

The steel skeleton which is to grow into the world's largest airship, the Vickers ship under construction at Barrow-in-Furness, England. Her builders expect the great dirigible to sail over the Atlantic with ease. Gillians.

Delightful little boats of swan and turtle design, propelled by tiny paddles, are built by the students of the Industrial School in Japan, in a revival of the water sports of the ancient Court of Nobles. Some enterprising Occidental should make a fortune from a similar fleet on the lake in Central Park. Adachi.

The memorial statue to Miss Edith Cavell in her home city of Norwich, erected before the cathedral in which lies the body of England's martyr-nurse. J. F. S.

Col. Wade Hampton Hayes, new colonel of the 7th Regiment, New York's oldest active military organization, was the only National Guard officer attached to General Pershing's staff.

Four years of age and very fair to look upon is Miss Eleanor McAdoo, granddaughter of President Wilson and daughter of former Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo. Underwood.

Gabriele d'Annunzio, Italy's poet-aviator, sways the immense throng before the Capitoline in Rome with the spell of his oratory in his recent impassioned speech regarding Italy's right to Fiume. Piscilli.

Business booms for the barbers in Constantinople, with the city occupied by Allied soldiery. The shops are primitive enough—the straightest of chairs placed in the courtyard, presided over by a brigandish Turk surmounted with a tall red fez. A. N. Mizsoff.
