

A group of joyous men from the 105th Field Artillery, part of the famous 27th, celebrating their homecoming on the America, and they are as glad to be back as is New York to have them. Get your cheers ready for Tuesday!
—Underwood & Underwood.

All that is left of a private room in the "Vorwärts" building in Berlin, after the storming by the government troops to dislodge the Spartacides. For six days the revolutionists were in possession, publishing the "Vorwärts."
—Underwood.

The Statue of Liberty—taken from an aeroplane. The welcome sight of Miss Liberty is daily bringing joy to the hearts of returning soldier nephews of Uncle Sam.
—Keystone View.

A redeeming gleam of humor in a grim situation—the statue of Bishop Seybold in Berlin, holding aloft the revolutionary "Red Banner" propaganda sheet, and debonairly smoking a cigarette.
—Central News.

Left—A pile of whitened German bones near St. Mihiel—mute and grim witness to the price paid by the ex-Kaiser for his dreams of Hohenzollern world supremacy.
—Underwood & Underwood.

Right—Giant rolls of newsprint paper and bundles of "Vorwärts" prove a fairly adequate emergency barricade for government and civilian defenders of Berlin's "newspaper row."
—Central News.