

The first meeting. Anthony Addenbrooke is drunk, but he knows a lady when he sees one.

In "Little Lady in Blue," her new play, Frances Starr has the role of a governess who reforms and wins the love of a hare-brained young English navy officer. Her motive is mercenary, but she falls happily in love herself, so the motive doesn't matter.

Anne Churchill (Miss Starr) coddles the grumpy old Admiral (A. G. Andrews) in the village inn.

Anthony (Jerome Patrick) follows Anne to the country and studies to regain his post in the navy. He accomplishes that, wins his grandfather's heart and fortune and the hand of the little governess he has learned to love.

Anne meets the girl (Eleanor Pendleton) upon whom Anthony has wasted his time in Portsmouth town

"Little Lady in Blue" gives Miss Starr her first comedy role as a Eclasco star. It is by the authors of "Grumpy".

Baron von Loewe (Carl Sauerman) Anne's employer, fails to persuade her to resume her place in his home
