

The tank Britannia visited Camp Dix, and after a marvellous demonstration skidded on the ice and toppled on its side. It was easily righted.

© Underwood & Underwood

Lieutenant Henry Farre, official painter of warfare in the air for the French government, has arrived in this country to talk of the achievements of the French aviators.

© Underwood & Underwood

Historic and beautiful Highbridge is threatened. The piers of the bridge are so close together that it is said they form a menace to barges on the Harlem River.

© Underwood & Underwood

Cutting up a whale for food on the Long Island beach. Skilful whalers can cut up a whale almost as quickly as a butcher can dress a pig. The whale has been used for food in Japan for the last forty years or more.

© Underwood & Underwood

Whales for Food—Arthur Williams (left), Food Administrator for Greater New York; Henry P. Osborn, president of the American Museum of Natural History, and Admiral Robert E. Peary at a whale-meat luncheon given at the Natural History Museum for the purpose of interesting the public in whale-meat as a food.

© Underwood & Underwood