Fargo, E. D. Morgan, Henry Morgan and others. This position of manager he also declined, as his business interests at Auburn were of greater value, and, therefore, preferred.

Mr. Starin was married at Cazenovia, N. Y., on the 18th of May, 1835, by the Rev. Mr. Kellogg, to An-delucia, daughter of Nicholas and Esther Candee Henry of Cazenovia, who was born at Smithfield, Madison county, N. Y., on the 4th of April, 1813. She died, November 22, 1891, at Germantown, Pa., and is buried at Auburn, N. Y. He still survives (1892), at a green and hale old age, and lives at 101 East Upsal street, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

Josiah Nelson's wife, Andelucia, was a descendant of the celebrated orator of Revolutionary fame, Patrick Henry of Virginia. Her father's name was Nicholas Henry. Her parents were originally from New Jersey, but they removed from that State to the town of Galway, Saratoga county, N. Y., and afterward to Smithfield, where she was born; from thence to Cazenovia, in Madison county, N. Y., where her father died, and where she met and married Mr. Starin. All of her family were of Revolutionary stock — Americans to the core — and the male members of the family did valiant service, fighting on the side of the Colonists during the War for Independence. Her father, William Henry, was a second cousin of the author's uncle by marriage, William Henry, who died in 1852, in Wisconsin

Joseph Henry Starin, son of Henry Wemple (67), was born at Esperance, N. Y., on the 20th of June, 1813. He married, in 1845, Frances Maria Ball of New York city, a descendant, it is believed, of Mary Ball, the mother of Washington. He died December 6, 1882, at Los Angeles, Cal. No children.

Somers, to Laura Littlefield, daughter of Ira and Sarah Mitchell Floyd of New York city, on the 15th of October, 1845. When a young man he went to Syracuse and engaged in business with his father, and in 1852 entered the employ of the New York Central railroad in that city. When the Lake Shore road was opened, he became its general freight agent at Buffalo, remaining there four years. In 1857 he came to New York and engaged in the commission business at No. 98 Park Place, where he continued until his death, which occurred at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. George Moser (No. 8 Monroe street, Brooklyn), on the 29th of March, 1892. He is buried by the side of his wife in Cypress Hills Cemetery. He had lived in Brooklyn for eighteen years. His wife, who was born on the 11th of May, 1829, at 59 Beekman street, in New York city, also died in Brooklyn on the 1st of January, 1888.

Myndert William's wife was a grand niece of that eminent and distinguished scientist, Dr. Samuel Latham Mitchell. Dr. Mitchell, it will be recalled, was the person appointed "to mingle the waters of Lake Erie and the Nile with those of the Atlantic," on the occasion of the Erie canal celebration, in 1825, delivering also the address on that occasion. He was also a passenger on the first passage up the Hudson made in the Clermont by Robert Fulton. He was a United States Senator from New York State; and after his retirement from that office visited Russia in the interest of science — on which occasion he was presented by the Czar, Nicholas, with a massive ring — an heir-loom which is still in the possession of the Mitchell family.

Elijah Gaylord Starin, son of Henry Wemple (67), was born at Esperance, N. Y., on the 18th of November, 1822. 160*Gardenier.*

Jane Starin, daughter of Joseph (68), by his first wife, married, in 1825, Charles Gardenier of Glen, N. Y., a descendant of Jacob Gardenier of Mohawk, N. Y., who served as captain of the 1st Company in the 3d Battalion of the Tryon County Militia under General Herkimer at the Battle of Oriskany. She was born at Glen on the 22d of February, 1805, and died at Fultonville, N. Y., on the 4th of April, 1865.

He, together with Jacob Gardenier, was present at the sacking of Sir John Johnson's camp, and both were publicly complimented at the close of the battle in the "Order for the Day," by Colonel Marinus Willett. See Stone's Brant.

Elias Warren Starin, son of Joseph (68), by his second marriage, was born at Fultonville, N. Y., on the 29th of June, 1816. When a young man he was associated in the mercantile business with Erastus Charles Starin (157), and, subsequently, he engaged in the same pursuit at Boston, Mass. In 1833 he went to Milwaukee to look around, but only remained there for three months. Finally on his marriage, on the 23d of April, 1851, he removed with his wife to the beautiful little village of White Water in southern Wisconsin, a village almost like Goldsmith's "Sweet Auburn, loveliest village of the plain." Here he bought a fine farm, on which he resided until his death, pursuing the business of a dairy man, and of raising a choice breed of Spanish merino sheep. Their home was a most lovely one, and was only broken into by the deaths of himself and wife, which occurred within three months of each other. He married on the 23d of April, 1851, at Peterborough, N. Y., Mrs. Philena Clark Cooper, who was born on the 20th of April, 1818. He died at White Water, Wis., February 10, 1888. Mrs. Philena Clark Cooper, the wife of Elias Warren Starin, was the daughter of Asa and Sarah Clark, and was born April 20, 1818, in Eaton, Madison county, N. Y. On her mother's side she was a direct descendant of the celebrated John Winthrop, the third Governor of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay. On her father's side she was descended from one of the Puritans who came over in the Mayflower. Her father was born at Cape Cod, and both himself and his brothers were sea-faring men. She resided in Madison county, N. Y., until her seventeenth year, when her parents removed to Port Gibson, N. Y. She received her education at the then justly celebrated Canandaigua Seminary.

Evalina Elizabeth Starin, daughter of Joseph (68), by his second wife, was born on the 9th of May, 1818, at Johnstown, N. Y. She was married on the 11th of September, 1839, at Bennington, Vt., to the Rev. Daniel Harrington (a Baptist minister) of Hartford, Conn. At the age of 18 she graduated from the Bennington Female Seminary, and three years later became the bride, as stated, of the Rev. Daniel Harrington, then a young minister. To him she was throughout his life a devoted help-meet, and during his continuous exertions in many fields of labor, he always had her kindly sympathy and active co-operation. She became a member of the church in her fourteenth year, and was baptized by the Rev. Steven Hutchins, by whom, seven years afterward, she was united to her husband, who twenty-four years later joined the silent majority. Energetic and untiring as Mrs. Harrington was in the work of the church—for, a veritable Dorcas, she was a leader in the various missionary and other benevolent and religious societies—it was especially in the home-circle that her Christian virtues unconsciously shone the brightest. As a wife and mother she constantly sought to render her home attractive by all those domestic excellencies which a true woman knows so well how to adopt. Utterly unselfish, her highest pleasure seemed to consist in ministering to the happiness of the loved ones around her hearth-stone, and those whose privilege it was to be present on those occasions will long recall her sprightly ways, her silvery laugh and her many endearing ways, which gave zest and charm to whatever occupied the passing moment. Idolized by her children, she was their inseparable companion and friend—a relationship which was maintained until the last hour of her life. For their comfort and happiness she was ever thoughtful. Charitable also to a degree that had not the slightest thought of self, she always had a kind word for the unfortunate; and her many acts of benevolence will be remembered only by the beneficiaries, for none else was cognizant of them. In her, in a singular degree, was emphasized the scriptural injunction: "Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth." Indeed, by those few who were admitted within the circle of her friendship her memory will long be treasured; and no one who knew of her unobtrusive but effective charities, her ministrations of love, and her own religious convictions, confided to those who shared her confidence, can doubt that when, ere yet she was conscious of having entered the shadow, the veil which hides the unseen world was gently lifted, her heavenly Father's hand was extended to take her to Himself.

" Her walk through life was marked by every grace ;
 Her soul sincere ; her features void of guile ;
 Long shall Remembrance all her virtues trace,

She died at the residence of her son, Elmer C., near Chicago, after a lingering illness of eighteen months, August 30, 1884. He died, September 16, 1865, at Chicago, Ill. Both are buried at Rose Hill, Chicago.

MEMORANDA.

REV. DANIEL HARRINGTON, D. D.

Rev. Daniel Harrington, the husband of Evalina Elizabeth Starin, was born on the 7th of July, 1812, at Arlington, Vt. He began his ministry at White Creek, Washington county, N. Y. ; was subsequently settled for five years at Bridgeport, Conn. ; at Palmyra, N. Y., for ten years ; at Batavia, N. Y., for five years, and at Battle Creek, Mich., for twelve years. He was also an active member of the board of trustees of Kalamazoo College, until a few months before his death, when he resigned voluntarily to one who could thereafter, as he thought, better serve the cause. In all his varied fields of labor he was blessed with revivals, and he has left those believers, who attended on his words, well-grounded in the truth, and in intelligent sympathy with the Christian enterprises of the day. He was, moreover, from principle, a strong anti-slavery character, having from early manhood deeply sympathized with that poet who quaintly wrote :

“ To doom their human herds with thankless toil,
Like brutes, to grow and perish on the soil ;
Their sole inheritance, through lingering years
The bread of misery and the cup of tears,
The tasks of oxen, with the hire of slaves,
Dishonored lives and desecrated graves.”

And long before, as well as during the years preceding the Civil War, his influence was exerted both publicly and by his pen in behalf of the oppressed. He was, likewise, so unassuming in character that, on two occasions, he refused the degree of D. D., first from Hamilton College, N. Y., and secondly, from Kalamazoo College, Mich.

