Additional Data Built by Bullard, the founder of the town of Bullard. There are no descendents by that name now in this vicinity. The place was originally built about one mile distant from its present location and was moved to its present site during recent years. The house has but little architectural interest. In general appearance it recalls similar work done in Palestine and other small towns in this area. The scale of the windows is characteristic of work throughout the north-east section of the State.
