

American troops in Paris marching past the statue of Strasbourg with her mourning wreaths. Those wreaths don't belong there, and the tread of these many feet is a kind of pledge that the emblems of mourning shall be torn away. © Kadel & Herbert.

Sammie enriches his stock of French with a little choice urchin argot. Incidentally, the kiddies are getting in some hero-worship close-up. © International.

Dejeuner a la fourchette. American aviators in Paris are being entertained by an earnest boulevard singer, who is doing the very best he can with "Keep the Glow in Old Glory." © International.