The Michigan Christian Herald in an obituary notice thus summarizes the chief traits of his character:

“ Almost from his boyhood he had loved to preach the Gospel — studying the pages and the doctrines of scripture with a lively zest, and delighting in proclaiming their teachings. Nearly, if not entirely, all of the New Testament, and large portions of the Old, he had expounded in the churches. He was a ready and able preacher, when special occasions summoned him to a vigorous use of his resources and powers. It is much to the loss of Zion that his circumstances did not always allow and encourage the best use of his gifts, and develop to the full his capabilities. But the Lord's talent gained in him, if not the ten, yet the five talents more, and he has not missed, we believe, the ‘ Well done, good and faithful servant.’ ”

"His nature was strongly and most genially social. And a seeming forwardness in society showed itself on closer and long-continued intimacy as but the vent of his intense honest delight in social communings. We have been with him in the vale where as true humility and self-abasement gave their quiet light, as are often seen in the ministry. He was charitable to attribute to mistaken judgment or inconsiderateness what was hardest for him to bear, and the church and people of God had his changeless love and ever prompt defense. From our companionships we miss a friend, and from all our works a zealous helper. Humanity mourns a lover and defender of its rights, and the country an ever-faithful patriot citizen."

In fine, in the words of the poet Lawson :

"There rests

A man of God, for heaven was his on earth,
A friend of man, for all the world he loved;
A hero, for he smil'd at death,
And died to live forever."

Regarding their children the following particulars are of interest :

Daniel Galusha, who was born September 6, 1841, at Bridgeport, Conn., was married to Louise Heilback at Knox, Ind., by Rev. Mr. Chapin of that place, July 17, 1883. His wife was born in Chicago, February 12, 1859, and received her education in Cologne, Germany. They have one child, viz.: Eva Louisa, born September 20, 1884, at Chicago, Ill.

Elmer C., who was born February 2, 1845, at Palmyra, N. Y., was married at Chicago, to Sarah M. Buchanan, by Rev. E. J. Goodspeed, D. D., of that city, November 1, 1871. His wife was born July 11, 1850, in Chicago, and was the daughter of Scottish parents—her father, John Burns Buchanan, being from Glasgow, and her mother, Elizabeth McGilvray, from Inverness. She died September 25, 1884, and is buried at Graceland, Chicago. They had three children, viz.: Elmer G., born August 18, 1872; George W., born July 15, 1875, and Sadie Eva, born August 3, 1877, died April 1, 1881.

Eva Calista, who was born August 9, 1850, at Palmyra, N. Y., was married at Chicago to Hiram Baker, July 12, 1890, by Rev. Alonzo K. Parker, D. D., of that city. Mrs. Baker takes a very great interest in every thing relating to her own and the Starin family, and has now in her possession a five dollar gold piece, of the date of 1807, and as bright as when it first came from the mint, which was the first money given to her grandmother, Calista Dimick, by her husband, Joseph Starin, after their marriage. Mrs. Joseph Starin always cherished it as an invaluable keepsake, and as such, gave it to her daughter, Mrs. Harrington, by whom it was presented, in turn, to her daughter, Mrs. Baker. Her husband, Hiram Baker, born July 18, 1834, at North Bridgewater, Oneida county, N. Y., was the son of Elisha Baker and Nancy Rhodes Baker, who was a direct descendant of Count de Rhodes. Mr. Baker came to Chicago, first in 1857, but did not take up his permanent residence in that city until 1862. From that time up to 1885, he was an active member of the Chicago Board of Trade, in which year he retired upon a moderate competency, and now employs his time in looking after his real estate situated in Chicago and its vicinity. They have (1892) no children.

John Whipple was born February 19, 1854, at Batavia, N. Y., and died at Battle Creek, Mich., November 23, 1855.

Laura Alida was born at Battle Creek, Mich., March 4, 1857. She was married to Joseph Hubert

Smith, at Chicago, March 1, 1877, by Rev. Galusha Anderson, D. D., the pastor of the Second Baptist Church of that city. Her husband was born at Bonn, Germany, April 6, 1850. He was the son of Johann Von Schmidt (Professor in the University of Bonn), and of Anna Francesca Schamborn, a lady of high literary attainments, and of fine musical ability. Her son has inherited from her a gift for music, and is the possessor of a well-cultivated tenor voice. They have had one child.

Henry Justin Dimick Staring, son of Joseph (68), by his second wife, was born at Bennington, Vt., on the 14th of December, 1834. He changed his father's and family name (Starin) to Staring shortly before his marriage; but what were his reasons for this action are not known, either to his widow or to his son, Mason Brayman. Attracted by the vast opportunities of the "Great West," he came to Chicago in early manhood and entered into the employ of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company. He was the inventor of our admirable American system of baggage checking; and it was solely through his ability and efforts that it was brought up to its present efficiency. He was "general" baggage agent for more lines and more miles of railways than any other man ever has been; and withal, he was known for his goodfellowship and kindness of heart wherever in the United States a railroad reached. The effects of these traits were such that, in the year 1870, he had charge of the entire baggage service from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast along all the main trunk lines, such as the Pennsylvania, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific railroads. He was warmly attached to his relative, John Henry (169), and never failed to visit him when in New York city. He married Alida Marguerite Tower, September 15, 1857, at Delavan, Wis., Rev. Daniel Harrington, her connection by marriage, performing the marriage ceremony. He died at Chicago, May 12, 1884. His widow, who was born at Monmouth, N. J., December 1, 1835, lives (1892) with her only child, Mason B. Starring.

Delancey Dublois Starin, son of Myndert (69), was born at Johnstown, N. Y., on the 6th of August, 1817. He was married at Fort Plain, N. Y., on the 17th of June, 1850, by the Rev. C. G. McLean, D. D., to Emeline Frances Wagner, who was born at Fort Plain on the 3d of February, 1823. He removed to Glen, N. Y., in 1836; thence, in 1852, to New York city; and, in 1868, to Malden-on-the-Hudson, where he died November 2, 1866. For many years he carried on a lucrative commission business in New York city.

MEMORANDA.

The wife of Delancey Dublois was the daughter of Joseph Wagner, Jr., who died at Fort Plain on the 13th of June, 1855. Joseph Wagner's wife was a Miss Minerva Riggs, who died in that village on the 21st of September, 1842.

Maria Starin, daughter of Myndert (69), was born on the 29th of May, 1819, and married, in 1845, Charles B. Freeman. She died, April 6, 1880. He resides (1892) at Syracuse, N. Y. They had two children, both of whom died in infancy.

Jane Starin, daughter of Myndert (69), was born at Glen, N. Y., January 23, 1822. She was a bright and beautiful girl, with blond hair and laughing blue eyes and of an extremely sweet and lovable disposition. She was of a very sprightly temperament, always full of fun, and was the life and soul of her circle of friends. About a year previous to her death, she contracted a severe cold which, terminating in a decline, resulted fatally on the 29th of December, 1841, at Fultonville, N. Y.

She was, indeed, a lovely daughter, whose understanding it was her father's delight to cultivate, as it was her mother's to superintend her accomplishments; and dark was the sorrow that overshadowed the household when the beloved daughter was taken away by death.

"There was an open grave—and many an eye
Looked down upon it Slow the sable hearse
Moved on—as if reluctantly it bore
The young, unwearied form, to that cold couch
Which age and sorrow render sweet to man."

She is buried at Fultonville, N. Y., in a little rustic graveyard, where the lingering rays of the setting sun fall with a softened radiance upon the mound which marks her last resting place.

Thomas Starin, son of Myndert (69), was born at Glen, N. Y., November 10, 1823, and married September 27, 1829, Sabrina Vedder of the same place, who was born September 27, 1827. He died in New York city, June 23, 1881. She died at Fultonville, N. Y., April 23, 1881. All of their children were born at Fultonville, N. Y., and all died there except James Henry, who is still (1892) living.

John Henry Starin, son of Myndert (69), was born at Sammons ville, N. Y., August 27, 1825, and was baptized by Dominie Abram Van Horn, so long the beloved pastor of the old Caughnawaga church. His father and mother were married in 1816, by Rev. Dominie Van Horn—the latter baptizing all her children. When quite young, he was sent to the primary department of the district school, where he mastered the rudimentary branches of a classical education, which was continued at the Academy of Esperance, N. Y. It was while here, and while studying ancient and modern history that he conceived as his ideals Julius Cæsar and Napoleon Buonaparte — the two greatest characters, as he still believes, of either ancient or modern times ; and choice paintings of those two great men now adorn his library.

After completing his academic course, he removed to Albany for the purpose of reading with the late Dr. C. C. Yates. Changing his mind, however, regarding his fitness for the medical profession, he determined to adopt a mercantile career. In this he was materially aided by his brother, Delancey, who, learning of his change of plans, engaged him at once as a clerk in his drug store at Fultonville, N. Y. It was not long, however, before he owned it ; not long, again, before his restless ambition, strengthened by success, made a bolder move practicable. This was no other than his removal to New York city, for the purpose of manufacturing and selling a valuable proprietary medicine. He accordingly came to that city with his young wife, Laura M. Poole, a niece of a prominent merchant of Fultonville, N. Y., and a daughter of John H. Poole of Oriskany, N. Y., to whom he had been married on the 27th of January, 1846, by the Rev. John M. Van Buren, at that time pastor of the Caughnawaga church. In a year, his success was assured ; and before long he is found declining an offer of a partnership in a leading drug house in New York. When thirty-four years of age, in 1859, Mr. Starin made the experiment which proved the most important of his enterprises, and one which was, indeed, the foundation of his future fortune. This was no less than the establishment of a general agency for the railroads. A friend provided him with the opportunity of laying his scheme before a prominent railroad official, who was so much struck with it that he immediately made an arrangement with its projector. This agency was from the first a great success. Two years after coming to New York, Mr. Starin had sold one business and was developing another to an extraordinary degree. The War of the Rebellion gave him the opportunity of placing his business capabilities at the service of the Government, and of undertaking the transportation of military stores of all kinds at a great reduction from the rates previously paid. This was done, moreover, more from a spirit of patriotism than from love of gain; and the same sentiments which actuated his ancestors in throwing off the yoke of the mother country controlled him in this. Indeed, the first United States flag raised in the Valley of the Mohawk after the firing upon Fort Sumter was the one which he unfurled from the roof of his house at Fultonville. His promptitude, likewise, on one occasion during the Civil War prevented the loss of a large body of men at a remote point from literal starvation.

