

“Put Me Off at Mexico, Is the National Guard Train Song.”

Battery D of the 1st New York Field Artillery breaking camp at Van Cortlandt Park, preparatory to entraining for service on the border. Friends, relatives and families are bidding the artillerymen goodby.

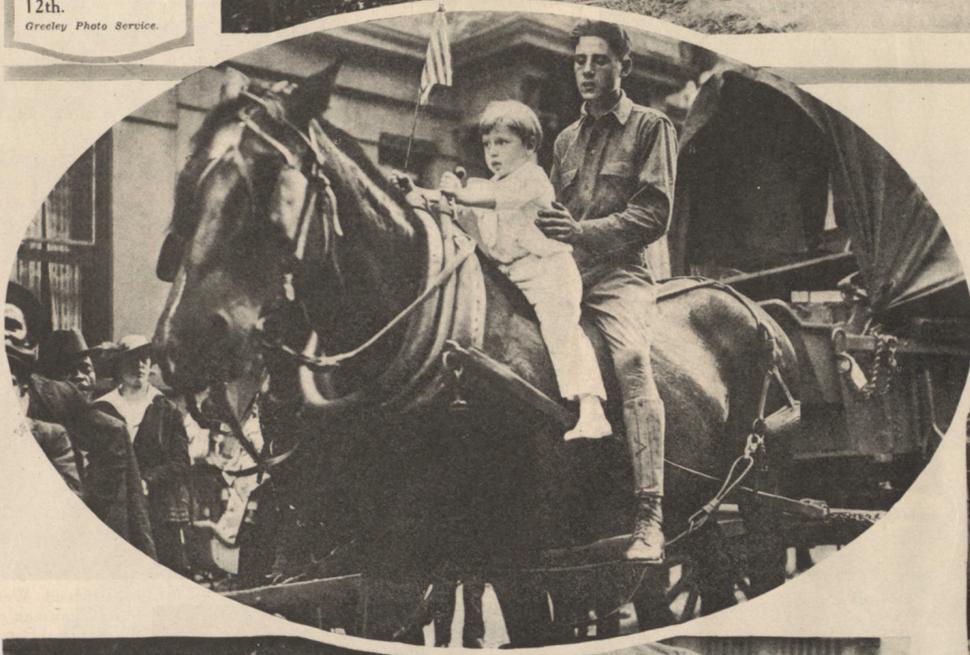

Newark, N. J., National Guardsmen waiting at Sea Girt for troop trains to carry them to Douglas, Ariz., the border post which they have now reached.

Central News Photo Service.

Walter Ryan did his best to get the 12th Regiment quartermaster's wagons away on time. When he grows up he will sure enlist in the 12th.

Greeley Photo Service.

Men of the 1st New York Cavalry waiting at Yonkers for the troop train which took them to the border.

Greeley Photo Service.

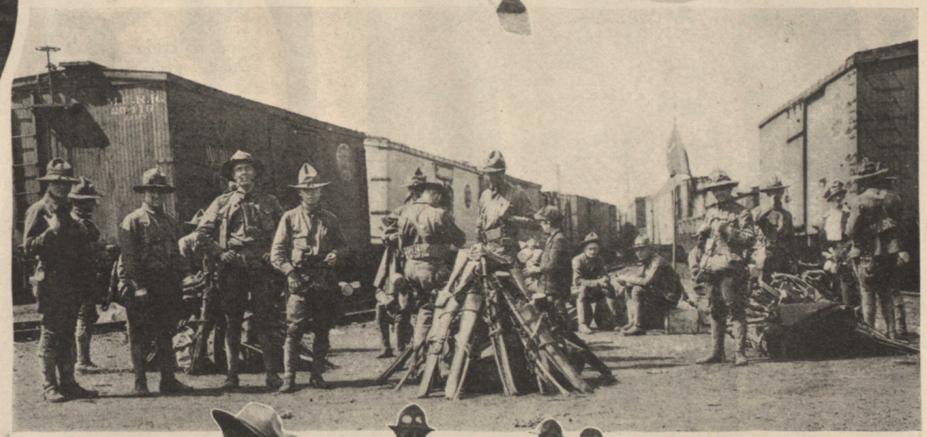

Troop H, the crack National Guard Cavalry of Rochester, N. Y., starting to ride from Camp Whitman to Van Cortlandt Park, New York City. From there they rode to Yonkers, where they entrained for the Texas border.

Underwood & Underwood.

THE 71ST REGIMENT'S FIELD KITCHEN—Here it is shown in working order just before the regiment started for the border. Now it's doing service on the Texas patrol line somewhere near McAlpin.

Greeley Photo Service.

FEET UP! Troop B, Squadron A, undergoing physical examination before being mustered into the Federal service at Van Cortlandt Park, New York.

Photo by Curtis.