

The Mayor of Tokio is not, as Americans have thought, the leading barytone in a comic opera. He must, in order to be elected, be recognized as an exemplary citizen of Tokio, with politics and administrative ability secondary considerations. The present Mayor, recently elected, is Viscount Inajiro Tajiri, a graduate of Yale

College and a prophet of the Simple Life. He is shown at the left in a combination New Haven-Tokio costume, chopping wood.

Below is the former Mayor, Baron Yoshindo Okuda, who died a year ago. He was also an exponent of official simplicity and is shown sweeping his yard barefooted.

Mayor Tajiri is the Hoover of Japan and has introduced a bean substitute for rice, which he is here shown trying out on a few of his friends. Photographs from Adachi

Photograph taken from the deck of a destroyer which has just dropped a depth-bomb for the benefit of a German submarine. These bombs are known as "ash-cans" and the force of their explosion is felt through the water for over half a mile.

King Peter of Serbia has lately grown a full beard in accordance with the Serbian custom, whereby a father allows his beard to grow in mourning for the death of a son. Serbian Press Bureau

An Armenian refugee who has escaped the Turks. Underwood & Underwood

A German soldier in Russian Poland trying to find the graves of his relatives. Press Illustrating Service