In nine years from the beginning of his agency business Mr. Starin had made contracts for the handling and lighterage of freight with all the principal railroads running into the city of New York, from which beginning he continued to advance, until now (1892) he is, without question, the largest individual owner in the carrying trade—including transportation and express companies, both foreign and domestic—in this country. Indeed, the steamboat and freight lines of Mr. Starin, his immense business establishments and receptacles for freight on our river front, are too familiar to Gothamites to need more than a passing mention. But in the business community his famous energy, his skill in the handling of gigantic contracts, the wonderful system which signalizes every branch of his vast business, are the admiration of railroad and steamboat men. His talent for organization was conspicuously shown at the centennial celebration of 1889, when, in the grand display of our naval force and merchant marine on the North and East rivers, he was intrusted with the arrangement and conduct of the latter division of the pageant. It is also a fact in his favor that should not be forgotten by Mr. Starin's townsmen that when the holding of the World's Fair in 1892 was proposed, Mr. Starin offered to guarantee on behalf of the owners of steam transportation in this harbor that at least $500,000 would be subscribed by them alone toward the successful consummation of the enterprise. Subsequently, he entered upon the passenger and excursion business, which, it is believed, is now three times more extensive than was that of his railroad agency. A noticeable feature in his life was the very interesting centennial cruise made in the steamer John H. Starin, whose noble-hearted owner covered the entire expense of the eleven days' trip, the enjoyments of which were participated in by the associates of his younger days and the leading commercial men and statesmen of this and neighboring States. In the same year also, the Thomas Collyer of Mr. Starin's fleet made her memorable trip with the Governors of the various States — the guests of the New York Chamber of Commerce. Both of these trips were in the highest degree successful; and the days thus spent will long be remembered by all who were privileged to enjoy them.

Besides the enormous "plant" of his vast establishment and his fleet of vessels, steamboats, tugs, propellers, lighters, barges, car floats, grain boats, floating elevators and dry docks, Mr. Starin is a large real estate owner here and elsewhere. The famous Glen Island, one of Mr. Starin's hobbies, is beautifully situated opposite New Rochelle, on Long Island Sound. It was formerly called Locust Island. Having first purchased it with a view to a summer residence, the artistic eye of Mr. Starin at once perceived that by industry and by a lavish expenditure of money its natural beauties could be rendered the most eligible of all the places adopted for excursions in the neighborhood of New York. The main island, which contains fifty acres, is shaded by maple and locust trees, and is the site of an elegant mansion, formerly occupied by the Prussian consul. There are also four smaller islands. This mansion is the center of unrivaled attractions, and was completed at a cost of $70,000. It is surrounded by lovely grounds, embellished with pretty alcoves and hot-houses, and contains fish-ponds, bathing facilities, bowling alleys, billiard-rooms, etc. Tired citizens find welcome repose and recreation amid such lovely surroundings. This island, moreover, overlooks Long Island Sound — always an interesting contemplation, both from the number and variety of the passing vessels and the exquisite beauty of its shores. Mr. Starin, within the last year, was offered $1,500,000 for the Glen Island property, by an hotel syndicate, which he refused.

Mr. Starin is a man of tall and fine presence, with a handsome and a well-poised head. He has, moreover, a genial face, lighted with the kindest eyes, the true index of a noble, tender heart, which delights in kindly and benevolent actions. Such, for example, are the yearly free excursions which he gives to the veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, the poor women of the Five Points, the police, firemen, and the newsboys of New York city—the latter under the direction of Mr. O'Connor of the "Newsboys Home"—kindnesses which have greatly endeared him to the recipients of these generous acts.

In the same spirit, also, he has lately established a benevolent "Industrial School" (giving the building at a cost of $3,500) at Fultonville, N. Y., and is (1892) engaged in founding one on the same basis at Fonda, N. Y. He, moreover, on December 14, 1882, gave a choice library to the "Soldiers' Home," at Bath, N. Y. On this occasion, in presenting the library, Mr. Starin made one of those neat and appropriate speeches for which he is so celebrated.

In commenting upon it, a local paper gave the following account:

"The Hon. John H. Starin's war library was presented to the Soldiers' Home here to-day. In 1880 the Grand Army of the Republic, at their semi-annual encampment, appointed a committee to prepare and present to the Hon. John H. Starin a testimonial in recognition of many kindnesses he has extended to veteran soldiers and sailors. At Mr. Starin's request, however, the money appropriated for the purpose ($800) was devoted to the purchase of 400 volumes of books relating to the Rebellion, and a suitable case for containing them. The presentation ceremonies took place in the Chapel, in the presence of fifty guests, and inmates of the Home, and were presided over by General Slocum, President of the Board of Trustees, who referred in a most complimentary manner to Mr. Starin's action in diverting the testimonial from himself to the uses of the old soldiers, and said that the library would add greatly to the attractions of the Home, and be a great comfort to the veterans in their declining years. The inmates approved these remarks with loud applause. General Henry A. Barnum of New York, chairman of the Grand Army of the Republic Testimonial Committee, gave the history of the library project, and spoke in most enthusiastic terms of Mr. Starin's many acts of kindness to soldiers, and the families of dead soldiers, and said he was most justly called the soldiers' friend. His remarks were loudly applauded. Mr. Starin then presented the library to the Home in the following speech :

“ It is not my purpose, as it certainly is not my forte, to make a speech. I desire only in briefest form to state the reasons which suggested to me the idea of this library. It had come to my knowledge the Grand Army of the Republic of our State was about to offer me a testimonial of their appreciation. The intimation of such an intention on the part of so large, so influential, and so respectable a body could not be other than gratifying to me. Actuated by a genuine regard for the veterans, I had in a quiet way given some excursions to those who were within reach of the Metropolis, and to the representatives from the State at large. In Congress I had taken pleasure in looking after the pensions of deserving applicants, especially those whose age or necessities entitled them to a speedy adjustment of their claims; in all my acts I have endeavored to give expression to what is still my firm, though I fear, my not quite fashionable belief, that the men who fought to maintain the Government are worthy of more honor than those who sought to destroy it, and that other things being equal, those who can show the scars of battle deserve a preference over those who have never suffered for their country.

“ Some years ago a handsome testimonial was presented to me by the soldiers and sailors who had participated in veterans' excursions; I then remarked that I should have preferred to see the money that it had cost invested for the poor widow or orphan children of a soldier. I accepted it, however, for the kindly feeling it expressed, and to-day, it is an ornament of my home, of which I am justly proud. When this second offer came from the entire Grand Army of the Republic of the State, it occurred to me that I might accept the honor and still donate the gift, so that the soldiers should themselves get the benefit of every dollar of it. My suggestion that the amount intended for a testimonial to me should be invested in a library devoted to the literature of the war, to be placed in the Home of the Brave of New York, met with the approval of your committee. Subsequent appropriations have swelled the original gift until to-day it is my good fortune to present to you a case of books that does credit to the donors, and yet is, I trust, only the nucleus of a much larger library to be secured in the future. It will recall the scenes in which you have nobly played your part. It embalms the memory of the heroes whom you cherish. The transfer of it gives me more pleasure than I can tell, more pleasure than to be the recipient of any similar gift intended solely for myself. One more word and I have done — I thank the representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic for their many expressions of regard for me. They have honored me with the title of the 'Soldier's Friend.' I trust I may always do all in my power to deserve so proud a designation.'

"The speech was received with enthusiastic applause by both veterans and guests. General Slocum, on the part of the Board of Trustees, read the following resolution of thanks which the Board had adopted just previous to the ceremonies :

