AVIATORS discovered the warmth and protection of leather coats, and Franklin Simon their smartness and adaptability to many uses and occasions. They are soft and supple—light in weight—comfortably warm and defy the elements, for winds cannot ruffle them nor storms mar their pliancy or coloring.

Hence a leather coat is the one satisfying protective coat for the motor enthusiast or for those who heed the call of the great outdoors. And for steamer wear or on severe Winter days, a leather coat meets every demand of smartness and of cosy warmth.

And further, it plays a dual role in the modern woman's wardrobe, for it may also serve as a general utility coat in town; in fact, a leather coat is ideal for immediate wear and later, in the Winter.
