Pace-Archibald Store

Southeast of the George Q. Cannon Association Residence (UT-127) is a wood frame outbuilding which was originally the Pace-Archibald Store. This building has wood novelty siding and a cut and dressed sandstone foundation. The roof of the structure is gabled and covered with asphalt shingles. A small corbeled brick chimney is located on the north slope of the roof near the west end.

On the east side of this structure there are two wide swinging garage doors which encompass most of the east wall of the building. Also, a subtle decorative eave detail was placed at the wall end roof junction of the gable end. Another door is located on the west side of this structure. This door is wood with the original hardware attached, surrounded by a plain wooden frame. Also, on the west side of the building is what looks like a window opening and loft opening which both have been covered over with novelty siding.

Major alterations which have been made to this structure include the placement of garage doors on the east side and the boarding up of the window and loft entrances on the west side of the structure.

The poor documentary information available about the store's ownership, age, operation and disposition leaves architectural detail to help fill in some of the gaps. The structure is a vernacular form with little decorative design. However, the small subtle eave detail on the east gable end, the corbeled chimney and the cut and dressed sandstone foundation suggest that it dates to, or slightly before the turn-of-the-century, perhaps even to the late 1880's or early 1890's.