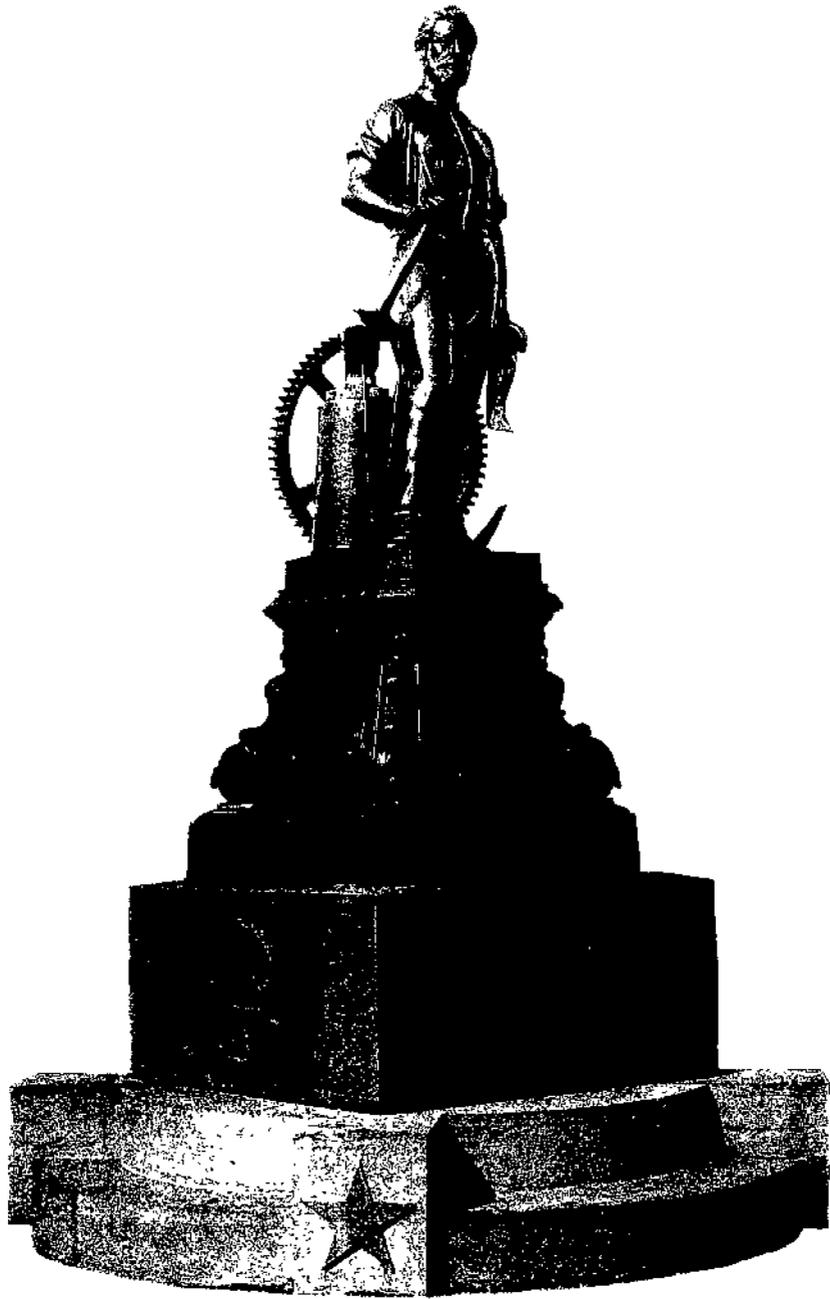

"WHEREAS, The New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home has recently received through the generosity of the Hon. John H. Starin a valuable library and book-case.

Resolved, That the Board of Trustees gratefully accept the same, and hereby tender to Mr. Starin and the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, who aided in the selection of the books, the sincere thanks of the Board and of the inmates of the Home.

Resolved, That the Board will preserve the library with the greatest care consistent with the use for which it was designed." *

Mr. Starin's tastes, also, are of the most simple and domestic character. He loves country life with its healthy and ever-varying changes; and often, when harassed and worn out with the cares and anxieties of business, he becomes, for the nonce, a second

* Admirable speeches were also made on this occasion by Colonel Willard Bullard of New York, General W. T. Rogers of Buffalo, General J. B. Murray of Seneca Falls, the Rev. S. Nichols of Bath, and the Rev. J. M. Foster of Waterloo, which were received with enthusiasm. At the conclusion of the ceremonies, General Slocum, on the part of the Board of Trustees, invited the assembled guests to a collation which was spread in the library-room. On motion of General J. B. Murray, the assembled members expressed their most cordial approval of the Board of Trustees of the Soldiers and Sailors' Home, and thanks for the generous reception of their representative. Mr. Starin and other guests then made a tour of the Home buildings with General Slocum, and they expressed themselves greatly pleased.

Mecaenas, and flies for rest to his charming country seat, which is situated on a picturesque elevation overlooking the historic village of Fultonville, and commanding long vistas of the classic and beautiful Valley of the Mohawk, which his ancestors did so much to develop. Upon this property he has built a stately homestead — a large structure of brick with marble trimmings, having an observatory thirty feet high from the roof — surrounded by many acres laid out into lawns, walks, drives and flower gardens, and embellished by commodious green-houses filled with many semi-tropical plants, graperies, fish-ponds, a deer park, artificial water-falls, a race track, bowling-alley and gymnasium, together with a number of pieces of statuary in bronze and marble.

A farm of fourteen hundred acres surrounds this beautiful mansion, laid out in grounds in the immediate vicinity of the house, which grounds are freely thrown open to the public, many thousands of whom visit it during the year. A portion of these fourteen hundred acres is devoted to an extensive and admirably managed stock-farm, where not only is some of the choicest stock in any racing or trotting stud to be found, but far better than this from a humanitarian point of view, its care and conduct give employment to numbers of the industrious among the rural population of the neighborhood.

In the center of these pleasure grounds rises a beautiful monument, which he has erected to "American Progress and Civilization." On the western side of the monument, carved in alto rilievo is seen the stalwart form of a Mohawk Indian. His face is turned toward the setting sun and bears a weary and hunted look, as if he were being driven further and further west by American civilization. On the eastern side, are various emblems, such as a printing press, railroads, steamboats, etc., showing the methods by which the aboriginals were driven westward. At the time of the erection of the monument, Mr. Starin made an exceedingly appropriate and admirable address, which will be found in Appendix II.

Mr. Starin's position among the merchant princes of the world has been gained by his well-trained and naturally far-sighted comprehension of his plans, his rapid perception of means to ends, his wonderful method and accuracy, and unflinching persistency. To these qualities should be added high-mindedness and honor, a genial and generous disposition, and a dignity and firmness which insures him the thorough respect and affection of his employees. No man, in fact, was ever more beloved and treated with greater veneration. Nobility and affectionateness of heart, combined with the nicest sense of honor, are the elements in Mr. Starin's character to which his success in life is chiefly to be ascribed.

Another trait of Mr. Starin's character is his remarkable reverence for the traditions of the past. He cherishes every memento of such a nature. For example, not to speak of his having kept the doors of the old Caughnawaga church—to which mention has been made in the sketch of his grandfather, John (24), when that church was torn down in 1865, he placed its belfry, as a cupola, over an old barn one hundred years old, which stands on his estate. He also took some of the stones of this same old church and made them a part of one of his farm buildings.

Again, he secured the bell of the steamboat which first ploughed the waters of the Hudson; and like the old Egyptians who embalmed the sacred Bull, he has preserved the skull of the first cow he ever owned.

Mr. Starin's public life, which of itself forms a most important episode in his career, began with his appointment as postmaster of Fultonville, N. Y., in 1848, under Polk's administration — an office which he satisfactorily exercised until 1852. In 1876, he became a congressional candidate on the Republican ticket in the twentieth district, New York, a district comprising Montgomery, Fulton, Hamilton, Saratoga and Schenectady counties. He was elected, served his term, and being renominated by the Republicans in 1878, was re-elected to the Forty-sixth Congress by an increased vote. The majority was 7,000, and when it is remembered that the district has rarely, if ever, given more than 3,000 Republican majority, the great popularity of Mr. Starin becomes apparent. During both of his terms his congressional career was uniformly marked by consistency, moderation, sagacity and an unswerving fidelity to his party. Both while in Congress and since, he was the intimate and valued friend of the late Presidents Grant, Garfield and Arthur; and after their elevation to the presidency, he was frequently consulted by them on affairs of great national moment. His advice, on these occasions, was always highly prized and often taken.

Before the Forty-sixth Congress finished its session he was urged to accept a third nomination. No more fitting exposition of his general political views can be given than the following letter to Mr. A. C. Churchill of Schenectady, N. Y.

“NEW YORK, July 3, 1880.

“MY DEAR SIR.—Your communication of the 1st inst., in which you are good enough to express a warm desire that I should consent to become a candidate for re-election to Congress from the twentieth district, has been duly received. In reply, I must say to you, as I have to other esteemed friends, that I have fully determined not to seek for a renomination. Further than this I will say to you frankly, that I would not accept the position were it tendered to me. At the same time, however, I beg to assure you in the most positive terms that I am deeply sensible of the obligation which your kind confidence and that of my other friends has placed upon me. For the generous support which I have heretofore received from the citizens of my district—support which has in many cases been given without regard to political predilection—I shall ever feel profoundly grateful. In the same connection I may be permitted to add that throughout the congressional terms which I have served it has been my aim to so act that I might deserve the approval of intelligent and right-minded men of my own and other parties. If I have succeeded in this my highest ambition is gratified, and I shall esteem myself more than compensated for any sacrifice of personal business interest which attention to my public duties has involved. If it be the verdict of my constituents that I have not neglected the trust which they reposed in me I shall be satisfied.

“But without regard to my own feelings in the matter, I have noticed that there is among Republicans everywhere a growing sentiment in favor of rotation in office. I can see no public or party necessity which calls for an exception in my case. There are a number of staunch men and true Republicans in the district who desire and deserve the place which I have held for two terms, and who would discharge its many responsible duties far more acceptably than I have been capable of doing. These, my dear sir, are my chief reasons for declining the honor which you and other lenient friends would confer upon me.

“In conclusion let me say that I regard the coming political canvass as being in many respects the most important we have ever known. Some of the most momentous questions which ever presented themselves to a free people must be decided by it. I trust, more earnestly than I can express, that they may be decided well and wisely. It is, perhaps, unnecessary to add that in my opinion the best interests of the Union demand the success of the presidential ticket nominated by the Republican National Convention. The work of our great party, the party of progress, of enlightenment and liberty, is not yet complete. It will not be complete until every citizen of the United States is able to freely cast his ballot and is assured that when cast it will be fairly counted. The prosecution of this work may be safely committed to the hands of James A. Garfield and Chester A. Arthur. Believing this, and even though my own place in the contest will be that of a private in the ranks, you may rest assured that I will spare no honorable effort which may tend to complete Republican success.

"I remain very truly yours,

"JOHN H. STARIN."

Since 1880, Mr. Starin has been the honored president of the "Saratoga Monument Association," having succeeded in that office the late lamented Horatio Seymour. This office, which he fills with rare dignity and honor, is highly congenial to his patriotism, as well as thoroughly consistent with the Revolutionary blood which flows in his veins from his grandfather, a soldier under Washington. In fact, it is extremely doubtful whether the imposing shaft which now marks the site of the surrender of Burgoyne on the plains of Saratoga (now Schuylerville, N. Y.), would to-day be an accomplished fact to tell in granite and in bronze of the heroic deeds and sufferings of our ancestors, had it not been for the efforts of John H. Starin. He it was who first made the object of the Association possible by procuring, while in Congress, an appropriation of $30,000 from the general government for the erection of the monument; while, by his good judgment, sound advice and unswerving and unselfish personal efforts, he has contributed largely to the economical manner in which the funds of the Association have been made to accomplish their purposes.

To sum up: Mr. Starin's character, his acquaintance with business on a large scale, his patriotic instincts, and the generous breadth of his political views, as well as his innate modesty—all indicate his eminent fitness for the highest positions in the gift of the people, whether in his own State or in connection with the Federal government. Indeed, he has often been most strongly urged to accept the nomination for Governor of New York—his native State—and has, as many times, sorely disappointed his warm and enthusiastic personal and political friends, by declining—and this too, where, with his high character and popularity, a nomination was tantamount to an election. He is also a member of all the various literary, social, political and civic associations of the day. Of these among many others may be mentioned: President of the Saratoga Monument Association, member of the New England Society, the Holland Society, the St. Nicholas Society, the New York Chamber of Commerce, the New York Produce Exchange, the Arion Society, the New York Riding Club—of which his son-in-law, Hon. Howard Carroll, is president,—the Lawyers' Club, the Down Town Association of New York city, the Saturday Nights' Club, the Arthur Memorial Association, Knight Templar of the Utica Commandery, honorary member of the Oneida Historical Society, the New Rochelle Yacht Club, New York State Agricultural Society, National Association of Horse Breeders, Montgomery County Agricultural Society, New York Jockey Club, American Legion of Honor, Albany Burgesses Corps, the Starin Benevolent Industrial Association of Fultonville and Fonda, N. Y.; American Museum of Natural History, New York; New York Athletic Club. He is also a trustee of the New York "Rapid Transit Commission," trustee of Union College, New York; one of the committee of "one hundred" (selected by Mayor Grant) to go to Washington to secure the World's Fair for New York; one of the "one hundred citizens" to meet at Albany the remains of General Grant; chairman of the committee to erect a statue to his warm personal friend, President Arthur; one of the originators of the movement to erect a statue in New York city to General Sherman; trustee of the Grant Monument Association; one of the committee of "one hundred" for the "proper celebration of the Discovery of America by Columbus"; and one of the chief contributors to the "Gladstone Memorial"—giving to this fund, one day's profits of Glen Island—which amounted to the handsome amount of $2,200.

MEMORANDA.

A pleasing incident, illustrating John H. Starin's patriotism, occurred in the summer of 1891 at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. This was the gift by that gentleman of a bronze bust of Governor Horatio Seymour to the "Saratoga Monument Association" — its former president. In the absence of Mr. Starin, who was unable to be present, the bust was presented, on his behalf, to the association, by its secretary, William L. Stone. On this occasion Mr. Stone said :

"In presenting to the association, on behalf of our respected president, a bronze bust of its former president, the late Horatio Seymour, a brief sketch of the latter seems appropriate — a sketch not of his public and private life, but of his relations with the Saratoga Monument Association.

"As one of its original incorporators, and for many years its vice-president and president, his connection with it was not merely nominal or confined to verbal platitudes expressive of general interest in its welfare. From the very beginning his efforts were most assiduously devoted, both by his pen and on the platform, to creating a public spirit in favor of the objects of the association. These efforts, moreover, were begun and persevered in for many years before the recent centennial celebrations all over the land had become the fashion and made such efforts comparatively easy; and, when, consequently, it was downright "uphill" work to create a public sentiment in favor of monuments of any kind, no matter how patriotic and praiseworthy the deeds they were designed to commemorate. The effects of this continued effort on Governor Seymour's part were at length apparent, when, in procuring the several National and State appropriations, his name was always used to conjure with and as a rallying cry for patriotic men of all parties in advocating these measures. He delivered, it will be remembered, one of the chief orations at the laying of the corner-stone of the monument, and contributed most liberally not only toward the expenses of that celebration, but to every thing designed to further our success; and, when he became too feeble to act longer as our president, he summoned me from New York to his bedside at his home in Deerfield, near Utica (chosen partly on account of its overlooking the Oriskany battle-ground), for the purpose of tendering his resignation. On this occasion, after giving me, at my request, various valuable suggestions for the final completion of the monument, he stated that he had requested my personal presence chiefly to beg of the association that John H. Starin should be tendered the position of president made vacant by his resignation. This, he urged, should be done not only in recognition of Mr. Starin's successful efforts in procuring from Congress the $30,000 appropriation by which the idea of a monument had been crystallized into a hard and solid fact, but because he thought that the interests of the association could not be confided to worthier or abler hands. Governor Seymour at this time also spoke to me in substance as follows:

"Mr. Stone, the election of Mr. Starin, descended as he is from an old Revolutionary family in the Mohawk Valley, nearly all of whom suffered for their patriotism in their persons and fortunes during St. Leger's raid — would be eminently fitting, being a worthy tribute to a most patriotic man."

"Hence, Governor Seymour being one whose memory Mr. Starin 'delighteth to honor,' has had this classic bust, now before you, made by one of America's well-known and best sculptors, Mr. George E. Bissell — the same who fashioned the heroic statue of General Gates, which now stands above the portals of the monument.

"I, therefore, have now the high honor to present the Saratoga Monument Association, on behalf of President Starin, with the bust of our late revered president, Horatio Seymour, which, as you will perceive, is a most life-like likeness. Alas! how often have we all of us seen its original seated in this very room and at the very table where now stands his simulacrum:

"Sure the last end
Of the good man is peace — how calm his exit!
Night dews fall not more gently to the ground;
Nor weary, worn out winds expire so soft!
Behold him in the evening tide of life!
A life well spent, whose early care it was —
His riper years should not upbraid his green;
By unperceived degrees he wears away —
Yet, like the sun, seems larger at his setting."

This gift, so long as bronze endures, shall perpetuate the generosity and high patriotic spirit of two noble men; and, as future visitors to the monument shall read the name on this bronze tribute, so shall they, perchance, recall the words of Cicero, uttered on a somewhat similar occasion

"His ipsis legendis, redeo in memoriam mortuorum." "On reading this I bring myself back to the memory of the dead."

This beautiful and classic gift was accepted, in behalf of the trustees of the SARATOGA MONUMENT

ASSOCIATION, by Colonel David F. Ritchie in the following eloquent remarks :

" Mr. Chairman: Permit me, on behalf of the 'Saratoga Monument Association,' to acknowledge this fitting gift from a most generous hand. Mr. Starin, the president of this association, has given to us in enduring bronze, the similitude of one who honored the association in accepting the presidency of it, and to whom it is indebted for much of the success that has attended its efforts during the vicissitudes of its history. Mr. Seymour always exhibited, as Mr. Starin has done, the liveliest interest in this association and its work up to the hour of his death; and no more grateful tribute could be paid to his memory by his successor, Mr. Starin, the president of this association, whose absence we deeply regret, than is furnished in this life-like memorial, fashioned by the deft hand of so skilled an artist as Bissell; and I offer, Sir, as a minute to the proceedings of this meeting of the association: 'That we gratefully acknowledge and receive from John H. Starin this noble bronze bust of Horatio Seymour to be placed in the Monument at Schuylerville.' "

At the conclusion of these remarks, the following resolution was unanimously passed :

" Resolved, That the 'Saratoga Monument Association,' appreciating most deeply this classic gift of their honored president, John H. Starin, tender him their most hearty thanks for the same, and unite in the belief that the donor will remain enshrined in the hearts of the patriotic public, so long as the bronze which perpetuates the features of their late president shall endure. We also congratulate him in having selected a sculptor who has reproduced such a wonderful life-like image of the original. "

But, if Mr. Starin gives busts commemorative of merit, others can do the same.

About two years ago it occurred to a number of gentlemen who were visitors at Mr. Starin's ideal summer home, that it would be a good idea to present to it impersonally a bronze statue of its founder, to be erected upon the place and remain in the custody of a representative of the Starin family, to be chosen by the donors. To carry out this idea Mr. George E. Bissell, the distinguished sculptor, was called upon; and the result was the modeling and casting of a bronze statue of Mr. Starin, which is in every way a work of art. The figure is eight feet high, and is supported by a pedestal of Quincy granite ten feet high and ornamented by reliefs in bronze of "Commerce," "Legislation," "Agriculture" and "Public Works." The pedestal is upon a base of rough and massive field stones four feet high, and the effect of the work, placed as it is upon a commanding knoll in the midst of extensive and well-kept grounds, is most attractive. This fitting tribute, to their friend, was presented by Frank Hiscock, Geo. C. Clausen, Joel B. Erhardt, Henry W. Schmidt, Henry F. Dimock, Charles C. Clausen, Elihu Root and Howard Carroll, gentlemen whom it is needless to state have achieved distinction either in legislation, the law, commerce or literature.

On Tuesday, October 7, 1890, Mr. Starin being in Europe, the donors assembled around the statue, and at the appointed time were joined by Mrs. Starin and her children and grandchildren, together with the Hon. Joel B. Erhardt, Collector of the Port of New York; the Hon. Edward Wemple, Comptroller of the State of New York; the Hon. A. J. Dittenhoefer, Mr. Henry W. Schmidt, Mr. E. E. Gedney, Mr. Ormand G. Smith, Mr. George E. Bissell, the sculptor; the Hon. Elihu Root, the distinguished jurist; and Mr. Howard Carroll, all of whom had traveled from New York for the purpose of being present. Judge Dittenhoefer introduced Elihu Root, who, upon behalf of his associates, made the following happy speech of presentation :

"Ladies and Gentlemen: We all know how common an occurrence it is for individuals and communities to say very good things about men who are dead, to write epitaphs of fulsome praise, to chisel in marble heroic sentences of adulation, when they can give no glow of satisfaction, inspire no throb of gratification in the heart of the man whose memory is commemorated.

"Some of the near personal friends of Mr. Starin, friends who know him best and consequently appreciate him most highly, have recognized the fact that of all the actors in this busy, struggling nineteenth century life of ours, no one is more filled with the vitality of energy, work and progress than he; and so it seemed eminently proper to them that they should express their thought regarding him and say what they had to say of him while he is alive. And they determined to express their thoughts in bronze. His characteristic modesty would, I am afraid, have prevented the carrying out of this project if he were in this country. But he is now traveling in foreign lands, enjoying a period of much-needed and well-deserved rest, and his friends take the opportunity, without his knowledge, to present impersonally to Starin Place, which his genius and industry has created, this representation of himself. They do this in the hope that when he returns he may find in it an evidence of the esteem in which he is held. Long may it stand to fittingly commemorate the lovely and lovable character of the man whom it well portrays."

As Mr. Root ceased speaking Miss Marguerite Spraker, Mr. Starin's youngest granddaughter (a sunny-haired and charming lass of eight summers), cut the string which held the American ensign round the statue and it dropped to the ground, revealing the well-known form and features of the gentleman whom it was designed to represent. Then, in response to Mr. Root, Hon. Howard Carroll, whose wife, it is perhaps needless to state, is the youngest daughter of Mr. Starin, upon behalf of the family, accepted the statue in the following address:

"If, Mr. Root, ladies and gentlemen, if this magnificent statue of its founder were presented to Starin Place solely because of any merit he may have as a personality, only because of any distinction he may have achieved as an individual, it would, from my point of view, be neither modest nor seemly for his representatives to say more than that they were profoundly grateful to over-generous friends for the high honor and esteem in which the head of their house was held by those friends.

"But I am sure from what I know of the motives which have controlled and which underlie this presentation, that while the gentlemen who make it have for Mr. Starin respect, regard, awe, even affection, deep seated, heartfelt and sincere, nevertheless they had in mind in the erection of this bronze not so much the man, as the grand type of American citizenship of which we can claim with all modesty that he is an example.

"If any man may say he is an American, he may make that claim. He was born among these Mohawk hills, as was his father, and his father, and his father before him. The conditions under which they lived and under which his early life was passed did much to mold him to that type of manhood which we honor to-day.

"His childhood was not an easy one. Their lives were spent fighting for life.

"Just think of it! Less than one hundred years ago this valley, this very spot upon which you have erected the choicest product of a Parisian workshop, though brought into being by an American mind, this valley was a wilderness; this spot the midst of a jungle. It is true that here and there upon the hill-tops a clearing had been cut, and hardy settlers, braving many dangers, literally battling for possession of the soil, had made for themselves primitive homes. But where great cities now stand, giant forest trees then towered; roads were almost unknown and the valleys were for the most part untrampled labyrinths.

"What a marvel! to be born surrounded by wild beasts, to watch the retreating footsteps of savage tribes, yet to live to witness not only the first steps, but the highest achievements of an advanced civilization. This was the lot of the father of the man whose statue you have just unveiled.

"Let me repeat that these remarkable conditions, the conditions under which his early life was passed, did very much to make of him the man who has since been found worthy to take a place in the nation's highest council. The people of his village, as it was then, were constantly engaged in a struggle to live. At the same time they were contented and hopeful; they were inspired by kindly sympathies which sprang from common needs. All intercourse was upon a level. No man envied his neighbor, for nowhere did the selfish or ostentatious display of ill-gotten wealth put poverty to shame. It was in such a community and under such conditions that

John H. Starin was born and passed his childhood. He was taught by his surroundings that exclusiveness is not one of the marks of distinction. He learned in infancy that no man in this country is born better than another, that the most exalted in the land may learn many a useful lesson from the humblest. He has never forgotten these truths. Indeed his life has been a striking exemplification of them. He has never forgotten his native Mohawk hills. He went from them a poor young man. He returned to them with wealth beyond his wildest dreams. He remained in them to spend that wealth among the people who knew him when he was poor. He has no false pride. He is proud of his early struggles. He is a typical American. So believing, and believing further that to honor this type is the purpose of this meeting, I accept, in the name of the sweet lady, true wife and fond mother, whose gentle influence has done so much to make John H. Starin what he is; in her name and upon behalf of our family I accept this magnificent work of art.

"Let it stand as an evidence of the fact that so long as our glorious flag shall fly the highest honors in this land are open to the poorest boy. Let it stand as a monument to brains, pluck and work. Let it stand a monument to open-handed generosity and kindness of heart. And when the time shall come — may it be far distant, O ye powers above — when the time shall come for its original to go to his fathers; then, when all jealousy, all envy shall have been buried under the flowers of appreciation and love, let those who look upon it say, as well they may: This is the statue of a man who won great distinction through great trial; this is the statue of a man who always had a helping hand for the needy and the poor; this is the statue of a man who, even in the hour of his greatest triumph, was always ready to welcome and greet the humblest friend of his youth; this is the statue of John Henry Starin."

Among the numerous telegrams and letters which were received in connection with the unveiling, the following are of special interest. The United States Senator for the State of New York sent this telegram:

"SYRACUSE, October 6, 1890.

"TO THE HON. HOWARD CARROLL, NEW YORK:

"I regret exceedingly that I cannot unite with Messrs. Root, Erhardt and others in unveiling the statue of Mr. Starin, and in other ways showing our friendship and respect for him at Starin

Place to-morrow. Pressing duties retain me here. Please express my regret and esteem to Mrs. Starin and your family.

"FRANK HISCOCK."

The following gem was also received from the world-famous president of the New York Central and Hudson River railroad :

"NEW YORK, October 15.

"MY DEAR MR. CARROLL: On my return to town a week after the 7th I find your letter notifying me of the unveiling of the statue of Mr. John H. Starin at Fultonville, on that day. I deeply regret that I did not know of the date in time so that if unable to attend I might have sent a letter indicating, as far as language would permit, my appreciation of the character, career and public spirit of Mr. Starin. The much discussed question of what constitutes a typical American is best answered by living examples. The young man, who, with no better opportunities than his companions, rises so far above his surroundings as to command the attention not only of the community in which he was born, but of the larger constituency of the State and of the Nation, who is successful in business, distinguished in public life and fills in a large measure the duties of a benevolent and sympathetic citizen, is the product of American institutions and the best evidence of the opportunities they offer.

"It is difficult for me to speak in measured phrases of Mr. Starin, because twenty-five years of intimate acquaintance with him has continuously increased my esteem for the man and my affection for my friend. Starin Place and the statue will last long, but not longer than the memory of the distinguished citizen whom they commemorate.

"I am very truly your friend,

"CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW."

The above sketch of Mr. Starin is fraught with much encouragement for those youths of America who are anxious to make life a success. In fact, the entire career of Mr. Starin contains wonderful lessons for those who would profit by them. Beginning life as a country lad with no adventitious circumstances to aid him; and inheriting nothing save a noble ancestry, he set before him, from the start, a high ideal; and by unswerving rectitude of character, an indomitable industry, and a steadfast purpose to succeed, he has finally achieved not only the highest social and political honors, but, what is of far greater moment, the unqualified esteem and respect of his fellow-men. Indeed, at the present time, there exists, perhaps, no more illustrious example of a self-made man than Mr. John H. Starin; and when it is considered that with all his greatness and personal popularity, he combines withal—as hinted in the above sketch—a genial kindness and good will toward his associates, which—in these days of superciliousness caused by the possession of money—is the more remarkable, it may well be said that Mr. Starin is an exemplar fully worthy of imitation.

In conclusion: as a warm personal friend, and with all the intimacy which that word implies; and having had, moreover, exceptional opportunities of knowing his life for many years, I may say of him as Horace wrote of his friend Fuscus:

*“ Interger vitæ scelerisque purus
Non eget Mauris jaculis, neque arcu.
“ Interger vitæ scelerisque purus
Non eget Mauris jaculis, neque arcu.
Nec venenatis grævida sagittis,
Fusce, phœtra.”*

* In this sketch of Mr. Starin it will be observed that there are four photographs of him. The first was taken when a youth, and the other three at different periods of his life.

Yours

Geo. A. Harris

MEMORANDA.

Hall Tiffany Starin was named after the late Isaac Hall Tiffany, a gentleman of high culture and position in the Mohawk Valley. Mr. Tiffany, who graduated from Dartmouth in 1793, at the age of 17, was a classmate of Daniel Webster at that college, and read law in the office of Aaron Burr, New York city. At one time he was engaged to be married to Theodosia Burr, one of the most brilliant and accomplished of American women, and by whom he was greatly beloved. At the command of her father, however, the engagement was broken off and she was finally induced to marry Joseph Allston, a wealthy young planter of South Carolina, who afterward became Governor of that State. The fate of Theodosia Burr is well known, she having, in all probability, become a victim of Babe, the Pirate, who is supposed to have captured the vessel in which she was returning from South Carolina on a visit to her father in New York city. After being admitted to the Bar, Mr. Isaac Hall Tiffany established himself at Lawyer-ville, N. Y., and subsequently removed, first to Esperance, N. Y., and finally to Fultonville, N. Y., where he practised law until his death, February 23, 1859. He was wont every Sunday morning to take breakfast with John H. Starin's father (Myndert) ; and whether able to be there or not, his plate was always ready for him.

—Letter of his niece Mrs. Helen Courter to the author.

Mr. Tiffany was also an intimate friend of Alexander Hamilton and others comprising, at that time, a brilliant coterie of distinguished men.

Frederick Augustus Starring, son of Sylvanus Seamon (81), was born at Buffalo, N. Y., May 24, 1834, and graduated from the High School in that city in 1851. Afterward he attended a course at Harvard University, and also at the Ecole de Droit, Paris, France. In 1852 he was employed as a civil engineer on the Illinois Central railroad, and assisted in organizing its land department; and in 1856 was engaged in locating the boundary line between Arkansas, Texas and the Indian Territory. When the Civil War broke out, he was secretary of the land department of the Cairo and Fulton railroad of Arkansas. He was at the first battle of Bull-Run as a volunteer aide, and was made major of the 46th Illinois Infantry, August, 1861. He was also adjutant of the Butler Camp of Instruction; was transferred as major of the 2d Illinois Artillery, December, 1865, and was selected as colonel of the 1st Chicago Board of Trade Regiment (the 72d Illinois Infantry), August 6, 1862. He was likewise made provost marshal of the Gulf at New Orleans, October, 1864-1866, and was made brigadier-general for gallant and meritorious services in Washington, 1865. He was also in all the campaigns and battles of the Mississippi Valley, and at one time third brigadier-general of the 2d Division of the 17th Army Corps, and the first brigadier, 1st Division, 17th Corps of the Army of the Tennessee; also in charge of the defenses of Vicksburg. He took part, moreover, in the actions of Fort Donelson, Tenn., Paducah, Ky., Uniontown, Ky., Columbus, Ky., Island No. 10, Second Fort Pillow, Tallahassee Campaign, Yazoo Pass Expedition, Grand Gulf, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hills, Big Black, Siege and Campaign of Vicksburg, with both assaults, 19th and 22d of May, the capture and occupation of Natchez, Miss., and many others. He received the Vicksburg Medal of Honor, the McPherson badge, and his regiment, the 1st Chicago Board of Trade (72d Illinois), was one of the eight regiments selected to receive the surrender of Vicksburg, July 4, 1863, and he was assigned by General Grant, personally, to the special duty of receiving the surrender of the arms, ordnance and ammunition.

He went abroad the latter part of 1866 to see the Exposition of 1867—and, after traveling over Europe, Egypt and the Holy Land, returned to America the latter part of 1868—and assisted to organize the Grand Army of the Republic. When General Logan was first appointed commander-in-chief—he was the first inspector-general of the order in 1869. He invented the greater portion of the original ritual, and designed the badge now worn by the members of the G. A. R., and has in his possession the original badge No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic.

In 1869 he was appointed agent to examine consular and diplomatic affairs in Europe, which position, and with others, held abroad from July, 1869. He resigned in May, 1883, since which time he has not been in public service.

He has been an extensive traveler — twice around the world, seven times up the Nile and over every navigable water-course and almost every place in the world accessible by railway, steamer or diligence, or other regular methods of travel, and in many out-of-the-way places — such as Central Africa, the Soudan, Khartoum and the junction of the White and Blue Nile, across the great Desert (seven months). In India, to Darjeeling in the Himalayas, and to Mt. Everest and Kunchinjinga, the highest mountains in the world; and in North of India, to Cashmere; and in South America, to Chimborazo in Ecuador, and three times across the Cordilleras of the Andes in Peru and Chili. General Starring, consequently, may be considered the most extensive traveler of the Starin family! He was married in July, 1889, at New York city, to Mrs. Louisa Whitehouse Evans, who was born at Farmington, N. H., December 9, 1840. Her maiden name was Louisa Perle Whitehouse. He resides (1892) at No. 80 Madison avenue, New York city. No children.

Henry Staring, son of Adam (93), was born in Herkimer county, N. Y., in 1819, and married, in 1846, Martha Lucetta Carpenter. In 1835, he removed to Oakland county, Mich., and settled on a farm of eighty acres which he had taken from his brother John in payment of a debt. At that time the county was a wilderness filled with savage men and savage beasts; but far from being discouraged, he fixed up an old lumber shanty which he found on his land, and applied himself diligently to the cultivation of the ground, which he soon found was strong and very productive when properly worked. Nor was it long before his industry had its effect; and the rugged wilderness was soon changed by his efforts into a smiling garden, which, together with the lumber shanty, eventually gave support and shelter to his eight children—all of whom were born within its walls. All of these children are (1892) living. He died in Oakland county, Mich., in 1879.

Joseph Staring, son of Adam (93), was born in Herkimer county, N. Y., in 1821. After running a canal-boat on the Erie canal for a little time he became a victim to the gold fever of 1849, and in 1850 went to California. After prospecting in that State for several years with varying success, he returned to the East and came to Michigan in 1865 with $4,000 in gold, which he sold for $2.30 on the dollar. With this money he bought a farm in Oakland county, in that State, and the following year (1866) married Victoria Potter. After remaining on his farm a few years, he sold it and bought a flouring-mill, which he ran for a year. He then purchased another farm, which, after two years, he sold, and removed with his wife and children to Leadville, Col., where he died in 1881. His wife died six months later — both dying with typhoid fever. His two children shortly after their parents' deaths returned to Shiawassee county, Mich., where they (1892) reside.

Indeed, it is generally acknowledged that the beautiful appearance of the buildings in Kalamazoo is due to himself. He lives (1892) at Kalamazoo, still actively employed in his business.

MEMORANDA.

Adelaide Lincoln was born at Starkey, Yates county, N. Y., September 3, 1866. She married, February 29, 1888, David W. Dunn, a native of Nova Scotia, and who is (1892) the manager of the "Austin Engineering Co., at Pittsburgh, Pa. She resides (1892) at 100 Arch street, Allegheny, Pa. Her husband and herself own a beautiful home and other property at Franklin Park, Mass. She has one son, Frederick Lewis, born December 6, 1838, at Petersburg, Va. Mrs. Dunn, like her cousin, Mrs. Emelio Puig, has displayed considerable literary talent. She has contributed to numerous newspapers and magazines, and bids fair to make her mark in the world of letters.

The Breese family—of which Samuel Finley Breese Morse, founder of the American System of the Electro-Magnetic Telegraph Company, was a member—came at an early day from Wales to the United States. It is an old family— one of their ancestors having taken part in the Norman Conquest—coming over to England in the suite of William the Norman. Major André, also, was an own cousin of Adelaide Lincoln's great-grandmother.

Samuel Breese, another member of the family, was a Revolutionary soldier. He gives this account of his services, under oath: "I was called out in 1776. I served one tour previous to the battle of Long Island; one tour at that battle, in August, 1776; one tour when Jersey was run over in December, 1776; one tour when General Burgoyne was taken in October, 1777; one tour or month at the battle of Bound Brook, which battle I was in; one tour at the battle of Spanktown; one tour at the battle of Monmouth, June 28, 1778; one tour, when General Lee was taken at Mrs. White's Inn at Barkinridge; one month at Pluckemin, making in all ten months or tours. At the time of service, I was a resident of Somerset county, N. J. In the year 1780-81, I was under Pomeroy, forage-master, for four months."

Theron Breese came of the same family as that of Arthur Breese, who, in 1794, moved from New Jersey to Whitesboro, near Utica, N. Y., and of Sidney, who, in 1803, was the first secretary of the Cherry Valley Turnpike, or, as it was afterward called, "The Third Great Western Turnpike Company." He was also a descendant of Sidney Breese, the father of Judge Samuel Breese, a New York merchant, born in Shrewsbury, Wales. He had been a warm partisan of the Pretender, but, on the failure of the rebellion, entered the British navy, and finally, giving up his commission, settled in New York city, when he married Elizabeth Pinketham. His epitaph in Trinity churchyard, New York, has often been quoted for its humor, as showing the man. Notwithstanding the ravages of time it still bears this quaint inscription :

"SIDNEY BREESE,

JUNE 9, 1867.

Made by himself.

Ha! Sidney! Sidney!! I'yst thou here?

'I here lye, till time is flown,

To its extremity!'"

Before her marriage, Mary Adelle taught for several years at West Plains, Mo., where her brother, Frederick Roscoe (296), resides. Her present home is (1892) at Albion, Mich. 299

Alva Clark Starin, son of Elias Warren (162), was born at White Water, Wis., on the 29th of August, 1858. He attended school until he was seventeen years of age, when he accepted a position as principal of a village school in Jefferson county, Mo. At the close of the school, he went to the Rocky Mountains, where he followed the profession of civil engineer in the different States and Territories and in Old Mexico, until he was twenty-four years of age. Being constantly beyond the pale of civilization his life was rather a rough one — as there were no houses — and he of course had to “camp-out.” Indeed, for more than three years, he never slept under a roof unless a canvas one. After returning to the East he taught school in Iowa, in which State he lived for five years and then came to Falls Church, Fairfax county, Va., and, thence, to Washington, D. C. He is (1892) at the head of a well-known Commercial Business College at 15 E. street, North West, in that city—known as "Starin's Business College." He is the inventor of "Starin's Black-Board Book"—the best method known for illustrating book-keeping. He is also quite an antiquarian in his tastes, and has in his possession the original patent, granted to his great-grandfather, John (24), by George III, for land in the Mohawk Valley, N. Y. He was married, February 3, 1883, at Keokuk, Iowa, to Minnie Emma Newman of Sandusky, Iowa, by the Rev. Mr. McIlvain, afterward Bishop of that State.

MEMORANDA.

The husband of Harriet Mears Starin (James Dyckman Spraker), comes of the same family after which "Spraker's Basin" in the Mohawk Valley, N. Y., is named. "Spraker's Basin" was originally the site of an Indian village, where, in 1667, St. Mary's Chapel was built for the Indians in which to worship. He is a descendant of one of the Scottish families who were among the first settlers at Johnstown, N. Y., brought thither by the liberal inducements of Sir William Johnson, Bart.—the founder of that village. His grandfather was the well-known Yost Spraker, whose hostelry—known for many years as "Spraker's Tavern"—was a land-mark for travelers in the Mohawk Valley long before canals or railroads were known, and was famous for its liberal hospitality, and as the place at which relay-horses for Jason Parker's Utica and Schenectady mail coaches were obtained. His venerable father, Daniel Spraker, is (1892) living at the hale old age of nearly 95, and is the president of the Mohawk Valley National Bank at Fonda, N. Y. Daniel Spraker still retains, in a remarkable degree, his business perceptions. Though deaf and partly blind, he walks to the bank every day. He is the oldest bank president in America; and, having just sold a valuable lot to a social society known as "Red Men," is probably the oldest man in Montgomery county that ever conveyed real estate in the history of the Mohawk Valley.

George Henry Staring, son of Henry (203), was born on the 29th of September, 1851. His early life was spent on his father's farm, attending during the winters the district school. He then at the age of 20 began to teach in the winters, meanwhile, during the summers, working out on different farms at $16 a month. Finally, having accumulated in this manner $300 above all expenses, he set out at twenty-two years of age for Oberlin College, Ohio — supplementing his four years' course at that college by one year at Denison University, Granville, Ohio. After graduating and having chosen as his life-work the profession of a minister of the Gospel, he entered, in 1879, the Morgan Park Theological Seminary near Chicago, Ill., whence he graduated in 1881, with the degree of "Bachelor of Divinity." In 1881, the day after his graduating from the Theological Seminary, he married Lida Tedman of Marseilles, La Salle county, Ill., who not only, at the time of his marriage, fully sympathized with him in his religious views, but has since been a veritable "help-meet" to him in his ministerial labors. Indeed, his labor at college has demonstrated the fact that poverty need be no hindrance to securing an education, as he worked his way through his eight years' course entirely by his own exertions, he never having received one penny of help from any one. It was the same, too, with his wife, she having also worked hard for an education, and not having received aid from any, either of her relatives or friends. Since entering on his career as a minister, Mr. Staring has had remarkable success—his pastorates in the Baptist denomination in Illinois, Michigan and Iowa having been attended with the gathering in of many souls.

In writing to the author, Rev. Mr. Staring, with pardonable pride, says :

“One good thing may be truly said of the Starin family, viz.: That they are the freest from vices and reproaches of any family known to the writer; and, to-day, wherever they are known, they are honored, and, in most instances, are zealous workers in various philanthropical reforms and in religious circles. Indeed, our family are making a record of which no Staring, Starring or Starin of the Mohawk Dutch descent need be ashamed. Souls have been, through them, led to a better life, and churches have been built up by their efforts. May many of them enjoy the higher circles of the redeemed in glory!”

On the 1st of April, 1892, he took charge of the Baptist Church at What-Cheer, Iowa where he still resides.

He worked his father's farm for several years, when he removed to his father-in-law's farm. He has lately bought a farm four miles north-west of Clarkston, Mich., where he and his wife now (1892) reside, and where they expect to spend the remainder of their days.

Philander Peck Starin, son of Jacob John (233), was born on the 18th of March, 1855. He resided at White Water, Wis., until 1875, and received his education at Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis. He was in the employ of the C. & N. W. R. R. Co., residing in Chicago from December, 1875, to May, 1882. From that time until October, 1883, he lived at Auburn, Nemaha county, Neb., as cashier of the Bank of Auburn (now the First National), located at that place — having been, in fact, the chief organizer of that bank. Early in 1884, he removed to St. Paul, Minn., where he still (1892) resides. Since removing there, he has been employed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as the chief cashier in its land department. He was married in Peru, Neb., on the 22d of February, 1883, to Nellie Dillon, daughter of the late Hon. Mr. Daily of that State.

Y., for the purpose of attending the Albany Law School. From the latter school he graduated in June, 1879; and upon his graduation he was admitted to the practice of the law at the Bar of the State of New York in the same year. Since July, 1879, he has made Chicago his home, practicing his profession, and also acting as an officer for the "Chicago and Indianapolis Air Line," and for the "Chicago and Great Southern Railroad Company." He was married April 20, 1887, at Louisville, Ky., to Charlotte Meta Smith, a daugh-

NOTE.

In preparing this Genealogy, I have been met by a curious fact, viz.: that, in a number of instances, there is a discrepancy between the dates of births given in the Records of the old Caughnawaga Church and the entries of the same in the Family Bibles—a difference, in some instances, of three and four years. I have, however, in such cases, given the preference to the dates in the Family Bibles—believing that those in the latter Repositories were entered at the time; whereas, those in the Church Records may have been entered from memory years after the occurrence. I was, moreover, especially led to follow this course from the fact, that, in numerous instances, the Caughnawaga Church Records are so obliterated by age, as to be now almost wholly undecipherable. Among several examples, one is the case of Nicholas (23), where the Church Records make his birth as having occurred December 2, 1776, and the Family Bible in 1780. Ex uno, disce omnes.—WM. L. S.

APPENDIX II.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN H. STARIN

On the Unveiling of the Monument to "American Progress and Civilisation."

Words of welcome seem scarcely needed. The presence of so many visitors in this place daily, proves that the intention of the proprietor is rightly understood to be, that the people should enjoy with him whatever beauty of nature and of art is gathered here. Always welcome, you are DOUBLY welcome to-day on the occasion of the unveiling of this statue of "Progress."

I have thought it fitting to erect on this elevated site, overlooking the rich Valley of the Mohawk, the statues of two strongly contrasted types of humanity — the American Indian and the American Artisan.

Here is physical strength in the ascendant; an easily satisfied ambition, and as a result, the simplest of implements, and an unimproved wilderness. Here is mental power, dominating physical; boundless aspiration, and as a result, the most complicated machinery, and a continent, nay, a world, daily made richer by the achievements of the white man's genius.

If we worshipped images, this statue of the artisan, kinglier, though untitled, than the lordliest chief of the red race, is the one before which we should fall in adoration to-day.

Keen sighted as the Indian is reputed to have been, he saw but little of the wealth of his domain.

Content with what nature threw at his feet he had no disposition to explore her intricate secrets, and to sue with patient toil for her amplest blessings.

Individuality too strongly developed was one of the greatest weaknesses of the Indian character.

Among the white race no truth is better appreciated than that the strongest is weak, and the wisest is foolish, when he is not willing to gain strength and wisdom from his fellows. All the great commercial industries of the day owe their prosperity to the power resident in right organization.

Of this truth I am forcibly reminded as I look about me, and see the faces of men who through many long years have been faithful counsellors and efficient co-laborers in the various departments of my business. I cannot suffer this occasion to pass without expressing my appreciation of their fidelity, and my sense of indebtedness not to my own brain and muscle alone, but also to their co-operation.

The world is large enough for the toilers, and for those who adapt themselves to circumstances. This is Providence. Hence the white man is the man of destiny. His face is bright with hope while the Indian looks sadly toward the setting sun of his prosperity.

These thoughts come closely home when we reflect that we stand on ground from which the moccasin of the Indian has but recently been lifted, that we live where the name of river and valley and creek and mountain and hamlet ever speak their language to our ears.

Four centuries have not passed since the discovery of America. Three hundred years ago the foot of a white man had not pressed this valley; no, nor the soil of the Empire state. Two hundred and seventy years ago only, and Hendrick Hudson was sailing up the river that now bears his name, while the Red Man held undisturbed possession of the wilderness about him.

Yet how marvelous the transformation wrought in that short space of time. The wild wood has become the fruitful farm; the trail through the forest is now the broad highway; the water that floated only the canoe, now by means of yonder canal, floats more than four million tons of merchandise a year; by its side, in successful rivalry, stretch the never cool rails of the grandest railroad in the world. The place of the wigwam is occupied by towns of stately architecture; the earth is forced to yield her utmost; and the products of field and mine are caught in the jaws of the whirring mills and wrought quickly and perfectly into farms adapted to the needs of an advanced civilization. And all this advance is due to what? To the white man's mighty aspiration for improvement, of which "Excelsior," the motto of our state, is the true expression.

This is the reason for the erection of this statue—the white man, erect with nobility created by his own labor, surrounded by trophies of his skill, and looking toward the ever rising sun of his success.

Hammer, anvil, tongs, cogged wheel, spade and pick, symbolize manufacture, agriculture, mining.

The steamship, the locomotive, the steam plough, the telescope, telegraph, and telephone represent the most distinguished of his inventions, while the scroll, but partly unrolled, shows the part which thought has played in this marvelous development, and hints the undisclosed possibilities of the future. At the base, the symbol of a mystic brotherhood, and an overruling Providence reminds us in all our advancement not to forget our relationship to both human and divine.

I trust that the lesson of the statue may be confidence in the power of our race, hope for our future, and the most persistent effort on the part of each of us to advance the civilization in which it is our good fortune to be born.
